

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

RECORDS

ERR

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL
LIBRARY

.

.

.

.

.

National Reporter System.—State Series.

THE SOUTHEASTERN REPORTER,
VOLUME 49,

CONTAINING ALL THE DECISIONS OF THE

SUPREME COURTS OF APPEALS OF VIRGINIA AND WEST VIRGINIA, AND SUPREME COURTS OF NORTH CAROLINA, SOUTH CAROLINA, GEORGIA.

PERMANENT EDITION.

DECEMBER 17, 1904—MARCH 25, 1905.

K.F.
135
100

ST. PAUL:
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1905.

COPYRIGHT, 1905,
BY WEST PUBLISHING COMPANY.

JUDGES

OF THE

COURTS REPORTED DURING THE PERIOD COVERED BY THIS VOLUME.

GEORGIA—Supreme Court.

THOMAS J. SIMMONS, CHIEF JUSTICE.
WILLIAM H. FISH, PRESIDING JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

ANDREW J. COBB.
JOSEPH R. LAMAR.

JOHN S. CANDLER.
BEVERLY D. EVANS.

NORTH CAROLINA—Supreme Court.

WALTER CLARK, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

WALTER A. MONTGOMERY,¹
ROBERT M. DOUGLAS,¹
PLATT D. WALKER.

HENRY G. CONNOR.
GEORGE H. BROWN,²
WILLIAM A. HOKE.³

SOUTH CAROLINA—Supreme Court.

Y. J. POPE, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

EUGENE B. GARY.

IRA B. JONES.
C. A. WOODS.

VIRGINIA—Supreme Court of Appeals.

JAMES KEITH, PRESIDENT.

JUDGES.

RICHARD H. CARDWELL,
JOHN A. BUCHANAN.

GEORGE M. HARRISON.
STAFFORD G. WHITTLE.

WEST VIRGINIA—Supreme Court of Appeals.

GEORGE POFFENBARGER, PRESIDENT.⁵
HENRY BRANNON, PRESIDENT.⁶

JUDGES.

HENRY BRANNON.⁴
MARMADUKE H. DENT.⁵
HENRY C. McWHORTER.

WARREN MILLER.⁵
GEORGE POFFENBARGER.⁶
FRANK COX.⁷

JOSEPH M. SANDERS⁸.

¹ Term expired January 2, 1905.

² Became Judge January 2, 1905.

³ Ceased to be President January 2, 1905.

⁴ Became President January 2, 1905.

⁵ Term expired December 31, 1904.

⁶ Became Judge January 2, 1905.

⁷ Succeeded Judge Dent January 2, 1905.

⁸ Succeeded Judge Miller January 2, 1905.

COURT RULES.

SUPREME COURT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The following rule was adopted by us on this court 8th day of December, 1904:

RULE XXVI.

Hereafter the clerk of this court shall not receive or file any pleading or papers on appeal where tendered by or on behalf of any party to a cause unless the party or person tendering the same shall be an attorney authorized to practice as such in the courts of this state, or shall have received leave from one of the justices of this court in all appeal cases or in cases in the original jurisdiction to appear in and file papers and pleadings in the cause in which the same are tendered.

ORDER OF COURT.

SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS OF VIRGINIA.

For reasons appearing to the court, it is ordered that the bar examination at Wytheville be held this year on Friday, the twenty-third day of June, and thereafter on the third Friday after the first Tuesday in June in each year until otherwise ordered.

Adopted March, 1905.

CASES REPORTED.

	Page		Page
Adams v. Jennings (Va.).....	982	Ballington & N. R. Co. West Virginia	460
Adcock v. State (Ga.).....	689	Short Line R. Co. v. (W. Va.).....	163
Allen v. Confederate Pub. Co. (Ga.).....	782	Bell, State v. (N. C.).....	23
Allen v. Taylor (Ga.).....	799	Bennett, Jennings v. (W. Va.).....	607
Allen, Gaskins v. (N. C.).....	919	Berry v. Jordan (Ga.).....	106
Allen, Richmond Passenger & Power Co.	656	Bessemer Min. & Mfg. Co., Pinchback v.	271
v. (Va.).....		(N. C.).....
Allen-Holmes Co., Farmers' & Traders'	816	Biggers, Equitable Mfg. Co. v. (Ga.).....	901
Nat. Bank v. (Ga.).....	846	Billmyer v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins.	633
Allen & Co. v. Davids (S. C.).....	242	Co. (W. Va.).....	261
Allen & Co. v. Maxwell (W. Va.).....	881	Black, Johnson v. (Va.).....	88
Allison v. Wall (Ga.).....	618	Blakeman v. State (Ga.).....	239
Allison, Georgia Iron & Coal Co. v. (Ga.)...	815	Bialock & Co. v. W. D. Clark & Bros.	909
Ambrose, Seaboard & R. R. Co. v. (Ga.)...	751	(N. C.).....	597
American Mortg. Co. of Scotland, Thomp-	355	Bloodworth, Woodliff v. (Ga.)..... son v. (Ga.).....	1038	Blue v. Campbell (W. Va.).....
American Warehouse Co., Jones v. (N. C.)...	128	Blumenthal v. State (Ga.).....
Ammons v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.).....	725	Board of Canvassers of Mingo County,	364
Ammons, Hamilton v. (W. Va.).....	791	Stafford v. (W. Va.).....	641
Anderson v. Hilton & Dodge Lumber Co.	329	Board of Canvassers of Mingo County,	588
(Ga.).....	978	Stafford v. (W. Va.).....
Anderson, Macon & B. R. Co. v. (Ga.)...	877	Board of Canvassers of Roane County, Goff	47
Angel, Trotter v. (N. C.).....	140	v. (W. Va.).....
Apperson, Lewis v. (Va.).....	812	Board of Com'rs of Iredell County, Board	358
Armentrout v. S. H. Smith & Bro. (W. Va.)...	730	of Education of Iredell County v. (N. C.)
Armstrong, Barrett v. (W. Va.).....	793	Board of Com'rs of Macon County, Board	47
Arnold v. Limeburger (Ga.).....	765	of Education of Macon County v. (N. C.)
Ashley v. Hutchinson (Ga.).....	818	Board of Com'rs of Macon County (N. C.)	358
Atlanta, Fitts v. (Ga.).....	287	Board of Education of Macon County v.
Atlanta, Hewin v. (Ga.).....	291	Board of Com'rs of Macon County (N. C.)	148
Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Gardner (Ga.)...	607	Board of Education of Philippi Independ-
Atlanta, McCarty v. (Ga.).....	711	ent Dist., Poling v. (W. Va.).....	267
Atlanta & B. Air Line Ry. v. Weaver (Ga.)...	212	Bomar v. Equitable Mortg. Co. (Ga.).....	89
Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Lovelace, two	191	Bond v. Wilson (N. C.).....	944
cases (Ga.).....	369	Boner, State v. (W. Va.).....	42
Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. West (Ga.).....	568	Booze, Spangler v. (Va.).....	942
Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., Griffin v. (N.	738	Bosworth v. Wilson (W. Va.).....	848
C.).....	748	Bottoms v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. (N. C.)...	128
Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., North Carolina	91	Bowen, Cipher v. (W. Va.).....	668
Corporation Commission v. (N. C.).....	349	Bowen, Savage v. (Va.).....	285
Atlantic Coast Line R. R., Dennis v. (S.	780	Bowie & Terhune, Hobbs v. (Ga.).....	867
C.).....	33	Bowman, Ewart v. (S. C.).....	877
Atlantic Coast Line R. R., Jones v. (S. C.)	754	Boykin, Jones v. (S. C.).....	409
Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Montezuma (Ga.)...	782	Braden, Wilson v. (W. Va.).....	262
Averback v. Spivey (Ga.).....	447	Brantley v. Taylor (Ga.).....	887
Avery v. Oliver (N. C.).....	265	Bray v. Williams (N. C.).....	686
	286	Bray, Crum v. (Ga.).....	885
Babcock Printing Press Mfg. Co. v. Her-	738	Brewster v. Elizabeth City (N. C.).....	810
bert (N. C.).....	95	Brinson v. Exley (Ga.).....	286
Bagley, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.)...	297	Britt, Camp v. (Ga.).....	54
Bailey, Percival v. (S. C.).....	615	Brittain v. Westall (N. C.).....	297
Bailey, Virginia & S. W. R. Co. v. (Va.)...	845	Broach & McCurry, Ballew v. (Ga.).....	740
Baker v. State (Ga.).....	1008	Brown, Thompson v. (Ga.).....	295
Baker v. State (Ga.).....	115	Brown, Wood v. (Ga.).....	325
Baker v. Tappan (W. Va.).....	423	Browning, Providence Mach. Co. v. (S. C.)	590
Baldwin v. Webb (Ga.).....	598	Brown Mfg. Co., Drake v. (Ga.).....	889
Baldwin County, Westbrook v. (Ga.).....	282	Brunswick, Lamb v. (Ga.).....	275
Baldwin Fertilizer Co. v. McAllister (Ga.)...	140	Bruton, Smith v. (N. C.).....	64
Balfour Quarry Co., Harris v. (N. C.).....	563	Bryant v. City Council of Orangeburg (S.	229
Ballew v. Broach & McCurry (Ga.).....	414	C.).....	21
Bank of Madison, Bullard Bros. v. (Ga.)...	849	Bryant v. Logan (W. Va.).....	724
Bank of Spartanburg v. Chickasaw Soap	160	Buchanan v. Ellison (Ga.).....	281
Co. (S. C.).....	701	Buchanan, Harvey v. (Ga.).....
Bank of Union v. Nickell (W. Va.).....		Buckannon & N. R. Co., Grafton & B. R.	532
Barker v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.).....		Co. v. (W. Va.).....	257
Barnes, Carney v. (W. Va.).....		Buckline v. State (Ga.).....	591
Barnes, Eaton v. (Ga.).....		Bullard, Leverett v. (Ga.).....	615
Barnes, Macon Ry. & Light Co. v. (Ga.)...		Bullard Bros. v. Bank of Madison (Ga.)...	976
Barrett v. Armstrong (W. Va.).....		Burke, Chaduck v. (Va.).....	68
Barrett, Parrott v. (S. C.).....		Burwell v. Burwell (Va.).....	763
Bartles & Dillon v. Dodd (W. Va.).....		Butler v. Tifton, T. & G. R. Co. (Ga.)...
Battle v. Columbia, N. & L. R. R. (S. C.)...
Bauer, James Clark Distilling Co. v. (W.
Va.).....
Basemore v. State (Ga.).....

	Page		Page
Butler, Miller v. (Ga.).....	754	Cobb v. Glenn Boom & Lumber Co. (W. Va.).....	1005
Bynum, King v. (N. C.).....	955	Cobb v. Rhea (N. C.).....	161
Cain v. Elkins (W. Va.).....	898	Cobb, Patrick v. (Ga.).....	806
Camden Interstate R. Co., Mannon v. (W. Va.).....	450	Cochran, Collins v. (Ga.).....	771
Cameron-Barkley Co. v. Thorton Light & Power Co. (N. C.).....	76	Coleman v. State (Ga.).....	716
Cameron & Barkley Co., City of Albany v. (Ga.).....	798	Collins v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. (Ga.).....	594
Camp v. Britt (Ga.).....	286	Collins v. Cochran (Ga.).....	771
Camp, Melton v. (Ga.).....	690	Collins, Griffin v. (Ga.).....	827
Campbell, Blue v. (W. Va.).....	909	Columbia, N. & L. R. R., Battle v. (S. C.).....	849
Cannady v. Durham (N. C.).....	50	Columbus, Salter v. (Ga.).....	734
Capital City Mills, Strickland v. (S. C.).....	478	Columbus R. Co., Dorsey v. (Ga.).....	698
Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. (W. Va.).....	548	Combs, Rowan v. (Ga.).....	275
Carney v. Barnes (W. Va.).....	423	Commonwealth, Crall v. (Va.).....	638
Carolina & N. W. R. Co., General Fire Extinguisher Co. v. (N. C.).....	208	Commonwealth, Crall v. (Va.).....	1038
Carraway v. Stancill (N. C.).....	957	Commonwealth, Harvey v. (Va.).....	481
Carson, Le Comte v. (W. Va.).....	238	Commonwealth, Interstate Coal & Iron Co. v. (Va.).....	974
Carter v. State (Ga.).....	280	Commonwealth, Jones v. (Va.).....	663
Cassels v. Finn (Ga.).....	749	Commonwealth, Kloss v. (Va.).....	655
Cassels, Walker v. (S. C.).....	862	Commonwealth, Lake Drummond Canal & Water Co. v. (Va.).....	506
Castellow, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	753	Commonwealth, McCue v. (Va.).....	623
Catawba Power Co., Sutton v. (S. C.).....	863	Commonwealth, Norfolk & P. Belt Line R. Co. v. (Va.).....	39
Caton v. Raber (W. Va.).....	147	Commonwealth, Virginia Passenger & Power Co. v. (Va.).....	995
Cauthen v. Cauthen (S. C.).....	321	Commonwealth, Wheelwright v. (Va.).....	647
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Bagley (Ga.).....	780	Condon, Lipscomb's Adm'r v. (W. Va.).....	392
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Castellow (Ga.).....	753	Confederate Pub. Co., Allen v. (Ga.).....	782
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Chicago Portrait Co. (Ga.).....	727	Cook, Southern R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	287
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Henson (Ga.).....	278	Cooper v. State (Ga.).....	707
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. McWhorter (Ga.).....	264	Cooper & Cooper, Giboney v. (W. Va.).....	939
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Morris (Ga.).....	606	Council v. Teal (Ga.).....	806
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Price (Ga.).....	683	Coward v. Jackson County Com'rs (N. C.).....	207
Chaddock v. Burke (Va.).....	976	Craig, Stockton v. (W. Va.).....	386
Charles, State v. (S. C.).....	8	Crall v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	638
Charleston & W. C. R. Co., McDaniel v. (S. C.).....	2	Crall v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	1038
Chartiers Oil Co. v. Moore's Devises (W. Va.).....	449	Crawford v. Garrett (Ga.).....	677
Chastain, Neal Loan & Banking Co. v. (Ga.).....	618	Critchlow, F. A. Prichard & Co. v. (W. Va.).....	453
Chattahoochee Lumber Co., Brown Store Co. v. (Ga.).....	839	Cronin, Hill v. (W. Va.).....	132
Cheatwood's Adm'r, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.).....	489	Crosby & Beckley Co., Fulton v. (W. Va.).....	1012
Chelsey v. State (Ga.).....	258	Cross v. Cross (W. Va.).....	129
Cheney, McWhorter v. (Ga.).....	603	Croston v. Male (W. Va.).....	136
Cherokee Foundry & Machine Works, Stacy v. (S. C.).....	223	Crum v. Bray (Ga.).....	686
Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Harris (Va.).....	997	Crystal Ice Co., Richmond Ice Co. v. (Va.).....	650
Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Smith (Va.).....	487	Curtin & Co. v. Isaacs (W. Va.).....	254
Chicago Portrait Co., Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	727	Curtis v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.).....	213
Chickasaw Soap Co., Bank of Spartanburg v. (S. C.).....	845	Daly, Harris v. (Ga.).....	609
Cipher v. Bowen (W. Va.).....	128	David, Wm. L. Allen & Co. v. (S. C.).....	846
Citizens' Bank & Trust Co., Collins v. (Ga.).....	594	Davis, Sims v. (S. C.).....	872
City Council of Orangeburg, Bryant v. (S. C.).....	229	Davis, State v. (N. C.).....	162
City Electric R. Co. v. Smith (Ga.).....	724	Davis, Stover v. (W. Va.).....	1023
City of Albany v. Cameron & Barkley Co. (Ga.).....	798	Dawson v. Thigpen (N. C.).....	959
City of Elberton v. Hobbs (Ga.).....	779	Dean, Moore v. (S. C.).....	840
City of Elberton v. Hobbs (Ga.).....	780	Deaver v. Deaver (N. C.).....	113
City of Hickory v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.).....	202	De Florin v. State (Ga.).....	699
City of Richmond v. Gay's Adm'r (Va.).....	482	De Hihns v. Free (S. C.).....	841
City of Rome v. Sudduth (Ga.).....	300	Dennis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. R. (S. C.).....	869
Clark v. Hendricks Co. (W. Va.).....	455	Despard, Marsh v. (W. Va.).....	24
Clark, Western & A. R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	290	Dickerson v. State (Ga.).....	275
Clark Distilling Co. v. Bauer (W. Va.).....	160	Disosway v. Edwards (N. C.).....	957
Clark & Bros., U. B. Blalock & Co. v. (N. C.).....	88	Divine v. Miller (S. C.).....	479
Claytor, Goodwin v. (N. C.).....	173	Dixon v. State (Ga.).....	311
Clegg, Cobb v. (N. C.).....	80	Dixon, Welborn v. (S. C.).....	232
Clement, Earnhardt v. (N. C.).....	49	Dodd, Bartles & Dillon v. (W. Va.).....	414
Clowney, Scottish-American Mortg. Co. v. (S. C.).....	569	Dorsey v. Columbus R. Co. (Ga.).....	698
Cobb v. Clegg (N. C.).....	80	Drake v. Brown Mfg. Co. (Ga.).....	590
		Driver Lumber Co., Moultrie Lumber Co. v. (Ga.).....	729
		Driver's Adm'r v. Southern R. Co. (Va.).....	1000
		Dublin Wagon & Machine Co., Ogburn v. (Ga.).....	263
		Duckett, Southern R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	589
		Dukes, Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. (Ga.).....	788
		Durham, Cannady v. (N. C.).....	50
		Durham & C. R. Co., McNeill v. (N. C.).....	1038
		Earnhardt v. Clement (N. C.).....	49
		Eaton v. Barnes (Ga.).....	593
		Ebbs, Rollins v. (N. C.).....	341
		Edgell, Robinson v. (W. Va.).....	1027
		Edmondson, McEarchern & Co. v. (Ga.).....	798

	Page		Page
Edwards v. Kellogg (Ga.).....	279	Good, State v. (W. Va.)	121
Edwards v. State (Ga.).....	674	Goode, Norman v. (Ga.).....	268
Edwards, Disoway v. (N. C.).....	957	Goodman v. State (Ga.).....	922
Edwards, Milledgeville Water Co. v. (Ga.)	621	Goodwin v. Clayton (N. C.).....	173
Elizabeth City, Brewster v. (N. C.).....	885	Goodyear, Satterthwaite v. (N. C.).....	205
Elizabeth City Lumber Co., J. L. Roper		Gould v. Small (Ga.).....	723
Lumber Co. v. (N. C.).....	946	Grafton & B. R. Co. v. Buckhannon & N.
Elkins, Cain v. (W. Va.).....	898	R. Co. (W. Va.).....	532
Elkins Nat. Bank v. Simmons (W. Va.)..	893	Graham v. State (Ga.).....	678
Ellison, Buchanan v. (Ga.).....	724	Graham, McCullough v. (S. C.).....	1
Emblem, State v. (W. Va.).....	554	Graham's Heirs, McPeck's Heirs v. (W.
Equitable Fire Ins. Co. v. Fishburne (S.		Va.)	125
C.)	1038	Graham & Ward v. Macon, D. & S. R.
Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Biggers (Ga.).....	271	Co. (Ga.)	75
Equitable Mortg. Co. v. Monfort (Ga.)...	715	Great Western Tailoring Co., Norman &
Equitable Mortg. Co., Bomar v. (Ga.).....	267	Harrell v. (Ga.).....	782
Erwin v. Morris (N. C.).....	53	Green v. Western Union Tel. Co. (N. C.)...	165
Erwin v. State (Ga.).....	689	Green v. Western Union Tel. Co. (N. C.)...	171
E. Swindell & Co. v. Saddler (Ga.).....	753	Greenwich Ins. Co., Perry v. (N. C.).....	889
Evans, Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	308	Griffin v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (N.
Ewart v. Bowman (S. C.).....	867	C.)	212
Exley, Brinson v. (Ga.).....	810	Griffin v. Collins (Ga.).....	827
		Griffin v. Griffin (S. C.).....	561
Fain, Young v. (Ga.).....	731	Griner v. State (Ga.).....	700
Falkner v. Pilcher & Co. (N. C.).....	945
F. A. Prichard & Co. v. Critchlow (W.		Hall v. Misenheimer (N. C.).....	104
Va.)	453	Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co., Billmyer
Farley v. Thalheimer (Va.).....	644	v. (W. Va.).....	901
Farmers' & Mechanics' Mercantile & Mfg.		Hamilton v. Ammons (W. Va.).....	128
Co. v. Smith (S. C.).....	226	Hancock v. Western Union Tel. Co. (N.
Farmers' & Traders' Nat. Bank v. Allen-		C.)	952
Holmes Co. (Ga.).....	816	Hansford v. Simmons (W. Va.).....	898
Faulkner v. Snead (Ga.).....	747	Harkey v. Neville (S. C.).....	218
Ferguson v. Twisdale (N. C.).....	914	Harman & Crockett v. Maddy Bros. (W.
Finn, Cassels v. (Ga.).....	749	Va.)	1009
First Nat. Bank v. Harris (W. Va.).....	252	Harrell v. State (Ga.).....	703
First Nat. Bank, Swindell & Co. v. (Ga.)	673	Harris v. Balfour Quarry Co. (N. C.).....	95
Fishburne, Equitable Fire Ins. Co. v. (S.		Harris v. Daly (Ga.).....	609
C.)	1088	Harris, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. (Va.)...	997
Fisher v. Georgia Vittrified Brick & Clay		Harris, First Nat. Bank v. (W. Va.).....	252
Co. (Ga.)	679	Harris, H. G. Williams & Co. v. (N. C.)...	954
Fitts v. Atlanta (Ga.).....	793	Harris, Holsberry v. (W. Va.).....	404
Flaherty v. Stephenson (W. Va.).....	131	Harris, Nell v. (Ga.).....	773
Flint River Lumber Co. v. Smith (Ga.)...	745	Harris, Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. (Ga.)...	703
Forbes, Jenkins v. (Ga.).....	284	Harris, Virginia & N. C. Wheel Co. v. (Va.)	991
Foster v. Phinizy (Ga.).....	865	Harrison v. May (Ga.).....	728
Francis v. Reeves (N. C.).....	213	Harrison v. Thomas (Va.).....	485
Frank & Co. v. Horkan (Ga.).....	800	Hartnett v. Stillwell (Ga.).....	276
Free, De Hihns v. (S. C.).....	841	Harvey v. Buchannan (Ga.).....	281
Fritts, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.).....	971	Harvey v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	481
Fulton v. Crosby & Beckley Co. (W. Va.)	1012	Harvey v. State (Ga.).....	674
Furst v. Galloway (W. Va.).....	146	Heard v. Tappan & Merritt (Ga.)	292
		Hellams v. Western Union Tel. Co. (S. C.)	12
Gaffney Mfg. Co., Morrow v. (S. C.).....	573	Helms v. Helms (N. C.).....	110
Galloway, Furst v. (W. Va.).....	146	Helms v. Marshall (Ga.).....	733
Gardner, Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	818	Henderson, Marietta Chair Co. v. (Ga.)...	312
Garrett, Crawford v. (Ga.).....	677	Henderson, Oliver v. (Ga.).....	743
Gartlan v. Hickman (W. Va.).....	14	Hendricks Co., Clark v. (W. Va.).....	455
Gaskins v. Allen (N. C.).....	919	Hendricks Co., McNeeley v. (W. Va.).....	455
Gates & Son Co. v. Richmond (Va.).....	965	Henson, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.)	278
Gay, Ward v. (N. C.).....	884	Herbert, Babcock Printing Press Mfg. Co.
Gay's Adm'x, City of Richmond v. (Va.)...	482	v. (N. C.).....	849
General Fire Extinguisher Co. v. Carolina		Hewin v. Atlanta (Ga.).....	765
& N. W. R. Co. (N. C.).....	208	H. G. Williams & Co. v. Harris (N. C.)...	954
George v. Zinn (W. Va.).....	904	Hickman, Gartlan v. (W. Va.).....	14
Georgia, F. & A. R. Co. v. Sizer & Co. (Ga.)	737	Hilburn v. State (Ga.).....	318
Georgia, F. & A. R. Co., Powell v. (Ga.)...	759	Hill v. Cronin (W. Va.).....	132
Georgia Iron & Coal Co. v. Allison (Ga.)...	618	Hill, Rusk v., two cases (Ga.).....	261
Georgia Iron & Coal Co., Steele v. (Ga.)...	291	Hilton & Dodge Lumber Co., Anderson v.
Georgia Southern & F. R. Co. v. Jones,		(Ga.)	725
two cases (Ga.).....	729	Hobbs v. Bowie & Terhune (Ga.).....	285
Georgia Vittrified Brick & Clay Co., Fisher		Hobbs, City of Elberton v. (Ga.).....	779
v. (Ga.)	679	Hobbs, City of Elberton v. (Ga.).....	780
Georgia & A. Ry. v. Shiver (Ga.).....	700	Hobbs, Southern R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	294
Giboney v. Cooper & Cooper (W. Va.)...	939	Hobbs & Livingston, Minnesota Lumber
Gilbert Bros. & Co. v. Lawrence Bros.		Co. v. (Ga.).....	783
(W. Va.)	155	Hodges, Sharpe & Drake v. (Ga.).....	775
Gilmore, Watkins v. (Ga.).....	598	Holland v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N.
Glenn v. West (Va.).....	671	C.)	359
Glenn Boom & Lumber Co., Cobb v. (W.		Holsberry v. Harris (W. Va.).....	404
Va.)	1005	Honesdale Shoe Co. v. Montgomery (W.
Globe Furniture Co. v. Trustees of Jeru-		Va.)	434
salem Baptist Church (Va.).....	657	Horine, Southern R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	285
Glover, Morris v. (Ga.).....	786	Horkan, Frank & Co. v. (Ga.).....	800
Goff v. Board of Canvassers of Roane		Horn v. Peacock (Ga.).....	722
County (W. Va.).....	588	Hornage v. Imboden (W. Va.).....	1036

	Page		Page
Howell v. Simpson Grocery Co. (Ga.).....	209	Lawrence Bros., Gilbert Bros. & Co. v. (W. Va.).....	155
Hudson v. Lamar, Taylor & Riley Drug Co. (Ga.).....	785	Le Comte v. Carson (W. Va.).....	238
Huff, State v. (N. C.).....	239	Lee, Luquire v. (Ga.).....	824
Hughes v. McHan (Ga.).....	590	Lee, Tanner v. (Ga.).....	592
Hursey v. Hursey (W. Va.).....	367	Leverett v. Bullard (Ga.).....	591
Hutchins v. School Committee of Town of Durham (N. C.).....	46	Levison, Stevenson v. (Va.).....	974
Hutchinson, Ashley v. (Ga.).....	780	Lewark v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (N. C.)...	382
Hyland v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. (S. C.).....	879	Lewis v. Apperson (Va.).....	978
Imboden, Hornage v. (W. Va.).....	1036	Limeburger, Arnold v. (Ga.).....	812
Interstate Coal & Iron Co. v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	974	Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon (W. Va.)....	392
Isaacson, Curtin & Co. v. (W. Va.).....	254	Liskey v. Snyder (W. Va.).....	515
Isaacson, Scott v. (W. Va.).....	254	Logan, Bryant v. (W. Va.).....	21
Jackson, State v. (W. Va.).....	465	Longmore v. Stegall (Ga.).....	264
Jackson County Com'rs, Coward v. (N. C.)	207	Lord Lumber Co., Turner's Chapel African M. E. Church v. (Ga.).....	272
James, Whitley v. (Ga.).....	600	Louisville, Rhodes v. (Ga.).....	681
James Clark Distilling Co. v. Bauer (W. Va.).....	160	Lovelace, Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v., two cases (Ga.).....	607
Jemley v. State (Ga.).....	292	Lowe, Robinson v. (W. Va.).....	250
Jenkins v. Forbes (Ga.).....	284	Lowndes, Showalter v. (W. Va.).....	448
Jenkins, Moultrie Lumber Co. v. (Ga.)...	678	L. T. Madden & Co. v. Phoenix Assur. Co. (S. C.).....	855
Jennings v. Bennett (W. Va.).....	23	Luck's Adm'r, Virginia Portland Cement Co. v. (Va.).....	577
Jennings, Adams v. (Va.).....	982	Luquire v. Lee (Ga.).....	834
J. L. Roper Lumber Co. v. Elizabeth City Lumber Co. (N. C.).....	946	Luttrell v. Whitehead (Ga.).....	691
John Mackie & Co., Steringer v. (W. Va.)	942	McAllister, Baldwin Fertilizer Co. v. (Ga.)	733
Johnson v. Black (Va.).....	633	McCall v. Wilkes (Ga.).....	722
Johnson v. McKay (Ga.).....	757	McCalman v. State (Ga.).....	609
Johnson, Quillian v. (Ga.).....	801	McCarty v. Atlanta (Ga.).....	287
Johnson, Smith v. (N. C.).....	62	McCormick, Turner v. (W. Va.).....	28
Johnston, Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. (Va.).....	496	McCoy v. State (Ga.).....	294
Jones v. American Warehouse Co. (N. C.)...	355	McCreery Land & Investment Co. v. Myers (S. C.).....	848
Jones v. Atlantic Coast Line R. R. (S. C.)	508	McCue v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	623
Jones v. Boykin (S. C.).....	877	McCullough v. Graham (S. C.).....	1
Jones v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	663	McDaniel v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. (S. C.).....	2
Jones v. Nantahala Marble & Talc Co. (N. C.).....	94	McDermid v. Judge (Ga.).....	800
Jones v. Wooten (N. C.).....	915	McDuffie v. State (Ga.).....	708
Jones, Georgia Southern & F. R. Co. v., two cases (Ga.).....	729	McEarchern & Co. v. Edmondson (Ga.)...	798
Jordan, Berry v. (Ga.).....	607	McFarlin v. State (Ga.).....	267
Joseph Speidel Grocery Co. v. Warder (W. Va.).....	584	McGhee, Langhorne v. (Va.).....	44
Judge, McDermid v. (Ga.).....	800	McHan, Hughes v. (Ga.).....	590
Junge v. McKnight (N. C.).....	474	McKain, State v. (W. Va.).....	20
Kay, Newman v. (W. Va.).....	926	McKay, Johnson v. (Ga.).....	757
Kelm, Terry v. (Ga.).....	736	McKee, Turner v. (N. C.).....	330
Kellogg, Edwards v. (Ga.).....	279	McKelvey, Kline v. (W. Va.).....	896
Kemble's Adm'r v. Smallwood (W. Va.)...	445	McKenzie v. Pound (Ga.).....	689
Kemble's Committee v. Smallwood (W. Va.)	445	Mackie & Co., Steringer v. (W. Va.).....	942
Kendrick v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. (Ga.)...	762	McKnight, Junge v. (N. C.).....	474
Kener, La Grange Mills v. (Ga.).....	300	McNeeley v. Hendricks Co. (W. Va.).....	455
Kenova Transfer Co. v. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. (W. Va.)....	452	McNeill v. Durham & O. R. Co. (N. C.)...	1038
Kimbrell v. Page (S. C.).....	477	Macon, D. & S. R. Co., Graham & Ward v. (Ga.).....	75
King v. Bynum (N. C.).....	955	Macon Ry. & Light Co. v. Barnes (Ga.)...	282
Kinnear Mfg. Co., Worrell & Williams v. (Va.).....	988	Macon & B. R. Co. v. Anderson (Ga.)....	791
Kirkman v. Wadsworth (N. C.).....	962	McPeck's Heirs v. Graham's Heirs (W. Va.).....	125
Kittle, Rease v. (W. Va.).....	150	McWhorter v. Cheney (Ga.).....	603
Kittle, Town of Philippi v. (W. Va.).....	238	McWhorter v. O'Neal (Ga.).....	592
Kline v. McKelvey (W. Va.).....	896	McWhorter, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	264
Kloss v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	655	Madden & Co. v. Phoenix Assur. Co. (S. C.)	855
Knight, Vinson v. (N. C.).....	891	Maddy Bros., Harman & Crockett v. (W. Va.).....	1009
Laboringman's Mercantile & Mfg. Co., Third Nat. Bank v. (W. Va.).....	544	Male, Crostan v. (W. Va.).....	136
La Grange Mills v. Kener (Ga.).....	300	Mann, Yock v. (W. Va.).....	1019
Lake Drummond Canal & Water Co. v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	506	Mannon v. Camden Interstate R. Co. (W. Va.).....	450
Lamar, Taylor & Riley Drug Co., Hudson v. (Ga.).....	785	Marietta Chair Co. v. Henderson (Ga.)....	312
Lamb v. Brunswick (Ga.).....	275	Marsh v. Despard (W. Va.).....	24
Lance v. Tainter (N. C.).....	211	Marshall v. State (Ga.).....	317
Langhorne v. McGhee (Va.).....	44	Marshall, Helms v. (Ga.).....	733
Lassiter v. Okeetee Club (S. C.).....	224	Martin v. Nichols, two cases (Ga.).....	613
Lassiter v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. (N. C.)...	93	Martin v. Thomas (W. Va.).....	118
Laurens Cotton Mills, Parks v. (S. C.)...	871	Maxon, Wilson v. (W. Va.).....	123
		Maxwell, W. & T. Allen & Co. v. (W. Va.)	242
		May, Harrison v. (Ga.).....	728
		Meadows v. State (Ga.).....	268
		Melton v. Camp (Ga.).....	690
		Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Co., Wamsley v. (W. Va.).....	141

	Page		Page
Milledgeville Water Co. v. Edwards (Ga.)..	621	Parrott v. Barrett (S. C.).....	563
Miller v. Butler (Ga.).....	754	Patrick v. Cobb (Ga.).....	806
Miller v. Thigpen (Ga.).....	286	Payne, Williamson v. (Va.).....	660
Miller, Divine v. (S. C.).....	479	Peacock, Horn v. (Ga.).....	722
Milner, Vaughn v. (Ga.).....	287	Peacock, Wade v. (Ga.).....	826
Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Hobbs & Living- ston (Ga.).....	783	Pearlstone v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. (S. C.).....	4
Misenheimer, Hall v. (N. C.).....	104	Pearson v. West Virginia Lime & Cement Co. (W. Va.).....	418
Monfort, Equitable Mortg. Co. v. (Ga.)...	715	Peoples v. North Carolina R. Co. (N. C.)	87
Monk v. Wilmington (N. C.).....	345	Percival v. Bailey (S. C.).....	7
Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co., Kenova Transfer Co. v. (W. Va.)...	452	Perry v. Greenwich Ins. Co. (N. C.).....	889
Montesuma, Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	738	Phillips v. State (Ga.).....	290
Montgomery, Honesdale Shoe Co. v. (W. Va.).....	434	Phinizy, Foster v. (Ga.).....	865
Moody, State v. (S. C.).....	8	Phoenix Assur. Co., L. T. Madden & Co. v. (S. C.).....	855
Moore v. Dean (S. C.).....	840	Pierce, Powell v. (Va.).....	666
Moore v. Pritchett (Ga.).....	262	Pike v. State (Ga.).....	680
Moore v. Simmons (W. Va.).....	893	Plicher & Co., Falkner v. (N. C.).....	945
Moore v. Smith (Ga.).....	601	Pinchback v. Bessemer Min. & Mfg. Co. (N. C.).....	106
Moore v. State (Ga.).....	617	Pitts v. Whitehead (Ga.).....	698
Moore, Mosser v. (W. Va.).....	537	Poling v. Board of Education of Philippi Independent Dist. (W. Va.).....	148
Moore, State v. (W. Va.).....	1015	Ponder v. Quitman Ginney (Ga.).....	746
Moore's Devises, Charters Oil Co. v. (W. Va.).....	449	Pound, McKenzie v. (Ga.).....	689
Morgan County v. Walton County (Ga.)...	776	Powell v. Georgia, F. & A. R. Co. (Ca.)...	759
Morris v. Glover (Ga.).....	786	Powell v. Pierce (Va.).....	666
Morris v. Spartanburg Ry., Gas & Electric Co. (S. C.).....	854	Powell, Warren v. (Ga.).....	780
Morris, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.)	606	Pratt, Stults v. (Va.).....	654
Morris, Erwin v. (N. C.).....	53	Price v. State (Ga.).....	292
Morrow v. Gafney Mfg. Co. (S. C.).....	573	Price, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.)...	688
Mosser v. Moore (W. Va.).....	587	Price, Rocky Mount Loan & Trust Co. v. (Va.).....	73
Moultrie Lumber Co. v. Driver Lumber Co. (Ga.).....	729	Prichard & Co. v. Orichlow (W. Va.).....	453
Moultrie Lumber Co. v. Jenkins (Ga.)...	678	Prison Ass'n of Virginia v. Russell's Adm'r (Va.).....	966
Mount, Wall v. (Ga.).....	778	Pritchett, Moore v. (Ga.).....	292
Myers, McCreery Land & Investment Co. v. (S. C.).....	848	Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning (S. C.)..	325
Nantahala Marble & Talc Co., Jones v. (N. C.).....	94	Quantz v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.).....	79
National Bldg. Ass'n v. Quinn (Ga.).....	812	Quillian v. Johnson (Ga.).....	801
Neal Loan & Banking Co. v. Chastain (Ga.)	618	Quinn, National Bldg. Ass'n v. (Ga.).....	812
Nell v. Harris (Ga.).....	773	Quitman Ginney, Ponder v. (Ga.).....	746
Neville, Harkey v. (S. C.).....	218	Raber, Caton v. (W. Va.).....	147
Newberry v. Tenant (Ga.).....	621	Raleigh & G. R. Co., Lassiter v. (N. C.)	93
New Era Bldg. Co., Troxler v. (N. C.)...	58	Ramey v. O'Byrne (Ga.).....	595
Newman v. Kay (W. Va.).....	926	Ramseur v. Wheelchel (S. C.).....	228
Newton, Roby v. (Ga.).....	694	Rease v. Kittle (W. Va.).....	150
Nichols, Martin v., two cases (Ga.).....	613	Reeves v. Southern R. Co. (Ga.).....	674
Nickell, Bank of Union v. (W. Va.).....	1008	Reeves, Francis v. (N. C.).....	213
Norfolk Ry. & Light Co. v. Spratley (Va.)	502	Revis v. Roper (Ga.).....	291
Norfolk & P. Belt Line R. Co. v. Common- wealth (Va.).....	39	Rhea v. Shields (Va.).....	70
Norfolk & S. B. Co., Newark v. (N. C.)...	882	Rhea, Cobb v. (N. C.).....	161
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Cheatwood's Adm'r (Va.).....	489	Rhodes v. Louisville (Ga.).....	681
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Fritts (Va.).....	971	Richards v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.)...	385
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Suffolk (Va.).....	658	Richards v. Riverside Ironworks (W. Va.)..	487
Norman v. Goode (Ga.).....	268	Richards v. State (Ga.).....	689
Norman & Harrell v. Great Western Tailoring Co. (Ga.).....	782	Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Johnston (Va.).....	496
Normile v. Wheeling Traction Co. (W. Va.).....	1080	Richmond, Gates & Son Co. v. (Va.).....	965
North Carolina Corporation Commission v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (N. C.).....	191	Richmond Ice Co. v. Crystal Ice Co. (Va.)..	650
North Carolina R. Co., Peoples v. (N. C.)	87	Richmond Passenger & Power Co. v. Allen (Va.).....	656
O'Byrne, Ramey v. (Ga.).....	595	Richmond Passenger & Power Co. v. Stager (Va.).....	496
O'Donnell v. Wing & Son (Ga.).....	720	Richmond & P. Electric R. Co. v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. (Va.).....	512
Ogburn v. Dublin Wagon & Machine Co. (Ga.).....	263	Risher v. Wheeling Roofing & Cornice Co. (W. Va.).....	1016
Oglesby v. State (Ga.).....	706	Riverside Ironworks, Richards v. (W. Va.)	487
Ohio River R. Co., Richards v. (W. Va.)	385	Rixey v. Rixey (Va.).....	586
Ohio River R. Co., Uhl v. (W. Va.).....	878	Roberts, Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v. (Va.).....	894
Okeetes Club, Lassiter v. (S. C.).....	224	Robinson v. Edgell (W. Va.).....	1027
Oliver v. Henderson (Ga.).....	743	Robinson v. Lowe (W. Va.).....	250
Oliver, Avery v. (N. C.).....	91	Roby v. Newton (Ga.).....	694
O'Neal, McWhorter v. (Ga.).....	592	Rocky Mount Loan & Trust Co. v. Price (Va.).....	73
Page, Kimbrell v. (S. C.).....	477	Rollins v. Ebbs (N. C.).....	841
P. A. Lord Lumber Co., Turner's Chapel African M. E. Church v. (Ga.).....	272	Rollins, Southern R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	290
Parker, Tayloe v. (N. C.).....	921	Roper, Revis v. (Ga.).....	291
Parks v. Laurens Cotton Mills (S. C.).....	871	Roper Lumber Co. v. Elizabeth City Lum- ber Co. (N. C.).....	946
		Rowan v. Combs (Ga.).....	275

	Page		Page
State, Smith v. (Ga.).....	677	U. B. Blalock & Co. v. W. D. Clark & Bros. (N. C.).....	88
State, Summerford v. (Ga.).....	268	Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.).....	878
State, Sutherland v. (Ga.).....	781
State, Taylor v. (Ga.).....	308	Van Pelt, State v. (N. C.).....	177
State, Taylor v. (Ga.).....	317	Varner, Scoville Bros. v. (Ga.).....	718
State, Thomas v. (Ga.).....	278	Vaughn v. Milner (Ga.).....	287
State, Walea v. (Ga.).....	710	Vinson v. Knight (N. C.).....	891
State, Watts v. (Ga.).....	267	Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v. Roberts (Va.).....	984
State, West v. (Ga.).....	266	Virginia Passenger & Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	995
State, Whidby v. (Ga.).....	811	Virginia Portland Cement Co. v. Luck's Adm'r (Va.).....	577
State, White v. (Ga.).....	715	Virginia & N. C. Wheel Co. v. Harris (Va.).....	991
State, Williams v. (Ga.).....	689	Virginia & S. W. R. Co. v. Bailey (Va.)...	33
State, Wolfe v. (Ga.).....	688
State, Young v. (Ga.).....	256	Wade v. Peacock (Ga.).....	826
Staton v. Webb (N. C.).....	55	Wadsworth, Kirkman v. (N. C.).....	962
Steele v. Georgia Iron & Coal Co. (Ga.)...	291	Walea v. State (Ga.).....	710
Stegall, Longmore v. (Ga.).....	284	Walker v. Cassels (S. C.).....	862
Steger, Richmond Passenger & Power Co. v. (Va.).....	486	Walker Bros. v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.)...	84
Stephenson, Flaherty v. (W. Va.).....	181	Wall v. Mount (Ga.).....	778
Steringer v. John Mackie & Co. (W. Va.)...	942	Wall, Allison v. (Ga.).....	831
Stevenson v. Levison (Va.).....	974	Walton County, Morgan County v. (Ga.)...	776
Stiles, Shedden v. (Ga.).....	719	Wamsley v. Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Co. (W. Va.).....	141
Stillwell, Hartnett v. (Ga.).....	276	Ward v. Gay (N. C.).....	884
Stockton v. Craig (W. Va.).....	386	Warder, Joseph Spedel Grocery Co. v. (W. Va.).....	534
Stout v. Sands (W. Va.).....	428	Warner Moore & Co. v. Western Assur. Co. (Va.).....	499
Stover v. Davis (W. Va.).....	1023	Warren v. Powell (Ga.).....	730
Strickland v. Capital City Mills (S. C.)...	478	Watkins v. Gilmore (Ga.).....	598
Stultz v. Pratt (Va.).....	654	Watts v. State (Ga.).....	267
Sudduth, City of Rome v. (Ga.).....	300	W. D. Clark & Bros., U. B. Blalock & Co. v. (N. C.).....	88
Suffolk, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.).....	658	Weaver, Atlanta & B. Air Line Ry. v. (Ga.).....	291
Suffolk & C. R. Co. v. West End Land & Improvement Co. (N. C.).....	350	Webb, Baldwin v. (Ga.).....	265
Summerford v. State (Ga.).....	268	Webb, Staton v. (N. C.).....	55
Sutherland v. State (Ga.).....	781	Weeks, Saussey & Huxford v. (Ga.).....	809
Sutton v. Catawba Power Co. (S. C.).....	863	Weimer, Wright & Watkins v. Talbot (W. Va.).....	372
Swanson, Standard Oil Co. v. (Ga.).....	262	Welborn v. Dixon (S. C.).....	232
Swift Fertilizer Works, Trammell v. (Ga.)...	739	Wells v. Terrell (Ga.).....	319
Swift & Co. v. Wood (Va.).....	643	West v. State (Ga.).....	266
Swindell & Co. v. First Nat. Bank (Ga.)...	673	West v. Wright (Ga.).....	285
Swindell & Co. v. Saddler (Ga.).....	753	West, Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. (Ga.)...	711
		West, Glenn v. (Va.).....	671
Tainter, Lance v. (N. C.).....	211	Westall, Brittain v. (N. C.).....	54
Talbot, Welmer, Wright & Watkins v. (W. Va.).....	372	Westbrook v. Baldwin County (Ga.).....	286
Tanner v. Lee (Ga.).....	592	Westchester Fire Ins. Co., Pearlstine v. (S. C.).....	4
Tappan, Baker v. (W. Va.).....	447	West End Land & Improvement Co., Suffolk & C. R. Co. v. (N. C.).....	350
Tappan & Merritt, Heard v. (Ga.).....	292	Western Assur. Co., Warner Moore & Co. v. (Va.).....	499
Taylor v. Parker (N. C.).....	921	Western Union Tel. Co., Green v. (N. C.)...	165
Taylor v. State (Ga.).....	308	Western Union Tel. Co., Green v. (N. C.)...	171
Taylor v. State (Ga.).....	317	Western Union Tel. Co., Hancock v. (N. C.)...	952
Taylor, Allen v. (Ga.).....	799	Western Union Tel. Co., Hellams v. (S. C.)...	12
Taylor, Brantley v. (Ga.).....	262	Western & A. R. Co. v. Clark (Ga.).....	290
Teal, Council v. (Ga.).....	806	West Virginia Lime & Cement Co., Pearson v. (W. Va.).....	418
Tenant, Newberry v. (Ga.).....	621	West Virginia Short Line R. Co. v. Belington & N. R. Co. (W. Va.).....	460
Terrell, Wells v. (Ga.).....	819	Wheeling Roofing & Cornice Co., Risher v. (W. Va.).....	1016
Terry v. Keim (Ga.).....	736	Wheeling Traction Co., Normile v. (W. Va.).....	1030
Thalhimer, Farley v. (Va.).....	644	Wheelwright v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	647
Thigpen, Dawson v. (N. C.).....	959	Whelchel, Ramseur v. (S. C.).....	228
Thigpen, Miller v. (Ga.).....	236	Whidby v. State (Ga.).....	811
Third Nat. Bank v. Laboringman's Mercantile & Mfg. Co. (W. Va.).....	544	Whisenant v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.)...	559
Thomas v. State (Ga.).....	273	White v. State (Ga.).....	715
Thomas, Harrison v. (Va.).....	485	Whitehead, Luttrell v. (Ga.).....	691
Thomas, Martin v. (W. Va.).....	118	Whitehead, Pitts v. (Ga.).....	693
Thompson v. American Mortg. Co. of Scotland (Ga.).....	751	Whitley v. James (Ga.).....	600
Thompson v. Brown (Ga.).....	740	Wicker v. Wicker (S. C.).....	10
Thornton Light & Power Co., Cameron-Barkley Co. v. (N. C.).....	76	Wilkes, McCall v. (Ga.).....	722
Tifton, T. & G. R. Co., Butler v. (Ga.)...	763	Wm. L. Allen & Co. v. Davids (S. C.).....	846
Town of Douglasville v. Skinner (Ga.)...	287	Williams v. Sewell (Ga.).....	732
Town of Phillipi v. Kittle (W. Va.).....	238	Williams v. State (Ga.).....	689
Trail v. Trail (W. Va.).....	431	Williams, Bray v. (N. C.).....	887
Trammell v. Swift Fertilizer Works (Ga.)...	739
Trotter v. Angel (N. C.).....	329
Troxler v. New Era Bldg. Co. (N. C.).....	58
Trustees of Jerusalem Baptist Church, Globe Furniture Co. v. (Va.).....	657
Turnage, State v. (N. C.).....	918
Turner v. McCormick (W. Va.).....	28
Turner v. McKee (N. C.).....	830
Turner v. Wilson (N. C.).....	1038
Turner's Chapel African M. E. Church v. P. A. Lord Lumber Co. (Ga.).....	272
Twisdale, Ferguson v. (N. C.).....	914

	Page		Page
Williamson v. Payne (Va.).....	660	Wooten, Jones v. (N. C.).....	915
Williams & Co. v. Harris (N. C.).....	954	Worrell & Williams v. Kinnear Mfg. Co.
Wilmington, Monk v. (N. C.).....	945	(Va.)	983
Wilson v. Braden (W. Va.).....	409	Wotring, State v. (W. Va.).....	365
Wilson v. Maxon (W. Va.).....	123	Wright, West v. (Ga.).....	285
Wilson, Bond v. (N. C.)	89	W. & T. Allen & Co. v. Maxwell (W. Va.)..	242
Wilson, Bosworth v. (W. Va.).....	942
Wilson, Stafford v. (Ga.).....	800	Yock v. Mann (W. Va.).....	1019
Wilson, Turner v. (N. C.).....	1038	Young v. Fain (Ga.).....	731
Wing & Son, O'Donnell v. (Ga.).....	720	Young v. State (Ga.).....	256
Wolfe v. State (Ga.).....	633
Wood v. Brown (Ga.).....	295	Zachry, Smith v. (Ga.).....	286
Wood, Swift & Co. v. (Va.).....	643	Zinn, George v. (W. Va.).....	904
Woodliff v. Bloodworth (Ga.).....	289

THE SOUTHEASTERN REPORTER.
VOLUME 49.

(70 S. C. 68)

MCCULLOUGH et al. v. GRAHAM et al.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 9, 1904.)

COUNTIES—GENERAL STOCK—EXEMPTIONS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Acts Dec. 23, 1882, Dec. 24, 1883, Dec. 26, 1884 (18 St. at Large, pp. 238, 513, 867), exempting part of Williamsburg county from the operation of the general stock law, are not in conflict with Const. 1895, art. 10, § 6, prohibiting the General Assembly from authorizing counties or townships to levy taxes except for certain purposes, in that such acts provide for the levying of taxes for the maintenance of fences, which subjects are not within the exceptions of the Constitution, the provisions of the Constitution being prospective.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Williamsburg County; Watts, Judge.

Action by W. B. McCullough, R. J. Bryan, and others against J. J. Graham, supervisor, D. B. Blakely and S. J. Singletary, county commissioners, and G. W. Johnson, treasurer. From circuit decree overruling demurrer, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Le Roy Lee, for appellants. Stoll & Stoll, for respondents.

JONES, J. The plaintiffs, as taxpayers, sought to enjoin the supervisor, the county commissioners, and treasurer of Williamsburg county from levying and collecting taxes authorized by the acts of the General Assembly approved December 23, 1882, December 24, 1883, and December 26, 1884 (18 Stat. pp. 238, 513, 867), which purport to exempt, among others, certain townships in Williamsburg county from the operation of the general stock law, and provide for the erection and maintenance of a fence separating such townships from the section subject to the general stock law, and for levying and collecting taxes for this purpose upon the assessed value of all cattle, hogs, sheep, dogs, and goats embraced in the exempted sections.

From 1883 up to the commencement of this action, in November, 1903, taxes have been levied and collected under these statutes without question. The plaintiffs now assail the statutes as in conflict with article 10, § 6, of the Constitution, which provides that "the General Assembly shall not have power to authorize any county or township to levy a tax for any purpose except for educational purposes, to build and repair public roads, buildings and bridges, to maintain and support prisoners, pay jurors, county officers, and for litigation, quarantine and court expenses, and for ordinary county purposes, to support paupers and pay past indebtedness"; and with article 17, § 11, par. 3, of the Constitution, which provides as follows: "The provisions of all laws which are inconsistent with this Constitution, shall cease upon its adoption, except that all laws which are inconsistent with such provisions of this Constitution as require legislation to enforce them shall remain in force until such legislation is had." Upon a demurrer to the complaint, the circuit judge, Watts, overruled same, and adjudged the said statute void, as in conflict with the said provisions of the Constitution, and granted the injunction. This appeal questions the correctness of this ruling.

We think the court erred. Article 10, § 6, above quoted, is not retrospective, but relates to future action by the General Assembly. Constitutions, like statutes, must be construed as acting prospectively, unless a contrary intent appears by express language or necessary implication. Ex parte Jeter, 64 S. C. 407, 42 S. E. 196. In the case of State v. Tucker, 54 S. C. 253, 32 S. E. 361, it was held that article 17, § 11, subd. 3, did not repeal local or special legislation in force at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, because the provisions of the Constitution against local or special legislation were prospective. Article 8, § 84. In article 17, § 11, subd. 1, of the Constitution, it is provided "that all laws in force in this state at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, not inconsistent therewith, and constitutional when enacted, shall remain in full force until altered or repealed by the General Assembly or expire of their own limitation." It is not suggested that the statutes in question were unconstitutional when enacted, and it is impossible for an act of the Legislature, having the force of law, to be declared repugnant to a constitutional provision subsequently adopted, and having prospective operation only.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed.

(70 S. C. 95)

McDANIEL v. CHARLESTON & W. C. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 9, 1904.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—FELLOW SERVANT.

1. A roadmaster who has control of the wrecking train while at work and attends all wrecks on his division is a fellow servant with the conductor of the train, and cannot recover of the railroad company, where, after the train was divided by an agreement between him and the conductor, the engineer of the wrecking train struck the detached car on which the roadmaster was standing in moving a part of the train under the direction of the conductor.

Gary, A. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County; Townsend, Judge.

Action by S. G. McDaniel against the Charleston & Western Carolina Railroad Company. From order of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

N. B. Dial, for appellant. S. J. Simpson and Simpson & Cooper, for respondent.

WOODS, J. This action for damages rested on evidence to this effect: While plaintiff was engaged as roadmaster in clearing a wreck from defendant's roadway, the other portion of the work train ran against the detached flat car on which he was standing with such violence that he was thrown from the car and injured. The work train was operated by a conductor and engineer. Plaintiff, as roadmaster, worked under the direction of the engineer of the railroad, and the conductor of the work train ran his train under orders of the trainmaster; but the plaintiff was familiar with the rules of the railroad company, which required him "to attend in person all accidents" on his division, and provided that "conductors and engineers of work trains will receive instructions from the roadmaster in regard to work to be done by their train." On this occasion plaintiff was actually left by a superior officer in charge of the entire work of removing the wreck. Subsequently he and the conductor of the work train, of their own motion, agreed on a division of the work, and in pursuance of the agreement the work train was parted so that each should have some of the cars. The locomotive was attached to the cars the conductor was using. The accident occurred from these cars being moved violently without warning against the car which the plaintiff was using and on which he was standing. The circuit judge ordered a nonsuit on the ground that, if the injury was due to negligence, it was the negligence of a fellow servant.

The plaintiff's exceptions, as we understand, really involve three propositions which he undertakes to sustain: First. The conductor operating the train was the superior of the roadmaster in the conduct of the work, and had a right to direct or control his services. There is no evidence to sustain this statement; on the contrary, the plaintiff positively confutes it. Second. The plaintiff and the conductor and engineer were engaged in different departments of labor. In the mere running of the work train from place to place, doubtless, to avoid interference with other trains, the conductor received orders from the trainmaster; but when actually at work the rules placed the conductor and crew under the direction of the roadmaster, and in his department of labor. Third. The plaintiff and the conductor and engineer were engaged about a different piece of work. Obviously, removing different pieces of the wreck did not constitute being engaged about different pieces of work, within the meaning of section 15, art. 9, of the Constitution. The common enterprise—the piece of work—was the removal of the wreck. The engine and cars were instrumentalities provided for the purpose, to be used by the conductor and engineer, under the plaintiff as their superior, just as jackscrews and shovels were to be used by others; and the negligent moving of the train stands on the same footing as would the negligent placing of a jack-screw. But aside from the rules of the company and the other evidence indicating that the plaintiff and conductor and engineer were engaged as fellow servants about the same piece of work, the plaintiff testified that he voluntarily agreed with the conductor as to what part of the wreckage each should remove, and the accident occurred while they were working about the common enterprise as fellow servants in conjunction with each other in pursuance of the agreement. Of the many cases on the subject it is only necessary to refer to Wilson v. Railway Co., 51 S. C. 79, 28 S. E. 91, and Koon v. Railway Co., 69 S. C. 101, 48 S. E. 86.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

GARY, A. J. (dissenting). This is an action for damages on account of injuries sustained by the plaintiff through the alleged negligence and recklessness of the defendant in the operation of its train of cars. The complaint alleges that while the plaintiff was in the discharge of his duties as roadmaster in assisting to load the debris which had been caused by a wreck on flat cars, and while standing on a flat car, without any warning whatever the defendant, its agents, servants, and employes, pushed its engine and cars violently, negligently, and recklessly against the car whereon the plaintiff was standing, and violently jerked or knocked the said car, and threw the plaintiff to the ground, inflicting upon him serious injuries. At the close of plaintiff's testimony the defendant made a motion for a nonsuit, which was granted, on the ground that the injuries were caused by the act of a fellow servant. The appeal is from the order of nonsuit.

If the testimony was susceptible of more than one inference as to the relation in which the plaintiff stood to the person inflicting the injuries, then this question should have been submitted to the jury. In Wilson v. Ry. Co., 51 S. C. 79, 28 S. E. 91, the court uses this language: "The second question raised by the exceptions is: Was there error on the part of the presiding judge in submitting to the jury the question whether the plaintiff and the employes of the defendant, through whose negligence the injury to the plaintiff is alleged to have been sustained, were fellow servants? Whether an engineer, brakeman, or switchman is, when exercising his ordinary duties, a fellow servant with the car cleaner, is a question of law. But whether, in a particular case, either of them was engaged in performing certain acts which the law requires of the master, and which would prevent them from being fellow servants, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury. The question as to who are fellow servants is a mixed question of law and fact. It is for the court to define the relation of fellow servants, but it is for the jury to determine whether the employes in a particular case come within the definition."

Section 15, art. 9, of the Constitution, contains the following provisions: "Every employee of any railroad corporation shall have the same rights and remedies for any personal injury suffered by him from the acts or omissions of said corporation, or its employees, as are allowed by law to persons not employees, when the injury results from the negligence of a superior agent or officer, or of a person having a right to control or direct the services of a party injured, and also when the injury results from the negligence of a fellow-servant engaged in another department of labor from that of the party injured, or of a fellow-servant on another train of cars, or one engaged about a different piece of work."

In order to determine whether the undisputed testimony showed that the plaintiff was a fellow servant with those operating the train of cars that caused the injury it will be necessary to review the testimony relating to this question. The plaintiff testified as follows: "Q. What is the duty of a roadmaster? A. To look after the general repair of the track, bridges, trestles, culverts, everything in the roadway department. Q. Ditches? A. Ditches; and distributing material, making requisitions for different kinds of material. Q. Looking after the physical part of the road? A. Looking after the road to see that material was distributed, and to keep a general supervision over the track and bridge force. Q. From whom do you get your orders? A. Engineer of roadway. Q. Who was he at the time? A. Mr. A. H. Porter. Q. He was engineer of what? A.

Roadway. Q. He was your next superior officer? A. Yes, sir. Q. What position does Mr. Reese occupy? A. He was conductor of the work train; and while at Greenwood we talked the matter over together as to the best way to get this work done and get him away from there so he could get to Augusta, and we agreed to divide up the force. He was to take a portion of it, as many as he needed, and put that coal car on the track. He had the trucks to lower on the wrecking car or flat car—I don't remember which now—and I was to take another portion of the force and finish loading this scrap iron next, lying scattered around from these burnt cars. Q. From whom did Mr. Reese get his orders? Whose jurisdiction was he under? A. Mr. Reese got his orders in regard to moving trains from the trainmaster. Q. What was Mr. Reese's business? A. So far as moving trains was concerned? Q. I mean generally what his business was? A. He carried out the instructions of his superior officer. Q. What position did he hold? A. Work train conductor. Q. Where did that work train work? A. It worked all over the whole system of the C. & W. C. Q. How much jurisdiction did you have? A. I had 112 miles. Q. That all of the system? A. No, sir; there is 345 miles of the system. Q. You mend other sections besides yours? A. There are three divisions, and I had the third division. Q. Mr. Reese got his instructions from the trainmaster? A. Yes, sir, the trainmaster. Q. His business was to operate the train? A. Yes, sir; he was in full charge of the train. Q. You have anything to do with the train? A. Not a thing. Q. Nothing to do with the train? A. No, sir. Q. Nothing to do with moving the train? A. No, sir. Q. At any time did you have anything to do with the moving of that train? A. No, sir. Q. Your duty was to look after the physical part of the road? A. Yes, sir. Q. Were you familiar with rule 824, which reads as follows: 'You will attend in person all accidents on your division, with ample force necessary to clear the track,' etc.? A. Yes, sir. Q. That was one of your rules? A. Yes, sir. Q. Do you know whether this was one of the rules with reference to work trains: 'Conductors and engineers of work trains will receive instructions from the roadmaster in regard to work to be done by their train'? A. Yes, sir. Q. After he [Porter] left, you were in charge? A. Yes, sir; I was in charge of the work—the direction of the work. Q. Didn't your charge of the direction of that work cover the general direction of all the instructions in reference to that work, including the work train? A. I had nothing to do with the moving of the train whatever. Q. Who had anything to do with the movement of the train? A. The conductor and engineer. Q. Who did the conductor report to? A. He reported, so far as the work went, to me, and so far as the movement of the train, all the train orders he got from the trainmaster. Q. You mean this, do you not: that when you want to go to a spot from Laurens, or from Greenwood, or from any other distant point, he moves the train under a train dispatcher's order, but around the work was he not under your supervision or directions? A. About the movement of the train, he made his own signals, and whenever he wanted the train moved it was his duty to signal the engineer. That was the conductor's duty to make his train go back and forward. Q. How did Mr. Reese get his instructions about moving that train? A. From the trainmaster. Q. How, by mail? A. A train dispatch, a telegraph order; got them several times each day. As the work progressed, he may want to move back and forth over the road, and one order will not cover a day's work. Q. He was under the train dispatcher, you say? A. The trainmaster, when he comes in to lie up at night, the rules require that he report that his train is clear of the main line on a side track, and will move to-morrow between such and such a point—say, for instance, between Laurens and Ora. Then next morning, when he reports for the work, the trainmaster will wire him that engine so and so will work as an extra between Laurens and Ora. Q. You had nothing to do with that? A. Not a thing in the world. He was required to sign that order, and transfer it back by wire to the trainmaster." It will thus be seen that the facts were in dispute as to whether the plaintiff was a fellow servant with those in charge of the train of cars. There is testimony tending to show that the plaintiff and the conductor of the train received their instructions from different superior officers—the plaintiff working under the direction and control of the engineer of roadway, and the conductor receiving his orders from the trainmaster. This testimony tended to show that they were engaged in different departments of labor.

His honor the presiding judge therefore erred in granting the nonsuit.

(70 S. C. 75)

PEARLSTINE v. WESTCHESTER FIRE INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 5, 1904.)

NONSUIT—NEW TRIAL—EXCEPTIONS—APPEAL—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS—INSURANCE—PROOFS OF LOSS—WAIVER.

1. A motion for nonsuit, in an action on an insurance policy, on the ground that insured had not complied with the conditions thereof, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, should not be granted, as plaintiff might show waiver in reply.

2. Exceptions to a refusal of a new trial on grounds not shown to have been urged below will not be considered.

3. Where the court properly submits the issues on request of appellant, stating an issuable fact affirmatively in the charge by inadvertence is not ground for reversal.

4. Where the question of actual knowledge is submitted to the jury by an instruction asked by defendant, he cannot complain if the court modifies the request by instructing as to knowledge of facts by being put on inquiry, though there is no evidence on which to base it.

5. The court cannot, in its charge, on request, select isolated facts shown in the evidence, and state their effect.

6. Proofs of loss made and sworn to by an agent, where the facts are within his own knowledge and the principal is absent, is not a violation of a stipulation in the policy that the proofs of loss shall be made by insured.

7. It is no excuse for refusal of insured to submit himself to examination as to his loss at the demand of the insurer that he has fled the country to avoid arrest.

8. Where the insurance company retains unearned premiums after notice that the policy was void under its terms, it is some proof of waiver.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Bamberg County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by T. W. Pearlstine against the Westchester Fire Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Jno. C. Reed and Jno. R. Bellinger, for appellant. Izlar Bros. and H. F. Rice, for respondent.

WOODS, J. In this action on a fire insurance policy covering a stock of goods, the defendant sets up the failure of the plaintiff to comply with three stipulations of the policy: (1) "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void * * * if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership." (2) The provision that the proof of loss shall be rendered within 60 days, "signed and sworn to by said insured, stating the knowledge and belief of the insured as to the time and origin of the fire; the interest of the insured and of all others in the property," etc. (3) "The insured, as often as required, shall exhibit to any person designated by this company all that remains of any property herein described, and submit to examination under oath by any person named by this company, and subscribe the same."

At the close of plaintiff's testimony, defendant asked for a nonsuit on the ground that the foregoing conditions to recovery had not been complied with. If we assume that the evidence established noncompliance, a nonsuit would have been improper, because, as has been frequently held, the plaintiff might show waiver by the defendant. Sample v. Insurance Co., 42 S. C. 14, 19 S. E. 1020; Copeland v. Assurance Co., 43 S. C. 26, 20 S. E. 754; Carpenter v. Accident Co., 46 S. C. 546, 24 S. E. 500. The exceptions as to refusal or nonsuit cannot, therefore, be sustained. In such cases the motion for nonsuit or to direct a verdict should be made at the close of all the testimony.

The verdict being for the plaintiff for the amount of the policy, the defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was refused. If it appeared from the record that the motion was made on the ground that there was no testimony on which the verdict could stand, this court would be in a position to consider whether there was any real question of fact made by the evidence as to the violation of the policy on the part of the plaintiff, and any evidence of waiver, but the record is silent as to the grounds upon which the new trial was asked. The court can consider nothing outside of the record. We cannot infer from the exceptions or the general course of the trial that the motion for a new trial was made on the ground of a total lack of proof to support the claim. Without expressing any opinion whatever as to the evidence, therefore, the exceptions alleging error in refusing to grant a new trial must be overruled.

The defendant's first four exceptions to the charge relate to the stipulation in the policy as to exclusive ownership. It is true, the circuit judge did say in opening his charge that the defendant admitted the fire destroyed the property of the plaintiff; but the statement was a manifest inadvertence, to which it would have been well for defendant's counsel to call the court's attention. Subsequently the question of exclusive ownership was submitted as requested by defendant, and this should be held to remove any erroneous impression made on the jury by the first remarks as to ownership.

The defendant's first and second requests were as follows: "(1) That if the jury finds that the policy in question was issued to T. W. Pearlstine, and at that time the property insured belonged to S. W. Pearlstine, and not to T. W. Pearlstine, and that fact was not known to the defendant or its agent, plaintiff cannot recover. (2) That if the jury find that at the time of the fire the property insured belonged to S. W. Pearlstine, and not to T. W. Pearlstine, and that fact was not known to defendant or its agent, plaintiff cannot recover." The circuit judge charged these requests; adding, in substance, that knowledge of facts which should suggest inquiry and lead to the discovery of the real ownership would be equivalent to actual knowledge. The defendant, without challenging the correctness of the addition made to the requests as an abstract proposition, insists it was erroneous and prejudicial, because there was no testimony upon which to base it. Assuming, without deciding, that S. W. Pearlstine, and not the plaintiff, T. W. Pearlstine, was the owner; that the defendant had no knowledge of that fact, and that there was nothing to put him upon inquiry; and assuming, further, that it is reversible error to submit questions to the jury for which the testimony affords no basis—it does not follow that this exception can be sustained. The defendant itself requested the questions of ownership, and actual knowledge by the defendant of the true ownership, to be submitted to the jury as issues for them to decide, and therefore cannot complain that the court, in the same connection, instructed the jury, in considering the issue of actual knowledge, to consider also the issue of knowledge of facts which would put defendant on inquiry as to the true ownership. The requests of defendant could not have been charged at all, except with the modification made by the court. Gandy v. Insurance Co., 52 S. C. 224, 29 S. E. 655.

The defendant's third request was: "(3) That if the jury find that S. W. Pearlstine was in charge of the property, managing and controlling it under a power of attorney from T. W. Pearlstine, that fact was not sufficient to charge the agent of defendant with the knowledge or notice of any interest in S. W. Pearlstine in said property." It is obviously true that the single fact of the management of property under a power of attorney by the agent named in the paper does not charge those who deal with the reputed agent, acting in the name of the principal, with knowledge or notice that the agent, and not the principal, is the real owner; but it is not proper for the circuit judge to select isolated facts and state their effect. Whether the evidence would have justified a charge that T. W. Pearlstine was not the sole and unconditional owner of the property, and that there was nothing to show knowledge or information sufficient to put the defendant on inquiry, and that, under the terms of the policy, defendant was not liable unless there was a waiver of the stipulation as to ownership, we repeat, to avoid misunderstanding, is quite a different question, and one not before the court. Hence we decide nothing on the question of ownership and insurable interest.

The fourth request was manifestly covered by the charge made under the first and second requests.

The proof of loss was made out and sworn to by S. W. Pearlstine, the agent, who conducted the mercantile business under a power of attorney from T. W. Pearlstine, and not by T. W. Pearlstine himself, in whose name the policy was issued. The defendant next insists that the circuit judge erred in charging: "The authorities seem to hold that an agent for the insured can make the proofs of loss when the insured is absent at the time the fire occurred, and the agent is in a position to furnish the information necessary to complete the proofs of loss, or when the insured is in a position where, for any reason, it would be impossible for him to make the proofs, and the agent possesses the necessary information." "It is the province of courts to enforce contracts, not to make or modify them. When there is neither fraud, accident, nor mistake, the exercise of dispensing power is not a judicial function." The Harriman v. Emerick, 9 Wall. 161, 19 L. Ed. 633. This is as true of insurance contracts as any others, yet stipulations in them, as in other contracts, must be interpreted reasonably, having regard for the purpose they were intended to serve. A proof of loss is an entirely ex parte statement of the facts concerning the property, the loss, and the insurance, intended only to afford information as a basis for settlement if satisfactory, and, if not, a basis for investigation. This statement, made in behalf of the insured by an agent fully conversant with all the facts and having charge of the property, serves these purposes as well as if made by the insured himself. Accordingly, it has been generally held, when the principal is absent, and the facts are within the knowledge of the agent, a proof so made is sufficient. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Sims (Ga.) 42 S. E. 270; 13 A. & E. Ency. Law, 332; 2 May on Insurance, § 465, and note 6; Lumberman's Mutual Ins. Co. v. Bell (Ill.) 45 N. E. 130, 57 Am. St. Rep. 140; German Fire Ins. Co. v. Grunert (Ill.) 1 N. E. 113; Sims v. State Ins. Co., 4 Am. Rep. 311. The fifth and sixth exceptions are therefore overruled.

The agreement of the insured that he will "submit to examinations under oath by any person named by this company, and subscribe the same," stands upon an entirely different footing. The manifest purpose of inserting this stipulation is to afford a method of detecting imposition and fraud. In demanding examination, the insurer indicates dissatisfaction with the formal ex parte statement or proof. In such case the insured has agreed his conscience may be searched by questions put to him face to face, where there is no opportunity for studied concealment. He, and not his agent, has an interest in the claim for the insurance, and therefore a motive for fraud. To hold that the person to whom an insurance policy is issued could substitute an agent for himself to undergo such an examination would be to disregard not only the letter, but the spirit, of the actual contract, and make another for the parties. We know of no authority which holds that an agent may be substituted for such an examination.

It need hardly be said that, if circumstances arise without fault of the insured which make it practically impossible for him to appear for examination, from necessity he will be excused. In this case, however, the excuse offered in evidence on the part of the plaintiff for his failure to submit to the examination was that a few weeks before the fire he had killed a man, and was at the time of the demand and of the trial a fugitive from justice. The circuit judge refused to charge "that the fact that plaintiff is a fugitive from justice, if such be the fact, would not excuse him from appearing and submitting to an examination, if demanded by defendant." This was a manifest error. Mere unexplained absence would not be sufficient to excuse compliance with the contract. Certainly intentional and willful absence will not excuse. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Sims (Ga.) 42 S. E. 269; Gross v. Ins. Co. (O. C.) 22 Fed. 74; Keener on Quasi Con- tracts, 215; 9 Cyc. 639, 649. The plaintiff in this case fled to escape the demand of the state's law that he stand his trial for homicide. It would be startling, indeed, for the law to excuse and sanction his flight and continued absence in defiance of its demand by holding he could have the benefit of a contract without performance of its obligations, because to perform his obligations would entail a submission to law, by undergoing a trial for the crime charged against him. By accepting such an excuse, the courts would not only sanction, but reward, flight from legal process.

The defendant next submits there was error in refusing to charge that a failure to return the premium after the fire does not amount to waiver of any of the conditions of the policy. Good faith would seem to require the insurer to cancel the policy and return the unearned premium, if, before the fire, while the policy was current, it had notice that the insured had so violated the policy that under its terms he would recover nothing in case of loss. In such case the insurer would allow the insured to hold the policy and rely upon its provisions, while at the same time it retained the consideration for the unexpired term, knowing the policy to be valueless. For this reason, the retention before the fire of the unearned premium for the unexpired term, with notice that the policy had become void under its terms, may be held evidence of waiver. It is held in Schroeder v. Ins. Co., 51 S. C. 180, 23 S. E. 371, that if an insurance company actually received the premium after the fire, knowing that other insurance had been taken in violation of the policy, this would be evidence of its election to waive the violation. Where, however, the premium is paid, and in consideration of it the company contemporaneously issues its policy, which is a contract to insure on certain conditions therein mentioned, and the insured violates those conditions in a material particular without the knowledge of the insurer, in case of loss the insurer is not bound to return the consideration of the policy before standing upon its terms. The consideration has been paid, not for an absolute promise, but for a promise of the insurer to hold itself liable for loss on certain conditions. The company does not fail in its promise by insisting on its conditions. Not having broken its contract, it has a right to retain the consideration. The insured has received all he contracted and paid for—conditional insurance—and he has no right to demand a return of the price paid from the insurer, on pain of liability for unconditional insurance. After the loss occurs as to the property destroyed, the policy is no longer current, but has become matured by reason of the fire, and no question of good faith is involved in retaining the premium, because the rights of the parties are then fixed. Upon these considerations rest Norris v. Ins. Co., 55 S. C. 450, 33 S. E.

566, 77 Am. St. Rep. 765, and Young v. Ins. Co., 68 S. C. 387, 47 S. E. 681.

The circuit judge did not submit to the jury the construction of the letters introduced in evidence, as the defendant charges, unless a general submission to them of the question of waiver could be so regarded. There was no request for a specific charge as to the true construction of these letters, or any particular expressions used in them. Indeed, our attention has not been called to any letter or portion of a letter that seemed sufficiently doubtful in meaning to require judicial construction, and that would have been made plainer by any words the presiding judge could have used.

For the errors in the charge above mentioned, the judgment of the circuit court is reversed and a new trial ordered.

(70 S. C. 72)

PERCIVAL v. BAILEY et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 4, 1904.)

ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT—LEGALITY.

1. A policeman cannot legally arrest one charged with an offense less than a felony without a warrant, where the offense is not committed in his presence.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; Townsend, Judge.

Action by Martin Percival against W. J. Bailey and the Columbia Real Estate & Trust Company. From order overruling demurrer to complaint, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Abney & Thomson, for appellants. J. Q. Marshall and J. S. Muller, for respondent.

JONES, J. The complaint in this case was for damages for false imprisonment. This appeal is from an order overruling a demurrer to the first cause of action for insufficiency. It was alleged that defendants "maliciously and without intent to injure the plaintiff, and without just or reasonable cause, gave the plaintiff into the custody of a policeman of the city of Columbia, and forced and compelled him to go to the police station of said city, and there caused him to be imprisoned on a false charge then made by the defendants as aforesaid—that the plaintiff had been guilty of interfering with laborers and of disorderly conduct, in violation of an ordinance of said city—and then and there caused him to be detained and restrained of his liberty for the space of two hours, without just or reasonable cause as aforesaid, and without right or authority so to do, and against the will of the plaintiff," etc. The specifications of the demurrer were: "(1) Because the charge made by the said defendant—that the plaintiff had been guilty of interfering with laborers and of disorderly conduct, in violation of an ordinance of said city, as set forth in the first cause of action—was for an offense at law, and was disorderly conduct, of which the municipal court of the said city of Columbia had jurisdiction. (2) Because it appears from the allegations in said cause of action that the court had the right to determine what was disorderly conduct, and if it subsequently came to the conclusion that, on the testimony adduced, the plaintiff was not guilty, nevertheless the defendant is not liable for false imprisonment, and the same result would follow if it turned out that the municipal court had no jurisdiction over the acts complained of. (3) Because it appears from the allegations of the first cause of action set out in the complaint that the arrest and detention of the person of the plaintiff was made under legal process, and therefore there could be no false imprisonment."

In the order overruling the demurrer, Judge Townsend said: "In my opinion, the whole matter turns on whether or not a policeman can legally arrest one charged with an offense less than felony without a warrant, where the offense charged is not committed in the presence of the officer. Under the authorities cited, I do not think that such an arrest would be legal. The first cause of action contains the allegations, the defendants 'gave the plaintiff into the custody of a policeman of the city of Columbia,' etc. That was an illegal act, unless the offense charged is a felony, or was committed in the presence of the officer. The offense charged is only a misdemeanor, and there is no allegation that it was committed in the presence of the officer. The arrest was therefore illegal, and the giving over the plaintiff to the policeman was illegal. There is, then, this one illegal act, at least, charged in the first cause of action, and the demurrer cannot be sustained."

We do not think the court erred. Construing the complaint literally, as we must, we think it alleges an arrest without warrant or lawful process. A complaint in similar language was so construed in Whaley v. Lawton, 62 S. C. 98, 40 S. E. 123, 56 L. R. A. 649. Peace officers have at common law the right to arrest upon view, without warrant, all persons who are guilty of a breach of the peace or other violation of the criminal laws. City Council v. Payne, 2 Nott & McC. 475; State v. Sims, 16 S. C. 486; State v. Bowen, 17 S. C. 58; State v. Williams, 36 S. C. 493, 15 S. E. 554; Loggins v. So. Ry. Co., 64 S. C. 321, 42 S. E. 163. It may be that an offense committed in the full hearing of an officer would be deemed as committed in his view. State v. Williams, supra. There may be also special circumstances of emergency which would justify a peace officer in arresting without warrant for a breach of the peace not committed in his view, if the officer arrived at the place of the disturbance very soon after the offense, and found the offender present. State v. Sims, supra; State v. Lewis (Ohio) 33 N. E. 405, 19 L. R. A. 451. The foregoing is the rule and its modifications, so far as announced in this state, with reference to arrest without warrant for offenses less than felony.

The alleged violation of the city ordinance was a mere misdemeanor, and, so far as the complaint shows, was an alleged past offense, not committed in the view of the officer making the arrest without warrant at the instance of defendant, and without any special circumstances showing an emergency which might justify arrest without warrant.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(70 S. C. 56)

STATE v. MOODY.

SAME v. CHARLES.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 2, 1904.)

APPEAL—SPECIFICATION OF ERROR—DISPENSARY ACT—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Where no specific grounds of error are alleged in the exception, it will not be considered.

2. Cr. Code, § 584, punishing the carriage and transportation of liquors under any other name than the proper name, is not in violation of the interstate commerce law as applied to the carriage and transportation of liquors, it not applying to liquor transported from another state into the state for private use.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marlboro County; Gary, Judge.

J. G. Moody and Henry Charles were convicted of violations of the dispensary law, and appeal. Affirmed.

Townsend & Hamer, for appellants. J. M. Johnson, for the State.

POPE, C. J. The two above cases were, by consent of all parties, tried as one case, though the verdict of the jury was entered upon each separate indictment. The indictments were for violations of the dispensary law of this state. Verdict was in each case, "Guilty of the second count; not guilty as to the first and third counts." Thereupon the defendants appealed from said verdicts of guilty as to the second count.

The following is the indictment in the two cases, the indictment in the second case being identical with the first (except as to the name of the defendant and quantity of liquor), to wit: "At the court of general sessions begun and holden in and for the county of Marlboro, in this state, South Carolina, at Bennettsville, in the county and state aforesaid, on the third Monday of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and three. The jurors of and for the county aforesaid, in the state aforesaid, upon their oaths present that J. G. Moody, at Bennettsville, in the county of Marlboro and state aforesaid, on the 17th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and three, willfully and unlawfully did handle in the nighttime certain spirituous, malt, and other liquors containing alcohol and used as a beverage, to wit, three kegs containing three and three-fifteenths gallons of contraband corn whisky; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the state. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that said J. G. Moody, at Bennettsville, in the county and state aforesaid, on the 17th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and three, did willfully and unlawfully carry, transport, have possession, accept, and remove three kegs then and there containing fifteen gallons of contraband corn whisky, having no proper or lawful mark, brand, label, or designation stamped or indorsed thereon or attached thereto; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that J. G. Moody, on the 17th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and three, at Bennettsville, in the county and state aforesaid, did willfully and unlawfully receive and accept for unlawful use certain spirituous, malt, vinous, fermented, brewed, and other liquors, to wit, three kegs containing then and there fifteen gallons of contraband corn whisky, which contain alcohol and are used as a beverage, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state."

Before the trial was entered upon, the defendants in each case demurred to the indictment. The demurrer was overruled. It is unnecessary to consider this point, because the verdict of the jury only held one count (the second) as good, and found the defendants not guilty on first and third.

We will proceed to pass upon the second count as affected by the grounds of appeal. These grounds are as follows: "(1) Because the presiding judge erred in refusing the motion in arrest of judgment, and also erred in refusing the motion for a new trial. (2) Because the verdict of the jury was based upon a count in the indictment founded upon a section of the dispensary law which is in conflict with the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution and act of Congress, and is void. (3) Because the jury acquitted the defendants of hauling liquor in the nighttime and in receiving and accepting contraband liquors, and this negatives any violation of the law in the transportation of liquors without proper mark, brand, or label. (4) Because there was no evidence to support the verdict of the jury. (5) Because section 584 of Criminal Code is in violation of the interstate commerce act of Congress, and void, for the reason that it is a burden upon such commerce. (6) Because the presiding judge erred in charging the jury that liquor brought from another state could be seized before it reached its destination, if being transported for an unlawful purpose. (7) Because the judge erred in not quashing the second count in the indictment. The motion to be submitted to the Supreme Court is to arrest the judgment in each case, and, on failure of this motion, for a new trial."

1. We cannot view the first ground of appeal, in its present form, as showing any error. It simply declares error in the circuit judge in refusing to arrest judgment, and also error in refusing a new trial, but no ground of specific error in either matter is alleged. We are not called upon to lay down the specific ground of error, and we decline to do so. We therefore overrule this ground of appeal.

2. We cannot see but there is a difference in our dispensary law and the interstate commerce clause of the United States Constitution and the act of Congress. The jury were necessarily directed by the charge of the presiding judge, and in such charge the judge charged every proposition of law which was submitted by the defendants, and in his general charge to the jury was careful to lay down rules of law which must govern juries in their findings of fact. This being so, there is no error as here complained of.

3. The second count of the indictment does not include any reference to handling liquor in the nighttime or to the receiving and handling any contraband liquor, but charges that the defendant "did willfully and unlawfully carry, transport, have possession, accept, and remove three kegs then and there containing fifteen gallons of contraband corn whisky, having no proper or lawful mark, brand, label, or designation stamped or indorsed thereon or attached thereto, against the form of the statute," etc. We do not see how an acquittal of the defendant on the first and third counts negatives the charge contained in the second count.

4. The fourth ground of appeal cannot be sustained. There was some testimony in reference to defendants' handling the liquor. It was the legitimate duty of the jury to consider the force and effect of this testimony.

5. We cannot see where section 584 of the Criminal Code of 1902, conflicts with any of the provisions of the interstate commerce act of Congress, as pointed out by this ground of appeal.

6. In order to pass upon this ground of appeal, let us see what the circuit judge did charge in this matter: "Now, if a man prefers North Carolina corn to South Carolina rye, he has the right to send to North Carolina and get him a keg or a barrel, if it is for a legitimate purpose; but he has no right to send to North Carolina or South Carolina, or any other place, and buy it for the purpose of selling it, or for an illegal purpose. A party would have the right to send his agent to buy it for a proper purpose, but he has no right to authorize the agent to do an unlawful act. So, then, the question of fact for you to determine in this case is, was that liquor being transported to parties to be used lawfully for their own personal use? There is no dispute that the defendants bought it. The defendant admitted that he bought thirty-one gallons of whisky. His contention is that he brought it to different parties in his county for their own private personal use. If you accept that view of the testimony, he would not have violated the law; but if he got it and was carrying it back there for parties to put it to illegal use, although he was an agent, they could not delegate him to do an unlawful act. A principal cannot authorize an agent to do an unlawful act or violate the law. So, if it would be wrong in his principal to have brought that amount of whisky into South Carolina to stock a blind tiger, and the principal delegated him to bring it, he could not be excused. So, after all, it is a question of fact, what was the liquor being brought here for—to Darlington county, through Marlboro county? You will take into consideration the facts and circumstances under which it was brought, the time at which it was brought, and the manner of transportation. All those are elements of fact proper to be brought out to enable you to come to a just conclusion as to why that liquor was brought into this state. If it was brought for an illegal purpose, it was contraband, and liable to seizure, and the party liable to arrest. If, on the other hand, it was brought for a lawful purpose, it would not be liable to seizure, and the party would not be violating the law of the land. So, the question is, for what purpose was that whisky brought? That is the question. I cannot aid you in the determination." When the charge, as a whole, is considered, the circuit judge did not err as claimed.

7. The seventh ground of appeal is too general to require any notice at our hands.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgments of the circuit court be and they are affirmed in each of the two cases here contained.

GARY, A. J., concurred in the result for the reasons stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice WOODS.

WOODS, J. (concurring in the result). The defendants were convicted under counts of separate indictments, which charged against them acts made criminal by section 584 of the Criminal Code of 1902. The circuit judge charged the jury at defendants' request "that section 584 of the Criminal Code as to carriage, transportation, etc., of liquors under any other than the proper name, etc., is in conflict with the interstate commerce clause of the United States Constitution, and does not apply to liquor transported from another state into this state for personal use." The presiding judge having put the construction upon this section which defendants requested, they cannot complain. The other portions of the charge upon the same subject to which exception is taken were substantially in accordance with this request, and in elaboration of it. Aside from the objections to the indictment, the defense presented was that the liquor was for personal use. If the defendants intended to rely on the defense that the liquor was in transit from North Carolina to South Carolina, they should have indicated it by a request to charge. It is held in Smith v. Lafar, 67 S. C. 493, 46 S. E. 333, that "liquor purchased in another state and shipped to the purchaser in this state is not contraband, being protected as an article of interstate commerce until it is delivered to the purchaser." After it is received by the consignee, however, it may become contraband under the state law, and its subsequent "carriage, transportation," etc., then becomes a criminal offense, under section 584. In other words, section 584 is ineffective under the interstate commerce law only so far as it relates to "carriage, transportation," etc., into the state and to the consignee, not as to subsequent carriage from one point to another wholly within the state. The appellants' view that section 584, on which the second count was based, is absolutely null and void, is therefore erroneous.

(70 S. C. 33)

WICKER et al. v. WICKER.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 27, 1904.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION—VESTED REMAINDER.

1. Testator devised all his real estate to his wife for life, and provided, as to the lands devised to his children in remainder, that, if any child died before testator or before his wife, his children should have in remainder; after the death of the wife, the share of land which the deceased parent of such children would have taken, had the parent survived testator and his wife. Held to vest in a son, at testator's death, a transmissible interest in remainder, and, where the son died during the life of his mother, the fee passed to his heirs at law.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Newberry County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by Anne Elizabeth Wicker and others against Amelia E. Wicker. From a decree for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Mower & Bynum, for appellants. Hunt, Hunt & Hunter, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. The question presented by this appeal is the construction of the will of one Jacob Wicker, who departed this life in the year 1890, having made his will in 1883, and added a codicil in 1884. The construction of the will and codicil sought is whether the children of the testator, having all been living at the death of the testator, took their shares of lands as vested, transmissible estates, or whether, on the death of Thomas L. Wicker during the lifetime of the testator's widow, his share of lands of the testator passed to his (testator's) widow and his children other than Thomas L. Wicker. At the hearing before Judge Dantzler, on circuit, he construed the will and codicil as by its terms vesting the lands in fee simple in all testator's children living at testator's death, subject to having said estate divested in case any one of such children died during the life estate of testator's widow, with a child or children living, in which last contingency such child or children of the deceased child of testator would take the dead child's share. From this decree of Judge Dantzler the plaintiffs appealed on the following grounds: "(1) Because his honor erred in deciding that Thomas L. Wicker took a vested interest in remainder under the will of his father, Jacob Wicker, in the land in controversy, at the time of the testator's death. (2) Because his honor erred in deciding that at the death of the testator all the children then living took vested remainders, subject, however, to be divested, in case they died during the life tenancy of Anne Elizabeth Wicker, leaving issue, in favor of such issue. (3) Because his honor erred in holding that the second clause of the testator's will is not intended to postpone the vesting of the remainder in the children of the testator to the death of the life tenant. (4) Because his honor erred in not deciding that Thomas L. Wicker, having died before his mother, the life tenant, took no interest in the lands in controversy under the will of his father. (5) Because his honor erred in not deciding that the death of the life tenant, not that of the testator, is the period which must be looked to, in order to determine who must take under the will of Jacob Wicker. (6) Because his honor erred in deciding that the defendant was entitled to any interest in the lands in controversy." The six grounds of appeal will be considered together.

We will now reproduce the will and codicil:

"The State of South Carolina, County of Newberry.

"I, Jacob Wicker, of the said county and State, do make and declare the following to be my last will and testament, for the disposition of my property, both real and personal, to take effect at my death.

"I. I devise and bequeath all my property, both real and personal, except the personal property hereinafter otherwise disposed of to my wife Anne Elizabeth Wicker, to her sole use and enjoyment during her natural life.

"II. After the death of my said wife, I direct that all my personal estate hereinabove willed to her, and then remaining unconsumed by use or natural decay, be divided equally among my children then surviving and the child or children of any child or children of mine that shall die before me or before my said wife, so that the children or child of any deceased child shall have the share of such property to which his, her or their parent would have been entitled under this will had such parent survived me. And I will that the lands hereinafter devised to my children in remainder shall be governed by the same rule of transmission, that is to say, that if any child of mine shall die before me or before my said wife, his or her child or children shall have in remainder after the termination of the wife's estate for life, the share of land which the deceased parent of such child or children would have taken under this will had such parent survived me and my wife.

"III. I direct that after the death of my said wife, all of my real estate be divided among my children in the following parcels, to wit: my son, Henry Munro Wicker, shall have one tract, containing two hundred and $\frac{63}{100}$ acres, according to plat by Thomas M. Lake hereto attached, bounded by * * * and he shall also have in fee simple absolute that tract containing twenty-two acres, according to the plat of the same by Thomas M. Lake hereto attached, and bounded by * * *. My son, John P. Wicker, shall have the part of the Bates place containing fifty-eight acres, according to plat by Thomas M. Lake hereto attached, and bounded by * * * and the said John P. Wicker shall also have in fee simple absolute, the Hutchison place, containing one hundred and twenty-seven and one-half acres, according to plat by Thomas M. Lake hereto attached, and bounded by * * *. My son, Thomas L. Wicker, shall have that part of the Bates land, containing seventy-three and three-fourths acres, according to plat by Thomas M. Lake hereto attached, and consisting of two parcels, one containing sixty-nine and one-half acres, and bounded by * * * and the other containing four and one-fourth acres and bounded by * * *. These two parcels being connected by road which I hereby will to be used by the said Thomas L., his heirs and assigns, as a right and franchise belonging to the said two parcels of land just described; and the said Thomas L. Wicker shall also have in fee simple absolute one of the two Brooks places now owned by me, containing one hundred acres, and bounded by * * *. My daughter, Nancy P. Suber, shall have in fee simple absolute that parcel of land containing ninety-one and one-third acres, according to plat by Thomas M. Lake hereto attached, and bounded by * * *; and she shall also have that parcel, part of home place, containing eighteen and one-half acres, according to plat by Thomas M. Lake hereto attached, and bounded by * * *. My daughter, Sarah E. Felker, shall have in fee simple absolute, that parcel containing one hundred and five acres, according to the plat by Thomas M. Lake hereto attached, and bounded by * * *. My daughter, Margaret C. Harmon, shall have in fee simple absolute, that tract of one hundred acres of the Brooks land, bought by me at sale by the master for Newberry County, bounded by * * *.

"I bequeath to each one of my said sons, a bed, bedding and bedstead, to be given immediately after my death to such one or ones of them as shall not receive such property from me or my wife during my lifetime.

"V. My wife shall have the right after my death and so long as she lives to use and cultivate all my said real estate as she may see fit and to make use of any timber for firewood, fences or repairs of buildings and also to clear any lands she may desire for cultivation.

"VI. I hereby appoint my sons, Thomas L. Wicker and John P. Wicker, executors of this my last will and testament.

"VII. I hereby revoke all wills heretofore made by me.

"VIII. The foregoing disposition of my property embraces the lands this day conveyed to me by my said wife.

"IX. The devises of land in remainder to my said sons above set forth shall be subject in their hands and in the hands of their heirs or assigns to the following charges, to equalize as far as practicable my said daughters with my said sons, to wit: My son, Henry Munro, shall pay to my daughter, Margaret C. Harmon, three hundred dollars; my son, John P., shall pay to my daughter, Sarah E. Felker, two hundred and seventy-five dollars; and my son, Thomas L., shall pay to my daughter, Nancy P. Suber, two hundred and twenty dollars.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 19th day of November, A. D. 1883.

his
 "[Signed] Jacob X Wicker. [L. S.] mark.

"South Carolina.

"I, Jacob Wicker of Newberry County in said State having made my last will and testament bearing date the 19th day of November Anno Domini 1883 do now make this codicil to be taken as a part of the same.

"1. I hereby ratify and confirm said will in every respect save so far as any part of it is inconsistent with this codicil.

"2. It appearing to my satisfaction that the tract of land described to my son Thomas L. Wicker in third clause of my said will, known as one of my two Brooks tracts, does not contain one hundred acres as was supposed to be the case when said will was executed, but contains only about eighty-four acres, now I hereby will and devise to my said son Thomas L. Wicker nine acres of land absolutely and in fee to be taken and cut off from the remaining Brooks tract, which was devised under the said third clause of my said last will to my daughter Margaret C. Harmon, so that there shall be a more equal division of the said two Brooks tracts between my said son Thomas L. Wicker and my said daughter Margaret C. Harmon—the said nine acres to be cut off along the boundary line of the said two tracts of land.

"In witness whereof I, Jacob Wicker have to this codicil to my last will and testament subscribed my name and set my seal this 24th day of May Anno Domini 1884."

In order that there may not be any misconception of the different dates, we will repeat them: Jacob Wicker, the testator, died in 1890, survived by all of his children, to wit, Henry, John, and Thomas L. Wicker, Nancy P. Suber, Sarah E. Felker, Margaret C. Harmon, and also his widow, Mrs. Anne E. Wicker. Thomas L. Wicker and John P. Wicker caused the will to be admitted to probate in 1890. The widow, Mrs. Anne E. Wicker, took possession of the real and personal estate of her husband, Jacob Wicker, immediately after his death. All of the children of Jacob E. Wicker, the testator, had children, except Thomas L. Wicker. He was married in his father's lifetime, and died in the year 1899, leaving his wife, Amelia E. Wicker, his mother, and his brothers and sisters, as his only heirs at law. The question now is, was he vested with the lands laid out in his father's will for him. Judge Dantzler says in his decree that he was vested in remainder in said lands on the death of his father, Jacob Wicker. The circuit judge says he reaches this conclusion from a study of the whole will. He especially grounds his conclusions from a study of the third and second clauses of the will and codicil. He holds that the third clause is the devising clause. This view is supported, he thinks, not only by its own words, but also by the language of the codicil. The circuit judge holds that if Thomas L. Wicker had died before the life tenant, and had left child or children, such child or children would have divested the father, Thomas L. Wicker. It certainly was peculiar that the plats of land devised to each one of his children by Jacob Wicker were found attached to his last will and testament. So far as his son Thomas L. Wicker was concerned, the codicil, in its second clause, referring to the one-half of Brooks land set out in third clause of the will, speaks of it as "the tract of land devised to my son, Thomas L. Wicker, in third clause." It will be observed that no division of testator's lands is provided to testator's children as a class. In clause 3 of the will, each child is given his or her specific tract or tracts of land. It seems, therefore, that the testator, when he speaks of what is to take place after his wife's death, refers, and means to refer, to the death of the wife as the time when possession will be taken by testator's children. It is well known that, unless the language of the will requires the contrary, the law prefers a vesting of the remainder after and at the death of the testator.

When we have a case on all fours with the present, it will govern. It seems that the case of Boykin v. Boykin, 21 S. C. 513, is on all fours with the case at bar. In the case last cited, Mr. Boykin, by his will, provided:

"I direct that all the rest of my real estate shall be kept undivided until the death of my wife, to be worked by the slaves of my estate and those which I shall in this bequeath to my wife, under the control and management of my executors; and from and immediately after her death, I devise the said real estate to my sons, equally to be divided among them, share and share alike, to them and their heirs forever. And should any of my sons die before the time herein appointed for the division of my real estate, and should leave issue living at that time, then I direct that such issue shall take amongst them, share and share alike, the same portion of real estate to which their parent would have been entitled if he had survived my said wife, to them and their heirs forever. And if any of my said sons shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years before the death of my said wife, I direct that such son or sons shall be permitted to cultivate, each for himself, such a part of real estate as shall be allotted for that purpose by my wife and executors until the final division, when he or they shall receive his or their own share." The court held, in construing such provision of the will, that the devise created vested interests in the sons living at the death of the testator, and only division and possession were postponed to the death of the widow; therefore the interest of two sons who died intestate without issue after the testator, but before the widow, vested in their mother and other heirs at law. Thus, in the case at bar, Thomas L. Wicker, having lived after the death of the testator, but having died before his mother as life tenant, died intestate, and his share of lands received as devisee under his father's will remained for partition among his widow, Amelia E. Wicker, and his brothers and sisters; that is to say, one half hereof to his widow, Amelia, and the other half to his brothers and sisters, share and share alike. The decree of the circuit judge must be affirmed. It is the judgment of this court, that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(70 S. C. 83)

HELLAMS v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 8, 1904.)

TELEGRAM—DELAY IN DELIVERY—EVIDENCE—NEGLIGENCE—DAMAGES.

1. Where a telegraph company receives a fee over the usual fee for delivery of a telegram beyond delivery limits, with notice of addressee's residence, it is some evidence of a contract to deliver the message with reasonable promptness.

2. A presumption of negligence arises from evidence of delay in delivering a telegram.

3. Punitive damages may be awarded against a telegraph company for willful breach of duty to deliver a telegram without delay.

¶ 3. See Telegrams and Telephones, vol. 45, Cent. Dig. § 71.

4. A telegraph company is not liable for failure to send a message by telephone, in absence of special contract for that purpose, because of a provision on the back of the telegraph blank that it is the agent of the sender for transmission over other lines.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; Aldrich, Judge.

Action by J. E. Hellams against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Smythe, Lee & Frost and Geo. E. Fearons, for appellant. Mordecai & Gadsden, for respondent.

JONES, J. This action was brought to recover damages for the alleged wanton, willful, and grossly negligent conduct of the defendant in failing to seasonably deliver the following message: "Greenville, S. C., Feb. 11, '02. J. E. Hellams, Sullivan's Island, S. C., Charleston, S. C.: Come at once your mother low, not expected to live. D. F. Batson, Jr." The jury rendered a verdict for $500, and from the judgment thereon the defendant company appeals upon exceptions raising the questions which we now consider.

1. There was no error in refusing the motion for nonsuit. The motion was made on the ground that there was no evidence that the particular contract set out in the complaint was made with defendant. The complaint, in the second paragraph, alleged that on the 11th day of February, 1902, one D. F. Batson, Jr., at Greenville, S. C., within the usual hours of business, in the office of said company, in person presented and filed with the defendant the message set out above; and in the third paragraph the complaint alleges "that the defendant at the said time and place received said message, and there and then promised promptly to transmit the same by telegraph and deliver the same to said J. E. Hellams, the plaintiff herein, the addressee of the said message, as aforesaid, at his said address on Sullivan's Island, Charleston, S. C., as the said address is so particularly set out in said telegraphic message, and that the said D. F. Batson, Jr., then and there, in consideration of said promise, did pay to the defendant's agent at said office the sum of twenty-five cents for the transmission and delivery of said message to Charleston, S. C., and the further sum of fifty cents then and there expressly agreed as the consideration for the further transmission thereof to Sullivan's Island, S. C., and delivery to the plaintiff." The answer admitted the second paragraph of the complaint, and, with respect to the third paragraph, admitted so much thereof as alleges the receipt of the said message by the defendant, and the prepayment by the plaintiff of the sums therein mentioned, but denied the remainder of the said paragraph. There was testimony that J. E. Hellams, the plaintiff, was at the time residing at Sullivan's Island, was working there as a carpenter under Mr. Pettyjohn, and kept a boarding house near Atlantic Beach Hotel. The message was received at the Charleston office at 6:05 p. m. February 11th, and the schedule offered in evidence showed that two boats were due to leave Charleston for Mt. Pleasant and Sullivan's Island at 6:30 and 8:40 p. m. The ferry wharf was not exceeding a five or six minutes' walk from defendant's telegraph office. The plaintiff testified that the message was delivered to him by Mr. Pettyjohn at 1 o'clock February 12th—too late for plaintiff to take an earlier train from Charleston to Greenville than 11 p. m. of that day; that, had the message been delivered by 8 o'clock on night of the 11th, he could have reached Charleston and taken the 11 p. m. train of that day, and could have reached his mother a day earlier. During Wednesday, February 12th, plaintiff's mother was conscious; but on Thursday evening, when plaintiff reached her bedside, she was unconscious, and died a few hours thereafter, without recognizing him. Plaintiff testified that he thereby suffered mental anguish. The receipt of the message of such tenor by the defendant, with notice that the addressee's residence was Sullivan's Island, and the receipt of 50 cents beyond the usual fee for transmission of said message to the Charleston office, and the actual delivery of the message to the plaintiff on Sullivan's Island, was surely some evidence of a contract to deliver the message with reasonable promptness at Sullivan's Island. At the time of the motion for nonsuit, no explanation had been made of the failure to deliver the message on the night of the 11th. Nonsuit was properly refused, as proof of delay in delivering a telegram raises a presumption of negligence on part of the telegraph company. Poulnot v. Western Union Telegraph Company, 69 S. C. 545, 48 S. E. 622.

2. The court committed no error in refusing to charge the jury "that the action arises ex contractu, and therefore the jury can find no punitive damages." This action was ex delicto, not ex contractu. The contract was referred to in order to show the relation between the plaintiff and defendant. The action was based upon the tortious breach of the general duty imposed by law because of the relation. It is further contended that the mental anguish act (23 St. at Large, p. 748) only gave an action for compensatory damages for mental anguish or suffering in the absence of bodily injury for negligence in receiving, transmitting, or delivering messages. Conceding this, there could still be a recovery for punitive damages for a willful breach of defendant's duty to plaintiff. Lewis v. Telegraph Co., 57 S. C. 325, 35 S. E. 556; Butler v. Telegraph Co., 62 S. C. 223, 40 S. E. 162, 89 Am. St. Rep. 893; Marsh v. Telegraph Co., 65 S. C. 430, 43 S. E. 953.

3. It is excepted that the court erred in charging plaintiff's seventh request to charge, as follows: "The jury are instructed that if the defendant agreed to become the agent of the sender, without liability to forward any message over the lines of any other company, where necessary to reach the destination, and if the defendant could have forwarded said message to the plaintiff by telephone on the evening of its receipt in Charleston, and failed to do so, they should find for the plaintiff. Well, gentlemen, that I charge you, with this modification: I cannot charge you upon the facts, and I cannot restrict you to saying that if they could have forwarded it by telephone or any other way, and failed to do it, it is liable, because I cannot go into the facts of the case. But I do charge you that it was the duty of the defendant to deliver the message by all reasonable means, and I have already charged you that, in connection, that it was the duty of the telegraph company, on the receipt of a message— The telegraph company ought to use due and reasonable diligence on the prompt transmission and delivery. Negligence is a want of ordinary care, and therefore 'ordinary care' is a relative term. What might be ordinary care to one person under certain circumstances might not be to another under different circumstances. Then, as I have explained to you, each one must use ordinary care and diligence in the conduct of the business, according to the business in which he is engaged." Appellant contends that this charge was erroneous and misleading: "(a) In that he thereby instructed the jury that it was the duty of the defendant to forward such message by telephone. (b) And in that the uncontradicted evidence was that the plaintiff had no telephone at his residence, but that some individuals in his vicinity had telephones in their residences; and the charge of his honor, when taken in connection with the testimony, meant that it was the duty of the defendant to have telephoned the contents of the message to one or more of such individuals, and requested them to convey the same to the plaintiff. This charge imposed upon the defendant a duty it did not owe to the plaintiff, and, in view of the testimony, was misleading, and did mislead the jury." The request to charge was evidently based upon respondent's construction of the contract indorsed on the back of the paper upon which the message was written, in these words: "And this company is hereby made the agent of the sender without liability to forward any message over the lines of any other company when necessary to reach its destination." We construe this as referring to other telegraph lines, and as not referring to telephone lines. We do not think that the law imposes upon telegraph companies the duty to telephone a message, as that would seriously impair the confidential relations assumed in the delivery, receipt, and transmission of telegraphic communications. Had the sender or addressee of the message authorized its transmission by telephone to any one who would receive it and undertake to deliver it, that might have been a proper consideration for the jury in determining the question whether defendant used due diligence in delivery of the message. But in this case there was not a particle of evidence that defendant was authorized to telephone the message to some one on Sullivan's Island for communication to plaintiff, and the uncontradicted evidence was that plaintiff had no telephone in his residence, which fact the defendant ascertained on inquiry of the telephone company's office, in its effort to deliver the message by telephone directly to plaintiff. The request to charge should have been refused. Charging the request even with the modification stated was erroneous and misleading, in view of the undisputed facts in the case. This exception is therefore sustained. As this must result in granting a new trial, we do not deem it necessary to consider exceptions to the refusal to grant a new trial.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(56 W. Va. 75)

GARTLAN et al. v. HICKMAN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 25, 1904.)

FIXTURES—OIL LEASE—REMOVAL ON DEFAULT.

1. The owner of land executes a lease thereon for oil and gas purposes, by which it is agreed that the lessees shall have the privilege at any time to remove therefrom all machinery and fixtures placed on said premises. Under this lease, the lessees and their assignees, for the purpose of exploring for oil and gas, placed on the land an engine, wooden oil-well rig, wooden oil tanks, casing, pipes, rubber belt, and other appliances of like character, necessary for the prosecution of that work. Afterwards the lease was forfeited and terminated for the nonpayment of rental. Held, that said machinery and fixtures did not become parts of the freehold, and that said lessees, or the owners of the machinery and fixtures, had a reasonable time after the termination of said lease in which to remove said property from the land.

2. What is a reasonable time for the removal is to be determined from all the facts and circumstances of the case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Harrison County; John W. Mason, Judge.

Action by Thomas Gartlan and others against Willie Hickman. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Edward G. Smith, for plaintiff in error. Jackson & Patton and John Bassel, for defendants in error.

MILLER, J. Miranda A. Hickman and Willie Hickman, her husband, executed to John F. Phillips and J. Perry Thompson a lease bearing date on the 29th day of May, 1900, on a tract of 112½ acres of land in Harrison county, for oil and gas purposes. By successive assignments of the lease, W. S. Mowris, Thomas Gartlan, and the Southern Oil Company acquired an interest therein. The lease stipulates, among other things, that the parties of the first part "do grant, demise, lease and let unto the parties of the second part, their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, for the sole and only purpose of mining and operating for oil and gas, and of laying pipe lines, and of building tanks, stations and structures thereon to take care of said products, all that certain tract of land," etc. (describing it). In another clause thereof "it is agreed that this lease shall remain in force for the term of five years from this date [the date of the lease], and as long thereafter as oil or gas, or either of them, is produced therefrom by the said parties of the second part, their successors and assigns. * * * Provided, however, that this lease shall become null and void, and all rights herein shall cease and determine unless a well shall be completed on the said premises within ninety days from the date hereof, or unless the lessees pay at the rate of $125.00 quarterly in advance for each additional three months such completion is delayed from the time above mentioned for the completion of such well until a well is completed; and it is agreed that the completion of such well shall be and operate as a full liquidation of all rentals under this provision during the remainder of the term of this lease. * * * It is agreed that the second parties shall have the privilege * * * at any time to remove all machinery and fixtures placed on the premises."

It is admitted by the parties to this action that Mowris, Gartlan, and said oil company went upon the land under the lease and drilled one well for oil and gas, which was completed about the middle of January, 1901, and shot by them on the 13th day of February of the same year; that the parties last mentioned paid the rental under the lease on the 29th day of August, 1901, for the quarter ending on the 29th day of November, 1901, which rental was accepted by Hickman and Mrs. Hickman, the then owners of the land, but no other rental provided for in the lease appears to have ever been paid.

On the 31st day of December, 1901, said Willie Hickman commenced his suit in chancery in the circuit court of Harrison county against Mowris, Gartlan, the Southern Oil Company, Phillips, and Thompson, and on the 7th day of January, 1902, presented his bill to the judge of said court, in which he sets up said lease and the several assignments thereof, and filed therewith copies of the same, and, in substance, alleges therein that Mowris and the oil company, claiming to be equal owners of the lease, had drilled one well on said land, marked on the plat filed as "No. 1," which was completed by them about the middle of January, 1901; that it was afterwards shot, and declared by them to be a dry hole, and not worth cleaning out; that said lease had been abandoned by the said defendants, and active operations thereon for oil and gas continuously discontinued ever since the middle of January, 1901, until the 31st day of December, 1901; that the defendants have paid no rental on said land since the 29th day of August, 1901; that on the 31st day of December last aforesaid, they again entered upon said land with screw, circle, water barrels, bailer, stern, and cable, hauled the same to the well, and proceeded to lay pipe for the purpose of furnishing fuel to said well from another well on a neighboring farm. The bill then charges that the said lease and assignments thereof are null and void, and constitute and are a cloud upon plaintiff's title to said land, and prays that said lease, and the several assignments thereof, be declared forfeited and canceled as such cloud, and that defendants, and each of them, be restrained and enjoined from entering upon said land, and from doing any and all things under said lease, or any of the assignments thereof.

The injunction was granted as prayed for. The bill was filed at rules, and the cause regularly matured for hearing, and on the 22d day of May, 1902, the court made and entered its decree therein in the words and figures following, to wit: "This cause came on this day to be heard upon the plaintiff's bill and exhibits therewith filed, and was argued by counsel. Whereupon it appears to the court that this cause was regularly matured at rules, and the summons duly served on all the defendants, and the plaintiff's bill taken for confessed, and cause set for hearing at March rules, 1902; and it further appears to the court that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for in his bill. It is adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the lease therein described as the Phillips and Thompson lease, bearing date on the 29th day of May, 1902, and all assignments thereof and contracts thereunder, and a subsequent lease of the three acres around the buildings in said Phillips and Thompson lease reserved, are forfeited and constitute a cloud upon the plaintiff's title to the land therein described, and are hereby canceled, and the said defendants are ordered to surrender to the plaintiff the said lease and all assignments thereof."

Hickman on the 14th day of July, 1902, sent by registered mail to the several persons to whom it is addressed, copies of the following notice: "To Thomas Gartlan, The Southern Oil Company, a corporation, J. Perry Thompson, John F. Phillips and W. S. Mowris: You are hereby notified that the oil well rig, at well No. 1, casing and all fixtures and machinery of every kind or character, and all property now on my farm on Indian Run, in Harrison County, West Virginia, belong to me and are my property; and you are further notified not to remove the same or any part thereof; and you are still further notified not to trespass upon my said farm or any part thereof for any purpose whatever"—which copies appear to have been received by them, respectively, from the 14th to the 28th days of July, 1902. It is also proved that this notice was the first claim of ownership that Hickman had made to the property in controversy, and was the first knowledge that the defendants, or any of them, had of the determination of the said chancery cause or of such claim.

On the 1st day of August, 1902, an action in detinue was commenced in the circuit court of Harrison county by said Gartlan, Mowris, the Southern Oil Company, Phillips, and Thompson against Hickman for the recovery of sundry goods and chattels, to wit: 2,777 feet of 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch casing (National Tubeworks manufacture), value, \$1,041.73; 200 feet 10-inch casing (National Tubeworks manufacture), of the value of \$192; 1 12x12 Eureka Engine (Boiler Works of Oil City manufacture), of the value of \$232.50; 1 wooden oil well rig, value \$200; 1 250-barrel wooden oil tank, of the value of \$30; 1 rubber belt, 6x12, 95 feet long, of the value of \$50; 1 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch T, cast iron, of the value of \$3.32; 3 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch L's, cast iron, of the value of \$6.98; all of said property being of the value of \$1,846.53; said property being in the possession of the said Willie Hickman—and \$1,000 damages for the detention of the same, and being the machinery and fixtures placed by them on the leased premises. Whereupon, the affidavit and bond as required by law having been filed by the plaintiffs in the case at the commencement of the action, the sheriff was directed to seize and take into his possession the property mentioned, which he did, and delivered the same to plaintiffs. A declaration having been filed, there was a trial of the action to a jury, a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for the property sued for, a motion by defendant to have said verdict set aside, which was by the court overruled, and a judgment that the plaintiffs should retain possession of the said property mentioned and described in the verdict of the jury, and that the plaintiffs should also recover their costs expended. Upon petition of Hickman, a writ of error to said judgment was allowed by a judge of this court. He complains that the court refused to set aside the verdict of the jury and grant to him a new trial of the action, that a certain instruction was given to the jury on motion of plaintiffs, and that certain other instructions were refused, all of which rulings of the court, he asserts, were and are erroneous and prejudicial to him.

In addition to the facts hereinbefore stated, the following agreed statement was read to the jury as evidence on the trial of said action: "It is admitted by the parties: That the plaintiffs placed the property in controversy upon the land of the defendant embraced in the lease of May 29, 1900, for the purpose of drilling and operating for oil and gas under the lease. That one well was drilled in by the plaintiffs and completed about the middle of January, and shot by the plaintiffs on the 13th of February, 1901. The plaintiffs paid the rental under the lease on the 29th day of August, 1901, for the quarter ending November 28, 1901, which rental was accepted by the then owners of the property, the defendant and his wife, Mrs. Miranda Hickman. The well in question was drilled to a depth of thirty-two hundred and eight feet, and the casing inserted to the proper depth, to wit, about twenty-one hundred or twenty-two hundred feet. That a derrick was built over the well for the purpose of drilling, or running the drilling tools in the usual way, and constructed in the usual manner, to the usual height—about eighty-two feet—and that iron tubing or casing was inserted in the well, which is described in the declaration. That the engine sued for was set or placed in an engine house, and connected with the derrick with drilling tools in the usual way, and the tanks described in the declaration were set or placed about seventy-five feet from the derrick, or south of the well, for the purpose of receiving the oil. That the derrick is described in the declaration as one wooden oil-well rig. The T's and L's were used for the purpose of connecting the well with the tank—in other words, the piping leading from the tank to the well. That all the property sued for in the declaration was connected in the usual way and manner of connecting said property for the drilling and operating of the well, and was necessary for that purpose, and used for that purpose. That shortly after the 28th day of November, 1901, the defendant posted notices in writing upon all the outer gates of the land embraced in the lease, notifying the plaintiffs, or any one acting under them, to keep off the property, and that the defendant claimed that the lease had been forfeited for the failure to pay rent; neither the plaintiffs nor any of their agents at that time being on the property. That the same notice and claim were given verbally by the defendant to Clint Cothrop and other of the agents of the plaintiffs at the same time. That no rental was paid after the 28th of August, 1901, as before stated. That on the 31st day of December, 1901, the employees of the plaintiffs, and by authority of the plaintiffs, after the notice aforesaid had been given, went upon said property, and by warrant sued out on the first day of January, 1902, were arrested as trespassers, taken before a justice of the peace, and the cause continued at the instance of the defendants in the warrant, and before trial an injunction was granted in the chancery suit of Willie Hickman against Thomas Gartlan and others, then pending in the circuit court of Harrison county. Thomas Gartlan and others were then not prosecuted further under said warrants, but the same were dismissed. That on the 13th day of February, 1901, the employees of the plaintiffs, by authority of the plaintiffs, went upon the land and shot the well, and on the 15th of January, 1902, by authority of the plaintiffs, again went upon the property and shot the well a second time. It is admitted that the property in question is of the value made in the declaration, that the property in controversy was taken by the plaintiffs at the time of the institution of this suit by giving bond, and that the same was not replevied by the defendant. It is admitted that a demand was made upon the defendant for the property in controversy shortly before the institution of this action, the exact date being July 26, 1902, which demand in writing is filed as a part of this statement, marked 'Demand.' That the lease under which the plaintiffs entered and placed the property upon the land of the defendant was in the following words and figures: * * * That all the property in controversy remained in place as it was at the time said well was drilled and operated until delivered to plaintiff by the sheriff in this suit. The record of the chancery cause of Willie Hickman against Thomas Gartlan, the Southern Oil Company, J. Perry Thompson, John F. Phillips, and W. S. Mowris, instituted in the circuit court of Harrison county on the 31st day of December, 1901, is filed as a part of this statement, marked 'Exhibit Record.' The amount of the defendant's damages in the event the verdict and judgment shall be for the defendant shall be one hundred dollars. It is further agreed that, of the twenty-two hundred feet of casing in the well originally, possession of only nine hundred and fifty feet was taken by the sheriff and delivered to the plaintiffs. Four hundred and twenty-five dollars being the value of that casing at the same rate averred here and agreed upon, the same is not involved in this suit."

The instruction given on motion of the plaintiffs is in the words and figures following: "The jury is instructed that the plaintiffs were not deprived of the right to remove the property demanded in the declaration, under the evidence offered to the jury, if, from such evidence, the jury shall believe said property was placed upon the leased premises for the purposes of drilling or operating for oil and gas, by reason of the fact that a decree was entered by the circuit court of Harrison county on or about the 27th day of May, 1902, in an equity suit brought by the defendant against the plaintiffs for such purpose, and that the plaintiffs would be entitled to a reasonable time after the termination of the suit in equity to remove said property from the leased premises."

The instructions asked for by the defendant and refused by the court are in the following words and figures: "(1) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the property sued for by the plaintiffs was placed by the plaintiffs on the property of the defendant during the existence of an oil or gas lease, giving the plaintiffs the right to explore thereunder for oil and gas; and if the jury further believe that said property, or any part of it, was so placed upon the said Hickman's land as to give it the character of fixtures, or trade fixtures; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that the said oil and gas lease expired, or became forfeited, or was in any wise terminated, and the possession of said plaintiffs under said lease was lost, before said fixtures were removed from said land—then the jury should find for the defendant.

(2) The court instructs the jury that, after the expiration of an oil or gas lease by forfeiture or otherwise, the lessee cannot remove fixtures attached to the realty during the continuance of said lease. Such fixtures become a part of the realty, and go to the person entitled thereto after the expiration of the lease. (3) The court instructs the jury that, as between lessor and lessee, fixtures erected by the latter, and which he is entitled to remove, must be removed during the term of the lease. After the expiration of the term of the lease, and the loss of possession thereunder, the tenant can neither remove said fixtures nor recover their value from the lessor. (4) The court instructs the jury that a lessee may remove fixtures which he has put on the leased premises at any time during the lease, or while he continues tenant, but after the expiration of the lease, and the surrender of the premises to the lessor, he cannot enter on the premises and remove any fixtures, for, when he quits the premises, leaving his fixtures behind him, it will be presumed he intended to abandon them. (5) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that said Phillips and Thompson lease was on the 28th day of November, 1901, for the nonpayment of rent, or for any other reason, forfeited; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that the plaintiffs, Thomas Gartlan and others, were then, or at any subsequent time in the month of December, prior to the 31st day of December, 1901, out of possession of the premises described in said lease for oil and gas purposes, and that the plaintiff, Willie Hickman, was then in possession thereof; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that the property here sued for was at the time of the forfeiture of said lease not severed and removed therefrom for more than six months thereafter—then the jury should find for the defendant, Willie Hickman. (6) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiffs, Thomas Gartlan and others, after the completion of said well No. 1, paid on February 12, 1901, $125, on May 23, 1901, $125, on August 23, 1901, $125, as rental, and that on the 28th day of November, 1901, annual rental fell due and was not paid; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that, for nonpayment of rental or any other reason, said Phillips and Thompson lease has been judicially ascertained to be, and decreed to be, forfeited and canceled; and if the jury further believe that at the time of such forfeiture and cancellation, and thereafter, the plaintiffs, Thomas Gartlan and others, were out of possession of the premises described in said lease, and that the said defendant, Willie Hickman, was in possession thereof; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that at the time of such ascertainment judicially of such forfeiture, and at the time of said cancellation, the property here sued for was attached to the real estate described in said lease, and was not severed therefrom until after the institution of this suit, by virtue of an order made in this suit, and without the consent of the said Hickman, and against his protest—the jury should find for the defendant, Willie Hickman. (7) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the property sued for was at the time of the institution of this suit so attached to the realty of Willie Hickman as to be trade fixtures, and if the jury further believe from the evidence that at the time of the institution of this suit the Phillips and Thompson lease had been canceled, then the jury should find for the defendant, Willie Hickman."

Hickman contends, first, that the things sued for were and are fixtures; second, that they remained attached to the realty after the termination of the lease; third, that, these fixtures being so attached at the time and after the lessee lost title to the lease, they cannot be removed from the land; and, fourth, that the lease ended on November 29, 1901, by forfeiture for the nonpayment of rental by the lessees, and did not terminate by reason of the decree of the court on the 22d day of May, 1902.

For the defendants in error it is urged, first, that the things sued for were and are chattels; second, that they retain their character as personalty, and are not fixtures; third, that they may be removed by the lessees within a reasonable time after the expiration of the lease; fourth, that the lessees are not precluded from the exercise of that right by the trial of the question of the forfeiture of the lease. By the express terms of the lease the second parties have the right to remove all machinery and fixtures placed on the premises in the prosecution of their exploration and search for oil and gas. There can be no question as to what property may be removed, unless the right of removal has been lost to the lessees or their assigns. The lease says that the second parties shall have the privilege of removal at any time.

The parties have agreed that the lease shall become null and void if the rental be not paid as stipulated. The authorities cited in the case of Guffy v. Hukill, 34 W. Va. 49, 11 S. E. 754, 8 L. R. A. 759, 26 Am. St. Rep. 901, seem to be full and clear that default in the performance of the condition of the lease by the lessee ipso facto terminates and forfeits the lease, and all of his rights thereunder. In the chancery suit it was adjudicated that the causes of forfeiture existed as alleged, and therefore the lease was canceled. The said forfeiture, however, by the terms of the lease and the decree of the court, extends no further than to the lease, which "vested no present title in the lessees, except the mere right of exploration for oil and gas." Steelsmith v. Gartlan, 45 W. Va. 27, 29 S. E. 978, 44 L. R. A. 107; Urpman v. Lowther Oil Co., 53 W. Va. 501, 505, 44 S. E. 433, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027. The completion of a nonproductive well vested no title in the lessee. Id. Therefore the defendants in error forfeited only the right to further search for oil and gas on the land. There is nothing in this lease declaring that upon its termination the machinery and fixtures placed upon the land by the lessees shall be the property of the lessor. The lessor has written in the contract the considerations and conditions upon which the lessees may search for oil and gas upon the land. The lease is of uncertain duration. The right of the lessees thereunder is dependent upon the completion of a well by them within a specified time, the payment of rentals, or the production of oil or gas from the land in paying quantities. In order to complete the well, the lease allows the lessees 90 days from the date thereof. They are entitled to prosecute their search for the full 90 days with their machinery and fixtures, but at the end of 90 days, the well being unfinished, the lease would be forfeited, unless the rental for the next quarter be paid in advance. It is untenable to contend that, default being made as aforesaid, the lessees would not be permitted to remove their machinery and fixtures. So, if the time of search should be extended by payment of rental, the lessees would be entitled to the whole period for the purpose of their exploration.

The object in placing the machinery and fixtures on the land was to enable the lessees to develop the leased premises. It was for the benefit of the lessees, and not to enhance the value of the land by permanent improvements thereon. Engines, derricks, oil tanks, casing, and pipes, of the character described above, are not placed on farms, as farming implements, or to be used in connection with agriculture. "The chief test by which to determine whether an article is a fixture is to inquire whether the party annexing it intended it to be a permanent accession to the freehold." Edwards & Bradford Lumber Co. v. Rank (Neb.) 77 N. W. 765, 73 Am. St. Rep. 514, 518, note; Fifield v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 148 Ill. 163, 35 N. E. 802, 39 Am. St. Rep. 166. In Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Morgan (Kan.) 21 Pac. 809, 4 L. R. A. 284, 16 Am. St. Rep. 471, it is held that "whether a chattel becomes a fixture depends upon the character of the act by which it is put into its place, the uses to which it is put, the policy of the law connected with its purpose, and the intention of those concerned. * * * Before personal property can become a fixture by actual physical annexation to land, the intention of the parties, and the uses to which it is put, combine to change its nature from that of a chattel to that of a fixture." Thomson v. Smith (Iowa) 83 N. W. 789, 50 L. R. A. 780, 82 Am. St. Rep. 541; Donahue on Petroleum & Gas, 72. In Johnson's Ex'r v. Wiseman's Ex'r, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 360, cited in 17 Am. Dec. 693, note, it is said: "The question whether chattels are to be regarded as fixtures depends less upon the manner of their annexation to the freehold than upon their own nature and their adaptation to the purposes for which they are used." Cooper v. Johnson (Mass.) 9 N. E. 33. Thornton on Oil & Gas, at section 567, says: "When the parties immediately concerned, by an agreement between themselves, manifest their purpose that the property, although it is annexed to the soil, shall retain its character as personalty, then, except as against persons who occupy the relation of innocent purchasers without notice, the intentions of the parties will prevail, unless the property be of such a nature that it necessarily becomes incorporated into and a part of the realty by the act and manner of annexation." The machinery and fixtures, as they are called, were placed on the land for the sole purpose of enabling the lessees to explore for and produce oil and gas thereon. Should the lessees fail in their search, or oil and gas, or either, be found and exhausted, this property would not be necessary for the use and enjoyment of the land by the owner as a farm. The land could be used for its former purpose—farming—without this machinery better than with it remaining thereon, an impediment, instead of an advantage. In the light of the authorities cited, we are of opinion that the machinery and fixtures placed on the leased premises did not become permanent fixtures, nor parts of the freehold, and that the plaintiffs' right and title thereto did not vest in Hickman by the forfeiture of said lease, as aforesaid.

The time for the removal of the property is not definitely fixed, by express terms, with reference to the termination of the lease. We have shown that the lessees could not be required to effect the removal before or at the moment the lease was terminated. Certainly they would not be required to make such removal during the pendency of the chancery suit, brought for the very purpose of determining whether or not the lease had been terminated. Thornton on Oil & Gas, at section 576, says: "Contingencies may arise that will not require the lessee to remove his fixtures at the expiration of the lease, or even within what would have otherwise been a reasonable time. Thus, where there arose a dispute between the lessor and lessee as to when the lease expired, and the controversy was taken into the courts and was decided against the lessee, it was held that the lessee could remove the fixtures at the termination of the suit, although the lease had long before expired, and, if the lessor had refused to permit the lessee to so remove them, he was liable in damages." "Where anything is to be done, as goods to be delivered, or the like, and no time is specified in the contract, it is then a presumption of law that the parties intended and agreed that the thing should be done in a reasonable time." 2 Pars. on Con. §§ 535, 651; Hammon on Con. § 444; Poling v. Condon-Lane B. & L. Co. (W. Va.) 47 S. E. 279. In the case of Shellar v. Shivers, 171 Pa. 569, 572, 33 Atl. 95, 96, where the right of removal of machinery and fixtures was involved, the language of the lease was that the lessee should have the right to remove "at any time" any or all machinery. The court there denied the right of entry for the purpose of such removal four years after the lease had expired, and five years and six months after the well had been completed and found to be of no use as an oil or gas well. After construing the lease, the court says: "If this construction be correct, then the rule of law as to removal of fixtures would be as in cases where the tenancy is uncertain in duration, as when it depends upon a contingency, and that is that the removal must be made within a reasonable time, or, in other words, the law in such cases allows the tenant a reasonable time for the removal of fixtures." Thornton, at section 574, says: "Thus it was decided in New York that trade fixtures did not cease to be the tenant's property by reason of the mere fact that he did not remove them during his term, and that he could remove them after his term expired without subjecting himself to any damages for such removal, even though he be liable to an action for trespass for an entry on the premises demised.

* * * In Illinois it was held that the tenant had a reasonable time within which to remove trade fixtures, and what was a reasonable time was a proper question for the jury, under the instructions of the court." The author cites Berger v. Hoerner, 36 Ill. App. 360; Nigro v. Hatch (Ariz.) 11 Pac. 177. The same author says at the same section: "This is undoubtedly true where a forfeiture of the lease takes place; and, if the tenant is denied the right after the forfeiture to remove them, he may bring an action therefor, especially if the lease contain an agreement giving him the right to make such removal." Sattler v. Opperman, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 205; Potter v. Gilbert, 177 Pa. 159, 35 Atl. 597, 35 L. R. A. 580. What is a reasonable time for the removal of the chattels is a question to be determined from all the facts and circumstances of the case. Kuhlmann v. Meier, 7 Mo. App. 260. In this case plaintiffs evidently had not abandoned the lease. Hickman alleges in his bill in the chancery cause that on the 31st day of December, 1901, the agents of Mowris, Gartlan, and others entered upon said land with certain machinery and appliances, and proceeded to work on and about said well No. 1. It is agreed that they shot the well on January 15, 1902. It is proved that the notice to plaintiffs by Hickman on or about July 14, 1902, was the first knowledge they or any of them had of the determination of said chancery cause, the cancellation of the lease, or the claim of Hickman to the property in controversy. On July 26, 1902, demand was made upon Hickman by defendants in error for the property, and on August 1st thereafter action was commenced therefor as aforesaid.

It seems to us that defendants in error proceeded within a reasonable time to assert their rights to the machinery and fixtures in controversy, and that the circuit court did not err in giving the one instruction and refusing the others. We therefore affirm the judgment.

(54 W. Va. 128)

STATE v. MCKAIN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 1, 1904.)

ASSAULT AND BATTERY—JURISDICTION—PUNISHMENT.

1. Assault and battery is an offense at common law, and cognizable as such by our circuit courts and other courts which exercise like jurisdiction in such cases. Upon conviction of the accused upon an indictment for assault and battery the court may impose upon him a fine or imprisonment, or both, at its discretion, limited only by the constitutional inhibition that excessive fines shall not be imposed nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Circuit Court, Marion County; John W. Mason, Judge.

Charles J. McKain was convicted of assault, and brings error. Affirmed.

O. H. Leeds, for plaintiff in error. O. Powell, Atty. Gen., and E. K. Reedy, for the State.

MILLER, J. C. J. McKain was indicted in the circuit court of Marion county for assault and battery upon Mrs. J. H. Downey. The indictment is in the usual form. It was certified by the circuit court to the "intermediate court" of that county, in pursuance of the act of the Legislature relating thereto, and was therein docketed for trial. Afterwards, in the last-mentioned court, the defendant asked leave to file his special plea in writing of autrefois acquit, which being objected to by the state, the objection was sustained, and leave to file the same was refused. Thereupon the defendant excepted to the ruling of the court. The defendant then entered his plea of not guilty, upon which issue was joined, and a jury, after hearing all of the evidence adduced by both the state and the defendant, found the defendant guilty of an assault. A motion by the defendant to set aside the verdict and grant him a new trial was overruled by the court, and a judgment was then rendered that the state recover from the defendant a fine of $25 and the costs of the prosecution, and that the defendant be also imprisoned in the county jail for the period of 60 days. A writ of error to this judgment was refused by the circuit court of said county, but on petition of defendant such writ, with supersedeas, was allowed by one of the judges of this court.

Plaintiff in error insists that the rejection of his special plea, the introduction of certain evidence objected to by him, the refusal to allow other evidence offered by him to go to the jury, and the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict and grant him a new trial on the ground that said verdict was and is contrary to the evidence, were and are prejudicial to him. All the evidence given to the jury is made part of the record. The paper offered by defendant as his plea of autrefois acquit is in the words and figures following: "And the said Charles J. McKain, in his own proper person, here now comes into court, and, having heard the said indictment read to him, says: That the state ought not further to prosecute the said indictment against him, the said Charles J. McKain, because he says that heretofore, to wit, on the 26th day of May, 1902, before A. L. Lehman, mayor of the city of Fairmont, Marion county, W. Va., at the office of said mayor, in said city, county, and state, he, the said Charles J. McKain, was tried and acquitted for and of the said offense charged in the said indictment against him; that the said Henry Downey, one of the prosecuting witnesses named in the said indictment, was on the day and year aforesaid a special officer or policeman in the employ of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, a corporation; that he, the said Henry Downey, on the ——— day of May, 1902, arrested him, the said Charles J. McKain, while he, the said Charles J. McKain, was a passenger at the Baltimore and Ohio Passenger Depot, in the said city of Fairmont, and confined him, the said Charles J. McKain, in the jail of said city of Fairmont; that on the day and year first above mentioned, he, the said Henry Downey, appeared before the said A. L. Lehman, mayor, then and there mayor of said city of Fairmont, as aforesaid, and preferred charges and made information against him, the said Charles J. McKain, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid was and had been guilty of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, on which said charge the said mayor on the day and year first above mentioned tried the said Charles J. McKain, and, after hearing all of the evidence adduced against him, the said Charles J. McKain, on the said trial, the said mayor promptly then and there, on said 26th day of May, 1902, discharged and fully acquitted him, the said

Charles J. McKain, of each and all of said offenses, as by the record thereof will appear, which judgment remains in full force and effect, and has not in the least been reversed or made void. And the said Charles J. McKain in fact says: That he is the said Charles J. McKain; that the said Charles J. McKain so tried and acquitted as aforesaid and the Charles J. McKain named in the said indictment are one and the same person, and not other and different persons; that the offense of which he, the said Charles J. McKain, was charged, tried, and acquitted, as aforesaid, and the offense of which he, the Charles J. McKain, is now indicted, are one and the same, and not other and different, offenses; and this he, the said Charles J. McKain, is ready to verify. Wherefore he prays judgment, and that by the court he may be dismissed and discharged from the said premises in the present indictment specified." This paper is plainly insufficient as a plea of autrefois acquit, and was properly rejected by the court. See Bishop's Directions and Forms, § 1043; 2 Whart. Prec. Indictments and Pleas, 693, and cases cited. The evidence certified is somewhat conflicting and contradictory. The jury is the judge of the weight and credit to be attached to the evidence. It is only in cases of manifest abuse, or plain departure from right and justice, that the court can interfere with the finding of a jury in such matters by granting a new trial. Gwynn v. Schwartz, 32 W. Va. 487, 9 S. E. 880; Ross v. Gill, 1 Wash. (Va.) 88; McDowell v. Crawford, 11 Gratt. 377; State v. Hurst, 11 W. Va. 75; Sheff v. City of Huntington, 16 W. Va. 307. Where a motion for a new trial is made on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, and the motion is denied, the opinion of the court which tried the case is on such point entitled to great weight; and the appellate court in such case will not grant such new trial unless there has been a plain deviation from right and justice. State v. Hunter, 37 W. Va. 744, 17 S. E. 807; Jones v. Singer Mfg. Co., 38 W. Va. 147, 18 S. E. 478; Sigler v. Beebe, 44 W. Va. 587, 30 S. E. 76. The judge of the trial court saw the witnesses, heard them testify, and passed upon their evidence. The circuit court reviewed the case upon the whole record. The two courts have held that the verdict is not erroneous. We are of the same opinion.

But defendant in error also contends that the judgment rendered against him is unauthorized by law, and cites Code 1899, c. 50, § 219, subd. 2, which provides that fines imposed by justices for assault and battery shall not be less than $5 nor more than $50. No power to imprison is thereby given. The jurisdiction of justices is conferred by statute. They can lawfully exercise none not so granted. They have no common-law powers. This statute does not apply to indictments for assault and battery prosecuted in the circuit or other courts which have like jurisdiction in such cases. Assault and battery is an offense at common law, and is cognizable as such by our circuit courts. The said intermediate court exercises the same powers (subject to review) upon the trial of indictments certified to it by the circuit court which the circuit court could have exercised. Upon conviction of the accused the court may impose upon him a fine or imprisonment, or both, in its discretion, limited only by the constitutional inhibition that excessive fines shall not be imposed nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted. Ex parte Garrison, 36 W. Va. 686, 689, 15 S. E. 417.

We find no error, and therefore affirm the judgment.

(56 W. Va. 141)

BRYANT et al. v. LOGAN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 1, 1904.)

INJUNCTION—SUIT BY TAXPAYERS—USE OF CITY PARK—LEASE FOR RACING PURPOSES—VALIDITY.

1. Citizens and taxpayers, simply as such, stating no special harm to them different from others, cannot enjoin the use of a lease of a part of a city park, made by the city for a term of years, for the purpose of racing horses.

2. A lease for the term of one year, with right to extend it five years, by a city, of a part of a public park, to improve it, and use it at times for training and running race horses, for a rental to the city, reserving access at times to the public for riding and driving on the track, is not an unlawful diversion of such park from its legitimate use, and the lease is not void.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wood County;
L. N. Tavenner, Judge.

Bill by G. S. Bryant and others against Thomas Logan and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. N. Miller and C. A. Kreps, for appellants. Smith D. Turner and Reese Blizzard, for appellees.

BRANNON, J. Bryant and others, suing on behalf of themselves and all other citizens of Parkersburg similarly situated, filed a bill in equity against Logan and others, stating that the city of Parkersburg had purchased, with the proceeds of bonds issued by it, 42 acres of land, and converted it into a public park having driveways, walks, a bicycle track, trees, and other constituents of a park for public use and enjoyment, and the city had adopted rules for its regulation, and it was under the city's control and management; that by such rules and regulations this park was opened to the public during certain hours, and that for some years it was used by the public as a park for the benefit of all persons; that, contrary to law, the council had accepted a proposition from the Gentlemen's Driving Club to lease a portion of the park (about half) to said club for one year, with the right to extend the lease five additional years, for training and racing horses; that this lease was detrimental to the public, because hindering and restricting its public use. Upon demurrer the bill was dismissed, and the plaintiffs appeal.

The first law question is as to the right of the plaintiffs to maintain the bill. They aver no special interest in themselves; they state no injury to their property, no interest peculiar to themselves. The only interest in them presented by the bill is that common to all the people of Parkersburg as citizens and taxpayers. In this respect the case is of practical importance, involving the right of anybody and everybody in a city to invoke equity to frustrate and avoid the action of the council in the management and control of city property. The case is not free from difficulty, both in itself and under diverse authority. A city is a branch, a subordinate agent, of the state government, vested with grave and important powers of state government delegated to it by the state. It is claimed that the use of this park for the purpose contemplated by the lease is misuse and diversion—I may say, a perversion—from the proper use, of property paid for by public taxation, and held in trust by the city for public use. Who can question it in the courts? Can a resident and taxpayer, without other interest, do so? On the one hand, it is of high import that the action of constituted authority of government should not be hampered and delayed by assailing by any and every individual from disappointment, whim, or caprice. The door would be open wide to multitudinous suits, filling the courts with litigation. They would arise constantly to carry out the individual idea of each person on good and bad grounds. Public policy argues against this. Though bad action of the city authorities would loudly call for redress, better that some instances of it go without redress, and that such redress be left to the public officials. On the other hand, municipal authorities do go wrong sometimes in the exercise of powers committed to them; but we must reflect that the people have intrusted them with discretion and power, and that it would produce infinite confusion if it should lie in everybody's will in every instance to act on his own impulse to question the public action of municipal authority. Unlawful action should be redressed; but who can call for it? The Attorney General, representing the state's abused confidence, at the relation of a resident, can call upon the courts to arrest or nullify such unwarranted action. 2 Dillon, Munic. Corp. § 912. "Where the injury which it is sought to enjoin is of a public nature, relief is sometimes sought by an action in the name of the Attorney General. And where under an act of Parliament lands are directed to be placed and kept in proper condition for the purposes of public recreation, the municipal authorities having charge of such lands may be enjoined from diverting them to another and different use without authority of law, upon an information filed by the Attorney General." 2 High, Injunc. § 1303. If the lease is beyond the council power, the occupation of the park under it is a public nuisance, because it obstructs the public use, just as the obstruction of a highway is a public nuisance. So viewing it, the authorities are clear that no one interested only as all others are, not personally affected in property or otherwise, can have an injunction. 2 High on Inj. § 839; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Black, 485, 17 L. Ed. 311; Talbott v. King, 32 W. Va. 6, 9 S. E. 48.

In State v. Matthews, 44 W. Va. 372, 29 S. E. 994, we decided that where one usurped the office of sheriff, in which all are interested, his right must be contested by somebody interested further than as a citizen or taxpayer, unless the Attorney General intervened. I do not see why the case of Smith v. Cornelius, 41 W. Va. 59, 23 S. E. 599, 30 L. R. A. 747, is not pointed authority in this case. The Berkely Springs property was in the custody of a public corporation created by the state to hold it in trust for public health and pleasure, and this court held that a lease by such corporation, though ultra vires, could not be contested by a private person, but only by the state. In Gall v. Cincinnati, 18 Ohio St. 563, it was held that taxpayers, as such, could not oppose the removal of a market house. The court said that, whatever rights adjacent lot owners might have, taxpayers, as such, could not, by injunction, prevent it. When private persons sought to challenge the action of the county court in changing the location of a bridge, Judge Lucas said: "They stand here simply as private citizens and taxpayers, who undertake to represent the whole county in opposition to the judgment and action of the properly constituted authorities." He further said that they stood simply as citizens honestly believing that the decision and judgment of the tribunal appointed by law to determine such questions were at fault, and seeking to substitute their own judgment for that of the legal authorities, and coerce them to abandon their own views and accept the views of those citizens. County Court v. Boreman, 34 W. Va. 93, 11 S. E. 747. In the fully considered case of Supervisors v. Gorrell, 20 Gratt. 484, where the supervisors were selling an old courthouse lot and acquiring a new one, certain citizens and taxpayers asked to be made parties. The opinions of the county judge and of the Supreme Court both deny their right as citizens or taxpayers to intervene, because without personal interest. In the county judge's opinion several cases are cited, one holding that "a plaintiff cannot sue as one of the public" to restrain a company from closing a railroad. The same principle is stated in County Court v. Armstrong, 34 W. Va. 329, 12 S. E. 488, the syllabus holding that "citizens-and taxpayers, merely as such, having no special property or interest to be affected save in common with all other citizens and taxpayers, cannot become parties to a proceeding by a county court to alter the location of and rebuild a county bridge." In 2 Dillon, Munic. Corp. c. 22, much is said in behalf of the right of taxpayers to enjoin illegal municipal action; but it will be found that the argument is in favor of such right in cases where a bonded debt is being incurred, or taxes illegally levied, or public money misapplied. I do not question the right in such cases, though many cases go so far as to deny it even there. In such cases taxpayers have a very perceptible, real interest—money is being taken from their pockets. But that does not apply in this case—the mere control and management of a city park where it is being leased for a short term for rental beneficial to the city. High on Inj. § 1301, says: "Although the general doctrine that taxpayers are proper parties to invoke equitable relief against misconduct on the part of municipal authorities is thus seen to be well established, it is not to be understood that they are entitled to maintain action in all cases of this nature, regardless of their personal interest or the degree of injury which they may sustain." The Ohio case of the market house above cited—Gall v. Cincinnati—is cited by High, as also the New York case of Tift v. City of Buffalo, 65 Barb. 460, holding that "a taxpayer at large of a municipality, having no private interest in the question more than other taxpayers, cannot maintain an action in equity, as against the public authorities, to set aside or prevent acts claimed to be illegal." The city was selling a park. The same doctrine is found in Ayres v. Lawrence, 63 Barb. 454. Blackstone is there quoted as stating: "It would be unreasonable to multiply suits by giving every man a separate right of action for what damns him in common only with the rest of his fellow citizens." In Roosevelt v. Draper, 23 N. Y. 318, right was denied to an inhabitant and taxpayer to contest a sale by the city of a piece of land in the city. The matter has been often considered and so held in New York. It has even been held that inhabitants and taxpayers cannot enjoin the vacation of a street unless peculiarly injured differently from others. City of Chicago v. Union Bldg. Ass'n, 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Hesing v. Scott, 107 Ill. 600. So we hold that the plaintiffs cannot sue. Suppose the board of public works to sell furniture in the capitol, or suppose the director of any state institution to do so, or misapply public property. Can we think that private individuals could have an injunction? I should say not without an act of Legislature to enable them to do so.

But, if the plaintiffs could sue, they cannot, on the merits, succeed. Chapter 32, p. 98, Acts 1893, amending the charter of Parkersburg, empowers the city to "purchase, take, receive, hold and use goods and chattels, land and tenements, * * * either for the proper use of said city * * *; and the same may grant, sell, convey, transfer, let and assign, pledge, mortgage, charge or encumber in any case and in any manner in which it would be lawful for a private person so to do, subject to the limitation and provisions of the Constitution." Here is a very broad power given by the Legislature to the city. I do not see why it does not legitimate the lease made by the city from the imputation of excess of power and voidness. Again, even if the power to make the lease in question had not been given by the act of the Legislature, still we would not brand it as void and illegal, because the use contemplated by the lease is not an unlawful diversion of a part of the park from the use in view in its acquisition. The bill says the ground was acquired for park purposes "for the health, pleasure, and comfort of the people." Racing horses is enjoyed by thousands and thousands of people, high and low, rich and poor. The use of the park for this purpose would give people recreation and pleasure, and is not foreign to the object for which it was purchased. New Orleans v. Louisiana Co., 140 U. S. 654, 11 Sup. Ct. 968, 35 L. Ed. 556. Note, too, that there was no sale depriving the city of title, but only a lease for one year, with right to extend the term five years. The lease covered only half of the 42 acres. There was already a grand stand and race track. The lease gave exclusive control to the club of the part leased, reserving to the public access to the track for riding or driving with horses or vehicles, except on racing days and one week previous, or when the track was in actual use by the club, or when its use would be improper by reason of bad weather. So it did not exclude the public wholly, but still allowed a partial use of it by the public. The lease gave the city $300 annual rental, and fertilizers accumulated in the stables for the other ground. The city derived a benefit from the lease. A city may lease a part of a lot conveyed for courthouse purposes. It was held not a diversion from the legitimate use. Bolling v. Petersburg, 8 Leigh, 224. Parts of public buildings not needed may be leased. Note 8, 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 1187.

Therefore we affirm the decree.

(56 W. Va. 146)

JENNINGS et al. v. BENNETT, Judge, et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 1, 1904.)

PROHIBITION—EXECUTION OF DECREE—OTHER ADEQUATE REMEDY.

1. Where a personal decree for money is made on publication against nonresidents, without service of process or appearance, they must first apply to the circuit court by special appearance to vacate the decree and quash the execution before asking a writ of prohibition against an execution on the decree.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Petition of Jennings & Bros. for writ of prohibition against W. G. Bennett, judge, and others. Writ denied.

Thos. P. Jacobs, for petitioners. L. M. Wade, for respondents.

BRANNON, J. See & Siers brought a chancery suit against Kane and E. H. Jennings & Bros. to cancel an oil lease; and a decree was made canceling the lease, and adjudging costs against E. H. Jennings & Bros. Jennings & Bros. were not served with process, and did not appear, but were proceeded against as nonresidents by publication. An execution for such costs issued against Jennings & Bros., and they petitioned this court for a writ of prohibition against the enforcement of said decree and execution. No attack is made on that part of the decree canceling the lease, but attack is made upon that part giving personal decree for costs, and it is claimed to be void. As there was no service of process or appearance, it is claimed that, upon elementary principles, the court had no jurisdiction of the person of Jennings & Bros. to render decree for costs. Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112, 14 S. E. 447; Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398, 20 Sup. Ct. 410, 44 L. Ed. 520. We hold that, though the decree for costs be void, yet prohibition ought not to be awarded until the circuit court shall be allowed an opportunity to vacate that portion of the decree and quash the execution. We have not the case where the party appears and makes no objection or exception to jurisdiction. Many authorities say that he cannot in such case have a writ of prohibition. Our case is where the parties were not summoned and did not appear, and we are of opinion that the circuit court in such a case ought first to be asked for relief before prohibition can be had. Here is a case where the circuit court, likely by inadvertence, gave a decree that is, in a separable part of it, void. Ought the party to be allowed to bring a separate suit, and that the extraordinary remedy of prohibition, without asking the circuit court to correct its error? The decree being void in part, the court has power to vacate the void part at any time, though the term has ended. 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 825. In Board v. Holt, 51 W. Va. 435, 41 S. E. 337, the rule is stated that generally prohibition will not issue against a preliminary rule or injunction until application has been made to the lower court to discharge the rule or dissolve the injunction. Judge Dent said, very properly, that it should be done out of deference to the judge below, on the theory that when the matter is called to his attention he will promptly dispose of the same in accordance with law. Knight v. Zahnizer, 53 W. Va. 470, 44 S. E. 778, so holds. Where it appears that the lower court in fact considered its jurisdiction, and held that it had jurisdiction, so that we may be sure that application to it would be vain, the rule may be different. Havemeyer v. Superior Court (Cal.) 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 245; Board v. Holt, 51 W. Va. 435, 41 S. E. 337. Of Board v. Holt, 54 W. Va. 167, 46 S. E. 124, we may also say it recognized this general rule, but dispensed with it from the fact that it was clear that the circuit judge had a fixed, sedate opinion in favor of his jurisdiction. Safely may we say that the great current of authority is that it is a part of the practice or procedure in prohibition that such application must first be made to the inferior tribunal. 12 Am. Dec. 609; Callbreath v. District Court (Colo. Sup.) 71 Pac. 387; 16 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 1128; State v. District Court (Wyo.) 76 Pac. 680.

Jennings & Bros. may appear specially before the circuit court only for the purpose of moving the vacation of that part of the decree giving costs and quashing the execution, or may make such appearance before the judge in vacation and move to quash the execution, without being bound by general appearance to the whole cause. Groves v. County, 42 W. Va. 587, 26 S. E. 460. Therefore we discharge the rule and refuse the prohibition, without prejudice to further application hereafter.

(56 W. Va. 123)

MARSH v. DESPARD et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 1, 1904.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

1. An executory contract for the sale of land can be rescinded or waived in equity by writing, or by word of mouth if possession of the land be given up or the writing be destroyed, but not without something done by way of rescission or waiver.

2. Any circumstance or course of conduct from whence can be clearly deduced an agreement to put an end to the original contract will amount to a rescission of it.

3. A contract may be discharged by the parties thereto or the beneficiaries therein by an entirely new contract, entered into by them, with reference to the same subject-matter, the terms of which are coextensive with, but repugnant to, the original contract.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harrison County; John W. Mason, Judge.

Bill by James W. Marsh against Charles S. Despard and others. Decree for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Reversed.

John Bassel, for appellants. Davis & Davis and Osman E. Swartz, for appellee.

MILLER, J. By contract in writing bearing date on the 10th day of February, 1872, Burton Despard, by James M. Lyon, his agent, sold to appellee, James W. Marsh, a tract of 82 acres of land situate on the waters of Grass Run, in Harrison county (described in the contract by metes and bounds), at $9 per acre, $50 of which was paid in cash by Marsh at the date of the contract; $50 thereof was to be paid when Despard and wife should convey the land to Marsh by deed with covenants of general warranty; the residue of the purchase money was to be paid in six equal annual installments, with interest from the date first aforesaid, and the entire interest was to be paid annually. On the 17th day of October, 1872, Marsh paid to Despard an additional $50 on said purchase money, for which Despard gave to him a receipt, specifying therein that the payment was on account of purchase money for about 82 acres of land on Grass Run, sold to Marsh by James M. Lyon, as Despard's agent. Marsh went upon the land, built a house and barn thereon, cleared about 50 acres thereof, and put out an orchard of apple and peach trees, and has had actual and continuous possession thereof ever since, but Despard never executed to him a deed for the land. Despard died testate in October, 1874, leaving, him surviving, several children and heirs at law, who, by the provisions of his will, were to share equally in the partition and distribution of the testator's estate. Edwin Maxwell qualified as executor of the will. On the 6th day of December, 1881, Marsh paid to Maxwell, as executor, $100 on his debt to B. Despard for land. The note of Marsh to Despard for purchase money of the land, as well as the title bond to Marsh for said land, were found among Despard's papers after his death, and came to Maxwell's hands as his executor. No other payment on said purchase money was ever made by Marsh. In 1883 the real estate of said Despard, deceased, was partitioned among and allotted to the persons entitled thereto by decree of the circuit court of Harrison county in a suit brought and prosecuted for that purpose. Appellant C. S. Despard, being a son and devisee, was entitled to participate in the partition and allotment. To him were assigned by said decree 318 acres of land on Grass Run, in said county, and two storerooms in the town of Clarksburg. The land does not appear to have any other description in the decree of partition. It is shown that Despard at the time of his death owned no tract of 318 acres on Grass Run; that the commissioners who made the partition and allotment did so without going upon the lands, from surveys and plats found among decedent's papers; that the decedent had also owned a tract of 124 acres on Grass Run, which had been sold to one Goodwin, and that the 124 acres and 82 acres were assessed and charged to Despard on the land-books with taxes; that said Marsh was never assessed with or paid any taxes on said 82 acres; that no lands on Grass Run were found, after said partition, in which decedent had any interest at the time of his death, except said 124 and 82 acres, respectively, and that said tracts were not contiguous. On the 16th day of November, 1889, having been advised as to his rights in the premises by Judge Nathan Goff, of Clarksburg, who was a son-in-law of Burton Despard, Marsh executed to the Harrison County Oil & Gas Company a lease upon said 82 acres for oil and gas purposes. Marsh says in his testimony that he knew at the time that Judge Goff was a lawyer, and a son-in-law of Despard, and that Goff told him that it was his (Marsh's) land. In April, 1893, the appellant C. S. Despard went to Grass Run to locate the lands assigned to him as aforesaid. He found the 124-acre tract, and was told that Marsh lived on 82 acres that had formerly belonged to Burton Despard. He called upon Marsh at his home on the land, and informed him that this tract was a part of the land allotted to him in the suit for partition by the Despard heirs. The evidence does not agree as to what was then said by appellant. Marsh testifies that appellant said that the land which Marsh was then occupying was his (Despard's); that he (Despard) had a deed for it, and remarked that wherever he found any land unoccupied, which had originally belonged to his father, he intended to take it; and further stated that if he (Marsh) intended to stay on that land he would have to lease it. It further appears that Marsh then told appellant that he had bought the land of his father, and expected a deed therefor from the Despard heirs. This conversation is, in part, denied by appellant, who says that he told Marsh that the commissioners had set apart to him 325 acres of land; that the 82-acre tract was part of it; that Marsh did not mention anything about expecting a deed from the heirs; and that he told Marsh that he had a decree for the land, but did not tell him that he had a deed therefor. Hickman, who was present, says that appellant told Marsh that he had a deed for the land, and that Marsh would have to lease it or leave it. An understanding was then had between Marsh and appellant by which Marsh was afterwards to go to Clarksburg to make some arrangement with appellant about the land. Shortly afterwards Marsh did go to Clarksburg, and met appellant, who says that Marsh again told him that he had bought the land, and wanted to know what appellant was going to do about it. Appellant said to him that if he had bought the land it ought to be paid for; that appellant wanted the matter settled; that Marsh then spoke about renting the land, but said he would first consult his lawyer—a Mr. Scott—about it. He was afterwards seen with Mr. Scott, an attorney. This was in the forenoon. In the afternoon of the same day Marsh again met appellant at the law office of Edwin Maxwell, the executor, the said title bond being there in the possession of Despard. Thereupon Maxwell wrote for the parties, and Marsh signed, an agreement, which is attested by Maxwell and B. M. Despard, in the following words and figures:

"I have this day rented from C. S. Despard the tract of 82 acres of land, on Grass Run in Harrison County, where I now reside for one year from the first day of April, 1893, for which I am to pay $25.00 on November 1st, 1893, and $25.00 before the 1st day of April, 1894.

"If I see proper to sow on said land a wheat crop the said Despard reserves the right to purchase said crop and pay me for the same, and if we can not agree I am to select a man & he a man and they if necessary a third man, who shall say what said Despard is to pay. If I shall sow any of the place in either oats or wheat I am to sow grass seed on same without any charge, the said Despard to furnish the seed for me to sow.

"Given under my hand this 19th day of April, 1893. J. W. Marsh.

"Witness:

"Edwin Maxwell.

"B. M. Despard."

On the 15th day of January, 1895, Marsh went to Parkersburg, to the home of appellant, and then and there signed another contract, which is in the words and figures following:

"This contract made this 15th day of January, 1895, between J. W. Marsh of Harrison County, W. Va., of the first part and C. S. Despard of Wood County, W. Va., of the second part that if the party of the second part has rented the party of the first part his eighty two acres of land on Grass Run where the party of the first part now resides upon the following terms. Commencing April 1st, 1895, that is the said Marsh, is to pay sixty-five Dollars a year and said amount is to be paid on or before the 1st day of December, 1895, and to give said Despard one half of the Fruit raised upon said place and the said Marsh agrees to feed all his stock upon said place and not to move off any manure and if the said Despard should sell said land the said Marsh is to give possession of said land but the said Despard is to pay said Marsh a fair compensation for his crop if he has to give possession of said land before this lease expires and the said Marsh further agrees to take as good care of said property as it was his own and to not plow any of the sod or grass land.

"Given under my hand and seal this the 15th day of Jany, 1895.

"J. W. Marsh. [Seal.]

"C. S. Despard."

It is shown that at the date of the first lease the land was not more valuable than it was when bought by Marsh, if worth so much. It appears that the amount of purchase money and interest thereon then due from Marsh on the land was about $1,600. It is also shown that Marsh made no offer to pay the balance of purchase money, and did not demand a deed for the land at any time. He admits that he did not have sufficient money at any time to pay the debt. He says in his testimony: "I leased said land of C. S. Despard after his having, as I thought, made a threat that I would be ejected from said land, thinking it was the only way that I could have a home for the family until I could see legal authority in regard to the matter. I never at any time said or intimated that I had no right or title to said land." Appellant says in his testimony: "I made no threat to him in any manner. He went out and consulted his lawyer as to whether he would take the land and pay for it, or turn it over to me in the place of taking it. It was optional with him to take the land under the contract or release it—either one." Marsh voluntarily went to Clarksburg, and, for aught that appears in the record, with full knowledge of his legal rights in the premises, and after taking legal advice thereon, of his own accord entered into said first lease. After occupying the land for nearly two years under this lease, he voluntarily went to the home of appellant at Parkersburg, entered into the second lease, and occupied the premises thereunder until the time of the institution of this suit by him, in October or November, 1897. He referred to the property, during that period, as the land of appellant. Maxwell swears as follows in reference to the possession of the said title bond by appellant: "I may have given him possession of the box containing the papers, or I may possibly have given him the paper, but my impression would be that I gave him the box containing the paper; and, if the land was assigned to him by the commissioners, there is no reason that occurs to me now why he might not have properly taken the paper." Thus it appears that appellant had the title bond with the assent of Maxwell, executor; that the whole arrangement was understood and acquiesced in by the executor, Marsh, and appellant when the first lease was made to Marsh, and accepted by him in Maxwell's office.

At the January rules, 1898, Marsh filed his bill in equity against said C. S. Despard and the other children and heirs at law of Burton Despard, deceased, Gertrude Despard, widow, and Edwin Maxwell, executor, setting up the facts connected with the purchase of said land, showing the said payments on the purchase money therefor, and praying a specific execution of said contract, and also that a deed for the land might be decreed to him from said heirs. Appellant C. S. Despard answered the bill, and relied, as a defense thereto, upon the facts hereinbefore recited. On the 21st day of January, 1899, the cause was heard, and a decree made and entered therein, by which it was and is adjudged that plaintiff is entitled to a specific execution of said contract upon the payment of the balance of the purchase money due and unpaid upon said land on that day, amounting to $1,798.48, the payment of which is ordered within 90 days thereafter; that upon its payment the said C. S. Despard and the other children and heirs at law of Burton Despard, deceased, are required to execute, acknowledge, and deliver to Marsh a deed for said land, with covenants of general warranty, but upon their failure so to do a special commissioner, who was appointed by the decree, is authorized to execute and deliver such deed for them. From this decree said C. S. Despard obtained an appeal and supersedeas.

Summarized, the case is thus presented: In February, 1872, Marsh bought the land, thereafter took possession thereof, and made permanent improvements thereon. Up to and including December 8, 1881, he had paid but $200 on the purchase money. He was never charged with nor paid any of the taxes on the land. He was fully advised as to his legal rights in the premises. He knew that he was entitled to a deed therefor upon payment of the balance of purchase money, with its interest. C. S. Despard, under the said decree of partition, held the legal title to the land, and was entitled to this purchase money. On the 19th day of April, 1893, the amount of this purchase money and its interest amounted to about $1,600. Marsh did not then have the money with which to pay it. That he might remain on the land with his family, he on that day voluntarily leased the land from appellant. On the 15th day of January, 1895, he again voluntarily leased it, having occupied it until the date last aforesaid—almost two years—under his first lease. He again held and occupied the premises as tenant of appellant until the institution of this suit. Just before that time he had refused to pay rents to appellant, and was notified to surrender possession of the premises.

Appellant insists that the said contract of February 10, 1872, was rescinded by mutual consent of himself and Marsh; that appellee became his tenant by said two written leases, and had thereby surrendered his possession of the land to appellant, and was therefore not entitled to specifically enforce the said contract. The ownership of the land by Despard having been acknowledged by Marsh in the leases, and admitted by him in accepting the tenancy thereof, the legal possession of the land by Despard necessarily followed. 1 Taylor, Landl. & Tenant, § 86. Appellee contends that he consented to become Despard's tenant in ignorance of his rights, and by reason of the fraud, misrepresentation, and intimidation by Despard. We think no fraud or intimidation is proved. There is some conflict in the evidence as to whether Despard said to Marsh that he had a deed or decree for the land; but, in the view we take of the case, this apparent contradiction is not material. After this interview with Despard, and after he had consulted an attorney at Clarksburg, where the records were accessible, and would have shown the facts about Despard's claim to the land, Marsh voluntarily leased the premises from Despard. But, admitting that Marsh was ignorant of his rights—which is not shown—he is in no better plight. "The presumption is that every person is acquainted with his own rights, provided he has had a reasonable opportunity to know them. And nothing can be more liable to abuse than to permit a person to reclaim his property upon the mere pretense that at the time of parting with it he was ignorant of the law acting on his title. Mr. Fonblanque has accordingly laid it down as a general proposition that in courts of equity ignorance of the law shall not affect agreements, nor excuse from the legal consequences of particular acts. And he is fully borne out by authorities." 1 Story, Equity (13th Ed.) pp. 121, 122, and cases cited.

Appellee further contends that the agreements and leases between himself and C. S. Despard did not and do not amount to a rescission of the original contract, because the contractual obligations and rights of Burton Despard at his death passed to Maxwell, his executor, who alone could enforce them. We think the proposition is not applicable here. It is plainly evident that the decree of partition passed to C. S. Despard, the legal title to said 82 acres. He was not bound to part with his title until Marsh should pay to him the balance of the purchase money, with its interest, due on the land. It is true that Maxwell, as executor, was the personal representative of Burton Despard, and as such was charged with the collection and disbursement of that and other claims due the estate. But when the first lease was made to Marsh, Maxwell, presumably at the request of the parties, drafted it, and the title bond was present in the possession of Despard, who then and there agreed to release it. The debt of Marsh was thus canceled, and Maxwell thereby discharged from further duty in relation thereto. Hammon on Contracts, § 426, says: "The parties to a contract may discharge it by substituting in its place a new contract. This may occur in any one of three ways, each of which has the same effect: First, the parties may enter into an entirely new contract with reference to the same subject-matter, the terms of which are coextensive with and repugnant to the terms of the original agreement. * * *

The parties in interest did make such new agreement by the execution and acceptance of the leases; Maxwell, executor, being present and acquiescing therein. The language of the first lease, being the words of Marsh, after he signed the same, plainly show that he considered the land the property of appellant. The second lease again recognizes Despard as the owner and Marsh as the tenant. It says "the party of the second part (Despard) has rented to the party of the first part his (Despard's) eighty-two acres of land, where the party of the first part now resides, upon the following terms: * * * And if the said Despard should sell said land the said Marsh is to give possession of said land, but the said Despard is to pay said Marsh a fair compensation for his crop if he has to give possession of said land before the lease expires." In Cunningham v. Cunningham, 46 W. Va. 1, 4, 32 S. E. 998, 999, the court says: "There is no doubt but that an executory contract for the sale of the land, whether written or oral, can be rescinded or waived, in equity, by word of mouth, if possession be given up or the writing be destroyed, but not without something done by way of rescission or waiver." Boggs v. Bodkin, 32 W. Va. 566, 9 S. E. 891, 5 L. R. A. 245; Straley v. Perdue, 33 W. Va. 375, 10 S. E. 780; Urpman v. Lowther Oil Co., 53 W. Va. 501, 511, 44 S. E. 433, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027. "Any circumstance or course of conduct from whence can be clearly deduced an agreement to put an end to the original contract will amount to a rescission of it." Fry, Spec. Per. § 877. "The rescission of a contract necessarily constitutes a bar to the performance of it by either party." Fry, supra, § 682. Having become the tenant of Despard, and accepted and held the possession of the 82 acres of land from 1893 to 1897 under said leases, Marsh will not be allowed now to dispute the title of his landlord, the appellant. 2 Taylor, Landlord & Tenant, 629, and cases cited. We are of opinion that the contract of February 10, 1872, was rescinded by the parties interested therein, and that Marsh, by the leases, surrendered the land to, and became the tenant of, Despard.

For the reasons stated, the decree of the circuit court is erroneous. We therefore reverse the same, and dismiss the plaintiff's bill.

(56 W. Va. 161)

TURNER v. McCORMICK.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 1, 1904.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—OPTION—ACCEPTANCE—ALTERATION—RESCISSION.

1. An acceptance in writing of a formal and carefully prepared option of sale of land, within the time allowed by it for acceptance, using the formal words, "according to terms of the option given me," to which there is added, by the conjunction "and," a request for a departure from its terms as to the time and place of performance, is unconditional, and converts the option into an executory contract of sale.

2. A mere request by one of the parties therefor for an alteration or modification of a fully accepted proposed contract, which by acceptance has been wrought into a binding contract, is not a breach thereof, giving right of rescission thereof or action thereon. Neither does it effect such alteration, unless assented to by the other party.

3. Such request relates to performance of the contract, and is not an element in the making thereof, although written and connected as aforesaid, with the acceptance, on a single sheet of paper, so as to make of the acceptance and request a compound sentence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monongalia County; John W. Mason, Judge.

Bill by Edgar D. Turner against William McCormick. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Moreland & Glasscock and H. L. Robinson, for appellant. H. M. Russell and W. S. Meredith, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, P. In this case the circuit court sustained a demurrer to a bill praying the specific performance of two alleged contracts for the sale of the Pittsburg vein of coal, underlying two separate tracts of land in Monongalia county. The owner of the land executed two options of sale to the plaintiff, each of which provided that it should be accepted within a certain time, and, if not so accepted, it should be void. The demurrer was sustained upon the theory that what is relied upon in the bill as constituting acceptance is insufficient, because it sought to introduce a new element into the proposed contract, and make not the contract originally proposed, but a new and different contract. The first option bears date December 31, 1901; was executed by William McCormick, as party of the first part, and E. D. Turner, as party of the second part; covers the coal in a tract of about 150 acres at the price of $50 per acre, one-third to be paid in cash on delivery of deed, and the balance in two equal annual payments; and provides, as to acceptance, that "the party of the first part agrees that the party of the second part shall have until the first day of March, 1902, to accept the coal herein described as the same may be determined by the county surveyor. * * * And if the party of the second part does not give notice of such acceptance by said date, this contract shall be void, and of no further effect." The other option, executed by the same parties, is dated February 2, 1902; covers the Pittsburg vein of coal in and underlying a tract containing about 104 acres, at the price of $41 per acre, one-third to be paid in cash on delivery of deed, and the balance in two equal annual payments; and provides, as to acceptance, that "if the second party, heirs or assigns, fails to notify said first party in writing, on or before the first day of March, 1902, that he or they elect to purchase said coal, then this agreement is to be considered as rescinded, null and void and neither party to be bound thereby or liable in any way." As to performance and the consummation of the proposed sale, the written option provided as follows: "The first party shall and will, within ninety days, after the notice in writing that the said second party, his heirs or assigns, elect to purchase said coal at his own proper cost and charge, make, execute and deliver to the said second party, his heirs or assigns a good and sufficient deed or deeds for said coal and mining rights, in fee simple, clear of all incumbrances, with clause of general warranty," etc. The first option does not require acceptance in writing, nor performance within 90 days after notice of acceptance. The second does impose these conditions. Besides alleging a verbal acceptance of both of these options on the 21st day of February, 1902, the bill avers an acceptance and notice thereof in writing, and sets out a copy of the notice of acceptance, which reads as follows:

"Morgantown, W. Va., Feb. 21, 1902. Mr. William McCormick: I hereby notify you that your coal will be accepted according to terms of the option given to me on same and respectfully request you to make delivery of deed, with abstract of title, to me, in Morgantown, W. Va., on Saturday, June 28th, 1902, hour and place to be decided later. Yours truly, E. D. Turner."

Two objections to the written acceptance are urged. One of these relates to the first clause, and is that its language relates to the future, and imports a promise to accept, and not to notice of a completed acceptance. The other objection is that the request that deed be made on June 28, 1902, in Morgantown, at an hour and place thereafter to be decided, superadded to the alleged notice of acceptance, made it conditional, and not absolute, by attempting to introduce new terms into the proposed contract. Acceptance of the first option gave the right to have immediate performance, and allowed no time to the vendor in which to perform thereafter. Absolute acceptance of the second option would have included, as one of the terms thereof, an agreement that the vendor should have 90 days within which to tender the deed. As it required acceptance on or before the 1st day of March, 1902, and performance within 90 days thereafter, the request or condition in the notice that the deed be delivered on the 28th day of June, 1902, named a date more than 90 days after the first day of March, the limit for acceptance, and one more than 90 days after the notice of acceptance.

The first objection overlooks the substantial and legal meaning of the terms, and amounts to a mere criticism of the phraseology. By turning this weapon upon the appellees themselves, their contention is completely overthrown. The language is not that the option will be accepted, but that the coal will be accepted in the future; and the contract itself contemplates performance in future, and after acceptance of the option. It is in the very nature of a contract that it shall be first made, and then performed. Moreover, the language of the acceptance, in strictness, more nearly conforms to the language of the contract than that which it is said should have been used. The provision of the option as to notice of acceptance uses this language: "That he or they elect to purchase said coal." It requires notice of intention and election to do a thing in the future. Hence it may be said, without doing any violence to the language of the option, that notice of an election to purchase according to the terms of the option should be understood and deemed to carry with it, by necessary implication, prior or contemporaneous acceptance of the terms of the option. Acceptance of the coal according to the terms of the option could not take place without a full accession to all the terms of the option. To this it may be added that it is not usual to refer to the instrument by its date or otherwise, and merely say it is accepted or its terms agreed to. Thus, in Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249, the vendee had telegraphed as follows: "Will take the property. Meet me at Toronto first train. Answer." Another telegram responding to another proposal was: "Will accept your proposal." No substantial distinction between these forms of acceptance was discovered. In both instances the future tense was used. In Barrett v. McAllister, 35 W. Va. 738, 11 S. E. 220, there was a verbal notice in which the plaintiff told the defendant, after looking over the land, he was satisfied with it, and was ready to pay the money when the deed should be made. Then a day or two afterwards he wrote a letter in which he said: "I am here at your place of business ready to take the land and pay the money whenever the deed is made." In these instances the language, with one exception, related to performance, and it never occurred to anybody to question its sufficiency on that ground. In the same case, at page 745, 33 W. Va., and page 222, 11 S. E., Judge Brannon took this view. He said: "Why talk about the execution of a deed if the land was not satisfactory? Why talk about a deed if Barrett had not accepted the option? The fact that they so talked about a deed proves that Barrett had accepted the option and informed McAllister of it. Indeed, this conversation about a deed is of itself acceptance."

But it is further urged that the reference to the future in the first clause coupled with the request in the second clause, bears out the theory of a promise to accept in the future, and precludes the view that the writing conveys notice of a prior or contemporaneous acceptance. It has already been pointed out that the declaration of intent to take the coal in accordance with the terms of the option presupposes and necessarily implies present or past acceptance of the terms. The notice does not say, "I will take the coal according to the terms of the option on the 28th day of June," or "if you will deliver the deed on the 28th day of June." Its terms are positive. The notice is that the coal will be accepted according to the terms of the option given. This is followed by a request, not a condition, that the deed be delivered on the 28th day of June, instead of at an earlier date. To couple the two clauses in the manner suggested would be to depart from the plain, common-sense meaning of the notice. It would do violence also to the grammatical construction of the notice. No reason is given why the latter clause limits and qualifies the former. It is not pointed out, nor even suggested, that the rules of grammatical construction require it, nor that the two clauses have such logical connection. The copulative conjunction used simply makes grammatical connection of the two clauses. It does not make them mutually dependent, nor the former conditional.

Yielding the first contention for the purpose of argument, counsel for appellee say that if the first clause, standing alone, would amount to unconditional acceptance, converting the option into a contract binding upon both parties, the addition of the request that delivery of the deed be made on the 28th day of June—a date more than 90 days after acceptance, and after the time in which acceptance could be made—renders the notice insufficient. They say this request does not relate to performance of the contract after the making thereof as proposed, and that the insertion thereof in the written notice was an attempt to ingraft upon the contract proposed conditions or terms not embodied in the original proposition; and, as the bill does not show any acceptance in writing of this new condition, the effort to change the original proposition has failed, and no contract has been made. If this last clause of the deed thus qualified the first, it would work a change as to the time of payment of the purchase money and delivery of the deed. It would also designate a place of payment as to which the options are silent. The bill avers, as the reason for requesting delivery on the 28th day of June, that the plaintiff had similar options upon the coal underlying several other tracts of land in the neighborhood of those owned by the defendant, and desired to close them all on the same day; it being his purpose to obtain an aggregate of 1,000 or 1,200 acres of coal in a body. While this averment is not important, it well illustrates the fact that such a request may be added to an acceptance for a good purpose, and it does not necessarily indicate an intention to change the terms of the proposed contract. The plaintiff desired the land, and was willing to take it and pay for it. He preferred to close all the options on the same day, and therefore added this request. Suppose he had on one day put the first part of the notice in writing, and sent it to the defendant. That would have closed the contract undoubtedly. Then suppose on the next day he had written a request that the performance be delayed until the 28th of June. That would not have been a repudiation of the contract. It would have been a mere request for an extension of time. The defendant could not have treated the contract as broken for that reason. He could have enforced it notwithstanding this request. The mere fact that the acceptance and the request are in juxtaposition, standing in the same sentence, united by a conjunction, does not change their character or legal sense.

The contention of counsel for appellee is unsupported by authority. "If an offer is accepted as made, the acceptance is not conditional, and does not vary from the offer, because of inquiries whether the offerer will change his terms, or as to future acts, or the expression of a hope or suggestions, etc." 9 Cyc. 289. "Plaintiff answered a proposition to lease, 'I will accept your offer to lease to you at $200 per year for three or five years as you choose.' Defendant answered, 'Make out lease for place for five years at $200 per year.' He also said in this letter that he would like to build on a cookroom, with privilege to remove it. Plaintiff recognized that a lease for five years existed. Held, these letters made a lease and the request as to the cookroom did not attach a condition to defendant's acceptance." Culton v. Gilchrist, 92 Iowa, 718, 61 N. W. 384. In Phillips v. Moor, 71 Me. 78, the court held that an acceptance coupled with a request for a modification is an absolute and unconditional acceptance, and closes the contract. In that case the subject of the contract was a lot of hay. The defendant offered $9.50 per ton for part of it, and $5 for the balance. The plaintiff sent him a postal card in reply saying he had hoped the defendant would pay him $10 for his hay of the best quality, and closed by saying, "But you can take the hay at your price, and when you get it hauled in, if you can pay the $10.00 dollars, I would like to have you do it, if the hay proves good enough for the price." The defendant, having received this card on Friday morning, made no reply, and Sunday morning the hay was burned in the barn. The court held that there was a contract, and that, under the peculiar circumstances dispensing with actual delivery, which ordinarily is necessary to the passing of title, the defendant was liable for the price of the hay. In Stephenson v. McClain, 5 Q. B. D. 346, the principle is well illustrated. The defendant had certain warrants for iron. He wrote to plaintiffs, asking whether they could get him an offer for them. After some correspondence the defendant fixed a net cash price of 40 shillings per ton, the offer to hold good until the following Monday. On the morning of that day, at 9:42, plaintiff telegraphed this request: "Please wire whether you would accept forty for delivery over two months, or if not, longest limit you could give." No answer having been received, the defendant, after receipt of this telegram and without having replied to it, sold the warrants, and at 1:25 p. m. telegraphed to the plaintiffs that he had done so. Before the sending of this telegram, the plaintiffs found a purchaser for the iron, and at 1:34 p. m. telegraphed the defendant, stating that they had secured his price. The defendant refused to deliver the iron, and thereupon the plaintiffs brought an action against him for non-delivery, and recovered. The court held that the inquiry as to whether the defendant would modify the terms of his offer was not a rejection of the offer, and, he not having withdrawn the offer before the sale was effected, a binding contract was effected by the acceptance of the plaintiffs upon finding the purchaser at 1:00 p. m., 25 minutes prior to the sending of defendant's telegram. The ruling in that case is a very strong adjudication against the contention of the appellee here. The request or suggestion for modification of the offer made before its acceptance might well have been regarded as an indication of a purpose not to accept. Here the acceptance precedes the request for a modification.

Among the cases relied upon as authority sustaining the action of the court in dismissing the bill is that of Potts v. Whitehead, 23 N. J. Eq. 512. The report of the case in that volume does not set out the fact fully. They are given at length in 20 N. J. Eq. (5 C. E. Green) 55. There it is shown that the offer was such that an unqualified acceptance of it would not have constituted a contract, for the offer and acceptance would have left open to further negotiation important elements of the contract. In that case the defendant signed a paper embodying an offer to sell certain land in consideration of $20 per acre; $500 of the price to be paid on the execution of a deed, and the balance to be secured by a mortgage on the land, with interest at 6 per cent. When the deferred payments of the purchase money should become due was not stated, and this paper and the alleged acceptance did not fix any time. If the latter had, it would not have been binding, unless assented to by the defendant. This was one ground of the decision of the chancellor, holding that there was no contract. The alleged acceptance said: "Have twice attempted the tender of the first payment of $500.00 upon the agreement made between us on the 7th of December last. I will meet you," etc., " * * * when I shall be ready to make tender of the money and execute the proper agreements thereupon." This acceptance did not say, as does the one under consideration here, that the plaintiff would take the property in accordance with the terms of the agreement. He said he would pay $500 upon the agreement and execute the proper agreements thereupon. There is scarcely a resemblance between the two papers. What was meant by "proper agreement," the court had no means of knowing. He might have meant such agreements as were just and fair, or such as the offer indicated. The paper was indefinite and ambiguous. Respecting it, the chancellor said: "It doubtless might fairly be inferred from this letter that the complainant intended to accept the offer in some way, and expected to enter into an agreement for the purchase of this property, at the price fixed, but he did not bind himself so to do."

Another case relied upon is Sawyer v. Brossart, 67 Iowa, 678, 25 N. W. 876, 58 Am. Rep. 371. In that case the defendant, a resident of Los Angeles, Cal., offered for sale, by letter, two business rooms in Iowa City, saying to the plaintiff: "You can have that building for thirty-five hundred dollars, or the two for $5,000. Let me hear from you at once." The alleged acceptance was by telegram from Iowa City, saying: "Accept your offer for two buildings at five thousand dollars. Money at your order at First National Bank here." The court held that the defendant "was entitled, under his offer, to have the money paid to him at his place of residence, and to deliver the deed there, and that, as the acceptance of plaintiff was not an acceptance of the offer as made, it did not bind B.," the plaintiff. It is to be noted here that the plaintiff did not request permission to pay the money into the bank to the defendant's credit at Iowa City, but said, in effect, that the money had been paid there to his credit. Therefore the payment into the bank at Iowa City was made a part of the acceptance. By such payment and notice, plaintiff attempted to add a new condition to the contract proposed, which was silent as to the place of payment, and therefore, in law, contemplated payment at Los Angeles. It was not an unqualified acceptance, coupled with a request for permission to pay at Iowa City. Corcoran v. White, 117 Ill. 118, 7 N. E. 525, 57 Am. Rep. 858, does not support the position taken by the appellee. The letter purporting to be an acceptance said the party would accept the offer, provided the title was perfect. It further said: "I will call at your office Monday at 10 o'clock, at which time I can get the abstract and have it examined." The common sense of this letter was that the writer had not accepted, and would not accept if he did not find the title perfect. In Coffin v. Portland (C. C.) 43 Fed. 411, relating to an attempted sale of bonds, the letter said: "We will take your * * * bonds * * * at par, you to furnish us written opinion of your city attorney as to legality of bonds, certified copy of council proceedings and ordinance, certified statement of your city debts, assessed value of your taxables, probable real value, the amount of your debt, and your present approximate population." After putting upon its minutes an acceptance of this proposition to purchase, the council passed a resolution rescinding what the resolution called a contract, and accepted the proposition of another person for the same bonds. The court says in its opinion: "It is more reasonable to regard the proposition of the plaintiffs in this respect as being conditional, and the acceptance of it as being upon the same condition. This being so, the plaintiffs, of course, have no right of action."

What is meant by this is that there had not been, in fact, any proposition to buy, or acceptance of such proposition. The plaintiffs were simply considering the advisability of purchasing, and, in the exercise of prudence, desired to examine all the proceedings relating to the issue before making an unqualified proposition to buy. There is nothing in that case that seems to have any bearing upon the question under consideration here.

Three cases referred to in one of the briefs for appellee are, in all material respects, alike. They are Robinson v. Weller (Ga.) 8 S. E. 449; Northwestern Iron Co. v. Meade, 94 Am. Dec. 557; and Egger v. Nesbitt (Mo.) 27 S. W. 385, 43 Am. St. Rep. 596. They enunciate the proposition that an acceptance of an offer to sell land, but fixing a different place for the delivery of the deed and payment of the money than the residence of the offerer, or the place named in the offer, is not an unconditional acceptance, so as to bind the seller. This is asserted by several cases. Gilbert v. Baxter, 71 Iowa, 327, 32 N. W. 364; Langellier v. Schaefer, 36 Minn. 361, 31 N. W. 690. But they are all cases arising upon loose, informal correspondence, making it necessary to look to the whole of each paper to ascertain the true meaning and intent of the parties. None of the letters relied upon as acceptances said an offer was accepted in accordance with its terms, or that the property would be taken according to the terms of the letter of proposal. In none of them was the word "request" used, after language of unequivocal and definite acceptance, as in this case. In Robinson v. Weller the reply said: "Offer accepted. Money ready; send deeds at once." In N. W. Iron Co. v. Meade, the letter said: "If this is the very best offer you can make, you may properly execute the within deed," etc. In Egger v. Nesbitt the reply said: "I will accept your proposition, with the understanding that you will deliver to me all papers," etc. Owing to the distinctions pointed out, these precedents are not regarded as applicable or controlling in the present case.

Moreover, the reasoning in some of these cases is not entirely satisfactory. Nor does it seem to accord with principles announced in Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249. If a man says, "I accept your offer," that makes a contract. It assents to all the terms of the offer. What more is necessary? There is a complete aggregatio mentium. The acceptance conforms to the offer in every particular. How can a mere request, relating not to the making of the contract, but to its performance, be deemed to change it? Would the acceptor be permitted to excuse himself from performance on the ground of such request? No precedent of that kind has been found. They are all cases in which the proposer, desiring to escape from the consequences of his offer, because somebody else has proposed a higher price than the first asked, seeks to repudiate the transaction and sell to the other party. Property rights are sacred, and should be well guarded by the law; but, when a man has deliberately made a fair contract of sale, he ought not to be permitted to avoid it on some flimsy pretext, in order to avail himself of a better bargain. Time and place of payment, when not mentioned in an accepted offer, are fixed by law, and are matters of performance, carrying out the contract—a thing wholly distinct and separate from the making of the agreement. If, contemporaneously with or subsequent to the making of the contract, either party suggest, request, or propose a time, place, or mode of performance different from that agreed upon, that does not of itself effect such change, nor does it cause a breach, giving right of action or rescission to the other party. Swiger v. Hayman et al. (decided at this term) 48 S. E. 839. Either can compel the other to perform the contract as made. He may ignore the suggested, requested, or proposed alteration or deviation from the contract, as to the performance thereof. Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249. But if the suggested departure in performance is not accompanied by a declaration of unqualified and unconditional acceptance of the offer, it would be otherwise, of course. Some of the cases here referred to disclosed such acceptance, and others did not. The former do not harmonize with the principles enunciated by this court, and the latter do.

As much weight is accorded to the use of the word "request" here, and some of the books say that, if a request for a modification be made, it is deemed a rejection of the proposal, a case illustrating this rule will be noticed. It is Burmester & Co. v. Phillips & Co. (C. C.) 25 Fed. 805. Burmester & Co., of Charleston, S. C., on the 14th day of March, 1885, wrote Phillips & Co., of Fredericksburg, Va., as follows: "On receipt of letter [you] can ship us a cargo of 10 or 15,000 bushels choice dry Rappahannock white corn, at 51 cents, free on board, freight 7 cents a bushel." Phillips & Co. did not have the corn, but on the 16th of the same month they replied that they were endeavoring to get it. On the 20th they wrote that they could get it at the price, and were then endeavoring to secure a vessel to carry it at seven cents. On March 23d, Burmester & Co. wrote that they hoped Phillips & Co. would succeed in getting a vessel promptly, and gave some directions about ship's papers. On the 30th Phillips & Co. wrote that they hoped to succeed in getting a vessel, and, if so, would observe the direction about ship's papers. On April 4th Phillips & Co. notified Burmester & Co. by wire that they had succeeded in getting a vessel, and that as soon as she arrived at the landing they would advise, and that they would send a letter giving particulars. To this Burmester & Co. replied by letter of April 4th that they were awaiting letter's arrival as to particulars. On April 9th Phillips & Co. reported that the vessel had arrived, and would be ready to receive the cargo on the following Saturday, and that they would draw for the cargo at sight, without grace, etc. To this Burmester & Co. made no reply. On April 11th Phillips & Co. telegraphed as follows: "Not hearing from you, we have resold the cargo of corn." Burmester & Co. telegraphed back that they had not canceled the order, and would expect cargo as ordered. Burmester & Co. afterwards sued, and the court held as follows: "The letter and telegram of the 4th of April were a new proposal, and that the failure of the Charleston house to answer before the 11th prevented the meeting of minds necessary to a contract, so that there was no contract, and defendants were at liberty to resell." In the opinion the court applied general principles, expressed as follows: "If a condition be affixed by the party to whom the offer is made, or any modification or change in the offer be requested, this constitutes, in law, a rejection of the offer, and a new proposal, equally ineffectual to complete the contract until assented to by the first proposer." In the light of the facts in that case as above stated, the proposition is sound and applicable. Instead of accepting Burmester & Co.'s proposition for an immediate shipment, Phillips & Co. announced their inability to do so, and made a counter proposition to obtain and ship the corn later. This was a request for a new contract, different from the one first proposed. The court held that to be a rejection of the first proposition. It being a new proposal on the part of Phillips & Co., not accepted by Burmester & Co., but treated with silence, there was no contract between the parties. There was no pretense of an acceptance of the original proposal of purchase.

This somewhat lengthy review of the authorities bearing upon the question seems to establish the following propositions: First, a request for a change or modification of a proposed contract, made before an acceptance thereof, amounts to a rejection of it; second, a mere inquiry as to whether the proposer will alter or modify its terms, made before acceptance or rejection, does not amount to a rejection, and, if the offer be not withdrawn before acceptance made within a reasonable time, the offer becomes a binding contract; third, a request, suggestion, or proposal of alteration or modification, made after unconditional acceptance, and not assented to by the opposite party, does not affect the contract put in force and effect by the acceptance, nor amount to a breach thereof, giving right of rescission; fourth, acceptance of a formal and carefully prepared option of sale of land, within the time by it allowed, and according to its terms, although accompanied by a request for a departure from its terms as to the time and place of performance, is an unconditional acceptance, and converts the option into an executory contract of sale, provided the request be not so worded as to limit or qualify the acceptance.

The bill alleges a verbal acceptance of both options at the time of delivery of the acceptance in writing, and a verbal agreement extending the time of performance until June 28th. These allegations have provoked a good deal of argument on the subject of extensions of time of performance and alterations of written contracts by parol agreement. The conclusion above indicated renders it unnecessary to go into these questions, or to examine the authorities cited as bearing upon them.

Our conclusion is that the acceptance in writing of the second proposal is unconditional, and converts the proposal into a binding contract. The other option does not require the acceptance to be in writing. It was verbally accepted, and that is sufficient, when the option does not require a written acceptance. Weaver v. Burr, 31 W. Va. 736, 8 S. E. 743, 3 L. R. A. 94; Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249; Barrett v. McAllister, 33 W. Va. 745, 11 S. E. 220; Creigh v. Boggs, 19 W. Va. 240; Capehart v. Hale, 6 W. Va. 547.

For the foregoing reasons, the decree complained of is reversed, the demurrer overruled, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings.

(108 Va. 205)

VIRGINIA & S. W. RY. CO. v. BAILEY.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1904.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—RAILROADS—FIREMAN—INJURIES—COUPLING CARS—VICE PRINCIPAL—FELLOW SERVANT—ACTIONS—PLEADING—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—MODIFICATION—VERDICT—APPEAL—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

1. In an action for injuries, error in overruling an objection to an answer was not prejudicial where the witness was afterwards permitted to testify to the same fact without objection.

2. In an action for injuries to a railroad fireman, refusal to permit defendant to prove that it was not the duty of a conductor to give his brakeman any detailed instructions to go to the end of the cars to which a coupling was to be made was cured by an instruction that the conductor was entitled to presume that his brakeman was acquainted with the customary method of performing his duties, and that it was not the conductor's duty to give the brakeman special instructions with reference thereto.

3. Where, in an action for injuries to a railroad fireman, the negligence charged with reference to the conductor consisted in his permitting the engine to approach cars to which coupling was to be made at a dangerous speed, and that it was his duty to have such knowledge of their situation as would have enabled him to make the coupling with safety, a question asked of a witness as to whether it would not be the duty of the conductor "to know the exact spot at which the cars had been left to which he was going back to couple" was properly disallowed.

4. Where damages were claimed for permanent injuries sustained, mortality tables were admissible to show plaintiff's expectancy.

5. In an action for injuries to a fireman by being thrown from his engine by the impact in making a coupling, it was proper to modify an instruction that, if it was the duty of the brakeman to go with his lantern to the end of the car to which the engine was about to couple, and that he failed to go to the end of the car, and that the accident to plaintiff resulted "solely" from such failure of the brakeman, the jury should find for the defendant, was properly modified by the insertion of the word quoted, where it was also claimed, and the evidence tended to prove, negligence on the part of the conductor of the train as the proximate cause of the injury; the latter being a vice principal as to the fireman, and not his fellow servant, as was the brakeman.

6. Where the negligence of the conductor of a freight train, who stood in the relation of a vice principal to the fireman, in connection with the negligence of a brakeman, who was the fireman's fellow servant, caused the latter's injury, the railroad was liable therefor as though it alone was blamable.

7. In an action for injuries to a fireman by being thrown from his cab by an impact in coupling cars, an instruction that, if it was the conductor's duty to know the location of the cars he was about to couple to, and he did not know such location, yet if, under the circumstances, the conductor believed, and was entitled to believe, that the brakeman would be with his lantern at the end of the car to which it was expected to couple, and, if the brakeman had been there, the accident would not have happened, plaintiff could not recover, was properly refused, as predicated on the concurring negligence of the conductor, a vice principal, and of the brakeman, a fellow servant.

8. In an action for injuries to a fireman by being thrown from his car by the impact in coupling cars, evidence held to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.

9. An objection that the declaration in an action for injuries to a servant was insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff on the ground that the allegations of negligence were not sufficiently specific cannot be made for the first time on appeal.

Error to Corporation Court of Bristol.

Action by D. H. Bailey against the Virginia & Southwestern Railway Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

The instructions referred to in the opinion as given are as follows:

On the part of plaintiff: "(1) The court instructs the jury that when a person enters the employ of a railroad company as fireman he only assumes the ordinary and usual risks that are incident to such employment.

"(2) The court further instructs the jury that the conductor in charge of the train upon which plaintiff was at the time he was injured was a superior officer. Therefore all other employees on said train were subject to his orders.

"(3) The court instructs the jury that, if they should find for the plaintiff, they may, in estimating damages, take into consideration the following: The physical and mental suffering of plaintiff received from his injury, his loss of wages for the time during which he was prevented by said injuries from working, proper compensation for his being unable because of said injuries to follow such a calling or business as he could otherwise have followed, and for moneys expended by plaintiff or for which he is obligated or indebted for medical and surgical attention, medicines, nursing, etc.

"(4) The court further instructs the jury that if they find for the plaintiff they may, in estimating his damages, if they believe his injuries permanent, also take into consideration the plaintiff's probable duration of life, and to show this they may take into consideration the standard mortality tables as showing the probable duration of plaintiff's life under all the proof in this case, and they may also consider the fact that plaintiff is engaged in railroad service, a more hazardous occupation than ordinary vocations of life.

"(5) The court instructs the jury that the plaintiff had a right to presume that the conductor of defendant company would discharge his duties in a careful manner, and in the usual and ordinary way."

On the part of defendant the court gave the following instructions:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that negligence on the part of the defendant cannot be presumed in this case; that it must be shown by the plaintiff by preponderance of testimony, otherwise the plaintiff cannot recover.

"(2) A servant entering the employment of a master assumes such risks as are ordinarily incident to the employment from causes open and obvious, the dangerous character of which he has had the opportunity to observe; and he must exercise reasonable care and caution for his own safety while engaged in the master's service.

"(3) The court instructs the jury that the burden of proving negligence is upon the plaintiff, and that negligence must be proved by affirmative evidence, which must show more than a probability of a negligent act; that a verdict cannot be found upon a mere conjecture; and that there must be affirmative and preponderating proof that the injury here sued for would not have occurred except for the negligent breach of some duty which the defendant owed to the plaintiff.

"(4) The court instructs the jury that if they should believe from the evidence that the injury complained of resulted to the plaintiff as a mere accident resulting from a misunderstanding of signal lights, and not resulting from negligence or fault on the part of the defendant or its conductor, they must find for the defendant, and this although they may believe the plaintiff also was free from fault.

"(5) (As modified.) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that it was the duty of W. B. Campbell, the brakeman, under the circumstances in this case, to have gone with his lantern to the end of the car to which the engine was going to couple, and that he failed to go to the end of said car, and that the accident to plaintiff resulted 'solely' from such failure of said brakeman to perform such duty, they will find for the defendant.

"And so, likewise, if they believe from the evidence that said brakeman could have prevented said accident by giving a signal to the approaching train to slow down or stop, and that, under the circumstances in this case, it was his duty to have given such signal, and that he failed to give such signal, and that the accident complained of was 'solely' the result of such failure, they will find for the defendant.

"(6) The jury are further instructed that the conductor in this case had the right to presume that his brakeman Campbell was acquainted with the usual and customary method of performing his duties, and it was not the duty of said conductor to give him special instructions with reference thereto.

"(7) The court further instructs the jury that, although they may believe from the evidence that the defendant was guilty of negligence, yet if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was also guilty of negligence, and that, but for the negligence of the latter, the accident would probably not have occurred, they will find for the defendant."

The court, on its own motion, charged:

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that in attempting to make the coupling at the time of the accident the engine approached and struck the cars at a greater rate of speed than reasonably safe and proper, and that by reason thereof the plaintiff, without fault on his part, was thrown from his place and injured, and they shall further believe the accident was caused by the negligence of Conductor Brown, or by the concurrent negligence of Conductor Brown and Brakeman Campbell, they shall find for the plaintiff; and, on the other hand, if they believe from the evidence that the accident was caused solely by the negligence of Brakeman Campbell, he is a fellow servant of the plaintiff, and there can be no recovery."

And the court also gave to the jury the instructions above set out and asked for by the defendant, numbered, respectively, 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, and 7, and refused to give instruction No. 8 asked for by defendant, and gave instruction No. 5 asked for by defendant, after having modified the same by inserting the word "solely" in the first paragraph thereof between the words "plaintiff resulted" and the words "from such failure," and by inserting the word "solely" in the second paragraph thereof after the words "complained of was" and before the words "the result of such failure."

Peters & Lavinder, A. H. Blanchard, and Wm. F. Rhea, for plaintiff in error. Bullitt & Kelly and D. D. Hull, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. D. H. Bailey, the plaintiff in the court below, was a locomotive fireman in the freight train service of the Virginia & Southwestern Railway Company. On the 16th day of April, 1908, the crew to which he belonged started from Bristol to Big Stone Gap, and arrived at Clinchport, an intermediate point, some time during the night of that day. At Clinchport the crew received orders to shift some cars which were standing on a siding. The engine and tender were accordingly cut loose from the train at the depot, and all of the crew except the flagman went with the engine to do the shifting.

The switch is situated several hundred yards west of the depot, and at the point of the switch there is a railroad bridge, on the main line, over Stock creek. This bridge is 263 feet long. Its eastern end is about 777 feet from the depot, and its western end is 482 feet from the point of the switch. The total distance from the depot to the switch is 1,522 feet. The bridge is about 28 feet high at its highest point. Upon this switch there was a train of cars, about 20 in number. The purpose of the switching to be done by the crew was to change the position of these cars so as to place one of them, which stood near the west end of the cars, on the switch track, to the rear, or east, end, in position to be loaded. To accomplish this change of position, all the cars on the switch had to be moved and placed on the main line near the depot, and then replaced on the siding.

After placing the car which was to be set on the rear end of the switch next to the engine, the crew proceeded to remove the remaining cars from the switch, and put them down on the main line below the point of the switch. From the point of the switch on the main line to the other end of the switch was a downgrade, so that all of the cars could not be brought out at once, but several pulls had to be taken at them. At first about eight or ten cars were brought out and placed on the main line. Conductor Brown was actively engaged, taking the full part of a trainman, while this was being done, and it appears that he attended to opening and shutting the switch, while Brakeman Campbell rode on the cars and uncoupled them on the main line, cutting them off on this first pull between the car next to the engine and the balance of the cars. Then, holding on to the car next to the engine, they went back into the switch, and brought out another set of cars, which were pushed down on the main line below the switch, Campbell again cutting them off so as to leave the car next to the engine still coupled thereto. When they had cleared the switch, they dropped the car which they had been holding on to down on the far end of the switch track, and then proceeded to replace the other cars back on the siding. After they had replaced all the cars except those first brought out, which would consequently be the last put in, just before starting back with the engine and tender from the switch track for this last pull from the main line, a conversation occurred between Brown and Campbell, as to the substance of which there is a difference between them, and which was not heard by the engineer or fireman. Brown says that he either told Campbell, or that Campbell suggested to him, that he (Campbell) would go across to the cars on the main line if Brown would take the engine around, and that the two reached this understanding. Campbell says that he told Brown he would go across the bridge-way (a foot bridge across Stock creek between the main line and the switch) to the main line, and see if all the cars standing there were coupled together, and that this understanding was reached between them. At any rate, Campbell did go across to the main line, and Brown did cut the engine and tender loose, go up to the switch, out on the main line, and back down on the main line with the engine and tender for the last draft of cars. Campbell, who had ridden the cars, had cut the engine and one car loose when the first draft had been placed on the main line. In cutting them off it so happened that they were left partly on and partly off of the bridge, two gondola cars and half of a box car projecting out on the bridge, and the balance of the draft coupled thereto standing east of the bridge. As Brown went back for the last draft of cars, he rode on the rear end of the tender, for the purpose of giving the engineer signals for the coupling, and, as he claims, expected to find Campbell at the end of the cars with his light. He saw Campbell's light at the end of the bridge, and did not signal the engineer to slow down until he got close enough to see the end of the gondola by the light which he himself carried in his hand; in other words, he reached the end of the cars in a shorter distance by the length of two gondolas and half a box car than he expected. The engineer, in moving the engine, was being guided by the signals given him from Brown's lamp, and was also being influenced in the speed at which he was running by the position of Campbell's light, although his statements and Brown's upon this subject do not entirely correspond. It seems, however, that the cars were closer to the engine and tender than either Brown or the engineer supposed, and, notwithstanding Brown's signal to the engineer immediately upon discovering them, the coupling was made at a greater rate of speed than would have been used had they known the exact location. The automatic coupling was made successfully, nothing was broken, and neither the brakeman, conductor, nor engineer thought that anything very unusual had happened. The plaintiff testifies, however, that he was standing on his side of the engine, looking for signals, and getting ready to fire his engine, and not expecting the coupling to be made; and that when the engine and cars came together he was knocked out of the engine, and fell to the bottom of the bridge, landing in the creek, and sustaining severe injuries. The fact that he had fallen was not discovered by any of the crew until they had gone back over the switch with the last draft of cars.

From this statement of facts it will be seen that the real point in controversy is whether or not Brown, the conductor, knew, or ought to have known, the position of the cars to which he was to couple the engine, and whether or not the rate of speed at which the engine was moving under his direction was such as to constitute negligence.

The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff, which the court refused to set aside, and, the defendant in the court below (plaintiff in error here), the Virginia & Southwestern Railway Company, having obtained a writ of error, assigns the following grounds for the reversal of that judgment:

The plaintiff was asked, as a witness in his own behalf:

"Q. If the coupling had been made in the usual or ordinary way, would you or would you not have been thrown from the cab?"

"A. No, sir; if they had been coupled in the right manner, I would not have been thrown out."

To this question and answer there was a general objection, which the court overruled. It is claimed in the petition that, while the objections relied upon do not appear in the record, the question and answer were wholly inadmissible for any purpose.

It may be that the question is obnoxious to the objection that it is a leading one, and that the answer expresses the opinion of the witness, and not a fact. Without deciding whether or not either of these objections is well taken, or whether, in any event, it would constitute reversible error, we shall content ourselves with calling attention to the fact that at another point in the testimony of the plaintiff this question was asked him:

"Q. How did they throw you?"

"A. I went out head foremost. It was an unusual lick. If it had been hit by a lick that cars ought to be coupled, it wouldn't have thrown me. I had hold, and was looking out for it, and always did look out for anything like that when we was shifting."

This question and answer were not objected to, so that, if the error under consideration was sustained, there would still be evidence in the record covering the identical point to which no objection was made.

Objection is also made to the ruling of the court refusing to allow the plaintiff in error to prove by the witness Brown that it was not his duty, as conductor, to give his brakeman, Campbell, any detailed instruction about going to the end of the cars to which the coupling in question was to be made; and a like offer of proof which occurs in the testimony of the witness McCue, which was also rejected by the court.

If the refusal to permit plaintiff in error to introduce the evidence referred to was erroneous, the error was cured by instruction 6 given at the instance of plaintiff in error, in which the court told the jury that the conductor had the right to presume that his brakeman, Campbell, was acquainted with the usual and customary method of performing his duties, and it was not the duty of the conductor to give him special instructions with reference thereto. The plaintiff in error could not have been prejudiced by the ruling of the court excluding evidence tending to show that it was not the duty of the conductor to do a particular act, when the point was covered by an instruction of the court which states that, as a matter of law, no such duty devolved upon him. We refrain from any expression of opinion upon either ruling of the court involved in this assignment of error, except to observe that in the result there was clearly no prejudice to the plaintiff in error.

Another objection taken to the exclusion of testimony is to the refusal of the court to permit McCue, "an experienced railroad man," to prove that it was not the duty of the conductor to know exactly where the cars were left that were being shifted.

There had been direct evidence that it was the duty of the conductor to know. It was proved that the company has no rule upon the subject; and McCue was expected to testify from his general information with respect to the operation of other roads. He was asked this question: "Where, as in this case, the conductor was attending to the shifting of the cars and also to the switching, would it or not be his duty to know the exact place where the cars had been left to which he was going back to couple? To which question and any answer thereto the plaintiff, by counsel, objected, and the court sustained said objection, and refused to allow the witness to answer. Thereupon, without any distinct avowal by counsel for defendant, the court understood from the question and general drift of the examination that, if permitted to do so, the defendant would prove by the said witness McCue that in general railroad practice it would not be necessary or incumbent upon the conductor to give specific directions to the brakeman to go with his light to stand at the end of the train for the purpose of assisting in making the coupling, but that, according to general railroad rules and practice, it would be considered by the conductor that the brakeman would know that it was his duty to go to the end of the cars with his light, without being specifically told so to do; and that where, as in this case, the conductor was attending to the shifting of the cars and also to the switching, it would not be his duty to know the exact spot where the cars had been left to which he was going back to couple. But the court, notwithstanding said statement of counsel, refused to allow the said witness to answer the above questions, and refused to allow the defendant to prove the facts set forth in the above statement of counsel."

So much of this exception No. 3 as refers to the duty of the conductor to give specific directions to the brakeman has already been sufficiently disposed of in discussing the assignment of error with reference to the question asked Conductor Brown; and as to so much of it as has reference to the duty of the conductor to know the exact place where the cars had been left, it is to be observed that the gravamen of the charge of negligence upon the part of the conductor is that he permitted the engine to approach at a dangerous speed the cars to which the coupling was to be made, and that it was his duty to know, not the exact position of those cars, but to have such a reasonable knowledge of their situation as would have enabled him to make the coupling with safety. The question in terms asks the witness, would it not be the duty of the conductor "to know the exact spot at which the cars had been left to which he was going back to couple?" To this question the witness would have made the categorical answer that "it was not his duty to know the exact spot"; an answer which would have been or might have been absolutely true as a response to the question in the precise terms in which it was propounded, and yet have been utterly misleading.

The action of the court in allowing the witness Skeen to testify as to the expectancy of life of a man of the age of defendant in error, and in allowing the introduction before the jury of certain mortality tables, is assigned as error.

The expectation of life of the defendant in error was one of the factors to be considered by the jury in ascertaining the compensation to be given him for a permanent injury. The expectation of life is, of course, incapable of exact ascertainment. All that can be done is to place before the jury the best evidence obtainable, to be considered by them under the direction of the court. Tables of mortality are usually esteemed the safest guides upon the subject, to be taken by the jury and weighed along with other facts and circumstances applicable to the expectation of the particular life under consideration. It is the best method of dealing with the subject of which the nature of the case admits.

The instructions asked for by the plaintiff and given by the court (see copy by Reporter) correctly state the law. Indeed, no objection is urged to any of them except No.

4, which relates to the measure of damages, and which has been sufficiently disposed of in dealing with the admissibility of the testimony of the witness Skeen.

The defendant asked for several instructions, all of which were given except No. 8. Nos. 5 and 6, however, were modified by the court. As originally asked, No. 5 was in the words following:

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that it was the duty of W. R. Campbell, the brakeman, under the circumstances in this case, to have gone with his lantern to the end of the car to which the engine was going to couple, and that he failed to go to the end of said car, and that the accident to plaintiff resulted from such failure of said brakeman to perform such duty, they will find for the defendant."

The modification consisted in inserting the word "solely" after the word "resulted," so as to make it read: If "the accident to plaintiff resulted solely from such failure of said brakeman to perform such duty, they will find for the defendant."

The purpose of the amendment is obvious. There was evidence tending to prove negligence upon the part of the conductor, who was not the fellow servant of the defendant in error, but was, as to him, the vice principal. There was evidence tending to prove negligence upon the part of Campbell, the brakeman, who was the fellow servant of defendant in error. If, therefore, the negligent act which caused the injury was due solely to the misconduct of the fellow servant, the railroad company was not responsible; but if the misconduct of the vice principal entered into and constituted a part of the negligent act which caused the injury, then the courts will not undertake to distribute the fault, but will hold the railroad company responsible as though it alone were guilty. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Nuckol's Adm'r, 91 Va. 193, 21 S. E. 342.

The same principle controls the amendment introduced by the court in the second branch of this instruction, and we are of opinion that the amendments made by the court were proper, and this assignment of error is overruled.

The court also, of its own motion, gave an instruction which we think is, under the evidence in this case, plainly right, and the objection to which is, therefore, overruled.

This brings us to the consideration of instruction No. 8 asked for by the defendant, and refused by the court. It is as follows:

"The jury are further instructed that, although they may believe from the evidence that it was the duty of Conductor Brown to know the location of the cars that he was going back to couple to, and that he neglected this duty, and did not know the location thereof, yet if they believe from the evidence that said conductor believed, and, under all the circumstances of this case, had the right to believe, that Campbell, the brakeman, would be, with his lantern, at the end of the car to which they expected to couple, and further believed that, if said Campbell had been at the end of said car with said lantern, the accident would not have occurred, they will find for the defendant."

This instruction is predicated upon the concession that it was the duty of Conductor Brown to know the location of the cars he was going to couple to, and that he neglected this duty, and rests the defense upon the ground that the fellow servant was guilty of negligence.

As we have already seen, if Brown, who was the vice principal, was guilty of a fault which entered into and constituted a part of the negligence which resulted in the injury of the plaintiff, then the railroad company is responsible, although Campbell, the brakeman, who was a fellow servant, was also in fault; the court in such cases holding that, where injury to a servant has been caused by the fault of a fellow servant concurring with the negligence of the master, the latter is liable as though he only was at fault. The fault of this instruction is that it is predicated upon the concurring negligence of the conductor, who was the vice principal of the master, and of a fellow servant.

There was a motion to set the verdict aside as contrary to the evidence, which was properly overruled. The testimony, considered as upon a demurrer to evidence, establishes the negligence of the plaintiff in error as being the proximate cause of defendant in error's injury.

The motion in arrest of judgment was also properly overruled.

There was no demurrer to the declaration, and we are not prepared to say that it could have been adjudged insufficient had a demurrer been interposed. If the declaration was less specific in its allegations of negligence than it should have been, we are still of opinion that a judgment upon it should not be arrested. Concede that the evidence went beyond the averments of the declaration, yet it is apparent that the plaintiff in error has suffered no prejudice upon this account, but that it presented its entire case to the jury. The objection should have been made by the defendant when the infirmity, if it exists, was disclosed. It should not have waited until a verdict had been rendered. If the objection had been made during the trial, the court, if it considered that substantial justice would have been promoted, and that the opposite party would not have been prejudiced thereby, would have allowed the pleadings to be amended on such terms as it deemed reasonable. Code 1887, § 3384 [2 Code 1904, p. 1792]. The observations of Judge Buchanan in the case of Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin's Adm'r, 93 Va. 801, 22 S. E. 869, are equally applicable here: "If there was such a variance as that complained of, the objection ought to have been made in the trial court, either by objecting to the evidence when offered or by a motion to exclude after the evidence had been received. Section 3384 of the Code was enacted to obviate the difficulties which frequently arise after a trial has been commenced, when it appears that there is a variance between the evidence and allegations in the pleadings, by allowing the pleadings to be amended upon such terms as to continuance and costs as the court may deem reasonable, or by directing the jury to find the facts; and after such finding, if the court be of opinion that the variance was such as could not have prejudiced the opposite party, it gives judgment according to the right of the case.

"The objection now made for the first time should have been made in the court below, so that the plaintiff in that court might have had an opportunity to have moved the court to have adopted the one or the other of the courses provided by the statute. Having failed to do this, we do not think that the question can be raised here for the first time; and this assignment of error must be overruled."

In that case it appears that the objection was made for the first time in this court, while in the case before us it was made in arrest of judgment. The difference is one of degree, rather than of kind. The point is that it should have been made, in the language of Judge Buchanan, "when the evidence was offered, or by a motion to exclude after the evidence had been received." It is manifest that the plaintiff in error has suffered no prejudice in the trial court, that it made a full defense, and that the judgment has been rendered according to the very right of the case.

We are of opinion that there is no error in the record for which the judgment should be reversed.

(108 Va. 289)

NORFOLK & P. BELT LINE R. CO. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 1, 1904.)

RAILROADS—STATE CORPORATION COMMISSION—FIXING OF CHARGES—CHARGES FOR PLACING CARS ON SCALES—REVIEW—ORDER OF COMMISSION—AMOUNT OF THE RATE FIXED—PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE.

1. Const. § 156, subsec. "b." declares that the State Corporation Commission shall have the power of regulating all transportation companies in relation to the performance of their public duties and charges therefor, and that the commission shall enforce such rates as may be reasonable. A transportation company, the business of which consisted of conducting a switch line and handling cars to and from industries with which it had established switching connections, observed the usual custom of placing cars in position to be weighed on consignees' or shippers' individual track scales, which scale service was necessary to the due delivery of goods. Held, that the Corporation Commission had authority to fix the charges for placing the cars in position on such scales.

2. Under Const. § 156, subsec. "f," providing that the action of the State Corporation Commission shall be regarded as prima facie just and correct, on appeal from an order fixing the charge which a transportation corporation might make for placing cars to be weighed on consignees' or shippers' individual track scales the charges fixed were prima facie correct, and the finding entitled to peculiar weight.

Appeal from State Corporation Commission.

Appeal by the Norfolk & Portsmouth Belt Line Railroad Company from the order of the State Corporation Commission fixing the charge for placing cars in position to be weighed on consignees' or shippers' individual track scales. Order affirmed.

Thos. H. Willcox, for appellant. W. A. Anderson, Atty. Gen., and A. C. Braxton, for the Commonwealth.

WHITTLE, J. This is an appeal from an order of the State Corporation Commission fixing the charge for placing cars in position to be weighed on consignees' or shippers' individual track scales, located on sidings leading to industries along the line of appellant's railroad, at 25 cents per car for each car, loaded or empty, so placed in position and weighed.

Appellant is a public service corporation, duly incorporated by the Legislature of Virginia, and authorized to acquire land and construct, maintain, and operate a railroad with one or more tracks from any point on the line of the Norfolk & Carolina Railroad Company at or near Pinner's Point, to some point on the line of the Norfolk & Western Railway Company between the eastern and southern branches of Elizabeth river. The road is what is known as a "switching line," and its business consists of handling cars along its route from the terminus of one railroad to the terminus of another, and to and from the various industries with which it has established switching connections. For this service it receives the uniform compensation of $1.50 for each loaded car hauled by it, without regard to the length of the haul, and nothing for empty cars.

The character of the service which is the subject of this investigation can be best illustrated by that rendered by the railroad company for the F. S. Royster Company, the owners of an extensive fertilizer manufacturing plant, whose property adjoins the belt line.

By agreement with the guano company, appellant, when its road was in course of construction, put in a number of sidings, with necessary switching facilities, connecting the company's buildings with the railroad. A track scale was installed on one of these sidings for the purpose of weighing such of the cars consigned to the company as might be necessary in the proper conduct of their business. The railroad's part in the performance of that service is to switch the car to be weighed on the scale track, push it on the scale with its engine, and uncouple it. The sworn weighmaster of the guano company takes the weight of the car, which is then pushed off the scales by the next car to be weighed, and that process is repeated until all are weighed. When unloaded, the empty cars, by a reverse course, are in turn pulled on the scales and weighed, and the difference between the weights of the loaded and empty car gives the weight of its lading. The goods of the guano company are handled in car-load lots, and about 6,000 cars are annually delivered by the railroad company upon their sidings.

Until about one year before the institution of these proceedings, in delivering cars consigned to customers the railroad company imposed a charge of 15 cents for each car placed on the scales, whether loaded or empty, which charge was afterwards increased to 50 cents per car, whereupon complaints were made to the State Corporation Commission by shippers and consignees owning private sidings connected with the railroad that the increased charge was unreasonable and unjust. The proceedings instituted by the commission upon these complaints resulted in the order now under review, which, as remarked, reduced the rate from 50 cents to 25 cents per car.

To this ruling of the commission, appellant assigns two grounds of error:

First. It is insisted that placing cars on private track scales in position to be weighed is a matter of private contract, involving a nonpublic service, which the State Corporation Commission cannot require a railroad company to perform for customers having switching connections with the road; and therefore cannot fix the charges therefor; and Second. That, even if the commission has jurisdiction over the subject, the rate of compensation fixed by it is unreasonable and unjust.

The principle upon which the state assumes authority to control and regulate the affairs of railroads and other public service corporations rests largely upon the doctrine of agency. Such corporations are founded by the Legislature for public purposes, and are clothed with authority, subject to state regulation and control, to exercise important governmental functions. By their charters they are granted privileges which may not be exercised by private persons, whether individuals or corporations, but always with the reservation, express or implied, that such privileges are subject to reasonable governmental control. Cal. v. Pac. R. R. Co., 127 U. S. 40, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150. This right of control is part of the police power of the state.

As was said by this court in the City of

Petersburg v. Petersburg Aqueduct Co., 102 Va. 654, 47 S. E. 848: "Bearing in mind the distinction between public and private corporations in the matter of public control—that the former are regarded as instrumentalities of the state, and liable to visitation and regulation, while the charters of the latter are contracts within the meaning of the contract clauses of the state and federal Constitutions, the obligation of which, in the sense of those clauses, cannot be impaired, * * * nevertheless the police power of the state is a governmental function, the exercise of which neither the Legislature nor any subordinate agency thereof upon which part of its authority may have been conferred can alienate or surrender by grant, contract, or other delegation. Richmond, etc., Co. v. Richmond, 28 Grat. 83; s. c. 96 U. S. 521, 24 L. Ed. 734; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. Ed. 989; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. Ed. 1079; Butchers' Union Slaughter-House, etc., Co. v. Crescent City Live Stock Landing, etc., Co., 111 U. S. 746, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 32 L. Ed. 253. * * * It follows, as a necessary consequence from the foregoing statement of the law, that there is an implied reservation of the police power of the state in every public charter granted by the Legislature."

Governmental powers are conferred upon the state primarily by the people, in trust for the benefit of all of its citizens; and whether exercised by the government directly through its own officials, or indirectly through the agency of corporations chartered by the state, must be exercised impartially, and without discrimination, for the benefit of all the people. This is the basic principle upon which our government is founded, and the philosophy of the constitutional provision securing to every one the "equal protection of the law."

"A franchise is a right, privilege, or power of public concern, which ought not to be exercised by private individuals at their will and pleasure, but should be reserved for public control and administration, either by the government directly or by public agents acting under such conditions and regulations as the government may impose in the public interest." Cal. v. Pac. R. R. Co., supra.

Railroads are public highways, and in this age of advanced civilization are as essential to the life of the state as ordinary roads and streets are to the existence of rural and urban communities. The very existence of public corporations, as well as their power to exact fares and freights, is derived from the state; and it cannot be deprived of its superintending power over them. Cherokee Nation v. Kansas R. R. Co., 135 U. S. 637, 10 Sup. Ct. 965, 34 L. Ed. 295; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 698, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 544,

18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819; Wis., etc., Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 297, 21 Sup. Ct. 115, 45 L. Ed. 194.

In Lake Shore, etc., R. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 302, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 43 L. Ed. 702, it was said: "In the recent case of Jones v. Brim, 185 U. S. 180, 17 Sup. Ct. 282, 41 L. Ed. 677, it was adjudged that embraced within the police power of the state was the establishment, maintenance, and control of public highways there, and under such power reasonable regulations incident to the right to establish and maintain such highways could be established by the state."

In this commonwealth the State Corporation Commission, created by constitutional authority, is the instrumentality through which the state exercises its governmental powers for the regulation and control of public service corporations. For that purpose it has been clothed with legislative, judicial, and executive powers. Subsection "b" of section 156 of the Constitution declares that "the commission shall have the power, and be charged with the duty, of supervising, regulating and controlling all transportation and transmission companies doing business in this state, in all matters relating to the performance of their public duties and their charges therefor, and of correcting abuses therein by such companies; and to that end the commission shall from time to time prescribe, and enforce against such companies, in the manner hereinafter authorized, such rates, charges, classifications of traffic, and rules and regulations, and shall require them to establish and maintain all such public service facilities and conveniences, as may be reasonable and just, which said rates, charges, classifications, rules, regulations and requirements the commission may from time to time alter and amend."

It is quite clear that the foregoing provision affords ample authority for the action of the commission in this case, provided the service in question fairly falls within the category of a public service in the meaning of the Constitution.

It is settled law that the duties of a common carrier may arise out of usage as well as from statutory enactments, and when once established the obligation of such carriers to perform them is as binding in the one case as in the other.

In the case in judgment the evidence shows that it is the custom of appellant and other railroad companies under similar conditions to render the service which is the subject of this controversy for their customers as an incident to the carriage and due delivery of their freight. In this connection it may be remarked that appellant does not deny that the service is necessary to the due delivery of goods consigned to its patrons, nor has it refused to render the service, but maintains that it is a nonpublic duty, neither compellable nor supervisable by the Corporation Commission. Nevertheless the railroad company assumes the absolute right to fix the amount of its compensation for the service, as in the case of rates for public service, without regard to the views or wishes of the party against whom the charge is made, and uncontrolled by the Corporation Commission.

With respect to the contention that the service is not enforceable by the Corporation Commission, the case of Minneapolis, etc., Co. v. Minnesota, 186 U. S. 257, 22 Sup. Ct. 900, 46 L. Ed. 1151, shows that, though a service may not be enforceable as a duty, yet, when voluntarily entered upon, it may be regulated, and the charges therefor prescribed, by the Railroad Commission.

The circus car cases and the express car cases and the like afford illustrations of services which a common carrier, as such, is not required to perform; and common carriers are held to be private carriers with respect to such duties and freight which it is not their business to carry. In that class of cases the parties furnish their own cars, or retain the possession and control of the goods shipped; and the authorities therefore hold that it is competent for the carrier to limit his liability, and that the amount of his compensation is the legitimate subject of compact.

Chief Justice Waite, after refusing to enforce an alleged duty in the "Express Cases," on the ground that it was not the common-law duty of the company to perform it, proceeds to show that it might, nevertheless, be imposed by statute, and that, if so imposed, the courts would then enforce it. He says: "The regulation of matters of this kind is legislative in its character, and not judicial. To what extent it must come, if it comes at all, from Congress, and to what extent it may come from the states, are questions which we do not undertake to decide; but that it must come, when it does come, from some source of legislative power, we do not doubt. The Legislature may impose a duty, and, when imposed, it will, if necessary, be enforced by the courts; but unless a duty has been created, either by usage, or by contract, or by statute, the courts cannot be called on to give it effect." Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. Southern Exp. Co., 117 U. S. 29, 6 Sup. Ct. 542, 628, 29 L. Ed. 791.

The distinction, however, between that class of cases and this case seems obvious. The service here is not an independent service, but is merely ancillary to the public duty of delivering freight to consignees with whom the railroad company has established switching connections—an incident to the public service, not severable, and essential to the due performance of that service. The establishment and operation of track scales, such as are used by the guano company in this case, are a necessity of modern commerce, of which the service of the railroad company in that connection is an indispensable feature. The case is analogous to that of a common carrier of live stock, whose business of transporting the stock involves the incidental duty of furnishing suitable and safe facilities for loading and unloading the animals and for feeding and watering them while in transit. N. & W. R. Co. v. Harman, 91 Va. 601, 22 S. E. 490, 44 L. R. A. 289, 50 Am. St. Rep. 855; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Bank, 92 Va. 495, 23 S. E. 935, 44 L. R. A. 449.

If the power of the commission is limited merely to fixing the rate for carriage, and it is without authority so to regulate that service as to render it effective, it is obviously wholly inefficacious with respect to this large class of consignees and shippers.

Upon the first assignment of error, therefore, the court is of opinion that the service in question is cognate to, and so intimately connected with, the public service involved in the carriage and delivery of freight by the railroad company to patrons along its route as to constitute a part of such service, and, consequently, is subject to governmental control.

The court is further of opinion that the second assignment of error, that the rate fixed by the Corporation Commission for the service in question is too low, and the contention of appellee, on cross-appeal, that said rate is too high, are both without merit.

The Virginia Constitution (section 158, subsec. "f") provides "that the action of the commission appealed from shall be regarded as prima facie just, reasonable and correct." N. N., etc., R. Co. v. Hampton, etc., R. Co., 102 Va. 847, 47 S. E. 858.

It has also been held that the commissioners are presumed to be experts in the matter of rates and charges, and that their findings are entitled to peculiar weight. East Tenn., etc., Co. v. I. C. C., 99 Fed. 52, 39 C. C. A. 413.

But, aside from these considerations, the evidence fully sustains the judgment of the commission in that regard.

It follows that the order complained of is without error, and must be affirmed.

(103 Va. 276)

SPANGLER v. BOOZE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 1, 1904.)

MALICIOUS ISSUANCE OF SEARCH WARRANT—PROBABLE CAUSE—DECLARATION—TERMINATION OF PROSECUTION.

1. An action will lie for maliciously and without probable cause procuring the issuance and execution of a search warrant for goods alleged to have been stolen.

2. Where the execution of a search warrant was ineffective in disclosing any of the property alleged to have been stolen, and the proceeding was thereupon discontinued, the declaration in an action for the malicious issuance and execution of such warrant without probable cause was not demurrable for failure to allege that plaintiff had been tried on the merits by a court of competent jurisdiction and acquitted.

Error to Circuit Court, Botetourt County. Action by Uriah Spangler against A. T. Booze. A judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Benjamin Haden, for plaintiff in error. Glasgow & Woodson, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This action of trespass on the case was brought by the plaintiff in error to recover of the defendant in error damages for having maliciously and without probable cause procured the issuance and execution of a search warrant, charging the plaintiff in error with the theft of certain apples.

A demurrer to the declaration was sustained by the circuit court, and from that judgment a writ of error was awarded, bringing the case here for review.

The declaration is in the usual form, its salient averments being that the defendant, A. T. Booze, contriving and maliciously intending to injure the plaintiff, Uriah Spangler, in his good name, fame, and credit, and to bring him into public scandal, infamy, and disgrace, had appeared before a justice of the peace, and without any reasonable or probable cause made complaint that the plaintiff did unlawfully steal, take, and carry away one lot of apples of the value of $20, the property of the defendant, and that he had probable cause to believe, and did verily believe, that the property so carried away was concealed in the dwelling house of the plaintiff; that upon such complaint the defendant had, without any reasonable or probable cause whatever, procured the justice to make and grant his certain warrant, under his hand and seal, authorizing and empowering a constable forthwith in day or night time to enter the dwelling house of plaintiff, and there diligently search for the property alleged to have been stolen, and that, if the same or any part thereof should be found upon such search, the constable should bring such property and also the body of the plaintiff before some justice of the county, to be disposed of and dealt with according to law; that by virtue and under color of this warrant the constable to whom it was directed, and who was thereby charged with its execution, had, without any reasonable or probable cause whatsoever, and without the leave or license and against the will of the plaintiff, entered his dwelling house, and searched and ransacked the same and the rooms and apartments thereof, and had flung, tossed, and tumbled the furniture, wearing apparel, and other contents thereof, and had thereby greatly disturbed and disquieted the plaintiff and his family in the possession of said house. It is further averred that neither the apples of the defendant, alleged to have been stolen, nor any other goods or chattels of the defendant, feloniously stolen, were found in the plaintiff's house; nor were there any such goods and chattels therein before, at the time of the complaint, or, at any other time whatever; and that the defendant had no reasonable or probable cause for making the complaint or causing the warrant to be issued or executed; and that the defendant did not further prosecute his charge, but deserted and abandoned the same, and the complaint was wholly ended and determined.

¶ 1. See Malicious Prosecution, vol. 33, Cent. Dig. §§ 6, 59; Searches, and Seizures, vol. 41, Cent. Dig. § 6.

The ground of demurrer to this declaration is that it fails to allege that the charges contained in the warrant therein referred to were, or any of them ever was, tried on their merits by a court having jurisdiction thereof, and that the plaintiff was adjudged innocent thereof, and that the same terminated favorably to him. The averments of the declaration show that these allegations were not in accordance with the facts, and therefore could not be made. This brings us to a consideration of the question whether it was necessary for the plaintiff to make the averments suggested by the demurrer in order to maintain his action.

It is well settled by authority, both in this country and in England, that an action for damages will lie for maliciously and without probable cause procuring the issuance and execution of a search warrant for goods alleged to have been stolen. Wharton on Crim. Law (7th Ed.) vol. 3, § 2942; Elsee v. Smith, 16 Eng. Com. L. Rep. 19; Cooper v. Booth, 3 Esp. Rep. 135; Miller v. Brown, 3 Mo. 127, 23 Am. Dec. 693; Carey v. Sheets, 67 Ind. 375; 4 Minor, part 1, p. 393.

Mr. Minor says that "maliciously obtaining a search warrant to search one's house for goods alleged to be stolen, smuggled, etc., is such a prosecution that an action lies for it."

The contention of defendant in error that in a case like this the plaintiff must aver that he has been tried before a court of competent jurisdiction, and been fully acquitted on the merits, of the crime with which he is charged, is not tenable. When the stolen goods are not found upon the execution of a search warrant, that prosecution is ended. The warrant has served its purpose, and falls to the ground. It is, upon its face, conditioned upon the goods alleged to have been stolen being found. Not being found, as in the case at bar, the prosecution inaugurated by the defendant ended, and no further proceedings could be had thereunder.

Judge Cooley, upon this subject, says: "The reasonable rule seems to be that the technical prerequisite is only that the particular prosecution be disposed of in such manner that this cannot be revived, and the prosecutor, if he proceeds further, will be put to a new one." Cooley on Torts, p. 216.

In the leading case of Miller v. Brown, supra—a very similar case to that at bar—it is said: "This action is to redress any damages the plaintiff may have sustained either in his reputation by the scandal, in his person by imprisonment, or in his property by expense incurred; and it would have well lain upon the mere affidavit of the defendant, if made with malice and without probable cause; for assuredly an application for a search warrant upon the ground that goods have been stolen and are concealed within a person's inclosure, is a sufficient scandal to the reputation to sustain an action as to this ground. The cases of Elsee v. Smith, 16 Eng. Com. Law Rep. Cond. 212, and Boot v. Cooper, 3 Esp. 144, T. R. 535, and Bell v. Clapp, 10 Johns. 263, 6 Am. Dec. 339, sustain fully this position."

In the case of Olson v. Tvete, 46 Minn. 225, 48 N. W. 914, where the goods were not found, the court held an action for damages would lie for maliciously and without probable cause procuring the issuance and execution of a search warrant for goods alleged to have been stolen; the court saying "that such a proceeding not only involves an imputation of criminal conduct on the part of the person whose premises are thus subjected to search, but it contemplates the arrest of the person if, upon search, the property is found in his possession. Such is the direction in the search warrant."

In the case of Whitson v. May, 71 Ind. 269, where no goods were found, it was contended that the issuance and service of a search warrant was not a "prosecution" in the sense in which that word was used by the text-writers and the authorities in treating upon actions for malicious prosecutions, and that, consequently, an action would not lie for causing a search warrant to be issued, conceding that the motive may have been malicious, and that no probable cause existed. But the court disregarded this contention, and overruled the demurrer to the complaint, holding that an action for malicious prosecution did lie against one who maliciously, and without probable cause, institutes and carries forward proceedings under a search warrant.

A learned author, speaking of search warrants, has remarked that "there is not a description of process known to the law the execution of which is more distressing to the citizen. Perhaps there is none which exerts such intense feeling in consequence of its humiliating and degrading effects." Archbold's Cr. Pr. & Pl. vol. 1, p. 131.

It would be a reproach to our jurisprudence if such a prosecution could be inaugurated and carried forward maliciously and without probable cause, and the innocent victim have no remedy. We are of opinion that the declaration in judgment states a good cause of action, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a trial on the merits of his case.

For these reasons the judgment complained of must be reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings.

(108 Va. 231)

LANGHORNE v. MCGHEE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 1, 1904.)

PARTNERSHIP — INDEBTEDNESS — COMPROMISE — EFFECT—OFFSETS—PAYMENT—PLEADING — ASSUMPSIT—MONEY RECEIVED.

1. A firm conveyed its assets to a trustee to secure notes due to plaintiff, the conveyance providing that one of the partners, G., should execute to plaintiff two notes secured by the deed of trust—one to secure G.'s share of the debt, and the other as a guaranty of a portion of the other partner's half of the firm's indebtedness to plaintiff—whereupon G. should be discharged from personal liability thereon, and that G.'s proportion of the proceeds of the firm assets should be credited on the notes so executed by him, and that he should be required to pay only the residue thereof. Thereafter a suit for settlement of the partnership affairs was compromised on the basis of an allowance to G. of $3,000 by his partner. The judgment entered in G.'s favor for such amount was set aside on plaintiff's application on the ground of interest in the subject-matter of the suit, though he was not a party to the suit, but nothing further was done to establish plaintiff's claim. Held, that in the absence of fraud, or a showing that the sum of $3,000 was not justly due to G., plaintiff was bound by such settlement with reference to G.'s liability on the firm's debt to plaintiff.

2. Code 1887, § 3298 (Va. Code 1904, p. 1737), provides that in a suit for debt the defendant may have allowed any payment or set-off which is so described in his plea, or in an account filed therewith, as to give plaintiff notice of its nature, but not otherwise. Held, that where defendants pleaded nil debit, and filed an account of set-offs, which were so described as to give plaintiff notice of their character, they were entitled to prove such items as payments.

3. Where a member of a firm executed notes in satisfaction of his liability on a firm debt to plaintiff, and reduced them from sources other than his interest in property of the firm conveyed to a trustee for the payment of the firm debt, and by the terms of the trust agreement the money received by plaintiff from the trustee to the extent of such partner's interest in the assets not exceeding the amount of the notes was to be credited thereon, payments having been made by the trustee which more than satisfied such partner's notes, he was entitled to recover the overplus from plaintiff in assumpsit, as money had and received.

Error to Circuit Court, Bedford County.

Action by John D. Langhorne against W. H. McGhee and others. A judgment was rendered in favor of defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Horsley & Kemp and Caskie & Coleman, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Campbell, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. John D. Langhorne in April, 1902, instituted his action of debt against Wm. H. McGhee and J. W. Ballard on two negotiable notes, aggregating $3,054.16, including costs of protest. The defendants pleaded nil debit, and with their plea filed an account of offsets which amounted, including interest, to $4,125.39.

Upon the trial of the cause, neither party requiring a jury—the whole matter of law and fact being submitted to the court—a judgment was rendered against the plaintiff for the difference between the amount of the offsets and the notes sued on. To that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

The errors assigned are that the court erred in admitting the evidence offered by the defendants, and in rendering judgment against the plaintiff.

The evidence offered by the defendants showed that T. D. Berry and Wm. H. McGhee were prior to January, 1896, engaged in business as partners under the firm name of Berry and McGhee; that they were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $7,300, evidenced by two negotiable notes, one for $4,800 and the other for $2,500; that on the 7th day of May, 1896, they conveyed the assets of the concern to William Eubank, trustee, to secure the payment of the said indebtedness; that on the same day an agreement was entered into by Berry and McGhee and the plaintiff in which it is recited that the defendants had executed the said deed of trust, and the purposes for which it was executed; that the property conveyed by it was the joint property of the defendants, but the accounts between them had not been settled so as to show the relative rights of each therein, and that it was probable that they were not equally interested in the property; that McGhee, one of the defendants, had executed and delivered to the plaintiff two negotiable notes, one for the sum of $3,650, and the other for $350, each indorsed by James W. Ballard, of even date with the agreement, payable four months after date; that the $3,650 note had been given as collateral and additional security for McGhee's one-half of the debt secured by the deed of trust; that the $350 note had been given as a guaranty of that much of Berry's half of the $7,300 debt; that the plaintiff had agreed that these notes ($3,650 and $350) might, at the option of the plaintiff, be renewed from time to time so as to cover a period of 12 months, upon paying the discount at 6 per cent. per annum. After making the foregoing recitals, it is declared that "this agreement witnesseth, that it hath been agreed between the parties hereto that a settlement shall be had between the said Thomas D. Berry and William H. McGhee of the transactions growing out of their partnership dealings, and that the proceeds of the sale and collections to be made by the said Wm. Eubank, trustee under the deed of trust aforesaid, shall be apportioned between the said Thomas D. Berry and William H. McGhee in proportion to their respective interests in said assets, as the same shall be developed upon the settlement of said partnership accounts, and that whatever would be the said McGhee's proportion of said assets shall be credited on the said note for $3,650, and that he shall be required to pay only the residue of said note for $3,650 after crediting thereon his due proportion of the amount derived under the deed first aforesaid; * * * and that upon the execution and delivery of the two notes aforesaid, of $3,650 and $350, respectively, the said William H. McGhee shall be discharged from all personal liability upon the said notes of $2,500 and $4,800 first aforesaid, but such discharge shall not in any way affect the validity of the deed of trust aforesaid."

The $3,650 note was renewed from time to time until May 17, 1897, when, in consequence of a demand made by the plaintiff, McGhee paid $950 thereon, thus reducing the note to $2,700, which, with the $350 note, continued to be renewed from time to time until February 24, 1902.

In September, 1896, a few months after the agreement of May 7th was entered into, McGhee instituted a suit against Berry for a settlement of the partnership matters of Berry & McGhee; an order was entered directing one of the commissioners of the court to take and state their partnership account; the commissioner reported in May, 1899, that Berry was indebted to McGhee in the sum of $4,334.13, as of April 15, 1896, upon a settlement of their partnership matters; and this report, upon exception by both parties, was recommitted, and in October, 1899, a second report was made, which showed that Berry's indebtedness to McGhee on that account was $3,192.84, with some interest. Upon exceptions by Berry, that report was recommitted, but no new account was taken. In February, 1892, a compromise was made between Berry and McGhee, in which it was agreed that the former was indebted to the latter in the sum of $3,000, as of September, 1896, and a decree confirming such compromise, and giving judgment against Berry for that sum, was entered by the court on May 20, 1902, in the suit for the settlement of their partnership affairs. That order was set aside at the instance of Langhorne, through his counsel, on the ground that he was interested in the matter, and desired to assert his rights in relation thereto. Nothing further was done in that case.

By the compromise agreement between Berry and McGhee, it appeared that the former had received out of the partnership business $3,000 more than he was entitled to; thus showing that McGhee, as between himself and Berry, was entitled to the whole of the proceeds of the property conveyed to Eubank, trustee (that being less than the $3,650 note), and that Berry would still be indebted to McGhee in a large sum. It thus appears, if the compromise agreement was binding upon the plaintiff, that McGhee had the right, under the agreement of May 7th, to have so much of the proceeds of the property received by the plaintiff from Eubank, trustee, applied to the satisfaction of the $2,700 note sued on, as might be necessary for that purpose, and to have a judgment against the plaintiff for the residue thereof, after setting off or deducting therefrom an amount equal to the $350 note and its interest.

The trial court did this, and there is no error in its action, unless, as the plaintiff insists, the compromise in question is not binding upon him, or the pleadings in the case did not authorize such judgment.

It is true the plaintiff was no party to the compromise, nor to the suit for a settlement of the partnership affairs of Berry and McGhee, in which the compromise was made. The agreement of May 7th did not provide that he should be a party to the settlement between Berry and McGhee, whether made with or without litigation. He knew that the compromise, settling their partnership accounts, had been made. At his instance the order of the court confirming their agreement of compromise was set aside, in order that he might look into it and assert his rights in relation thereto. Although more than a year elapsed after that order was set aside at his instance before this case was tried, nothing was done in that case. He made no effort to show that the sum of $3,000 agreed upon by the compromise was not justly due from Berry to McGhee on their partnership accounts; and there is no suggestion here now that in making the compromise Berry and McGhee were guilty of any fraud or collusion, or that the sum agreed upon was in excess of what Berry owed McGhee on that account. Under all the facts and circumstances of the case, we are of opinion that the compromise is binding upon the plaintiff.

It is insisted that, under the pleadings in the cause, even if the compromise be binding upon the plaintiff, the defendants could not have any part of the moneys received by the plaintiff from Eubank, trustee, treated as payments on the $3,650, or any renewal thereof, because there was no account of payments filed with the plea of nil debit.

It is true that the account filed by the defendants, showing what sums had been received by the plaintiff from the proceeds of the property conveyed to Eubank, trustee, was described as an account of set-offs. Our statute (Code 1887, § 3298; Va. Code 1904, p. 1737) treats payment and set-off together, and places them upon the same ground, in prescribing the mode of relying on them as matters of defense. Allen v. Hart, 18 Grat., at page 734.

Where the items of an account filed with a plea of payment, or with a plea under which payment may be proved, as nil debit, are so described as to give the plaintiff notice of their character, the defendants ought not to be deprived of the right to show that such items, or any of them, are payments, because they are described generally in the account filed as an account of offsets.

In the case of Trimyer v. Pollard, 5 Grat. 460, all the items in the account filed were described as offsets, yet the court held that an item in the account so described, which appeared to be a payment, and not a set-off, should be treated as a payment. In so holding, Judge Allen (page 476) said: "The items are distinctly stated, and if from that statement it appears that any one of the items consisted of a payment, and not an offset, the general description of the account as an account of offsets ought not to affect the rights of the parties. The notice of the items is to be obtained from the face of the account, and, if the nature of it is there distinctly stated, the statute is complied with."

While the account filed in this case is described as a statement of offsets, the items are described as so much cash paid the plaintiff by Eubank, trustee, etc., at various times, and distinctly informed the plaintiff of the character of the defendants' claim, and entitled the defendants to prove such items to be payments.

A further objection is made that the defendants could not have allowed as offsets any part of the money received by the plaintiff from Eubank, trustee, because McGhee could not have maintained an independent action therefor against the plaintiff.

By the terms of the agreement of May 7th, the moneys received by the plaintiff from Eubank, trustee, to the extent of McGhee's interest therein, not exceeding the amount of the $3,650 note, were to be credited thereon. McGhee, from sources other than his interest in the proceeds of the property conveyed to Eubank, trustee, paid the interest on that note and renewals thereof, and reduced the note from $3,650 to $2,700. These payments, together with the sums which the plaintiff received from Eubank, trustee, more than satisfied the $3,650 note; and, to the extent of such overpayment, the plaintiff had moneys in his hands to which McGhee was entitled, and which could have been recovered by McGhee from Langhorne by an action of assumpsit. For wherever one person has in his hands money equitably belonging to another, that other person may recover it by assumpsit for money had and received. Gaines v. Miller, 111 U. S. 395, 4 Sup. Ct. 426, 28 L. Ed. 466; B. & O. R. Co. v. Burke & Herbert, 102 Va. 643, 47 S. E. 824, and cases cited.

Without discussing further the objections urged by the plaintiff in error to the action of the circuit court, it is sufficient to say that we are of opinion that there is no error in its judgment, and that it must be affirmed.

(137 N. C. 63)

HUTCHINS v. SCHOOL COMMITTEE OF TOWN OF DURHAM.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

SCHOOLS—AUTHORITY OF BOARD—EPIDEMIC OF SMALLPOX—VACCINATION.

1. Under the charter of a city, giving the school board power to prescribe such rules as may be just and lawful for the management of the school, the board had authority, at a time when an epidemic of smallpox prevailed, to make vaccination a prerequisite to a scholar's attendance; and it was applicable to a child, though, owing to her physical condition, vaccination would be dangerous.

¶ 1. See Schools and School Districts, vol. 43, Cent. Dig. §§ 321, 323.

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; Bryan, Judge.

Mandamus by J. W. Hutchins to compel the school committee of the town of Durham to admit plaintiff's daughter to the school. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Manning & Foushee and Boone & Reade, for appellant. J. Crawford Biggs, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is an application for a mandamus to the defendant public school committee to admit the daughter of the plaintiff to the public schools. The sole question presented is whether the following resolution is a reasonable exercise of the powers of the school committee of the city of Durham: "Whereas, from the report and recommendation of Dr. N. M. Johnson, Superintendent of Health of Durham county, in the judgment of this committee, general vaccination of teachers and children attending the schools is desired and required for the public safety: Now, therefore, be it resolved that no teacher or pupil be allowed to attend any school of the city of Durham after April 1, 1904, who does not present to the principal of such school a certificate of a physician of the city showing that such teacher or pupil has been successfully vaccinated within three years from that time, unless such person has been vaccinated within ten days preceding the date he or she presents himself or herself for such attendance, and this resolution shall be a permanent regulation of the schools." An epidemic of smallpox prevailed in the city of Durham and its suburbs last spring, not less than 1,000 persons being attacked; and the above resolution was passed as a protection to the 2,500 children in the schools of that city, the attendance in which had fallen off 40 per cent. by reason of the fear of contagion. These facts are averred in the answer and found to be true by the judge. In our judgment, the resolution was a proper and reasonable exercise of the powers of the defendant.

This is not a question of compulsory vaccination under legislative authority—that matter was before us and settled in State v. Hay, 126 N. C. 999, 35 S. E. 459, 49 L. R. A. 588, 78 Am. St. Rep. 691—but simply whether, if a child is not vaccinated, the school board can, as a precautionary measure, exclude all such from the school, by a resolution, under the power given in the charter to "have entire and exclusive control of the public school interest and property in the town of Durham, prescribe rules and regulations * * * and do all other acts that may be just and lawful to conduct and manage the public school interests in said town." A similar resolution passed by the St. Louis board of public schools was held reasonable and valid in Re Rebenack, 62 Mo. App. 8; the court saying: "In the nature of things, it must rest with the boards to determine what regulations are needful for a safe and proper management of the schools, and for the physical and moral health of the pupils intrusted to their care. If said regulations are not oppressive or arbitrary, the court cannot or should not interfere." The same ruling was made as to a similar resolution in Duffield v. School Dist., 162 Pa. 476, 29 Atl. 742, 25 L. R. A. 152; the court holding: "A school board has power to adopt reasonable health regulations for the benefit of pupils and the general public, and has the right to exclude from the schools those who do not comply with the regulations of the city authorities and the school board requiring a certificate of vaccination as a condition of attendance." To the same purport it is said in State v. Zimmerman, 86 Minn. 353, 90 N. W. 783, 58 L. R. A. 78, 91 Am. St. Rep. 351: "The welfare of the many is superior to that of the few, and, as regulations compelling vaccination are intended and enforced solely for the public good, the rights conferred thereby are primary and superior to the right of any pupil to attend the public schools." In Blue v. Beach (Ind. Sup.) 56 N. E. 89, 50 L. R. A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195, it is pointed out that the constitutional guaranty that tuition shall be free and the schools equally open to all is necessarily subject to reasonable regulations to enforce discipline by expulsion of the disorderly, and protection of the morals and health of the pupils. The above cases are cited with approval in State v. Hay, 126 N. C. 999, 35 S. E. 459, 49 L. R. A. 588, 78 Am. St. Rep. 691. To same purport is Cushman v. Charleston, 8 Cush. 160, where Shaw, C. J., says: "The right to attend is not absolute, but one to be enjoyed by all on reasonable conditions."

The plaintiff relies upon Potts v. Breen, 167 Ill. 67, 47 N. E. 81, 39 L. R. A. 152, 59 Am. St. Rep. 262, that, in the absence of express legislative power, a resolution requiring vaccination as a prerequisite to attending schools is unreasonable, when smallpox does not exist in the community, and there is no reasonable ground to apprehend its appearance. We are not inclined to follow that authority. With the present rapid means of intercommunication, smallpox may make its appearance in any community at any moment without any notice given beforehand, and incalculable havoc be made, especially among the school children, which cannot be remedied by a subsequent order excluding the nonvaccinated. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Besides, that case is not in point here, where smallpox had been epidemic, and was still threatening. The language of the resolution making it "permanent" will not prevent its repeal if upon the subsidence of the danger the school board of that day shall deem it proper to repeal. If the action of the board is not satisfactory to the public, a new board will be elected who will rescind the resolution.

The fact that it would be dangerous to vaccinate the plaintiff's daughter, owing to her physical condition, would be a defense for her to an order for general compulsory vaccination (State v. Hay, supra), but is no reason why she should be excepted from a resolution excluding from the school all children who have not been vaccinated. That she cannot safely be vaccinated may make it preferable that she herself should run the risk of taking the smallpox, but is no reason that the children of the public school should be exposed to like risk of infection, through her, or others in like case. Though the school children are vaccinated, there are always some whose vaccination is imperfect, and danger to them should not be increased by admitting those not vaccinated at all. Besides, a rule not enforced to all alike will soon cease to be a rule enforceable at all.

No error.

(137 N. C. 63)

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF IREDELL
COUNTY v. BOARD OF COM'RS
OF IREDELL COUNTY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

TAXATION—COLLECTION OF SCHOOL TAX—COM-PENSATION.

1. Under Code, § 2563, providing that the sheriff shall annually on or before December 31st pay to the county treasurer the whole amount levied for school purposes, construed in connection with section 723, providing that the sheriff shall be entitled to the same commissions on county taxes that he is given by Acts 1903, p. 403, c. 251, § 92, for the collection of state taxes, a sheriff is entitled to commission for collecting the school tax.

Appeal from Superior Court, Iredell County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by the board of education of Iredell county against the board of commissioners of Iredell county and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Armfield & Turner and R. B. McLaughlin, for appellant. W. G. Lewis and J. B. Armfield, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. This is a controversy without action, submitted under section 567 of the Code. The facts agreed upon present for our determination the question whether or not a sheriff is allowed to retain a commission out of the school taxes collected by him. The defendant Summers was sheriff of Iredell county, and paid to the treasurer of that county the whole amount of the school taxes levied for the county for the year 1903, less 5 per cent. commissions as compensation for himself for collecting the school taxes, and also less the amount of insolvents. The plaintiffs, the board of education of Iredell county, contend that under a proper construction of the law the sheriff should have paid the whole amount levied for school purposes, less the insolvents, and that he had no right to deduct therefrom any commissions for collecting the taxes. The sheriff contends that the settlement he made with the treasurer was a proper one, and that he had a right to deduct his commissions from the school taxes collected by him.

The plaintiffs base their contention on section 2563 of the Code, in which it is provided that the sheriff of each county shall pay annually, in money, on or before the 31st day of December of each year, the whole amount levied, less such sum or sums as may be allowed on account of insolvents for the current year, by both state and county, for school purposes. The insistence is that the language of that statute is clear, that the words used are unambiguous, and that, therefore, there is nothing left to be done by way of interpretation by the courts. They further contend that results that may flow from the statute, the motives of the legislators, and policies of the law cannot be considered, and that common sense and good faith should be chiefly used here, as in every instance, as the great canon of interpretation. In the briefs filed by counsel for both the appellant and appellees the fact that section 2563 of the Code is brought forward, word for word, in section 54, p. 61, c. 4, Acts 1901 (an act to revise and consolidate the public school law), except that the money is payable to the treasurer of the county school fund, instead of to the treasurer of the county board of education, was overlooked. There is no fault to be found with the principles of interpretation for which the plaintiffs contend, but it is nevertheless to be understood that the object of all interpretation of statutes is to carry out the intention of the lawmakers, and, when the intention is ascertained, that it must always govern. And it is also a well-known principle of construction that for the proper interpretation of a statute other statutes in pari materia may and ought to be considered in connection with the statute under review. Upon a reading of section 2563 it is seen that no commission is allowed the sheriff for collecting the school taxes of the counties, in so many words. Yet in the same section pains and penalties are put upon the sheriff, and his bondsmen subjected to civil actions, if he should fail to collect and pay over the taxes. If that section is to be literally construed, then we have the state requiring onerous and responsible duties to be performed by one of its citizens, no more interested in the cause of public education than others, without compensation, and with the dread of penalties and forfeitures hanging over him, and the fear of harassment to his bondsmen in a civil suit, if he should fail to perform such service for the commonwealth. Such a construction of that statute would be a harsh one, and would work great injustice to the tax collectors of the state. Now, if there are other statutes or laws of our state in pari materia—that is, statutes concerning the revenues, the officers who collect them, and the compensation to which they are entitled for their services—fair dealing and common sense require that they be considered in connection with Code, § 2563 (section 54, p. 61, c. 4, Acts 1901). It is provided in section 723 of the Code that the county taxes shall be collected by the sheriff of the county, who shall be entitled to the same commissions, and subject to the same rules and regulations, in respect to his settlement of the said taxes with the county treasurer, as he is in his settlement of the public taxes with the treasurer of the state. Now, what are these rules and regulations which the law makes applicable to the settlement of state taxes? In chapter 251, p. 403, § 92, Acts 1903, among other deductions which the auditor is required to make in the settlement of the state taxes with the sheriff, is one of 5 per cent. commissions on the amount collected. If the three statutes—section 723 of the Code, section 54, p. 61, c. 4, Acts 1901 (section 2563, Code), and section 92, p. 403, c. 251, Acts 1903—be construed together, it seems to be clear that the defendant in this controversy is right in his contention—that is, that he is entitled to 5 per cent. commissions on the amount he collected of the school taxes—unless it be, as the plaintiffs contend, that the words “county taxes” in section 723 mean only taxes to be disbursed for general county purposes, and exclude the school taxes which are collected by the sheriff and paid to the treasurer of the county. We are of the opinion that, so far as this action is concerned, the words “county taxes” include all amounts levied by taxation, and which are to be used in the counties where they are collected, and where they are paid to the county treasurer. We are not inadvertent to the fact that all taxes levied for school purposes are known as “state taxes” because they are assessed and levied by the counties by the direct mandate of the General Assembly and the rate of taxation fixed by that body. But the ordinary taxes levied for school purposes under sections 2 and 3, p. 323, of chapter 247, Acts 1903, are collected by the sheriffs of each county, and paid to the treasurers thereof. Acts 1901, p. 61, c. 4, § 54. And the amount is apportioned by the county boards of education among the various townships of the county, and paid out by the county treasurer upon orders signed by at least two members of the school committee and by the county superintendent. The state board of education has no hand in the apportionment of that money. It is the work entirely of the county boards of education. There is a school fund, however, derived from the sources mentioned in section 4, p. 45, c. 4, Acts 1901, which the state board of education does apportion annually among the several counties of the state, as an additional amount to that apportioned by the county boards of education, among the several townships. But, in addition to what we have said, if section 54, p. 61, c. 4, Acts 1901 (Code, § 2563), be carefully read, it will appear that the intention of the lawmakers was more to fix the time when the sheriff should pay over the school taxes than to prescribe a method of settlement. It is a matter of common information that those who conduct the public school system of our state, knowing that the spring and summer months of the year constitute the most favorable season for farm and outdoor work, and that most of our working people are engaged in such work, have recognized the fall and winter months as the most propitious time for the conducting of the public schools. Collection of the money for such purposes, therefore, must be made at an early date, after the beginning of the public school term, to meet the necessary expenses; and therefore it was enacted by section 2563 of the Code (Acts 1901, p. 61, c. 4, § 54) that the sheriffs of the several counties should collect and pay over the whole of the school taxes by the 31st of December of each year. At the time of the passage of the act (Laws 1881, p. 382, c. 200, § 35) which is brought forward in the Code as section 2563, the revenue law allowed, as does the law now in force, sheriffs until the first Monday in February of each year to make their final settlement of county taxes, and until the second Monday in January to settle their state tax accounts with the boards of commissioners, and to pay afterwards the amount to the State Treasurer in such manner or at such a place as he may direct. It is to be observed that there is no provision made in the machinery act (Laws 1903, p. 355, c. 251) by which sheriffs are allowed a commission for collection of county taxes. Section 97 of that act bears upon that subject, and commissions on amount collected of county taxes are left out. They can only be allowed under section 723 of the Code. His honor gave judgment upon the facts agreed in favor of the defendant, and we affirm the judgment.

Affirmed.

(127 N. C. 91)

EARNHARDT et ux. v. CLEMENT et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

CONTRACTS TO BEQUEATH PROPERTY—SPECIFIC ENFORCEMENT—PROOF — INSTRUCTIONS—ESTOPPEL—PLEADING—PARTIES—TRIAL.

1. Under Code, §§ 178, 183, providing that, when a married woman is a party, her husband must be joined, unless the action concerns her separate property, a married woman may sue alone for specific performance of a contract to bequeath her certain property in consideration of personal services.

2. Allowing the examination of a witness before the introduction of evidence to show the competency of his testimony is within the discretion of the court.

3. An exception to refusal to nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case is waived by introduction of evidence by defendant without renewal of the motion at the close of all the evidence.

4. Instructions that, on a certain state of facts, "plaintiff cannot recover," are properly refused, under the system of procedure by which the jury does not render a general verdict, but responds to specific issues.

5. Where testator contracted to bequeath certain securities to plaintiff, but, instead, bequeathed them in trust for her, reception of the dividends for a number of years did not estop her from suing for specific performance of the contract.

6. A bequest of property in trust is not a substantial compliance with a contract to bequeath it absolutely.

7. The specific enforcement of a contract to bequeath certain personalty in return for personal services is not unjust, where the contract is for a valuable consideration, not procured by undue influence or any imposition, is faithfully performed, and the decree will not result in hardship.

8. Under Code, § 413, prohibiting the court from expressing an opinion upon the weight of the evidence, an instruction, in an action to specifically enforce a contract to bequeath certain property in return for personal services, that such a contract, when attempted to be established by parol, is regarded with suspicion, and not sustained unless founded upon a valuable consideration, and shown by strong, clear, and convincing proof, is sufficiently favorable to defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Justice, Judge.

Action by A. E. Earnhardt and wife against L. H. Clement, as executor, and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Burton Craige and L. H. Clement, for appellants. Overman & Gregory, for appellees.

OLARK, O. J. This is an action for specific performance of a contract to bequeath the 50 shares of bank stock which the testator then owned to the feme plaintiff absolutely and in her own right, in consideration of services to be rendered by her to the testator. Her husband is joined as coplaintiff, but he has no interest in the action, and it was unnecessary. Code, § 178 (1), and section 183. Upon issues submitted, the jury found that the testator so contracted; that the feme plaintiff faithfully and fully performed the services stipulated for, but that the testator bequeathed the said bank stock, not absolutely to plaintiff in her own right, as agreed, but to a trustee for the benefit of plaintiff during her life, and after her death to her children, and, if she should die without issue, then to the grandchildren of the testator. The court having rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendants appealed, assigning as errors:

1. The permission to examine a medical witness out of his order upon assurance that the preliminary evidence to make it competent would be introduced later, which was done. This exception was properly abandoned here. It was a matter in the discretion of the trial court. Ripley v. Arledge, 94 N. C. 467.

¶ 7. See Specific Performance, vol. 44, Cent. Dig. §§ 223, 224.

2. The exception for refusal to nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence was waived by the introduction of evidence by defendants, without renewing the motion at the close of all the evidence. Jones v. Warren, 134 N. C. 392, 46 S. E. 740.

3. Exceptions to refusal to grant prayers concluding "plaintiff is not entitled to recover" cannot be sustained under the present system, in which the jury does not render a general verdict, but responds to specific issues. Witsell v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 558, 27 S. E. 125; Bottoms v. Railroad, 109 N. C. 72, 13 S. E. 738, and cases cited. Besides, if in proper form, the instructions were properly refused. The first prayer asked an instruction that, if the jury believed the evidence, the plaintiff could not recover. The evidence was properly left to the jury. The second prayer, that the bequest in trust for life, etc., was a substantial compliance with the contract alleged by the plaintiff, was properly refused, and needs no discussion. The third prayer was that the feme plaintiff, having received the dividends on the stock for seven years, had elected to take under the will, and is estopped from claiming under the contract, and the fourth prayer is that the plaintiffs are estopped by accepting the dividends on the stock from claiming against the will. It is true, as the defendants claim, that a party cannot claim benefits under the will and against it (Brown v. Ward, 103 N. C. 173, 9 S. E. 800; Sigmon v. Hawn, 87 N. C. 450), and that the estoppel thereupon arising can be enforced against femes covert and infants (McQueen v. McQueen, 55 N. C. 16, 62 Am. Dec. 205; Robertson v. Stevens, 36 N. C. 247). But before the doctrine of election can arise, "two things are essential: (1) The testator must give property of his own; and (2) he must profess to dispose of property belonging to his donee." 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 65; Adams, Eq. § 93; Price v. Price, 133 N. C. 510, 45 S. E. 855. This is not the case here. There are no inconsistent benefits. By receiving the dividends on stock, the capital of which she was entitled to have absolutely, she only accepted part of what was her due, and nothing beyond her own. It put neither her nor the estate at a disadvantage. The statute of limitations was pleaded, and is a different matter from an estoppel. The statute of limitations runs against a married woman since the passage of chapter 78, p. 209, Pub. Laws 1899, but the feme plaintiff brought this action against the trustee within three years after becoming of age. The judge properly told the jury that the action was not barred, to which, indeed, the defendants did not except; and the mere receipt of the dividends on her own stock does not, as we have said, bar her claiming the stock itself.

The defendants moved for judgment on the verdict upon the ground that the decree of specific performance would be inequitable and unjust. The motion was properly denied. The contract was (a) for a valuable and fair consideration; (b) fair, just, and mutual; (c) not procured by undue influence or any imposition; (d) plaintiff fully and faithfully performed her part; and (e) the decree is not oppressive, harsh, or inequitable, nor will it work hardship and injustice to any one. Boles v. Caudle, 133 N. C. 534, 45 S. E. 835. If, as the jury find, the contract was that the feme plaintiff should have this stock absolutely after the testator's death, and she rendered, as is found, the services agreed upon, there is no reason for requiring her to take merely the dividends thereon; nor is she estopped by having received only the dividends (less the trustee's commissions) for several years. There are dangers, in litigation of this kind, to set up alleged contracts with persons since deceased; but, aside from the protection of section 590 of the Code, the following instruction of the court, which is unexcepted to, was fully as careful of the defendants' interests as they could ask. His honor told the jury that "a person may make a valid agreement binding himself to dispose of his property in a particular way by last will and testament; but such a contract, especially when it is attempted to be established by parol, is regarded with suspicion, and not sustained, except upon the strongest evidence that it was founded upon a valuable consideration, and except upon strong, clear, and convincing proof." He was prohibited by section 413 of the Code from expressing an opinion upon the weight of the evidence, and could not instruct the jury that this was or was not clear, strong, and convincing. That was a matter for the jury, subject to the corrective power of the judge to set aside the verdict. Jones v. Warren, supra; Ray v. Long, 132 N. C. 894, 44 S. E. 652; Lehew v. Hewett, 130 N. C. 22, 40 S. E. 769.

No error.

(137 N. C. 72)

CANNADY v. CITY OF DURHAM.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS—INJURIES TO PEDESTRIANS—POWERS OF STREET COMMISSIONER—QUESTIONS OF FACT—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. In an action against a city for injuries resulting from a defective sidewalk, whether or not the city had established a sidewalk at the point where the accident occurred was a question of fact.

2. A street commissioner of a city has no power to appropriate and take charge of land for a sidewalk for the city.

3. In an action against a city for injuries from a defective sidewalk, a charge that, if plaintiff knew of the defect and its dangerous character, he was bound to use ordinary care in protecting himself from what he knew to be a menacing danger, did not injure plaintiff in stating that he knew that the place was dangerous, as the degree of care imposed on him in view of that knowledge was the same as the court should have imposed upon him in view of his knowledge of the defect and the previous avoidance of it by himself and others.

4. An erroneous instruction on the issue of contributory negligence is harmless where the jury finds that plaintiff was not injured by defendant's negligence.

Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by E. W. Cannady against the city of Durham. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Winston & Bryant, for appellant. Manning & Foushee, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages from the defendant, the city of Durham, on account of personal injuries sustained by himself through the alleged negligence of the defendant. In his complaint the plaintiff alleged that the defendant permitted for an unreasonable time a branch five or six feet wide and about three feet deep to run across and through the sidewalk on West Pine street, and to remain uncovered by a bridge or other device; and that on a dark night, there being no lamp or rail guard at the point, while going along the sidewalk, he fell in and hurt his knee. The defendant, in its answer, denied that the city had established a sidewalk or walkway at the point where the plaintiff was hurt, and also set up against the plaintiff's cause of action the plea of contributory negligence. There was no exception made to any part of the evidence. The plaintiff requested twelve instructions. His honor gave five as they were asked, refused to give three, and modified four of them. He gave six special instructions at the request of the defendant, and then submitted the charge in chief. The plaintiff excepted specifically to every sentence of his honor's charge. He excepted to the giving of the six special instructions requested by the defendant, and he excepted to the refusal of his honor to give the plaintiff's three special requests 1, 5, 12, and to the modification of his four requests numbered 2, 3, 4, and 6.

The exception by the plaintiff to everything the judge said on the trial has, of course, caused us to read all that he said to the jury with care, and, after having done so, we think none of his exceptions ought to be sustained; and we think it only necessary to consider two of the questions raised on the appeal—one concerning the instructions given in connection with the evidence bearing on whether or not the city had established a sidewalk at the point where plaintiff was hurt, and the other upon the question of the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff. If the city had established a sidewalk on the west side of Pine street down to the branch a few feet below Hight's house, where plaintiff was hurt, then the plaintiff would have been entitled to instructions 1 and 5 asked by him. Whether or not the city had established a sidewalk at that point was a question of fact to be settled by admission in the answer or by evidence on the trial. In the answer it was denied by the defendant. Several witnesses testified that there had been no conveyance of the land to the city, no condemnation of the land, or any appropriation or control of the same by the city; and several testified that no work had ever been done on the street by the city. The only evidence relied on by the plaintiff to show either appropriation of the strip of land as a street, or that the city had ever had control of it, was the testimony of Elliott and of John B. Christian. Elliott said that in 1897-1899 he sold the property bordering on Pine street, where the plaintiff was hurt, after having divided it into lots, and that there were no sidewalks there when he sold it, and that the only work the town had ever done was to make a little water drain or ditch on the sides of the street, and to keep the ditch cleaned out. He said further that after he sold the land on Pine street "the purchasers built upon their lots, and that, of course, made the sidewalk." The witness Christian said that he had been a street commissioner of the city of Durham for many years; that the town never laid off any sidewalk on Pine street, and had never done any work there from Proctor street, and that the walkway was of the make of the travelers; that the city had built and worked the street at that point. He said he did not remember that either of the street committee had ever visited that part of the city, and that he took his orders from the chairman of the street committee. He said further that when Sam Hight was building his house he was there, and directed him to move it back from the sidewalk, because he was building it too near, and that Hight did move it back further from the sidewalk.

The fifth prayer of the plaintiff for special instructions (which his honor declined to give) was in these words: "If you believe the evidence in this case, you will answer the first issue [whether the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of the plaintiff] 'Yes.'" That instruction was based on the testimony of Christian that he ordered Hight, when he was building his house, to move it back from the sidewalk, and that Hight obeyed the order, and upon the plaintiff's testimony that while walking along the smooth, even walk just south of Hight's house, on his way home, he stepped into the branch, the bank of which was perpendicular on his side, and hurt his leg. The contention is that Christian, the street commissioner, was acting for the city of Durham, and also that as street commissioner he had the power to appropriate and take charge of the land for a sidewalk for the city. We cannot admit that any such powers reside in a street commissioner.

The first prayer for instructions asked by the plaintiff (which was declined by his honor) was in these words: "It was the duty of the city of Durham to repair the streets and sidewalks of the city, and to make and keep them reasonably safe and convenient for persons traveling to and from on them." The plaintiff insisted that that instruction should have been given, for the reason that it was alleged in the complaint that the city had established a sidewalk on the west side of Pine street down to the point where he was hurt, and that that allegation was not denied in the answer. Upon a reading of the answer it must be admitted that the defendant was very cautious in the wording of its denial. In fact, it may be said that it was ingeniously done, but still effectively so. As we have said, the main question of fact in the case was whether or not the defendant had established and assumed control of the ground where the plaintiff was hurt as a street. It was denied in the answer, and there was evidence that it had not been so established or appropriated. His honor submitted that question fairly to the jury, with proper instructions on the law as to the effect of their finding, as the following parts of his charge will show. The plaintiff asked his honor to instruct the jury: "If you find from the evidence that the defendant permitted the sidewalk on the west side of Pine street, within the corporate limits of the city, to remain without any bridge or covering over a branch five or six feet wide and three feet deep, without a guard or rail, and that the north embankment of the branch was perpendicular, or about so, and that defendant failed to light the same, and permitted such conditions to exist for several years, this would be negligence; and, if this was the proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff, you will answer the first issue 'Yes.'" In line with that instruction he told the jury: "If you find from the evidence that defendant had established the sidewalk, or that it had been used as a walkway for a considerable time with the knowledge of defendant, and that defendant had assumed control over it on the west side of Pine street, within the corporate limits of the city, and defendant permitted the same to remain without a bridge or covering over a branch five or six feet wide and three feet deep, without a guard or rail, and that the north embankment of the branch was perpendicular, or about so, and that defendant failed to light the same, and permitted such conditions to exist for several years, this would be negligence; and, if this was the proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff, you will answer the first issue 'Yes.'" He further instructed the jury that: "If you find from the evidence that there was a side or walk way used with the knowledge of the defendant for a considerable time, and that defendant had exercised any control over the sidewalk, and failed to place a bridge or other proper covering over the place where plaintiff alleges he was injured, that it was not lighted, and remained in this condition for an unreasonable length of time, this would be negligence, and, if it caused plaintiff's injury, you will answer the first issue 'Yes.'" On the question of the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff the court gave, at request of defendant, the following instruction: "If the jury believe the evidence of plaintiff, he well knew of the branch, of its location and dangerous character, of the passway over the bridge traveled by foot passengers; that he had for two months frequently, and almost daily, traveled Pine street, and was familiar with the location of the houses on the street, and where the sidewalk turned into the street and proceeded across the bridge; that he had seen and observed the danger of the branch for about two months almost daily—then the plaintiff was bound to act upon his information, and use ordinary care and prudence in shielding and protecting himself from what he knew to be a menacing danger to every one who passed near it; and if the jury shall find that the plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care the jury will answer the second issue 'Yes.'" The plaintiff had testified that whenever he had been near where he was hurt he had turned off the sidewalk about five feet from the branch, and just before reaching the branch had walked along the edge of the street, and crossed the branch on the bridge, just as other people did; and that before he was hurt he made one trip a day for a week, and two or three times a week for the balance of the time. He said further that he had never been along there in the night before, and that he did not remember ever noticing the place at the branch before he was hurt. The objection of the plaintiff to the instruction was that the court stated, in substance, that the point where the plaintiff was hurt was to the knowledge of the plaintiff a dangerous place, and that that was in direct contradiction of the plaintiff on this point, he having stated in his examination that he did not remember to have noticed the place where he was hurt before that occasion. We cannot see how the plaintiff's case was hurt by the instruction. The degree of care which his honor laid down as the rule of conduct to be observed by the plaintiff when he failed to turn off from the branch where he was hurt and to follow the path over the bridge on the street was exactly and precisely the same degree of care which his honor should have instructed the jury that the plaintiff was to observe on account of the plaintiff's knowledge of the size and depth of the stream and the avoidance of it by himself and others in going along that way. It is to be observed that the plaintiff did not say that he mistook his way, and went to the branch, and that he intended to turn off where he usually did, but that the darkness of the night and the want of a light prevented him from doing so. He simply said that he followed the sidewalk. Bpt, even if the instruction had been a substantial error, it was harmless, because the jury had found that the plaintiff was not hurt by the defendant's negligence.

No error.

DOUGLAS, J., dissents.

(137 N. C. 48)

ERWIN v. MORRIS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

INTEREST—USURY—VALIDITY OF CONTRACT—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

1. Under the statute prohibiting the charging of usury, a promise to pay usurious interest is void and unenforceable.

2. A vendee of mortgaged land agreed with his grantor, the mortgagor, to pay the mortgagee what was actually due on the debt. The mortgage note called for usurious interest, and the vendee sued to restrain a sale under the mortgage; he alleging a tender of the amount actually due. Held, that the injunction should have been continued to a final hearing, to determine whether the words "actually due" meant the face of the note, or the amount legally due.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cabarrus County; T. A. McNeill, Judge.

Suit by J. A. Erwin against Z. A. Morris and others. From an order vacating a restraining order and refusing an injunction, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Montgomery & Crowell, for appellant. Osborne, Maxwell & Keerans, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. This is an appeal from an interlocutory order dissolving a restraining order and refusing an injunction to the hearing. The complaint, considered as an affidavit, set forth: That, at a sale of the land described therein, Laura E. Moss, who afterwards intermarried with O. W. Swink, purchased same for the sum of $3,884. That, not having the money to pay therefor, the defendants' intestate, P. M. Morris, agreed to furnish it, and take her note secured by mortgage on the land. That he did furnish the sum of $3,884, and took from Laura E. a note dated December, 1894, for $4,784, carrying interest at 8 per cent., payable semi-annually; $900 being added to the amount furnished, as a bonus for the loan of the money. That no other consideration passed from Morris to Laura E. for the promise to pay said amount. That Laura E. executed a mortgage on the land to secure the note. Thereafter certain payments were made on the note. Laura E. Moss on March 23, 1903, tendered the defendant Z. A. Morris, one of the executors of said P. M. Morris, the full amount due, less the sum of $900 charged as a bonus, in full payment of the note, which he refused to accept. "That the said Laura E. Moss has sold and conveyed, for valuable consideration, by deed duly recorded April 1, 1904, the said tract of land to plaintiff, under a contract that plaintiff is to pay defendants whatever amount is actually due the defendants on account of the note and mortgage, together with all the rights, interests, and equities of the said Laura E. Moss in said land under said mortgage." That the plaintiff is ready, able, and willing to pay the defendants the amount actually due on the same, and tenders such amount. That defendants, pursuant to the power contained in the mortgage, have advertised the land for sale. His honor Judge Shaw granted a temporary restraining order, with notice to the defendants to show cause. His honor Judge McNeill, upon the return of the order, vacated the restraining order and refused the injunction. The plaintiff appealed.

The case is before us upon the plaintiff's affidavit, defendants not having filed any answer thereto. The question presented—whether the grantee of the mortgage may avail himself of the plea of usury included in the debt secured by the mortgage, or make the usury the basis for an action for equitable relief—has never before been presented to or decided by this court. It is well settled by our decisions that, under the statute prohibiting the charging of usury, the promise to pay the usurious interest is void and cannot be enforced. Moore v. Beaman, 111 N. C. 328, 16 S. E. 177; s. c. on rehearing, 112 N. C. 553, 17 S. E. 676. The question presented upon this appeal is whether the defense is confined to the debtor, or, when the land is sought to be subjected, may be set up by the grantee of a mortgage. The allegation is that the plaintiff took the title to the land upon a promise to pay what was "actually due" on the debt. It is not made clear what the real agreement was. If by the term "actually due" is meant due on the face of the note (that is, in consideration of the conveyance of the land for a fixed price, the face value of the note was reserved by the plaintiff, with a promise to pay it to the defendants), it would seem that such an agreement amounted to an application by the mortgagor of so much of the purchase money as was necessary to pay the note. If, however, the plaintiff simply assumed the position of the mortgagor, treating the word "actually" as meaning legally due, another and very different question would be presented. The authorities from other courts are not in harmony. In the present condition of the record, we prefer not to decide the question. The injunction should have been continued to the final hearing, when the contract between the plaintiff and mortgagor can be ascertained. McCorkle v. Brem, 76 N. C. 407; Marshall v. Commissionera, 89 N. C. 103.

Error.

(137 N. C. 30)

BRITTAIN v. WESTALL

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

AUTHORITY OF AGENT—PURCHASE FOR CASH—PURCHASE ON CREDIT—WHEN BINDING ON PRINCIPAL—ACTION AGAINST PRINCIPAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. If express authority to buy on credit is not given to an agent, but he is authorized to make the purchase, and no funds are advanced to him to enable him to buy for cash, he is by implication clearly authorized to purchase on the credit of his principal.

2. In an action for goods sold defendant's agent on credit, the goods having been received by defendant, the defense was that the agent had been given cash to make the purchase, and that he had no express authority to buy on credit, and it appeared from the written contract of agency that the agent could buy only for cash. Held error to refuse an instruction that the contract did not authorize a purchase on credit.

3. It was error to refuse an instruction that, although the goods came into defendant's possession, and were appropriated by him, he would not be liable to plaintiff unless he had authorized the agent to buy on credit, or appropriated the goods knowing that he had.

4. It is only after a prima facie case of agency has been established that the acts and declarations of the agent become competent against his alleged principal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Catawba County; McNeill, Judge.

Action by D. M. Brittain against W. H. Westall. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Self & Whitener, for appellant. L. L. Witherspoon and M. H. Yount, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This case was before us at the last term upon an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit, which the court rendered on motion of the defendant at the close of the testimony. 135 N. C. 492, 47 S. E. 616. We then held there was some evidence that Townsend was the agent of Westall to buy the lumber for him, and, although it was a restricted agency, and Townsend could only buy for cash, yet, if Townsend bought lumber from the plaintiff on Westall's credit, and the latter received and appropriated it to his own use, knowing at the time it had been so bought, he would be liable for its value. In order that this phase of the case might be submitted to the jury, the judgment was set aside, and a new trial awarded. A sufficient statement of the facts for an understanding of the point decided in this appeal will be found in the case as formerly reported. It may be added, though, that there was evidence at the last trial that the defendant had supplied Townsend with sufficient funds to buy the lumber. In Patton v. Brittain, 32 N. C. 8, it appeared that an agent was given authority to purchase personal property for his principal, but only so far as he had cash of his principal with which he was to pay for it. The agent purchased on the credit of the principal without paying any money, and the property was delivered to the principal, who received and converted it to his own use. The court held that, when the agent violated his express instructions, and bought on credit instead of for cash, the principal had the right to repudiate the contract, and to refuse to receive the articles, but, having received and used them with knowledge that they had been purchased for him and upon his credit, the vendor could recover from him the price of the goods. It was said that the same result would follow whether the agent acted contrary to his authority, exceeded it, or had none at all; it being the simple case of the goods of one man coming to the use of another, which he knows are not intended as a gift, but are sent to him upon the expectation that he will receive and pay for them. A mere agency to purchase does not always and necessarily imply authority to pledge the credit of the principal, and when the agent is furnished with funds for the purpose of making purchases on his principal's account he cannot bind the latter by a purchase on credit, unless, perhaps, such is the well-known custom of trade, or unless the principal, with notice of the facts, ratifies the transaction. This is substantially the principle which is involved in this case, and it is sanctioned by the best authorities. See 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) pp. 1020, 1021, where the cases on the subject are collated. This court has said that when the authority to buy or to sell is given in general terms, it is clear, in the absence of any restriction to the contrary, that the agent has the power to buy for cash or on credit, as he may deem best, and to sell in the same way. Ruffin v. Mebane, 41 N. C. 507. It may be taken, then, as a settled principle in the law of agency, that, if express authority to buy on a credit is not given to an agent, but he is authorized to make the purchase, and no funds are advanced to him to enable him to buy for cash, he is by implication clearly authorized to purchase on the credit of his principal, because when an agent is authorized to do an act for his principal all the means necessary for the accomplishment of the act are impliedly included in the authority, unless the agent be in some particular expressly restricted. Sprague v. Gillett, 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 91. The case of Komorowski v. Krumdick, 56 Wis. 23, 13 N. W. 881, is much like ours. The court there held that an agent to purchase property must, in order to bind his principal, who furnishes in advance the funds to make the purchase, buy for cash, unless he has express power to buy upon credit, or unless the custom of the trade is to buy upon credit; and in the absence of such express authority or of such a custom the agent cannot bind his principal by a purchase, upon a credit, from a person who is ignorant of his real authority as between himself and his principal, unless the property so bought is delivered to the latter, and he receives it knowing that his agent actually bought on credit, or that he had no funds in his hands at the time with which to buy the same. See, also, Jaques v. Todd, 3 Wend. 83; Willard v. Buckingham, 36 Conn. 395; Proctor v. Tows, 115 Ill. 138, 3 N. E. 569; Paine v. Tillinghast, 52 Conn. 532; Mechem on Agency, § 864. While these principles seem not to have been seriously questioned by the defendant, he contended that Townsend was not his agent, and that, even if he was, he had been supplied by him with more than sufficient cash with which to buy the lumber afterwards received by the defendant, and that Townsend had no express authority to buy on credit.

In order to present these questions, and have the jury pass upon them, the defendant's counsel requested the court to give certain instructions to the jury; and among others the following one, which was the subject of the defendant's second prayer: "The written contract introduced in evidence constituted Townsend the agent of Westall, with limited authority only. As such agent, Townsend had authority to buy lumber for cash, with money furnished him by Westall, but he did not have authority under said written contract to buy lumber on Westall's credit." We do not see why defendant was not entitled to this instruction. On the face of the contract it appeared that Townsend was directed to buy only for cash, and, this being so, he could not, of course, buy on credit, contrary to the instructions of his principal. Whether the defendant subsequently ratified what he did, and is therefore liable to the plaintiff, is quite another and different question.

The instruction requested in the defendant's sixth prayer was a proper one, and should have been given. It was as follows: "Although the identical lumber in controversy came into possession of defendant, and was appropriated by him, he would not be liable to plaintiff for its value unless he had authorized Townsend to buy on his credit, or accepted and appropriated the lumber with notice of the fact that Townsend had bought it on his [defendant's] credit." The contract expressly required Townsend to buy for cash, and the only possible ground of defendant's liability is that he received and appropriated the lumber to his own use, knowing that his agent had bought it on his credit, or that he had not provided his agent with the cash to buy lumber, in which case the latter had implied authority to buy on credit, and that fact would also be some evidence of notice to defendant that his agent had so bought. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 1021, and notes.

The first and fourth prayers were properly refused, as none of them embraced all of the facts which it was necessary for the jury to find in order to defeat the plaintiff's recovery. They were not complete, but confined only to a single aspect of the case. The instruction asked to be given in the third prayer was not warranted by the state of the evidence. The fifth prayer was substantially given. Indeed, the modification made by the court was virtually but a repetition of the language in the first part of the prayer. The seventh prayer, which was modified, and then given by the court, might well have been refused, as it is subject to the same objection as that already stated to the first and fourth prayers. It restricted the right to recover to only one view of the case, when there were others which should have been considered by the jury. Like the first and fourth prayers, it was too narrow, and therefore misleading. But the amendment of the court wrought no material change in the instruction as it was asked to be given.

With reference to the objections to testimony, we may say generally that the declarations of an agent are not competent to prove the agency. It is only after a prima facie case of agency has once been established that the acts and declarations of the agent can become competent against his alleged principal. Francis v. Edwards, 77 N. C. 271; Gilbert v. James, 86 N. C. 244; Daniel v. Railroad (at this term) 48 S. E. 816. When he is shown to be an agent, his acts and declarations in the course of his employment and within the scope of his agency and while he is engaged in the business (dum ferret opus) are competent, as in that case they are, as it were, the acts and declarations of the principal himself. What he says and does, even while engaged in transacting the business of the agency, is not competent to establish the agency, which is a preliminary fact to be shown before his acts and declarations can be admissible at all. We need not discuss the exceptions to the charge, as they may not be presented again. There was error in the refusal to give the instructions contained in the second and sixth prayers of defendant, for which there must be another trial.

New trial.

(187 N. C. 35)

STATON v. WEBB.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

PLEADING—FORMS OF ACTION—PRAYER FOR RELIEF—MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—RIGHTS OF MORTGAGEE—JUDGMENT CREDITORS OF MORTGAGOR.

1. Under Const. 1868, art. 4, § 1, and Code, § 133, abolishing distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity, and Code, § 233, providing that the complaint shall contain a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, and a demand for the relief to which plaintiff supposes himself entitled, and section 260, providing that the allegations of a pleading shall be liberally construed, an exception to a complaint, that by its form it is "for money had and received," and, as such, cannot be maintained unless the money has been actually received by defendant, is untenable.

2. As between a judgment creditor and the mortgagee, the former is entitled to the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property after the payment of the mortgage debt, with such expenses only as are provided for in the mortgage, or are necessarily incident thereto; and the mortgagor cannot make a subsequent agreement with the mortgagee, giving him the entire proceeds of the sale of the land, to the exclusion of judgment creditors, under the guise of exorbitant commissions.

3. A mortgagee cannot claim an attorney's fee out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property, as against a judgment creditor of the mortgagor, in the absence of proof of authority therefor in the mortgage.

4. Although Code, § 233, provides that the complaint shall contain a demand for the relief to which plaintiff supposes himself entitled, a complaint filed by a judgment creditor of a mortgagor, stating that defendant mortgagee had sold the mortgaged premises for more than enough to pay his debt, and refused to pay the surplus to plaintiff in satisfaction of his docketed judgments, and in which the evident relief, though not stated, was to require defendant to pay over the surplus to plaintiff, was sufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Edgecombe County; Moore, Judge.

Action by H. L. Staton against W. G. Webb. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The following statement of facts, taken from the defendant's brief, substantially states the case: "On February 1, 1896, Joseph Cobb executed to the defendant, Webb, a mortgage deed conveying a tract of land to secure the payment of a note for $1,000, due January 1, 1897, with authority to sell for cash on default in the payment of said note, 'and apply the proceeds of sale to the payment of the note and interest, and the surplus, if any, to the said Joseph Cobb, or to his heirs.' On June 5, 1896, the plaintiff recovered four several judgments against the said Joseph Cobb in a justice's court of said county, and on the same day caused them to be duly docketed in the office of the clerk of the superior court of said county. That the amount due the said Webb on the aforesaid mortgage indebtedness on December 2, 1900, date of sale under said mortgage, was $1,290.16, and the amount due plaintiff on said judgments on that day was $558.57. That the said Webb was unable to secure a cash purchaser for said land. So it was finally agreed between him and the said Cobb that the land should be sold on a credit of three years. That at the same time it was further agreed between said parties that, in consideration of the labor and efforts of the said Webb to find a credit purchaser at a price in excess of the mortgage debt, such excess bid should be applied to an unsecured indebtedness of $800 of the said Cobb to the said Webb. That said land was sold in accordance with said agreement on December 2, 1900, on these terms:

$250 cash; $500 payable December 2, 1901; $500 payable December 2, 1903; and $500 payable December 2, 1904. Deed was made to the purchaser on his making the cash payment, and executing a mortgage on the land to secure the deferred payments. At the time of the mortgage sale and the making of the aforesaid agreement with Cobb, the said Webb had no knowledge of the judgments in favor of the plaintiff. That, of the cash payment of $250, the said Webb disbursed $2.25 for stamps and recording deed to the purchaser, and paid attorneys $20 for preparing the papers between Webb and the purchaser. That Webb has received on said purchase mortgage and notes only the following amounts: $50 October 21, 1901; $50 December 2, 1901; $100 October 6, 1902; and $200 January 6, 1904."

The plaintiff contends that he is entitled to the payment of his judgment debt after satisfaction of the mortgage. The defendant contends that he is also entitled to the payment of his unsecured debt in accordance with his agreement with the mortgagor. The court below adjudged that the defendant was entitled to the balance of the principal and interest of his mortgage debt, together with the necessary expenses of the sale, exclusive of attorney's fees, and that the plaintiff was then entitled to the payment of his judgment debt which exhausted the fund. The court also appointed a receiver, and directed the defendant to turn over to him the unpaid note given for the purchase of the land. The defendant appealed.

Gilliam & Gilliam, for appellant. G. M. T. Fountain, for appellee.

DOUGLAS, J. (after stating the case). The defendant filed three exceptions. The first is that, by the form of the complaint, this is an action for money had and received, and, as such, cannot be maintained unless the money has been actually received by the defendant. This exception cannot be maintained, whatever might have been its merit under the old common-law practice, before the adoption of the Constitution of 1868. Section 1 of article 4 provides that "the distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity, and the forms of all such actions and suits, shall be abolished; and there shall be in this state but one form of action, for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress of private wrongs, which shall be denominated a civil action; and every action prosecuted by the people of the state as a party, against a person charged with a public offense, for the punishment of the same, shall be termed a criminal action. Feigned issues shall also be abolished, and the fact at issue tried by order of court before a jury." Section 133 of the Code is as follows: "The distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity and the forms of all such actions and suits heretofore existing are abolished, and there shall be hereafter but one form of action for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress of private wrongs, which shall be denominated a civil action." Section 233 provides that "the complaint shall contain (1) the title of the cause, specifying the name of the court in which the action is brought, the name of the county in which the trial is required to be had, and the names of the parties to the action, plaintiff and defendant; (2) a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting a cause of action without unnecessary repetition, and each material allegation shall be distinctly numbered; (3) a demand of the relief to which the plaintiff supposes himself entitled; if the recovery of money be demanded, the amount thereof must be stated." Section 260 is as follows: "In the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its effect, its allegations shall be liberally construed with a view of substantial justice between the parties." It is evident from these provisions that the new Code of Civil Procedure was neither a modification nor a simplification of any of the common-law modes of procedure. It practically abolished all the common-law forms of action, and adopted the old equity practice, with some slight modifications; the principal one being that in the code practice the summons precedes the complaint, while in equity the subpoena follows the bill. Wilson v. Moore, 72 N. C. 558. A brief glance at the methods of procedure in actions at law before the adoption of the Code of Civil Procedure will show how complete is the change. In this state the courts followed the practice of the Court of King's Bench in England. Much space and learning were expended upon the nature and requisites of the different pleadings, but in actual practice the method was of the simplest kind. The action was begun by an "original writ" commanding the sheriff to "take the body of C. D. (if to be found in your county) and him safely keep so that you have him before the Justices of our Court of Pleas & Quarter Sessions to be held —, then and there to answer A. B. of a plea of trespass on the case to his damage — dollars." If the action lay in debt or covenant, or any other form of action, the only change made was to insert in lieu of the words "trespass on the case" the words "that he render unto him the sum of — dollars, which he owes to, and unjustly detains from, him," or a "breach of covenant," as the case might be. Eaton's Forms, 44. Under this writ the sheriff took the defendant into custody, unless belonging to some exempted class, such as a woman or an administrator, and held him to bail, or himself became special bail. The plaintiff was supposed to file a declaration, which in fact was rarely if ever done; the mere indorsement of the nature of the action on the back of the writ being deemed a sufficient compliance with the rule in the absence of a specific demand. The defendant was also expected to plead, which was usually done by his counsel merely marking upon the docket the nature of his pleas, in a contracted form. Whatever it may have been in theory, the usual entry was about as follows: "Genl. Issue, Payt. & set-off, Stat. Lim. with leave." The last two words mean leave to plead any other defense that may chance to occur to the pleader, such as nil debit, accord and satisfaction, non est factum, or the like. In ejectment—a form of trespass wherein the general issue was, "Not guilty"—the procedure was more complicated, but even in that action Mr. Eaton feels called on to say: "The practice which prevails in North Carolina of trying actions of ejectment with no declaration on file but that against the casual ejector is very irregular." The force of this remark is apparent when we recall that the casual ejector had no actual existence, being purely a fictitious personage—the airy phantom of judicial imagination. In the old system the principal difficulties lay in deciding upon the proper form of action, and the danger of encountering during the trial some equitable right that could not be adjusted in that court. The fact that the courts of law and equity were held by the same judge at the same place and during the same week did not prevent them from being separate and distinct courts, with subjects of jurisdiction and methods of procedure entirely different. It was to remedy these evils that the new system was adopted. Whether it comes up to the full measure of simplicity claimed for it by its most enthusiastic advocates, we are not entirely prepared to say. We certainly do not desire to make any further complications, and, in furtherance of its essential principles, must overrule the exception.

The second exception is as follows: "That on the issues found by the jury the plaintiff was not entitled to the judgment rendered, for that it is found as facts (issues 5 and 6) that Cobb was indebted to Webb in the sum of $800, and contracted with him that, in consideration of his finding a purchaser for said land at a price in excess of the mortgage debt, such excess should be applied to said unsecured debt." This exception is based exclusively upon the case of Norman v. Hallsey, 132 N. C. 6, 43 S. E. 473, but does not come within its essential principle. In that case it was held that a mortgagee who sells under a mortgage is not liable to a subsequent mortgagee or judgment creditor for the surplus paid by him to the mortgagor, unless he has actual notice thereof before such payment. It does not decide that he can retain any surplus in payment of a further and unsecured indebtedness of his own, which is the case at bar. As between him and the mortgagee, the judgment creditor is entitled to all the surplus proceeds of the sale after the payment of the mortgage debt, with such expenses only as are provided for in the mortgage, or are necessarily incident thereto. We are not aware of any principle that would permit the mortgagor to make a subsequent agreement with the mortgagee by which he could give him the entire proceeds of the sale of the land, to the exclusion of judgment creditors, under the guise of exorbitant commissions.

The third exception was to the refusal of the court below to allow an attorney's fee of $20. The exception cannot be sustained. Turner v. Boger, 128 N. C. 300, 35 S. E. 592, 49 L. R. A. 590. If an attorney's fee cannot be allowed to a disinterested trustee when specially provided for in the deed of trust, we see no reason upon which it can be allowed to a mortgagee without proof of necessity or authority in the mortgage.

In the case at bar the complaint has no prayer for relief, but we think that it sets out the plaintiff's cause of action with sufficient clearness to indicate the proper relief. The complaint alleges that the defendant mortgagee has sold the mortgaged premises for more than enough to pay his debt, and, upon demand, refuses to pay the surplus to the plaintiff in satisfaction of his docketed judgments. As there is no question as to legal exemptions, the evident relief is to require the defendant to pay over the surplus. The fact that the purchase price is in notes, and not in money, compels the intervention of a receiver to carry out the judgment. This is fully as much for the benefit of the defendant as for the plaintiff, as a resale of the land may be necessary, and the defendant would be entitled to the full payment of the principal and interest of his mortgage debt before anything is paid to the plaintiff—if necessary, even to his entire exclusion. It has been repeatedly held by this court that no prayer is necessary where the appropriate relief sufficiently appears from the allegations of the complaint. In Knight v. Houghtalling, 85 N. C. 17, Ruffin, J., speaking for the court, says: "We have not failed to observe that the answer of the defendants contains but a single prayer for relief, and that for a rescission of the contract. But we understand that under the code system the demand for relief is made wholly immaterial, and that it is the case made by the pleadings and facts proved, and not the prayer of the party, which determines the measure of relief to be administered; the only restriction being that the relief given must not be inconsistent with the pleadings and proofs. In other words, the court has adopted the old equity practice, when granting relief under a general prayer, except that now no general prayer need be expressed, but is always implied." In Dempsey v. Rhodes, 93 N. C. 120, Merrimon, J., speaking for the court, says: "Indeed, in the absence of any formal demand for judgment, the court will grant such judgment as the party may be entitled to have, consistent with the pleadings and proofs." See, also, Harris v. Sneed, 104 N. C. 369, 10 S. E. 477; Gattis v. Kilgo, 125 N. C. 133, 34 S. E. 248; Clark's Code, § 233

(8). While a formal prayer for relief may not be necessary, we would, however, advise our brethren of the bar to comply with the express requirements of section 233 of the Code, as there is always a certain element of danger attending experimental pleading.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

(137 N. C. 51)

TROXLER v. NEW ERA BLDG. CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—FRAUD—EVIDENCE—BREACH OF CONTRACT—JUDGMENT.

1. As tending to show that defendants induced plaintiff to sell a part of a tract of land for less than its value by fraudulent representations that a building would be erected on the land sold, making the remainder more valuable, evidence that two corporations organized by defendants to take title to the property were not organized in accordance with statute, and that fraud was practiced on the state in obtaining their charters, was admissible.

2. Where defendants induced plaintiff to convey property to them for less than its value by representations that they would organize a corporation, and erect a building on the land which would enhance the value of the adjacent land still owned by plaintiff, and at the time defendants had no intention to erect, or means for erecting, the building, or reasonable ground to suppose it would be erected, plaintiff was entitled to have the conveyance set aside.

3. Where defendants induced plaintiff to convey to them land for less than its value by agreeing in good faith to erect a building which would make more valuable adjacent land owned by plaintiff, he was not entitled to have the conveyance set aside on defendants' inability to perform their contract, but was only entitled to recover the damages sustained.

4. Where plaintiff sued to rescind a sale of land for fraud, he was not entitled to have the property sold if he should fail to comply with the condition of a decree setting aside the sale on repayment by plaintiff of a part of the price received by him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by G. H. Troxler against the New Era Building Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Plaintiff alleged: That prior to July 31, 1903, he was the owner of a lot in the city of Burlington, on the southeast corner of Main and Davis streets, and on said day he was the owner of other adjoining real estate, and had caused to be erected several small wooden buildings on said lot, which were rented to tenants at a monthly rental; also a livery stable and a dwelling, both of which were rented. That early in the year 1903 he was contemplating the erection, upon the lot first described, of such a building as would be desirable for business firms and corporations of said city, and had partly agreed with a contractor for the erection of such building; his purpose being to render more valuable the property adjacent thereto, owned by him as aforesaid. That, at the suggestion of said contractor, plaintiff saw defendant Murray, who broached the matter of the purchase of the property (being the first described lot) by a corporation known as the New Era Building Company; and the said Murray, acting as agent of said company, requested plaintiff to sell the lot to the company; representing to plaintiff that, if he would do so, the company would at once proceed to have erected a building upon the property. That Murray described said building, and stated that it would be of pressed brick, with solid glass fronts on both Main and Davis streets; that upon the corner was to be a room or rooms which were to be occupied by the Alamance Loan & Trust Company, the leading bank in Burlington, and that upon the first floor, in addition to the bank, were to be three up to date and well-appointed storerooms; that the second floor was to be for lodgerooms and offices; and that the building was to cost from $12,000 to $15,000. Murray represented that the company was able to, and would, have the building erected, and by his statements led the plaintiff to believe that the only thing needed was the procuring of plaintiff's said real property at a low price. That in said conversations Murray's attention was called to the fact that the lot which was owned by plaintiff would be greatly enhanced in value by the erection thereon, and the moving into the vicinity of said bank of merchants, of business men, and the like. That the charter of the corporation of the company showed that it had a subscribed capital stock of $6,000, $1,000 of which was subscribed for by the defendant Murray, $2,000 by defendant Anderson, a man of character and means, and $3,000 by defendant Hay, a man reputed to be worth a considerable sum. By reason of these representations of Murray, acting as agent of defendant company, after much persuasion, plaintiff agreed to sell the property to the building company for $2,000 in cash, $500 in stock in the company, and for the further consideration of the erection upon the lot of the building described by Murray. That, at the time of signing the contract, Murray, representing the company, paid plaintiff the sum of $500 cash, in part of the purchase money; said amount being paid by the check of W. E. Hay, who was consulted by Murray before he closed the trade. Thereafter plaintiff had several conversations with Murray, who said that the company was certainly going to erect a building, and on one occasion he exhibited drawings showing how it would look when completed. That, at the time plaintiff was to convey the property under the contract, Murray stated that the company did not have money in hand to make the cash payment, and defendant Hay asked the plaintiff to take a check payable in 20 days for the balance of the money. Plaintiff asked for his $500 in stock, and was told that it was ready for delivery, but plaintiff never saw or had possession of said stock. Plaintiff asked Murray if the stock was legal and all right, whereupon Hay expressed doubt as to its legality. That, by reason of the representations and inducements as to the financial ability of the company by Hay and Murray, plaintiff was induced to execute a deed for the property to the company for a recited consideration of $2,500, of which he had received $500 in cash; taking the check of Hay, payable in 20 days, for the balance. Between the date of the deed and the time the check became due, the company, without consulting plaintiff and without his knowledge, conveyed the property to a company known as the Piedmont Building Company, organized and promoted by the defendants Murray and Hay, and in which the defendants Holt, Rose, and Mayfield were the charter members, and the consideration of the deed was $3,500. That, at the expiration of 20 days, plaintiff demanded of Murray his stock in defendant company, and was informed by him that there was no such company as the New Era Building Company, but tendered him stock in the Piedmont Building Company, which he refused to take. Murray informed him that he must take this stock, or take the $500, or nothing. Defendant Hay, president of said company, has announced its intention of going out of business, and has had the property advertised for sale. That the New Era Building Company was never legally organized, and did not have three bona fide subscribers to its capital stock. That Anderson did not agree to take $2,000 worth of stock therein, but signed a subscription list agreeing to take $100 stock if, after investigation, he thought it was going to be a valuable investment. That Anderson was told by Murray at the time that it was merely a formal matter, and did not bind him to take stock. That he never had any money. That there was never one cent paid to said company. That all the money it ever had was the amount advanced by the defendant Hay to pay for plaintiff's land. That said company never had any prospect of being able to erect said building. That, by and through the representations of Murray, the deed was procured by fraud and misrepresentation at about one-half the real value of the land. That at the time the conveyance was made the company had no idea of erecting such building as that described by defendant Murray, and was financially unable to erect a building of any kind, and that at that very time it intended to convey the property to the Piedmont Building Company, whose organization had been procured only a few days before by Murray, acting for himself and Hay. That all of these facts were concealed from plaintiff. That the Piedmont Company is in reality the successor of the New Era Company, and was organized to take this property from the latter company to make difficult the procuring of justice by this plaintiff. That those who signed themselves as charter members of the Piedmont Company acted under the same misapprehension and representations as the said Anderson in the New Era Company, and that none of them have ever paid one cent into said company. That W. K. Holt, one of the signers, upon finding out what the company was up to, immediately withdrew from it and refused to have anything more to do with it, and that he was never such a bona fide subscriber to its capital stock as is required by law for the legal procuring of a charter. That the whole matter was a scheme on the part of Murray and Hay to procure the property of plaintiff for a consideration vastly less than its actual value, and, as plaintiff is informed and believes, the true facts were known only to these two of the personal defendants, and the other personal defendants had nothing to do with it, but their names and signatures were sought to give to the transaction the stamp of approval which their names would give, and the use of their names was procured through misapprehension, and by concealing from them the true nature and real purpose of the organization of the said corporations. That the entire interest in said real property is now owned by Hay, and that this was the end which was sought by him and Murray from the beginning. That neither of said companies was properly or legally organized, or capable of taking or holding any real property. That the conveyance of the property by plaintiff was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, and for a totally inadequate consideration. That since the execution of the conveyance the property has been greatly damaged by the removal therefrom of all the buildings formerly located thereon, and by the cutting of the trees situate thereon, and plaintiff has been further damaged by failure to receive any rent therefrom. Plaintiff is ready, willing, and able to pay defendant Hay the whole amount of $2,500, and hereby tenders the same, and prays that the deed may be cancelled.

Defendants denied all charges of fraud and misrepresentation, either in respect to the organization of the several corporations, or procuring the conveyance of the plaintiff's property. They deny that it was not the purpose of the New Era Company to erect the building, or that the building thereof entered into the consideration of the conveyance. They say that the city refused to grant a permit to the company to erect the building. They further say that the property was not at the time of the conveyance worth more than the amount paid therefor. They deny that they refused to issue to the plaintiff the shares of stock in accordance with the contract, but, on the contrary, plaintiff refused to accept the stock.

By leave of court, plaintiff amended his complaint so as to allege "that at and before the time of the execution of the contract to convey, and of the deed conveying, the property hereinbefore described, defendants W. E. Hay and J. W. Murray represented and agreed that they would have erected upon said lot the building hereinbefore described, and that said representation and agreement was held out as and did act as an inducement to said plaintiff to execute said deed and contract, and that said building has never been erected, and that such failure to erect said building has endangered plaintiff in the sum of fifteen hundred dollars," which defendants denied.

The defendants tendered issues which the court declined to submit. Defendants excepted. The court thereupon submitted the following issues: "(1) Was the execution of the contract to sell the land in controversy from Troxler to W. E. Hay and associates, and the deed from Troxler to the New Era Building Company, procured by fraudulent and false representations on the part of said Hay and J. W. Murray? Answer. Yes. (2) Is the Piedmont Building Company a purchaser, for value and without notice, of said property? Ans. No. (3) What damage, if any, has Troxler sustained by the removal of buildings, cutting of trees, and the loss of rent from the property? Ans. $218. (4) Was it agreed by Murray, acting for himself and as agent of Hay, at the time of the execution of the contract, and up to and at the time of the execution of the deed, and as a part of the consideration therefor, that a brick building containing rooms for stores, bank, opera house, and offices should be erected upon said lot? Ans. Yes. (5) Has the building been erected? Ans. No. (6) What damage, if any, has Troxler sustained by reason of the failure to erect the building? Ans. $250. (7) Did Troxler accept $500 in cash in place of the stock in the New Era Building Company? Ans. Yes. (8) What damage, if any, has Troxler sustained by his failure to get said stock? Ans. $200." Defendants excepted, and from a judgment upon the verdict appealed.

J. T. Morehead and G. S. Ferguson, Jr., for appellants. Parker & Parker and W. H. Carroll, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts). This record contains 91 pages, with 22 exceptions, directed to every phase of the case from the amendment of the complaint to the form of the judgment. The case involves not only property rights, but the conduct and character of the parties. It was contested at every point by learned and able counsel. We have given to the exceptions a careful examination and consideration, and will endeavor, as briefly as is consistent with clearness, to give our reasons for the conclusion reached. Both parties submitted a large number of prayers for special instructions, a portion of which were given, and others refused. His honor set aside the verdict on the eighth issue, and an examination of the judgment shows that it is based upon the findings upon the first and second issues. The issues numbered 4 to 7, inclusive, were submitted by his honor to enable him to render a proper judgment if the jury had found for the defendants upon the issue in regard to the alleged fraud, and found that the defendants had broken their contract in regard to the erection of the building. His honor's action in this respect was in accordance with the theory of the code system of practice, by which, upon special findings, the court is enabled to give such judgment, either of a legal or equitable character, as the parties may be entitled to. Under the former system the plaintiff would have been compelled to bring an action at law to recover damages for breach of contract, or, if he wished to avoid the deed for fraud entering into the consideration, file a bill in equity. That legal and equitable causes of action may be joined, and that such judgment may be rendered as will protect the legal and equitable rights of the parties, is well settled. Lee v. Pearce, 68 N. C. 76; Hutchison v. Smith, Id. 354; Bank v. Harris, 84 N. C. 206; Benton v. Collins, 118 N. C. 196, 24 S. E. 122. It is true that the plaintiff does not, as good pleading would suggest, state separately his several causes of action; but if, upon the facts stated, the court can see that more than one cause of action is stated, it will submit such issues as are raised by the pleadings. In this case, the jury having found the first issue for the plaintiff, the other findings, except the second, become immaterial. It therefore becomes unnecessary to discuss the exceptions pointed to rulings of the court which apply only to the other issues. The exceptions in regard to the issues and the amendments of the complaint cannot be sustained. The exceptions to the evidence tending to show that the New Era and the Piedmont companies were not organized in accordance with the statute, and that a fraud was practiced upon the state in procuring the charters, cannot be sustained. It was not offered for the purpose of attacking or invalidating the charters. This could not be done collaterally. Railroad v. Newton, 133 N. C. 132, 45 S. E. 549. It was competent upon the first issue, as tending to sustain the charge of fraud and misrepresentation.

The contention of the plaintiff is that, by a series of acts and declarations, the defendants Murray and Hay procured the title to his property; that the formation of the corporation constituted a part of what is called a scheme to accomplish their purpose. It is elementary learning that, in the trial of an issue of fraud, much latitude is allowed, and any fact which tends to show the intent of the parties is relevant and competent. Ruffin, J., in Knight v. Houghtalling, 85 N. C. 17, says: "Fraud rarely lurks in the written agreement of the parties entered into at the end of their negotiations with each other, but almost universally precedes it; and, consisting, as it must necessarily do in such a case, of acts and declarations merely, it can only be exposed by allowing the conduct of the parties, their words and deeds, throughout the entire treaty, to be shown to the jury." The declarations of Murray were clearly competent. The defendant Hay cannot take advantage of his negotiations leading up to the conveyance without assuming the burden incident thereto. There is evidence for the consideration of the jury that Hay knew of and ratified Murray's promise to have the building erected. Lee v. Pearce, supra. There was evidence fit to be submitted to the jury upon the first issue. The only question, therefore, for our consideration, is whether there was error in the instructions given, or in refusing to give those requested.

His honor, at the request of the defendants, instructed the jury as follows: "The jury are instructed that on the first issue the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff, and he must satisfy you by the preponderance of the evidence that the execution of the deed and contract was procured by false and fraudulent representations of Hay and Murray; and unless the jury find from the evidence that, at the time the representations were made, there was no intention or purpose on the part of the New Era Building Company to erect the building described in the complaint on the lot mentioned therein, then the representations were not false and fraudulent, and the jury will answer the first issue 'No.'" And at the request of the plaintiff as follows: "If you find from the evidence that at the time of the execution of the contract to Hay and associates, and up to and at the time of the execution of the deed to the New Era Building Company, Murray and Hay represented and agreed that they would erect a building of the kind referred to in the written contract on said property, and that the erection of the building was held out to and accepted by Troxler as a part of the consideration moving and inducing him to execute the contract and deed, then I charge you to answer the fourth issue 'Yes.' If you should find from the evidence that, at the time of the execution of the contract to convey the property, Murray represented that a company could and would be formed which could and would erect said building, when it was not in fact intended to form a company for that purpose, but that the whole matter was a scheme to get the title to this property out of the hands of Troxler, and if you should further find that such representation moved Troxler to execute the contract, then I charge you to answer the first issue 'Yes.' If you should find from the evidence that, at the time of the execution of the contract, Murray represented that a company could and would be formed which could and would erect said building, when in fact he did not know, and had no reasonable ground to believe, such to be the fact, and that this whole matter was being worked to get the title to the property out of the hands of Troxler, and if you should further find that such representations moved and induced Troxler to execute the contract, then I charge you to answer the first issue 'Yes.' If you should find from the evidence that, at the time of the execution of the contract to convey the property, it was represented that a company could and would be formed which could and would erect the building thereon, when in fact it was never intended to organize such a company, but that the whole matter was a scheme to get the title to this property into the hands of W. E. Hay, and if you should further find that such representations moved Troxler to execute the contract, then I charge you to answer the first issue 'Yes.'" The instructions given are amply sustained by the text-writers and opinions of this and other courts. If, as the jury find, the plaintiff was induced by the representation and promise of Murray, representing the proposed corporation, that a building was to be erected thereon which would enhance the value of his other property, and at the time of making the representation and of accepting the deed the parties did not intend to erect, and had no means for erecting, such a building, or if Murray made the representation, having no reasonable ground to believe that such was the intention, and the purpose of Murray and Hay was by this means to get the title to the property, he is entitled to relief in a court of equity. If, having an honest purpose to carry out their contract, the defendants obtained title to the lot, and were thereafter unable to do so, the extent of the plaintiff's remedy would have been such damages as he sustained by the breach of the contract. It must be conceded that it would be difficult to fix the measure of such damages. Mere speculative damages could not have been recovered. The fraud consists in the fact found by the jury that the defendants, at the time of making the representation and promise which constituted the inducement to make the deed, did not intend to make good such representation and promise. It has been frequently held that, when personal property has been obtained by such means, the vendor may recover his goods. Des Farges v. Pugh, 93 N. C. 31, 53 Am. Rep. 446; Hill v. Gettys, 135 N. C. 373, 47 S. E. 449. It is equally well settled that a court of equity will cancel a deed obtained by such means. The charge fully and clearly presents the case in all of its aspects. His honor properly told the jury to answer the second issue in the negative if they answered the first for the plaintiff.

The judgment directs the reconveyance of the property upon the payment by the plaintiff to the defendants of the amount received by him, less the sum of $216 assessed by the jury as damages, etc., in response to the third issue. This we think correct, and is what the plaintiff expresses his readiness to do. The judgment further directs the sale of the property if the amount is not paid by a day fixed. The equity invoked by the plaintiff is rescission. He is entitled to be put back in his original position in respect to his property, as near as may be. We do not think that he is entitled to have a sale. In this respect the judgment should be modified. Affirmed.

(137 N. C. 43)

SMITH et al. v. JOHNSON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

BOUNDARIES—ESTABLISHMENT UNDER SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—NONSUIT—TRIAL.

1. Acts 1893, p. 44, c. 22, provides that the owner of land may have boundary in dispute established by filing a petition, etc.; that the clerk of the superior court shall issue an order according to the contention of both parties, and make report of the same, with a map; and that occupancy by petitioner shall be sufficient evidence of ownership. Held that, plaintiff having testified that he was in possession of the land "described on the map," it would be presumed on appeal to the Supreme Court, in the absence of any map that plaintiff referred to the same land referred to in the judgment of the clerk, and hence it was error to have granted defendant a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff had not shown ownership.

2. Acts 1893, p. 44, c. 22, provides that the owner of land may have any boundary in dispute established by filing a petition, etc., that the cause shall be heard by the clerk of the superior court; that occupancy of land by the petitioner shall be sufficient evidence of ownership, and an appeal is given to the superior court. Held, that where defendants denied the allegation of the complaint, setting forth the lines as claimed by them, and denied plaintiff's ownership, and on the filing of the answer the clerk directed a survey and adjudged the true line, and defendants appealed to the superior court, the question as to the location and as to ownership was for the jury.

3. On appeal from a judgment of nonsuit the testimony must be taken most favorably to plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alexander County; Neal, Judge.

Special proceedings by W. P. Smith and others against Taylor Johnson and others under Acts 1893, p. 44, c. 22, to establish a boundary line. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

This is a special proceeding under chapter 22, p. 44, Acts 1893, to establish a boundary line, begun before the clerk of the superior court of Alexander county. The plaintiffs alleged that they were the owners of certain land, fully described, and that the defendants were the owners of adjoining land, and that the dividing line between the land of the plaintiffs and defendants was in dispute; the plaintiffs setting out their contention, and asking that a survey be ordered, and the true line established, in accordance with the provisions of the statute. The de-defendants deny the material allegations of the complaint, and set forth the lines of the land claimed by them. They deny that plaintiffs own any land adjoining them. They also allege that they and their ancestors have been in possession of the land claimed by them under known and visible boundaries for more than 50 years. Upon the filing of the answer the clerk directed a survey to be made showing the contentions of both parties. Pursuant to the order, the surveyor duly filed his report, setting forth that he had surveyed the lines in controversy. He sets out in detail the several lines showing by a map the contention of each party. The report is clearly and intelligently made. The clerk thereupon heard the cause upon the report, hearing evidence and argument of counsel, and adjudged that the plaintiffs are entitled to the line in controversy established as asked for in their petition, and on the report of the surveyor he adjudged the true line to be from the points set out in his judgment as indicated on the map, and ordered that the county surveyor go upon the lands, and mark and establish the line as located by him. From this judgment the defendants appealed. The case came on for trial in the superior court upon said appeal. The "case" on appeal states that, "After reading the pleadings as set forth in the record upon issues submitted as shown by the record, the plaintiffs introduced the following evidence." Following this statement the evidence is set out in full, whereupon the following judgment was rendered: "At the conclusion of the plaintiffs' evidence the defendants moved for a nonsuit against the plaintiffs, for that in no aspect of the case on the plaintiffs' evidence, when the plaintiffs rested, were plaintiffs entitled to the relief demanded. After argument on both sides upon this motion to nonsuit the plaintiffs and the whole record, it is considered and adjudged by the court that the motion of the defendants to nonsuit the plaintiffs is sustained." From this judgment the plaintiffs appealed.

McIntosh & Burke, for appellants.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). Neither the record nor the case on appeal states upon what ground the motion for judgment of nonsuit was based, and we are not favored with any argument or brief on the part of the defendants. The plaintiffs' brief states that the following issue was submitted to the jury: "What is the true boundary line between plaintiffs and defendants?" Chapter 22, p. 44, Acts 1893, provides: "That the owner of land, any of whose boundary lines are in dispute, may establish said line or lines by special proceedings. * * * The owner shall file his petition stating facts sufficient to constitute the location of said line or lines and making defendants all adjoining owners whose interest may be affected by the location of said line. If the answer deny the location set out in the petition, the clerk shall issue an order according to the contention of both parties and make report of the same with a map. * * * The cause shall then be heard by the clerk and judgment given determining the location thereof." Provision is made for an appeal. This court said in Williams v. Hughes, 124 N. C. 3, 32 S. E. 325: "We do not think it was intended to try title to land under this statute, but to procession, locate, and establish the lines between adjacent land-owners. It gives the right to the owners of the land, and provides that the occupancy of land by the petitioner shall be sufficient evidence of ownership to entitle the petitioner to relief under this act." In that case the issues were confined to the ownership of the land by the plaintiff, and the inquiry whether the true boundary lines between the plaintiff and defendant were those set out in the complaint. The court, referring to the issue, said: "And for this purpose it seems to us that it would be better to broaden the second issue by allowing the jury to locate the boundary line, whether it was where the petitioner alleged it to be or not." The two questions presented by the record in this case, both of which should have been submitted to the jury, are, first, whether the plaintiffs were the owners of the land described in the complaint; and, second, what was the true dividing line between them and the defendants? There was certainly some evidence to go to the jury upon the first question. The plaintiffs testified that they were in possession of the land described on the map. In the absence of any map, we must assume that they referred to the same land which is referred to in the judgment of the clerk. If the jury found that the plaintiffs were the owners, and for that purpose it was sufficient to show that they were in the occupancy of the land, the only question for them to determine was the location of the true boundary line between the plaintiffs and defendants. In Williams v. Hughes, supra, the court charged the jury "that upon all the evidence they could say where the line was." This instruction was approved by this court. The purpose of this special proceeding, as set forth in the statute, and frequently held by this court, is not to try the title to the land, but only to ascertain the boundary lines. Midgett v. Midgett, 129 N. C. 21, 39 S. E. 722; Van Dyke v. Farris, 126 N. C. 744, 36 S. E. 171—in which it is expressly held that the title was not in issue, the court saying that by pursuing the provisions of the act the lines between the parties may be established, but this did not prohibit either party from asserting his rights to the title of the same land; the chief justice saying, "What benefit the act confers to the citizen it is not our province to say." In Parker v. Taylor, 133 N. C. 104, 45 S. E. 473, it is held that the judgment of the clerk determining the location of the line is conclusive upon parties and privies to the action. It would seem that from what is said by the present chief justice in that case that upon the issue raised by the answer upon the plaintiffs' first allegation the cause should have been transferred to the superior court for trial as in other cases of special proceeding. If the jury had found that the plaintiffs were the owners of the land described in their complaint, the case would have been remanded, with direction to the clerk to proceed to have the line in dispute settled; if they were not the owners, the proceeding should have been dismissed. As the clerk proceeded to direct the survey before trying the issue, and the whole cause, without objection, went to the superior court upon appeal, the two questions should have been tried there before the jury. We presume that this was his honor's view, and that in his opinion the plaintiffs failed to show ownership or occupancy of the land claimed by them. Without the benefit of a map, it is impossible for us to see exactly how the matter was; but, as the judgment is of nonsuit, the testimony must be taken most favorably for the plaintiffs. We assume that in saying, "I am in possession of the land on plat, blue 1-2-3-4-to 1," he referred to the land described in his complaint. While in many cases the judgment of nonsuit, where it clearly appears that in no aspect of the testimony the plaintiff is entitled to recover, is proper, it is the better practice to submit the questions raised by the pleadings to the jury under proper instructions, so that a verdict may be rendered settling the matters in controversy.

We think, upon examination of the entire record, that there was error in the judgment of nonsuit. There was some evidence to go to the jury upon the question of ownership evidenced by occupancy. Let it be so certified.

Error.

(137 N. C. 79)

SMITH v. BRUTON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

MARRIED WOMEN—CONVEYANCES OF REAL ESTATE—MODE—SUBMISSION TO ARBITRATION—PLEADING—DENIALS IN REPLY.

1. In an action to recover possession of a tract of land, defendants alleged that plaintiff, a married woman, had been abandoned by her husband, and had agreed to arbitrate the title to the land; that the arbitration was had; and that the award, by which title was adjudged to be in others than plaintiff, was made a judgment of the court. Plaintiff, in her reply, said that she had not been abandoned by her husband, "as alleged in the answer." Held that, conceding that plaintiff's reply was not sufficient to amount to a denial of the charge of abandonment, the question was nevertheless in issue, as defendants' answer did not constitute a counterclaim, and a reply thereto was unnecessary under Code, § 268, providing that an allegation of new matter in the answer, not relating to a counterclaim, is to be deemed controverted as upon a direct denial or avoidance as the case may require.

2. The fact that a married woman admitted in an agreement to arbitrate the title to land owned by her that she was a citizen of this state, and in a declaration made by her to become a free trader stated that her husband was a citizen of Arizona, did not show that she had a right to convey her land by deed under Code, § 1832, authorizing women abandoned or turned out of doors by their husbands to convey their real estate without their husbands' consent.

3. A married woman can be bound, as to her land, only by her deed duly executed, with the written assent of her husband, and with her privy examination, or by the judgment or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction.

4. While, under Code, § 178, a married woman may, without the joinder of her husband, sue to settle the title to her separate real estate, and would be estopped by a judgment rendered against her, yet she cannot, in view of Const. art. 10, § 8, authorizing a married woman to convey real estate "with the written assent of her husband," submit the question of title to lands owned by her to arbitration.

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Montgomery County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by Melissa A. Smith against J. O. Bruton and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellant. Adams, Jerome & Armfield and H. M. Robins, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of a tract of land of which she claims to be the owner. The defendants contest her claim on the grounds, first, that they and those under whom they claim have been in possession of the same for 50 years; and, second, that the plaintiff, before this suit was brought, had entered into an agreement with Adelaide Kron and Elizabeth Kron, who claimed title to the land, to enter into an arbitration to have settled the title thereto; that the arbitration was had, and an award made and returned to court, in which the title to the property was adjudged to be in Adelaide and Elizabeth Kron; that the award was made a judgment of the court, and that the plaintiff is estopped by that award and judgment from claiming the land. In their answer the defendants further averred that, although the plaintiff was a married woman at the time of the submission of her case for arbitration, and has since that time been continuously a married woman, yet that she had been abandoned by her husband at the time she entered into the agreement, and had not been living with him for more than 10 years, and has not since lived with him; that she was at that time, and has ever since been, a free trader. In her reply the plaintiff said that she had not been abandoned by her husband, "as alleged in the answer."

The main question in the case, then, is,

can a married woman, without joinder of her husband, consent to have the title to her real estate determined by the award of arbitrators? The defendants contend, however, that it will not be necessary to decide that question in this case. Their counsel insist that that statement in her reply wherein she says that her husband has not abandoned her, "as alleged in the answer," is not such denial of the defendants' averment as is required by the Code, and that, therefore, it is to be taken as true that her husband had abandoned her, by her own admission; and that, that being so, she had a right not only to consent to the arbitration, but even to convey the land by deed without the written assent of her husband, if she wished to do so. If it should be conceded that the plaintiff's reply, in the respect complained of, was not sufficient to amount to a denial of the charge of abandonment by her husband, yet it is to be remembered that no reply on that question on the part of the plaintiff was necessary. The matter averred on the part of the defendants was not a counterclaim, and was deemed to be controverted by the plaintiff as upon a direct denial or avoidance. Code, § 268. The arbitrators in their award had nothing to say about whether or not the plaintiff had been abandoned by her husband. They declared that she was a married woman during the period of the arbitration and award, and had children; and the court held that she was estopped in the present action by the judgment rendered in the superior court upon the award of the arbitrators.

The defendants further contend that, as the plaintiff admitted in the agreement to arbitrate that she was a citizen of this state, and in her declaration to become a free trader she stated that her husband was a citizen of Arizona, she had the right to convey her land by deed under express decisions of this court, and therefore, if she had a right to convey the land by deed, she would have a right to submit to arbitration the settlement of her title. But the decisions of this court which counsel rely upon do not sustain their position. We were referred to Hall v. Walker, 118 N. C. 380, 24 S. E. 6, and Levi v. Marsha, 122 N. C. 565, 29 S. E. 832. In the first-mentioned case the court said: "The sole question is whether section 1832 of the Code was constitutional." That section is as follows: "Every woman whose husband shall abandon her or shall maliciously turn her out of doors shall be deemed a free trader, so far as to be competent to contract and be contracted with, and to bind her separate property, * * * and she shall have power to convey her personal property and her real estate without the assent of her husband." In the case just above referred to the plaintiff's husband had deserted and abandoned her for five years, had been continuously out of the state, had not been seen or heard from by the wife, and he had in no way contributed to the support of herself or her family. In the case before us there was no such evidence offered, and no finding by the arbitrators in their award of abandonment or desertion, failure to support, or cruelty on the part of the husband. In Levi v. Marsha, supra, the husband resided in Syria, and had never been in the United States, either as a resident or as a visitor. The wife contracted a debt with the plaintiff, and the sole question was whether she was liable on her personal contract. A married woman in North Carolina can be bound as to her land in only two ways—by her deed duly executed, with the written assent of her husband, and with her privy examination, or by the judgment or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction. As to the requirements of the first method, the decisions of this court are very numerous, and we will only mention those of Scott v. Battle, 85 N. C. 184, 39 Am. Rep. 694; Farthing v. Shields, 106 N. C. 289, 10 S. E. 998, and Smith v. Ingram, 130 N. C. 100, 40 S. E. 984, 61 L. R. A. 878, and as to the latter method the cases of Green v. Branton, 16 N. C. 500; Smith v. Ingram, supra. But it may be asked, does not the present case fall within the decisions of the two last-mentioned cases? Was there not a judgment and decree against the plaintiff in a court which had jurisdiction of her person and of her property, and, if so, was she not bound by that decision and judgment? Undoubtedly, a married woman would have the right, under section 178 of the Code, to bring an action, without the joinder of her husband, to have settled the title or any right connected with her separate real estate, and if, upon the regular trial and disposition of that suit, a judgment or decree of the court should be rendered against her, she would be bound by it, and the judgment would be thereafter a matter of estoppel by record in any subsequent claim she might make to the property. The reason for that is that the married woman's interests are under the eye of the court, and its judgment or decree is based upon the law as it is written and applied to the conditions and facts brought out and developed in the case. In an arbitration the matter is entirely different. Arbitrators are not bound to make their award according to law, nor are they bound to weigh the evidence; and the court will make a judgment of the award, if it is regular on its face, and there are no evidences of fraud, without any inquiry as to how the arbitrators arrived at their conclusion. So it is perfectly evident that if a married woman could dispose of her real estate, without the joinder of her husband, by submitting her title to arbitrators, that part of section 6, art. 10, of the Constitution, which ordains that a married woman, with the written assent of her husband, may convey her real estate, would be a dead letter. If such were the law, married women, from design or by means of fraud and deceit, might by arbitration be deprived of their real estate, and the husband deprived of his rights therein before he had knowledge of the matter, or the power to prevent it in either case. If a married woman could dispose of her real estate through arbitration, she would be enabled by an indirect method to do that which the Constitution and the laws prohibit, and that will never be allowed. That the plaintiff was a free trader can make no difference. As we have said, there are only two ways by which a married woman can dispose of her real estate—one by deed, with the written assent of her husband, with her privy examination, and the other by decree or judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. However, the question of the right of a free trader to charge her separate estate does not arise in this case, for the record shows that the matter involved here did not concern any transaction other than the settlement of the ownership of the land. It does not appear that she had any creditors or owed any debts.

We omitted to state in the beginning of this opinion that the defendant's counsel state in their brief that the appellant has filed no exceptions to the judgment of the court below. The plaintiff took a nonsuit after an intimation of his honor that she was estopped by the award and judgment. We do not understand how this statement crept into the brief of the defendants. We know, however, that it was an inadvertence. There was a statement in the judgment that the nonsuit was taken by the plaintiff because of his honor's intimation, and from the judgment the plaintiff appealed. Besides, the assignment of error (and there is only one) is in these words: "That the court erred in holding that the record set up in the answer was res adjudicata, or an estoppel against the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff could not recover upon the admission of the plaintiff that she could not recover if such record did constitute an estoppel or res adjudicata."

Reversed.

WALKER, J., took no part in the decision of this case.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). This is an action for the recovery of land. The only exception in the record is to the ruling of the court that a former judgment between the same parties for the same cause of action is an estoppel upon the plaintiff in this action. The plaintiff brought an action for the recovery of a tract of land heretofore, and in its prosecution she submitted to an arbitration as a rule of court, which embraced also the subject-matter of this action. In that action it was adjudged in the superior court at spring term, 1891, after reciting both matters in controversy as stated in the agreement therein to arbitrate under rule of court "that the plaintiff take nothing by this action, and judgment is rendered against plaintiff" for costs. The award was made by Marmaduke S. Robins and S. J. Pemberton, with Kerr Craige, umpire, and was approved by the court, without objection from her. She could hardly have suffered any injustice; but, if so, she should have objected then, not now.

The Code, § 178 (1), provides, "When the action concerns her separate property, she [a married woman] may sue alone." This action concerns the plaintiff's separate property, and she brought the former action (as she also brings this) without joining her husband. "If she may sue, she must be bound by a judgment in her favor; if it is against her, she must be bound by it also." Herman on Estoppel, § 174. In the former action she entered into an agreement of arbitration, the award to be a rule of court, and upon the coming in of the award judgment was entered thereon as above stated, the plaintiff making no exception nor taking any appeal. As she was a party to the action alone and sui juris then (as she is now) by virtue of the statute, she is bound by orders in the cause assented to by her or not excepted to, and especially by the final judgment, which referred to and adjudged the finding of the arbitrators. If she had any objection to the award either for misconduct of arbitrators or any alleged incapacity in her, a party to the action, to consent thereto, she was certainly under no incapacity to raise that objection then to judgment being entered thereon; and, not having done so, she is bound by the judgment like any other person bringing an action in her own right. If she was not bound by the arbitration and award, she was in court, and should have said so. She is certainly bound by the judgment thereon. When that judgment was interposed as a bar to this action, the court properly held that the judgment was an estoppel, "it being admitted that these lands are the same lands described in the plaintiff's complaint in the former action"; thus recognizing the agreement to arbitrate as an amended complaint, which it was in effect. A judgment cannot be thus collaterally attacked. The plaintiff should bring a direct action to set the former judgment aside; and though, in such action, a prayer for recovery of the land might be joined, there is in this complaint no allegation impeaching the former judgment; nor, indeed, any reference, even, thereto.

Objection is made that the former action, as originally brought, did not embrace this cause of action. But this, as well as the other cause of action, concerned only her separate property, and she could have sued for this as well as that without joining her husband. Code, § 178 (1). She could have put both into the complaint when first stating her cause of action. By leave of court or by consent of parties the complaint could have been amended to embrace it. This was, in effect, done when both parties in a written agreement set out the matters in controversy referred by them to the arbitrators under rule of court. This, as to parties sui juris, would certainly be conclusive as to all matters embraced in such agreement, award, and judgment thereon, for after judgment it cannot be objected that no complaint at all was filed. Robeson v. Hodges, 105 N. C. 50, 11 S. E. 263; and numerous other cases cited in Clark's Code (3d Ed.) p. 190. Here the agreement in writing carefully recited the matters in controversy, as did the award which was approved by the judgment of the court. As to this matter, which is an action concerning her separate property, the feme plaintiff is made sui juris, and authorized to "sue alone" without joining her husband (Code, § 178 [1]), and hence is bound by the judgment as fully as any one else who is authorized to sue.

The formerly prevailing notion of the inferiority of married women to femes sole was based upon the fact that originally wives were bought, or captured in war, and were chattels. Shakespeare, who usually stated the English law of his time with accuracy, makes Petruchio say of his wife:

"She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house,
My household stuff, my field, my barn,
My horse, my ox, my ass, my anything."

But in England any distinction between the property or other rights of a married woman and her single sister has long since been abolished, root and branch, as has been done in the English colonies, and in most of the states of this Union. In this state the distinction as to property rights between femes sole and femes covert was abolished by the Constitution of 1868, art. 10, § 6, save that as to conveyances of realty by a married woman the written assent of the husband was required. Vann v. Edwards, 135 N. C. 661, 47 S. E. 784. It should be noted that this requirement is not any lingering idea of the inferiority of married women to single ones, or intended as a protection for a half-emancipated class, but is a provision for the exactly opposite purpose of protecting the husband's courtesy (if not abolished by legislation), and is merely a correlative of the wife's joining in the husband's conveyances to bar dower. Accordingly the statute empowers a woman to sue alone for her separate property, and the statute of limitations runs against her if she does not sue. Thus she was sui juris in the former litigation, competent to amend her complaint by the recital of any additional matters she wished to be passed upon, and bound by the judgment upon the award. By no process of reasoning, nor of metaphysics, nor stretch of imagination, can a judgment against the plaintiff in an action of ejectment be called a "conveyance" (unless collusion was charged and shown). The wife must join in conveyances of the husband to bar dower; but, if he suffer an adverse judgment in an action to recover land, the judgment is not invalid because she is not a party to the action. This case is stronger, for the wife is expressly empowered by statute to sue alone. Even if the judgment had been broader than the complaint, or if there had been no complaint, the judgment, unappealed from, was binding upon her as upon any one else authorized to bring an action. This court has often so held. Here the judgment was obtained in an action brought by the married woman. This court has often held that a married woman is bound by a judgment, even when she is brought into court as a defendant and against her will. In Vick v. Pope, 81 N. C. 22, Smith, C. J., says that, where a husband and wife are sued jointly, it is the duty of the husband to set up the wife's disability, and, if he fail to do so, the wife cannot have the judgment against her set aside on the ground of her incompetency to contract. He says that a judgment against a married woman, appearing in the suit by counsel of her husband's selection, is as binding as one against any other person, unless it be obtained by the fraudulent combination of the husband with the adverse litigant. He pertinently added at page 26: "If it were otherwise, how could a valid judgment ever be obtained against a married woman, and how could her liability be tested? If she is disabled from resisting a false claim, how can she prosecute an action for her own benefit, when nothing definite is determined by the result? It is no sufficient answer to say that the defendant's execution of the note with her husband did not bind her. The judgment conclusively establishes the obligation, and such facts must be assumed to exist as warranted its rendition, inasmuch as neither coverture nor any other defense was set up in opposition to defeat it. As, then, a married woman may sue, and, with her husband, be sued on contracts, they, and each of them, must at the proper time resist the recovery as other defendants, and their failure to do so must be attended with the same consequences." This case has often been cited with approval on this point; among many other cases, in Jones v. Cohen, 82 N. C. 80; Grantham v. Kennedy, 91 N. C. 156; Williamson v. Hartman, 92 N. C. 242; Neville v. Pope, 95 N. C. 351; Wilcox v. Arnold, 116 N. C. 711, 21 S. E. 434; Strother v. Railroad, 123 N. C. 198, 31 S. E. 386. This is a stronger case, for here the plaintiff brought the former action sui juris, as authorized by the statute. She selected her own counsel, agreed to the arbitration as a rule of court, and made no objection to the judgment upon the award, which she was fully as competent to do in that action as she is in this, which is likewise brought by her suing alone. In the former proceeding the court unquestionably had jurisdiction, and, if there was any defect, it was by error in entering judgment upon the award, and that was cured by failing to object and appeal. Neville v. Pope, 95 N. C. 346. In Vick v. Pope, supra, Smith, C. J., cites as authority Taylor, C. J., in Frazier v. Felton, 8 N. C. 231, and Green v. Branton, 16 N. C. 504, in which the elder Ruffin says: "Married women are barred by judgments at law as much as other persons, with the sole exception of judgments allowed by the fraud of the husband in combination with another. * * * She must charge and prove that she was prevented from a fair trial at law by collusion between her adversary and her husband preceding or at the trial." In Neville v. Pope, supra, judgment had been taken against a married woman before a justice of the peace, and it was (unlike this) a direct action to set aside the judgment, the plaintiff laying stress upon Dougherty v. Sprinkle, 88 N. C. 800, in which it had been held that such action could not be maintained; but that ground was overruled. Judge Merrimon, following the three chief justices above named (Taylor, Ruffin, and Smith), and speaking for a unanimous court (Smith, C. J., and Ashe, J.), said: "It may be that if the plaintiff in this case had made defense, pleaded her coverture, and had appealed from the adverse judgment given against her, she would have been successful. But she did not make defense at all, and, as there was judgment against her according to the course of the court, it must be treated as conclusive that the cause of action and the facts were such as warranted the judgment." In Grantham v. Kennedy, supra, the same learned court said: "Married women and infants are estopped by judgments in actions to which they are parties in the same manner as persons sui juris." Yet in none of the above cases did the married woman waive her coverture, but, being in court, and not excepting to the judgment, she was held bound by it. But here the plaintiff went further, and voluntarily went into court, waiving her coverture by suing alone, as the statute authorized her to do, and as she is doing in this present action. This is not a motion to set aside the former judgment for excusable neglect or mistake, nor for irregularity, nor is it an action to impeach it for fraud. The judgment was taken according to due course upon an arbitration entered as a rule of court, signed by the plaintiff, and judgment was entered upon the award without objection from her or her counsel. After an acquiescence of nine years, this new action is brought for the same land whose title had been adjudicated by the former judgment. As our adjudications are uniform that "married women and infants are estopped by judgments in actions to which they are parties in the same manner as persons sui juris" (Grantham v. Kennedy, and other cases cited supra), his honor below correctly so held.

(108 Va. 314)

BURWELL v. BURWELL et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 8, 1904.)

PARENT AND CHILD—CONTRACTS—PRESUMPTION OF VALIDITY—BURDEN OF PROOF—ESTATES OF DECEDENTS—RENTAL VALUE OF LANDS—CHARGE TO OCCUPANT—ACCOUNTING—SET-OFF.

1. Where a mother gave her son a bond for services rendered, as her agent, under an agreement which had been terminated, there was no such confidential relation existing between the mother and son as to raise any presumption of invalidity, and the burden of showing that the son had procured the bond by fraud or undue influence was on the one attacking it.

2. Where a son cultivated the lands of his mother under an agreement with her that he was to receive a certain portion of the crops, as between the son and the estate of the mother, it was error to charge him for the rental value of the lands after the mother's death without giving him an opportunity to show what taxes and other proper charges he was entitled to have set off against the use of the land.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Franklin County (Saunders, Judge, not sitting).

Action by one Burwell against the estate of Mary E. Burwell, deceased. Judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Dillard & Lee, for appellant. S. & M. Griffin, for appellees.

BUCHANAN, J. The appellant instituted a creditor's suit against the estate of his mother, Mary E. Burwell, deceased. His claim was evidenced by a bond for $4,000, given, as stated in the bond, for services rendered his mother from January 1, 1869, until December 31, 1876, under a contract between the appellant and his mother for the management of her farm and business. That agreement was terminated by the mother at the expiration of the year 1876, and the appellant, who was unmarried, afterwards and until her death, in the year 1897, remained with her under an arrangement between them, by which he was to cultivate her lands, and each receive a certain portion of the crops.

The bond of the appellant was executed, as appears from its date, on May 14, 1884. The defense chiefly relied on to defeat the appellant's recovery is that he did not keep and perform his agreement with his mother, and was therefore not entitled to the compensation therein provided for, and for which the bond was given, and that he procured the execution of the bond by false representations to, and improper or undue influence over, her.

Upon a hearing of the cause the circuit court disallowed his claim. From that decree this appeal was allowed.

The appellant insists that the circuit court erred in holding that such confidential relations existed between him and his mother, when the bond was executed, as imposed upon him the duty of showing that its execution was procured in good faith after a full disclosure of all the facts and circumstances affecting the transaction, and in the absence of all undue influence.

There are certain relations in life, which, from the peculiar confidence necessarily subsisting, courts of equity feel bound to guard and protect. These are guardian and ward, trustee and cestui que trust, attorney and client, principal and agent, parent and child, and the like. Transactions between persons occupying such confidential relations are viewed with jealous vigilance by courts of equity. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. §§ 307-323.

While the natural and just influence which a parent has over a child renders it peculiarly important for courts to watch over and protect the interests of the latter, and to set aside contracts and conveyances whereby benefits are secured by children to their parents, if they are not entered into with scrupulous good faith, and are not reasonable under the circumstances, the same rule does not apply where contracts and conveyances are made by which benefits are secured by the parent to the children. Instead of such contracts and conveyances being guarded with a jealous eye, they will generally be presumed to be free from suspicion, and the party who claims that they were procured by undue influence must generally prove it.

Mr. Pomeroy says, in discussing the transactions between parent and child, that: "A child is presumed to be under the exercise of parental influence as long as the dominion of the parent lasts. Whilst that dominion lasts it lies upon the parent maintaining the gift to disprove the exercise of parental influence by showing that the child had independent advice, or in some other way. When the parental influence is disproved, or that influence has ceased, a gift from a child stands upon the same footing as any other gift, and the question to be determined is whether there was a deliberate, unbiased intention on the part of the child to give to the parent. Where the positions of the two parties are reversed—where the parent is aged, infirm, or otherwise in a condition of dependence upon his own child, and the child occupies a corresponding relation of authority—conveyances conferring benefits upon the child may be set aside. Cases of this kind turn plainly upon the exercise of actual undue influence, and not upon any presumption of invalidity. A gift from parent to child is certainly not presumed to be invalid." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 962. And a fortiori there is no such presumption as to a contract based upon a valuable consideration.

In the case of Greer v. Greer, 9 Grat. 332, a man in extreme old age conveyed the whole of his estate to one of his sons, and this court held that, as he had sufficient capacity to understand what he was doing, and there was no direct proof of fraud or undue influence, the improvidence and injustice of the act in disinheriting his other children did not give rise to a presumption of an abuse of confidence, or justify the court in setting aside the conveyance.

In the case of Orr v. Pennington, 33 Va. 268, 273, 24 S. E. 928, where a father, a month before his death, had conveyed substantially all of his property to one of his four children, and it was sought to set aside the conveyance upon the ground that the grantee had procured its execution by the exercise of undue influence over the grantor when his mind was weakened by the infirmities of age and disease, the rule, as stated by Mr. Pomeroy, and quoted above, that such cases turn upon the exercise of actual undue influence of the child over the parent, and not upon any presumption of invalidity, was approved and followed.

While the bond in this case was executed for services rendered as agent, they were rendered under an agreement which had been terminated more than eight years before; long after the relation of principal and agent created by it had ceased to exist, and when they had the right to deal with each other in the same manner as other persons. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 959.

We are of opinion that there were no such confidential relations existing between the appellant and his mother, when the bond was executed, as raised any presumption of its invalidity. The burden, therefore, of showing that the appellant had procured the execution of the bond by fraud or undue influence was upon the appellees.

Their evidence consisted of the depositions of two brothers and two sisters of the appellant. Their testimony was for the most part hearsay or irrelevant, and upon exception that portion of it was excluded by the circuit court. They knew nothing of the circumstances under which the bond was executed; indeed, they did not know that it had been executed until after the mother's death. The evidence does not prove that any undue influence was exercised, or any false representation made, to induce the mother to execute the bond. There is no pretense that she was not a woman of vigorous mind, in full possession of all her faculties at the date of the bond and for years afterwards—up to the time of her death, so far as the record shows. She made her will in the year 1889, added codicils to it, and lived until 1897—13 years after the bond was executed.

Upon all the facts and circumstances of the case we are of opinion that the bond of the appellant is a valid claim against his mother's estate, and that the exceptions to the report of the commissioner, which so found, should have been overruled, and the report confirmed.

The action of the court in charging the appellant with the rental value of the lands of his mother's estate held by him since her death is assigned as error.

The answer filed in the case prays that if the appellant's bond, or any part thereof, is held to be a valid debt against the estate of his mother, he shall be required to render an account of his transactions as manager of her lands, both during her life and since her death.

The commissioner, in ascertaining the value of the decedent's lands, took evidence of their rental value, and among other witnesses he called to testify upon that point was the appellant. Upon that evidence the court entered a decree against him for the rental value of the lands after his mother's death, without giving him an opportunity to show what taxes and other proper charges, if any, paid by him, he was entitled to have set off against the use of the land during that period. This was error.

For this error, and the disallowance of the appellant's debt, the decree appealed from must be reversed to that extent, and in other respects affirmed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings, in which such accounts may be ordered as are necessary to ascertain what sums, if any, the appellant is indebted to his mother's estate for the use of her lands.

(103 Va. 305)

RHEA et al. v. SHIELDS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 8, 1904.)

JUDICIAL SALES—SALES FOR PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY—SALE OF REMAINDER INTERESTS—DECREES—CONCLUSIVENESS—TITLE OF BONA FIDE PURCHASER—ESTOPPEL.

1. The purpose of Code 1887, § 2616 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1332], authorizing guardians of minors, committees of insane persons, and trustees of an estate to file a bill in equity to procure a sale of the real estate for the benefit of the estate, is to invest courts of equity with that jurisdiction in respect to estates of all persons under disability.

2. Under Code 1887, § 2616 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1332], authorizing guardians of minors, committees of insane persons, or trustees of an estate to file a bill to procure a sale of the real estate of the minor, insane person, or beneficiary, whether there be or be not limited thereon any other estate, vested or contingent, a court of equity may, at the suit of the trustee of a life estate, sell not only the life estate, but also a remainder limited over to minors as to whom the trust does not extend, in which case the proceeds of the sale, or the property in which they are invested, are held upon the same trusts and subject to the same limitations as the property sold.

3. Where the court acquires jurisdiction both of the parties and of the subject-matter of litigation instituted under Code 1887, § 2616 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1332], authorizing the sale of land belonging to persons under disability, its decree, although erroneous, is conclusive until reversed or set aside.

4. Where the court acquires jurisdiction both of the parties and of the subject-matter of litigation instituted under Code 1887, § 2616 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1332], authorizing the sale of land belonging to persons under disability, the title of a bona fide purchaser under its decree is valid.

5. Although proceedings instituted under Code 1887, § 2616 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1332], authorizing the sale of land of minors and persons under disability are irregular, yet where the minors, after reaching majority, file amended pleadings requesting the sale of the property, they are equitably estopped from objecting to the validity of the sale.

6. A party who has assumed a certain position in a cause and successfully maintained that position is precluded from thereafter assuming an inconsistent position to the prejudice of one who has acquiesced in the position formerly assumed by him.

7. Bona fide purchasers of the legal title to land are not affected by any latent equity founded on a trust, fraud, incumbrance, or other matter, whereof they have no notice, actual or constructive.

Appeal from Law and Chancery Court of City of Norfolk.

Bill in equity by L. H. Shields, trustee, against William H. Rhea and others. From a decree rendered in respect to a sale of the trust property, defendants Rhea appeal. Affirmed.

R. Randolph Hicks, for appellants. D. Tucker Brooke, A. B. Seidner, and John A. Baecher, for appellee.

WHITTLE, J. The real estate which is the subject of this controversy was devised by Robert Rhea, Sr., to his executor, in trust for his son, William H. Rhea, Sr., for life, with remainder to such of his children as should survive him. The property consisted of seven improved lots in the city of Norfolk.

By successive substitutions L. H. Shields succeeded the original trustee appointed by the will, and at August rules, 1889, filed a bill in equity in the corporation court of the city of Norfolk against appellants, William H. Rhea, Sr., and his children, the latter all being infants at that time, for the sale of four of the lots referred to for the payment of taxes, the repairs and improvement of the residue of the property, and the balance of the proceeds of sale to be invested as the court might think best to yield an income for the owners.

The proceedings in the suit were in technical compliance with the statute; and upon the report of a commissioner in chancery, to whom the matter was referred, recommending a sale, the lots indicated were regularly sold under decrees in the cause, the sales confirmed, the purchase money paid into court, and deeds executed and delivered to the purchasers.

The last sale of these lots was made and confirmed in February, 1890. The suit then remained on the docket of the court, without further steps being had therein, until August, 1894, at which time, after all the remaindermen had attained their majority, the trustee and William H. Rhea, Sr., the life tenant, and a defendant in the original bill, filed a joint petition in the cause, in which they allege that the deferred payment of the purchase money for a farm in Northampton county, which had been bought as a home for appellants, was long past due; that the vendor was threatening to sell the property for the unpaid purchase money; and praying that the court would authorize the special commissioner to borrow a sufficient sum to discharge that indebtedness, and secure the loan upon some portion of the Norfolk city property still held by the trustee under the will. The remaindermen answered the petition by counsel, and united in its prayer. The loan, however, was not effected, but subsequently, upon the written request of all parties in interest, the court decreed a sale of the lot on Cumberland street.

The property was accordingly sold, and the sale confirmed, the purchaser complying with the terms and receiving a conveyance. The decree of confirmation of February 23, 1895, was entered by the court of law and chancery of the city of Norfolk, which was established in 1895, and to which court, by force of the statute, this suit, together with all other chancery causes pending in the corporation court, was regularly transferred.

In April, 1897, the trustee, William H. Rhea, Sr., and W. W. Sale, a temporary receiver, presented another petition to the court, in which, after reciting the proceedings in the cause and the fact that creditors, in a deed of trust for upwards of $4,000, which had been placed upon a lot on Union street by authority of a former decree, intended to enforce their lien, they prayed that a sale of the property might be made to one H. Davis, at a private offer made by him, to satisfy the lien. Thereupon Davis exhibited his petition to the court, in which he alleged that the proceedings in the cause were not regular, and sought to be relieved from his bid. To obviate the objection urged by him to the regularity of the proceedings, the trustee and William H. Rhea, Sr., filed an amended and supplemental bill for the purpose of selling the lot in question, to which the remaindermen were made parties. These defendants, who, as remarked, were then of age, by their answer united in the prayer of the bill. There was a reference to a commissioner to ascertain, among other matters, whether the bid of Davis was a fair and sufficient one for the property; whether the interests of all parties directly or contingently interested in the property, would be promoted by the sale, or the rights of any party would be violated thereby.

Upon the report of the commissioner, which was not excepted to, that Davis' bid of $5,500 was a fair price for the lot; that the interests of the persons directly or contingently interested in the property would be promoted by the sale; that all persons living who had any interest in the property were properly before the court as parties to the suit; and that the suit was in regular form, and the court had a right to sell the property—the bid of Davis was accepted, and the sale to him confirmed.

In February, 1898, practically similar proceedings were had with respect to the lot on Cumberland street, which resulted in a public sale of that property to one of the appellees at the price of $2,615.

Upon the foregoing facts appellants contend that it was not permissible, under section 2616 of the Code of 1887 as amended [Va. Code 1904, p. 1332], for a court of equity, at the suit of the trustee of a life estate in land, to sell not only the life estate, but also the remainder limited on that estate, over which the trust did not extend; that the decrees were therefore nullities; that the proceedings under them passed no right or title to the lots in controversy to appellees; that the court erred in dismissing appellants' petition to rehear the cause, and in refusing to declare the decrees and sales made in pursuance of them void, and of no effect.

The doctrine in this state is well settled that courts of equity possess no inherent power, as guardians of infants, to sell their real estate for the purpose of reinvestment, and the obvious purpose of the statute under which these proceedings were had is to invest those courts with that jurisdiction in respect to estates of all persons under disability.

The statute is highly remedial, and upon familiar principles must receive a liberal construction to give effect to the intention of the Legislature and enhance the remedy. See authorities cited in note to section 2616, 2 Va. Code 1904, p. 1333.

But, in addition to the foregoing considerations, the contention of appellants is opposed to the construction heretofore placed upon the statute and the course of judicial procedure under it, which has obtained for many years—certainly since the decision in the case of Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Grat. 652, 98 Am. Dec. 698. The practice has been to sell or exchange the absolute estate, in place of which the proceeds of sale, or the subject in which they are invested, or for which the property is exchanged, are held upon the same trusts and subject to the same limitations as the original estate.

The facts in the case of Faulkner v. Davis, supra, were as follows: Two vacant lots in the city of Richmond were conveyed in trust for Norton and his wife and the survivor of them for life, and upon the death of the survivor to be conveyed by the trustee to their children living at the death of the survivor, and the descendants of such of the children as should be then dead leaving descendants; and upon the further trust that, if Norton should think it expedient to sell the lots, or any part of them, the trustee should permit him to do so; the proceeds of sale to be secured and held upon the same trusts. Norton died, without having sold the lots, survived by his wife and five children, and a bill was filed by his widow against the children and trustees for a sale of the lots. This court held that, while courts of equity in Virginia have no authority under their general jurisdiction to sell real estate belonging to infants, they did possess jurisdiction by statute to sell land in which infants were interested, whether in possession or remainder, vested or contingent, if the proper parties could be brought before the court. Judge Moncure, speaking for the court, at page 875, 18 Grat., 98 Am. Dec. 698, says: "Of course, the sale in that case was of the entire and absolute estate, and not of the contingent interest merely. The proceeds of sale and the subject in which they might be invested were to stand in the place of the estate sold, and be subject to the same uses and limitations." The opinion treats the subject exhaustively, and gives in detail the history of the legislation with respect to such sales in Virginia.

In the still earlier case of Cooper v. Hepburn, 15 Grat. 551, it was held that a father, as guardian of his infant children, could maintain a suit to sell real estate held by himself for life and by his children in remainder.

So that, whatever may be said of appellants' contention as an original proposition, these decisions have adopted a different construction, and titles to property throughout the commonwealth have been acquired and rights become vested on the faith of it, and a departure from that construction at this time would be disastrous and indefensible, even if the court, as at present constituted, were of a contrary opinion.

It follows from what has been said that the corporation court and the court of law and chancery of the city of Norfolk acquired jurisdiction both of the parties and the subject-matter of the litigation; and where that is the case, although the decrees may be erroneous, they are nevertheless conclusive until reversed or set aside.

It also follows that the titles of appellees, who are bona fide purchasers for value, and without notice, to the lots first sold, are valid, and must be upheld.

In Zirkle v. McCue, 26 Grat. 517, the court said: "The only matter for inquiry is: Did the court have jurisdiction of the subject-matter? Were the proper parties before it? Were the proceedings regular? Was the sale proper, under all the circumstances then surrounding the parties? If so, there is no pretense for interfering with the title of an innocent purchaser, because in the light of subsequent occurrences the sale has proven injudicious and unfortunate for the interests of the infants."

It will also be remembered that the remaining lots were sold under decrees, upon amended pleadings in the cause, at the instance and request of the parties, all of whom were at that time adults; and, whatever may be said of the irregularity of the proceedings, they are now equitably estopped from objecting to the validity of sales made at their own solicitation.

"A person who causes his land to be sold for some purpose of his own under a judicial proceeding which turns out to be void, and receives and retains the proceeds of sale, cannot afterwards be heard to question its validity. He has made his election." Williamson v. Jones (W. Va.) 19 S. E. 438, 25 L. R. A. 222; Fairfax v. Muse's Ex'rs, 4 Munf. 124.

Such conduct would also violate the rule whereby a party who has assumed a certain position in a cause and successfully maintained that position is precluded from thereafter assuming an inconsistent position, if it be to the prejudice of one who has acquiesced in the position formerly assumed by him. Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 680, 15 Sup. Ct. 555, 39 L. Ed. 578; Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, 26 L. Ed. 187; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Eison, 99 Va. 19, 37 S. E. 820.

It must be observed that the only persons who are made defendants, and whose rights are sought to be affected by the petition to rehear, are appellees, all of whom belong to that favored class in a court of equity bona fide purchasers for value, and without notice. As to such purchasers, this court has declared that "it is settled law that a bona fide purchaser of the legal title is not affected by any latent equity founded on a trust, fraud, incumbrance, or otherwise, whereof he had no notice, actual or constructive." Carter v. Allen, 21 Grat. 241; Iron Co. v. Trent, 83 Va. 397, 2 S. E. 713, 5 Am. St. Rep. 285; Bank v. Blanchard, 90 Va. 22, 17 S. E. 742.

While the court feels constrained to hold that the petition was properly rejected as to these defendants, an examination of the record makes it painfully apparent that there has been a miscarriage of justice in the case, a result brought about by the misconduct of the trustee and former counsel of these unfortunate litigants, by whose malversation and imposition on the courts they have been stripped of a valuable inheritance. The situation is rendered the more regrettable by the circumstance that the property has passed beyond the court's control, and it is powerless to repair a great wrong.

The developments in the case accentuate the necessity for the exercise of such vigilance on the part of trial courts, in dealing with this class of cases, as will render the recurrence of similar results impossible; otherwise a benign statute specially enacted for the protection of the unfortunate may be converted into an instrument for their destruction.

There is no error in the decree complained of, and it is affirmed.

(108 Va. 286)

ROCKY MOUNT LOAN & TRUST CO. v. PRICE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 8, 1904.)

APPEAL — REVIEW — SETTING ASIDE VERDICT — SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT — CONSENT OF PARTIES — ESTOPPEL — BONDS — MATERIAL ALTERATION — INSTRUCTIONS.

1. In an action on bonds one of the defendants filed a plea of non est factum, the cause being continued as to him, and a judgment was rendered against the remaining obligors. Thereafter an order was entered reciting that the defendant pleading non est factum, and another, an administrator, having filed their statement of defenses and pleas at the last term, and no order having been entered in respect thereto, it was agreed that the filing of such papers should be entered nunc pro tunc. Held, that in view of such order, and the subsequent action of the parties treating the judgment as set aside, plaintiff was estopped to deny that it had been set aside as to the administrator.

2. The action of the court in setting aside a verdict for misdirection of the jury cannot be reviewed on appeal, where the instructions given are not contained in the record.

3. Where, in an action on a bond, one of the obligors pleaded non est factum, an instruction that if such defendant did not sign the bond, and his name was signed without his authority, the jury must find for the defendant, and that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff, was proper.

4. On appeal the evidence is to be treated as on a demurrer to the evidence.

5. In an action on bonds one of the defendants claimed an alteration in the bonds, after delivery, by inserting the name of a certain person as an obligor. The evidence showed that the bonds were given for land sold to the obligors, and that after the sale the defendant in question sold a part of his interest to the one whose name had been added to the bond. The obligee testified that shortly after they were delivered to him the obligors told him they wanted them back to get some other parties who had come into the deal to sign them, and that the bonds were given back to one of the obligors, and afterwards again delivered to the obligee, and the one who purchased the bonds from him testified that when he received them they were in the same condition as at the time of the action. Held, that an instruction that if, after the bonds were signed and delivered, the name in question was added without the knowledge or consent of defendant, it was a material alteration, was not warranted, as the evidence tended to show that the real delivery of the bonds was when they were delivered the second time, and it did not appear that defendant did not know of the addition of the name in question.

6. In an action on bonds the fact that the name of one of the obligors was forged did not affect the liability of the others.

Error to Circuit Court, Franklin County (Saunders, Judge, not sitting).

Motion by the Rocky Mount Loan & Trust Company for judgment against H. C. Price and others on certain bonds. Judgment in favor of defendants, and the moving party brings error. Reversed and rendered.

L. W. Anderson, for plaintiff in error. Hairston & Gravely and Dillard & Lee, for defendants in error.

HARRISON, J. This is a motion under the statute by the plaintiff in error, as assigned of William Gentry, for judgment against the defendants in error upon two bonds dated November 18, 1890—one for $500, payable one year after date, with interest from date; and the other for a like sum, payable two years after date, with interest from date. These bonds, copies of which are filed with the record, appear on their face to be the joint and several obligations of N. C. Carper, J. J. Carper, Jas. C. Greer, G. H. T. Greer, B. N. Hatcher, G. M. Helms, and H. C. Price.

§ 6. See Principal and Surety, vol. 49, Cent. Dig. § 80.

On the 14th day of May, 1901, to which the notice was returnable, the defendant H. C. Price filed his plea of non est factum, whereupon the cause was continued as to him, and judgment rendered against the remaining six obligors, as to whom the order states there was no appearance. On the 5th day of October, 1901, the following nunc pro tunc order was entered: "This day came the parties by their attorneys, and the defendants H. C. Price and J. H. Ferguson, administrator of B. N. Hatcher, deceased, having filed their statements of defenses duly sworn to, and their special pleas in abatement, at the last term by leave of the court, and no order having been then entered in respect thereto, it is agreed between the parties that the filing of said statements of defenses and said special pleas shall be entered of record nunc pro tunc, which is accordingly done." It being contended by plaintiff in error that the judgment of May 14, 1901, is still in force against the administrator of B. N. Hatcher, deceased, it may be as well to state at this point that we are of opinion that this nunc pro tunc order entered by consent of parties, together with the subsequent action of the parties in the further progress of the cause, treating the judgment as set aside, estops them from now denying that to be its effect.

The defense relied upon by J. H. Ferguson, administrator of B. N. Hatcher, deceased, was that: "His testator signed his name to the bonds in action at the time of the execution thereof, and delivered the same to the obligee, William Gentry; that subsequently to this there was a material alteration made in both of the said bonds by the Rocky Mt. Loan & Trust Co., which had become the owner of the said bonds, or by the said Wm. Gentry, after the delivery to him, and before assignment to the Rocky Mt. Loan & Trust Co. without the knowledge or consent of his testator, in this: that the name of H. C. Price was signed to both of the said bonds, for the purpose of making him an obligor thereon, after the delivery and signatures aforesaid by the said original obligors."

Upon the issues joined on the plea of non est factum filed by H. C. Price, and upon the defense set up by Hatcher's administrator, the jury found in favor of the defendants in error. On motion of the plaintiff in error this verdict was properly set aside upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, and because the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence. But, apart from these considerations, this action of the court cannot be disturbed, because one of the grounds for setting the verdict aside was misdirection of the jury; and the instructions given are not in the record. This court cannot, in the absence of the instructions, assume that they were free from objection, or pass at all upon that ground for setting the verdict aside.

At a special term of the circuit court, begun on Tuesday, September 30, 1902, the case was again tried upon the same defenses, with the same result—a verdict in favor of the defendants in error. This judgment the lower court refused to set aside, and from that action a writ of error was awarded, bringing the case before this court for review.

Having, in what has been already said, disposed of several of the assignments of error, we come now to that which relates to the instructions given on the last trial.

The plaintiff in error objects to two instructions given for the defendants in error. The first is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that H. O. Price did not sign the bonds in the notice mentioned, but that his name was signed thereto without his authority, then they must find for the defendant H. O. Price, and in coming to a conclusion in this issue the jury must bear in mind that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff."

The evidence of H. O. Price tended to show that he did not sign the bonds, and under his plea of non est factum this instruction correctly propounded the law. We are of opinion, however, that upon the whole evidence the verdict of the jury was against the weight of evidence; but under the rule, treating the case here as upon a demurrer to the evidence, the judgment in favor of H. O. Price cannot be disturbed.

The second instruction is as follows: "The court further instructs the jury that any material alteration will vitiate the bonds, even though said alteration may not be prejudicial to the rights of said B. N. Hatcher, deceased; and if they believe from the evidence that after the bonds were signed and delivered by Hatcher and others to William Gentry, and he accepted the same as their obligation, and that afterwards the name of H. O. Price was added to said bonds without the knowledge or consent of said Hatcher, and that he did not subsequently ratify the same, such addition would be a material alteration, and in this action the jury must find for the defendants."

This instruction enters upon a field of inquiry not called for by any evidence in the case. The consideration for these bonds was a tract of land sold by William Gentry to the obligors. The original transaction was with the first six obligors, of which Hatcher was one. After the sale to these obligors, Hatcher sold one-half of his interest in the purchase to H. O. Price. William Gentry, the obligee, says that a short while after the bonds were delivered to him the obligors told him they wanted them back to get some other parties who had come into the deal to sign their names to them; that he thinks N. C. Carper was the one he handed the bonds to; that some while afterwards they brought the bonds back; that he could not read or write, and did not know whether any new names had been added; that he then put the bonds away; and that they were not changed or altered in any way after he received them back. J. C. Greer, the only one of the obligors who testified, says that his recollection is that H. O. Price bought one-half of Hatcher's interest, and that the bonds were gotten back from William Gentry for the purpose of having the parties who came into the deal afterwards sign their names to them; that, as secretary and treasurer of the plaintiff company, he bought the bonds from William Gentry, and that they were exactly like they are now when he bought them, except the credits indorsed thereon of payments made by the obligors, including B. N. Hatcher and H. O. Price; that B. N. Hatcher always paid his dues on the bonds promptly; that he cannot say positively that he presented the bonds to him when he made his payments, but thinks he must have done so, as that would have been the natural thing for him to have done.

At the time this suit was brought three of the obligors were dead, and the foregoing is the entire evidence in the case touching the execution and delivery of these bonds.

The instruction under consideration proceeds upon the theory that B. N. Hatcher had no knowledge of the fact that the name of H. O. Price was subscribed to the bonds as one of the obligors therein. It was error to give an instruction predicated of that view, because there is no evidence in the record tending to show that the name of Price had been placed upon the bonds without the knowledge and consent of Hatcher. The evidence tends to show that the final completion and delivery of these bonds was when they were delivered the second and last time by the obligors to the obligee; that when these bonds were recalled by the obligors, as already seen, it was with the implied, if not expressed, agreement of all parties, obligors and obligee, that they were to be re-executed and redelivered to the obligee; that under this agreement, when the bonds were completed by the additional signatures desired by the obligors, and delivered to the obligee, it was the re-executed and finally completed contract contemplated by the parties. If this be true, the rights of the obligee and the liability of the other obligors were not affected by the fact that the name of one of the obligors may have been forged. The plea of non est factum bars the action only as to him who pleads it, and does not affect the liability of the other defendants in a case like this. Bush v. Campbell, 28 Grt. 403.

For the foregoing reasons, the court is of opinion, the judgment complained of being joint, that the same should be reversed; and this court, proceeding to enter such judgment as the lower court ought to have entered, it is ordered that the plaintiff take nothing by its notice as to the defendant H. C. Price, and that he go thereof without day, and that the defendant H. C. Price recover of the plaintiff his costs in the circuit court about this suit in his behalf expended. And it will be further ordered that the verdict of the jury be set aside as to the defendant John H. Ferguson, administrator of B. N. Hatcher, deceased, and the case will be remanded for further proceedings against the personal representative of B. N. Hatcher, deceased, to be had in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

(120 Ga. 757)

GRAHAM & WARD v. MACON, D. & S. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. July 19, 1904.)

CARRIERS—THROUGH BILLS OF LADING—RAILROADS—OPERATING STEAMBOATS—CONTRACT—VALIDITY—ACTION FOR BREACH.

1. Carriers may issue through bills of lading, and may make contracts for through shipments or for the interchange of freight between each other.

2. Railroad companies chartered under the general law may acquire and operate steamboats in connection with their lines of road.

3. There was, therefore, no public policy which prohibited a railroad company from entering into a contract with a firm by which the latter was to acquire and operate a steamboat and each party was to receive and deliver its freight to the other at the usual rates, in consideration of which the railroad company agreed to erect a hoist for the speedy and economical handling of freight between the boat and the cars.

4. Such a contract was not unilateral, was supported by a sufficient consideration, and the firm was entitled to maintain an action against the railroad company for damages for a breach of the contract.

5. Irrespective of the question as to whether the special damages declared on were improperly set out, or that the data for calculating the other damages were wanting, it was nevertheless error to dismiss the petition on demurrer, as the plaintiffs, in any event, were entitled to recover nominal damages for the breach of the contract.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to City Court of Dublin; Adams, Judge.

Action by Graham & Ward against the Macon, Dublin & Savannah Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

A line of steamboats on the Oconee river was run in connection with a competitor of the Macon, Dublin & Savannah Railroad Company. In order to meet this competition, the railroad company, through its duly authorized agents, contracted with Graham & Ward that the firm should acquire a boat to be run on the river, agreeing to give them all the river freight controlled by the company, and to construct a hoist by which freight could be cheaply handled between the boat and the cars. It was further understood that Graham & Ward should deliver all the river freight controlled by them to the railroad company, and that both parties were to charge the usual rates. Relying on this contract, Graham & Ward leased a steamer for 12 months, and were ready, able, and willing to comply with their part of the agreement. Their petition against the railroad company alleges that the company failed to comply with its contract, and for more than 12 months neglected to begin the construction of the hoist, which had not been erected at the time of the filing of the suit; that they delivered to the company all freights hauled or controlled by them, but that the company failed on its part to do likewise; that by reason of the failure to erect a hoist they lost the larger part of the river freight, and the business worked up by them, as without the hoist they could not receive or deliver freight as quickly or safely as required by shippers, who would otherwise have given the same to petitioners—whereby they were damaged generally and specially. By amendment they added a list of persons who could and would have delivered certain designated amounts of freight, but were deterred from doing so by want of the hoist; also a calculation as to the amount of damage sustained by reason of the loss of the profits thereon. The petition was demurred to on the grounds that it set out no cause of action; that the contract was uncertain, wanting in mutuality, and without consideration; that the damages were too remote; and that the contract was contrary to public policy, and void. The judge sustained the demurrer, and Graham & Ward excepted.

Davis & Sturgis, for plaintiffs in error. Minter Wimberly and Akerman & Akerman, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. (after stating the facts). The contract for the exchange of freight was not void, as being contrary to public policy. Instead of defeating, it was intended to meet, competition. There is no suggestion of any restraint of trade, any increase of rates, any rebate or pooling, any unjust or unlawful discrimination, or anything that interferes with the right of a shipper to route his freight over a different or any desired line. Indeed, there is nothing to sustain this ground of attack, unless it be unlawful for parties who are able to contract to covenant to receive from and deliver to each all the freight controlled by the other. Graham & Ward, as individuals, had the natural and inherent power to make any contract not prohibited by law. The railroad company, on the other hand, had the power to make any contract not ultra vires, or not prohibited by law. Carriers can sell through tickets and issue through bills of lading. Each of these parties had the right from day to day to interchange freight with the other. If they could make such an exchange daily, there is no reason why they should not do so weekly, monthly, or by the year. If they could do so voluntarily, they, for a valuable consideration, could bind themselves to make the interchange. To such an agreement, the law would, of course, attach the incidents of prompt and adequate service, and the further qualification that the rights of the shipper or of the public should not in any way be prejudiced. But that the policy of the law is not against the traffic arrangement between these parties appears from the fact that the boat line and the railroad line were equivalent to an extension each of the other. The railroad company either had, or, as matter of course, could have obtained, the charter power to own and operate this boat on this river. Civ. Code, §§ 2174, 2183. Had it done so, of course no one would dispute that the interchange of freight between the boat and the cars would have been legal. And if this could have been done thus directly, there is no reason why it could not have accomplished the same interchange of freight indirectly, and without a purchase of the boat; for, in effect the contract was the acquisition of a qualified interest in a boat line. As long as the public is not harmed, there is no reason why the parties should not be held to the terms of the contract. Compare Seaboard Air-Line R. Co. v. W. & A. R. Co., 97 Ga. 289, 23 S. E. 848; Coles v. Central R. Co., 86 Ga. 251, 12 S. E. 749; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Chicago & Alton R. Co., 73 Mo. 389, 39 Am. Rep. 519; Oumberland Valley R. Co. v. Gettysburg R. Co., 177 Pa. 528, 35 Atl. 952; Tonawanda R. Co. v. N. Y. Cen. R. Co., 42 Hun, 496; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ohio & Miss. R. Co., 142 U. S. 896, 12 Sup. Ct. 188, 35 L. Ed. 1055; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver R. Co., 110 U. S. 668, 4 Sup. Ct. 185, 28 L. Ed. 291, overruling Denver & N. O. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (C. C.) 15 Fed. 650.

† 2. See Railroads, vol. 41, Cent. Dig. § 41.

4. As to the other grounds of the demurrer: The covenant of each of the parties was a sufficient consideration to support the promise of the other. Civ. Code, § 3861. The lease of the boat, and the firm's readiness to receive and deliver freight, amounted to a performance, which justified the demand by them for a corresponding performance of the railroad's agreement to erect the hoist and receive and deliver freight as stipulated. Nor was the contract unilateral, or wanting in mutuality. The uncertainty as to its duration might have made it difficult to decree specific performance. But here the contention that it was for too indefinite or too long a period of time is answered by the fact that Graham & Ward only rented the boat for 12 months. And if, as contended, either party would have had the right to rescind, there is no allegation that any notice to that effect was given by the railroad company, which, instead of revoking, broke, the contract while it was in full force and being performed by Graham & Ward.

5. The case having evidently been dismissed on the ground that the contract was void, the question as to the elements and measure of damages was not passed upon. There was no statement as to the amount of freight diverted by the railroad company, and no data given from which the fact of damage therefor could be calculated. Any defect in this respect can be cured by amendment. But, whether there were any special damages or not, it was error to dismiss the petition on demurrer, since Graham & Ward were at least entitled to recover nominal damages for the railroad's breach of the contract. Kenny v. Collier, 79 Ga. 743 (1), 8 S. E. 58; Civ. Code, § 3801.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(127 N. C. 99)

CAMERON-BARKLEY CO. v. THORNTON LIGHT & POWER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

APPEAL—EXCEPTIONS TO CHARGE—INCORPORATION IN CASE—CERTIORARI—SETTLEMENT OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

1. The statement of the judge in the case on appeal must be taken as absolutely true.

2. Under Clark's Code, § 412, subd. 3, providing that error in instructions shall be deemed excepted to without any formal objection, the trial judge cannot omit exceptions to the charge from the case on appeal as tendered by appellant.

3. Certiorari will issue to compel the incorporation of exceptions omitted from the case on appeal.

4. On certiorari to compel the incorporation of exceptions to the charge in the case on appeal, the trial judge should be given an opportunity to consider the case again with reference to the assignments, and counsel should be present at the final settlement of the case.

5. The requirement of Code, § 550, that the place appointed for the settlement of the case on appeal shall be within the district, if the judge has not left, is mandatory.

Action by the Cameron-Barkley Company against the Thornton Light & Power Company. There was judgment for defendant, from which plaintiff appealed, and, on refusal of the trial judge to incorporate certain exceptions to the charge in the case on appeal, brings certiorari. Writ issued.

T. M. Hufham, for appellant. E. B. Oline, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This is an application by the plaintiff (appellant) for a certiorari. It is alleged in the petition that plaintiff served on the defendant a case on appeal, and defendant filed a counter-case; that the judge who presided at the trial was requested to name a time and place for settling the case, and he appointed as the place a town which is not in the Thirteenth Judicial District, and is at a great distance from the place of trial. The plaintiff further alleges that in the case on appeal, as tendered by its counsel, there were certain exceptions to the charge; and it complains that those exceptions were omitted by the judge, in his statement of the case, by inadvertence. It is also alleged that some of the exceptions contained recitals of instructions given by the court in its charge to the jury which are at variance with the charge set out in the case as settled and signed by the trial judge.

The statement of the judge in the case on appeal as to what occurred on the trial must be accepted in this court as importing verity. We always take it as absolutely true. State v. Reid, 18 N. C. 377, 28 Am. Dec. 572; State v. Gooch, 84 N. C. 982. If there is any exception to this rule, it has not yet been presented in any case which has come to this court, though it must be true that if the case is tried and the exceptions are noted during the course of the trial, in accordance with the provisions of Code, § 412 (2), the case will be heard here upon the exceptions as thus settled, for the statute virtually so directs. Code, § 550. But the rule as first above stated does not extend to exceptions taken to the refusal of the judge to grant a prayer, or to the granting of a prayer for instructions, nor to the assignments of error in the charge of the court, which alleged errors, by the express terms of the statute, are deemed to have been duly excepted to. Clark's Code (3d Ed.) § 412 (3). It follows from that provision of the law that the formal assignment of errors relating to such matters may be made for the first time in the case on appeal as tendered by the appellant, and it has so been frequently decided by this court. McKinnon v. Morrison, 104 N. C. 354, 10 S. E. 513. See, also, Clark's Code (3d Ed.) p. 513, where the cases will be found fully collected and classified. The judge therefore has nothing to do with the appellant's assignment of errors, which is solely the act of the appellant, and must be treated as his assignment. This being so, it is not, of course, subject to the control or revision of the judge. The assignment of errors must appear in the case, and appear, too, as the appellant frames it; otherwise he may be deprived of a most important and valuable right given by the statute. The judge may say what the evidence was, and also what was the charge when it was not in writing, but he may not say how the alleged errors in it shall be excepted to or assigned by the appellant; nor can he omit the assignment of errors from the case because he does not believe it was properly made, or does not conform to the rulings upon the prayers for instructions or to the charge, provided it was set out in the case on appeal as tendered by the appellant. As to all matters concerning which the judge's statement is conclusive upon us, we will not grant a certiorari for the purpose of having the case amended unless it appears that an error or mistake has inadvertently been committed by the judge, and it appears further that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the judge will correct the case if he is afforded an opportunity to do so. Porter v. Railroad, 97 N. C. 63, 2 S. E. 580; Clark's Code (3d Ed.) pp. 935, 936. But in respect to an assignment of errors made in the appellant's case, he is entitled to have it stated in the case on appeal settled by a judge, as matter of right. Sometimes he may be put to this disadvantage: If the charge has not been reduced to writing by the judge, either voluntarily, or at the request of one of the parties under section 414 of the Code, and there is a conflict between the charge, or any part of it, as stated by the judge and as recited in the assignment of errors, we must be governed by the judge's statement of it, and the assignment must be disregarded. Walker v. Scott, 106 N. C. 56, 11 S. E. 364. When the charge is put in writing, there should, of course, be no such discrepancy, as the assignment must necessarily be directed to the charge as written.

While we decide that the plaintiff, upon the foregoing principles, is entitled to the writ of certiorari for the purpose of having his exceptions and assignment of errors, so far as they relate to the instructions given or refused, made a part of the case, the judge should, as a general rule, have the opportunity of considering the case again with reference to the assignment, so that he may the more intelligently and explicitly state what was actually done and said, having in view the questions intended to be raised by the appellant as they appear from his assignment of errors. This is but fair to the judge and to the appellee, and will certainly conduce to a better understanding of the merits of the case by us; and, besides, it will not take from the appellant any advantage to which he is justly entitled. Counsel should be present when the case is finally settled to protect the interests of their clients, unless their presence is waived; and, if any change is made in the body of the case, the appellant should be permitted to re-assign errors so as to conform the assignment to the changes thus made.

The principles we have thus laid down are well supported by the case of Lowe v. Elliott, 107 N. C. 718, 12 S. E. 383, in which the present Chief Justice pointedly states the law upon the subject. That case has since been approved. State v. Black, 109 N. C.

856, 13 S. E. 877, 14 L. R. A. 205; Broadwell v. Ray, 111 N. C. 457, 16 S. E. 408; Bernhardt v. Brown, 118 N. C. 700, 24 S. E. 527, 715, 36 L. R. A. 402; Bank v. Sumner, 119 N. C. 591, 26 S. E. 129. See, also, Boyer v. Teague, 106 N. C. 571, 11 S. E. 830, and Whitesides v. Williams, 66 N. C. 141.

It is alleged in the petition that the place appointed by the judge for settling the case on appeal was outside the district, and, owing to this fact and the great distance from the place of trial to the place so appointed, counsel did not attend. This, perhaps, is the cause of the defect in the case, as counsel, no doubt, would have insisted on their right to have the assignment set out in the case if they had been present. The law requires the case to be settled within the judicial district where it was tried (Code, § 550), and this must be done unless this provision is in some way waived, or counsel agree upon some place outside the district. This requirement of the law is mandatory, and should be strictly observed when a request to appoint a time and place to settle the case is made (Whitesides v. Williams and Walker v. Scott, supra; State v. Williams, 109 N. C. 846, 18 S. E. 880), and when the judge has not left the district. When he has so left, he may settle the case upon notice without returning to the district. Code, § 550.

The writer of this opinion concurs fully in the views of Justice DOUGLAS, who files a concurring opinion as to the right procedure in correcting cases on appeal by the writ of certiorari; and he also thinks that such rules of the court only should be adopted as are necessary for the proper and orderly transaction of the business of the court, and when adopted should be enforced, not harshly or too rigidly, but with due regard to the hearing of cases upon their real merits. But he does not think the question is presented by this application, and for that reason it is not decided, nor even discussed.

The answer to the petition does not meet its allegations in such a way as should induce us to withhold the writ. Pursuing the course, therefore, suggested in Lowe v. Elliott, supra, a certiorari will issue, and the case be remanded, so that the appellant's exceptions and assignment of errors may be inserted in the case on appeal, and so that the judge may, not resettle the case (Boyer v. Teague, supra), but make such amendments and corrections in the same as he may deem proper.

To that end, let a copy of the petition and the original case on appeal tendered by the appellant, and used as an exhibit in this court, be transmitted to the judge with the writ, for his information.

It is so ordered. Petition allowed.

OLARK, C. J. (concurring). The rulings of this court are uniform that a certiorari will issue to send up the exceptions to the charge, if filed within 10 days after adjournment of court, because filing such exceptions is the act of appellant and the exceptions are a part of the record. Lowe v. Elliott, 107 N. C. 718, 12 S. E. 883. But as to all matters transpiring during the trial, if counsel cannot agree upon a statement, the judge settles the case, and the case thus settled is conclusive. This court has no power to examine witnesses and find the facts differently, nor can we command the judge to state the facts differently; for he acts under the obligation of his duty and oath of office. All we can do is to give him an opportunity, and it is but reasonable that we will do this only when it appears, upon affidavit, that there has been an inadvertence on the part of the judge. If this is denied by the other side, the matter is presumed to be as the judge has stated it, and the certiorari ought not to issue, unless it appear by a statement from the judge that he will probably make the correction, if given the opportunity. This ruling has never been based upon any idea of courtesy to the judge, but upon the principle of Magna Charta that we "will not delay justice." If the appellant has shown any diligence whatever, he has always ample time—for the case must be docketed and printed at least a week before it is called for argument—in which to make the application to the judge and learn whether or not he will make the correction, if given the opportunity. Certainly, if the appellant will not take the trouble to write a letter to the judge, he ought not to get a delay of six months upon a suggestion of error in the judge's case on appeal, when he was, or could have been, present when the case was settled, and his averment of inadvertent omission is denied by counter affidavit. To give such delays to an appellant upon a vague statement that he believes the judge will make a correction, when, if there is the slightest diligence shown, he can lay the judge's reply to his letter before us, would lead to the gravest abuse and a delay of several months in almost any case in which delay was desired by a party. This ruling has been uniform. Smith, C. J., Porter v. Railroad, 97 N. C. 68, 2 S. E. 581, 2 Am. St. Rep. 272, and cases there cited; MacRae, J., Allen v. McLendon, 113 N. C. 319, 18 S. E. 205, and cases cited; Broadwell v. Ray, 111 N. C. 457, 16 S. E. 408; Lowe v. Elliott, 107 N. C. 718, 12 S. E. 883; Bank v. Bridgers, 114 N. C. 107, 19 S. E. 276; and very many other cases both before and since Clark's Code (3d Ed.) p. 986. The ruling in this court has been uniform (but there is no "rule of court" on the subject), and it seems to be the uniform practice in all other jurisdictions, and for the same reason. A contrary practice would be unjust to the appellant and fruitful of unnecessary delays and expense. By the slightest diligence the appellant can always ascertain whether the judge would probably make the correction, and lay that fact before us in making his application, in which case it is always allowed.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring). I concur in the opinion of the court, and I am glad that the practice has been so fully and so clearly stated. There is, however, one point of practice in this court that has never met my approval, and that is its refusal to consider an ordinary petition for certiorari unless the judge below has already signified in writing his willingness to amend the record in accordance with the wishes of the petitioner. Such a course does not seem to be in accordance either with the dignity of this court or the rights of the petitioner, nor is it required by the courtesy due to the judge below. If any error has occurred through no fault of the petitioner, he is entitled to have it corrected as a matter of right. The question is not whether the judge is willing to correct the error, but whether the error has in fact occurred. We may rely upon the willingness of the upright gentlemen who hold our superior courts to correct in all places and at all times any error they may have committed, when called to their attention, and there is no reason why the matter should not be brought to their attention by this court in due forms of law, as well as by counsel in private interviews. When a party, under oath, asserts that there are errors in the record, and points them out with such particularity that they can be easily ascertained one way or the other, I see no reason why a certiorari should not be granted, and the judge who tried the case asked, in a respectful manner, whether or not the petitioner's allegations are true. The judge's statement would import just as much verity then as it does now, and would be just as final. It would not be the slightest reflection upon him in any way, and would relieve him from the private and ex parte importunities of counsel now unavoidable under the practice of this court.

Another matter I deem proper to mention: As long as our judges retain their independence of thought and action—and I trust they always will—there will be radical differences of opinion in the decision of cases. Similar differences may exist as to the adoption of rules of practice, but in such cases custom does not permit any written dissent. It follows that the adoption of a rule does not imply its unanimous approval by the members of this court, but simply that it met the views of a majority. In conclusion, I can only say, with the utmost respect for the court, that there are many of its rules that received neither my vote nor my approval. After their adoption they become the rules of the court, binding upon me as well as upon others, and, as such, have received recognition and support.

(127 N. C. 126)

QUANTZ v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1904.)

NEGLIGENCE—INJURY TO LICENSEE.

1. A passenger alighted from the train at a depot at night, and for purposes of his own passed along an open space on the right of way used by the public by permission in passing from one street to another. He left the right of way, and went into an open door in the depot building 12 feet away, and fell down a stairway and was injured. Held, that he was a licensee, and the railroad did not owe him the duty to keep the depot doors closed, but only of keeping the way free from dangers.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by S. A. Quantz against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

The plaintiff reached Charlotte on defendant's train on the night of May —, 1904, at about 10 o'clock. The train stopped at the depot, the coach upon which defendant was being some distance below the end of the depot building. He went across the depot to a restaurant on Fourth street, not on defendant's right of way. He drank some coffee or milk, and, desiring to see a policeman, went from the restaurant towards Trade street, which runs the other side of the depot and parallel with Fourth street. In going towards Trade street he passed along an open space on the defendant's right of way, and just behind the depot building. This open space was unobstructed, and was, with the permission of the defendant, used by the public in passing from Fourth street to Trade street. About half way from Fourth street the depot building becomes wider, including the office, waiting room, dining room, etc. At this point there is an open way between the telegraph office and the baggage room. There is near this point, but not in the open way, a stairway. When plaintiff reached this point, he turned to go through the depot building to find the policeman. He saw through a window a light burning; saw the stairway going up in the inside. He crossed the curbing, and went to the door at the head of the stairway, being about 12 feet from the edge of the space. Finding the lattice door open, the plaintiff went in and fell, whereby he was injured. Standing at the back of the depot building, and looking through a window, a person could see the stairway on the inside of the building. A map accompanied the case on appeal, showing the depot and surroundings. The defendant at the close of the testimony moved the court to dismiss the action as upon a nonsuit. Motion denied. Defendant excepted. The only portion of the charge to which there was exception is as follows: "If you find from the evidence in this case that that street or passway was used by the public; that they were in the habit of using it, or that persons who wished to become passengers upon the trains of the defendant were in the habit of using that passageway—then it became the duty of the defendant not to so construct its building, or not to leave its building in such condition, that there would be either on or near the passageway a dangerous place, and not to construct it in such condition that one would be misled by the light in the building, and induced to enter a dangerous place. And if you find from the evidence that the defendant has been negligent in that respect, has failed in the performance of its duty, and that that was the cause of the injury to the plaintiff, then you would answer the first issue, 'Yes; that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of the defendant.' From a judgment for the plaintiff, defendant appealed.

W. B. Rodman and G. F. Bason, for appellant. C. D. Bennett, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). His honor told the jury that the plaintiff had, at the time of his injury, ceased to be a passenger. In this we concur. We also concur in the opinion that he was not a trespasser. He was a licensee. His relation to the defendant growing out of the contract of carriage or the assumption of a public duty by the defendant was at an end. The case, thus simplified, presents the question as to the measure of duty which the defendant owed the plaintiff as a licensee. The plaintiff's right to recover is dependent upon sustaining the proposition that the defendant owed to him a duty, and that there was a breach thereof, which was the proximate cause of the injury. Emry v. Navigation Co., 111 N. C. 94, 16 S. E. 18, 17 L. R. A. 699. It is conceded that the defendant did not owe to the plaintiff that high degree of care due a passenger. It is equally clear that it owed to him a higher degree of care than was due a trespasser. The authorities make a distinction between the degree of care due a mere licensee, one who by permission enters upon the premises of another, and one who does so by invitation. It is not always easy to say upon which side of this line a particular case falls. Assuming that the license given to the public to use this way to pass from Fourth to Trade street amounted to implied invitation to the plaintiff to enter upon and pass over it, we next inquire the extent of the license. It was to pass from Fourth to Trade street. The duty, therefore, of the defendant, was to keep the way free from dangerous obstructions or pitfalls, either on or so near to the way that a person exercising ordinary care would not be injured. The plaintiff went over the way for his own purpose, having no connection whatever with the defendant's duty to the public as a common carrier. There is no suggestion that there was any obstruct^{ed} to prevent the plaintiff using the way to the full extent of his license. He went 12 feet out of his way to go to the front of the depot to look for a policeman for the purpose of ascertaining the whereabouts of a person whom he wished to find. There is no suggestion that the open door was dangerously near to the open space. Certainly, the defendant was not required to so construct its depot, before the license was given, as to enable licensees to walk around about and enter it at all times by day or night for the purposes entirely disconnected with the use for which it was built. The defendant owed no duty to the plaintiff to keep all of the doors of the depot building closed at night. No reasonable person would apprehend that in using the open space for the purpose of passing from one street to another a person would go 12 feet out of the way, and step into an open door. We can see no breach of duty to the plaintiff. We have discussed the case upon the assumption that the plaintiff was an invited licensee. It is by no means clear that the license was more than permissive, in which case a lower degree of care is imposed. In any view of the testimony the defendant was not liable. Sweeny v. R. R., 10 Allen, 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Redigan v. R. R. (Mass.) 28 N. E. 1133, 14 L. R. A. 276, 81 Am. St. Rep. 520. "One who attempts to cross a platform at a railroad station for his own convenience as a short cut from one street to another is a mere licensee, and cannot recover for an injury received by falling into a hole in such platform, although the railroad company had passively permitted the plaintiff and the public generally to use it." Elliott on Railroads, § 1251. We are of the opinion that the motion for nonsuit should have been allowed.

Error.

(127 N. C. 153)

COBB et al. v. OLEGG.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1904.)

INJUNCTION—ULTIMATE RELIEF—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—DISSOLUTION BEFORE TRIAL.

1. Where a suit was brought for a special injunction, as the main relief demanded, to restrain defendant from operating a café in a room in a hotel in violation of an alleged parol covenant in a lease of such room, and defendant answered, simply disavowing any information as to the facts alleged, and not by denial of each material allegation of the complaint, as required by the Code, it was not error for the court to refuse to dissolve a temporary injunction and to continue the same to the hearing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Bryan, Judge.

Suit by Marion Cobb and another against W. F. Olegg. From a decree continuing a temporary injunction to the hearing, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiffs brought this action to obtain an injunction restraining the defendant from using a room in the Hotel Guilford, which is situated in the city of Greensboro, as a café, restaurant, or eating place, contrary to the covenant contained in the lease of the said room to the defendant's assignor. They allege that on or about the 11th day of April, 1904, they leased the room verbally to one Sam Chouris for one year, to be used by him as a fruit, candy, and ice-cream kitchen, and for no other purpose, and that it was specially agreed at the time that the plaintiffs did not lease it for the purpose of being used as a café or restaurant, because of the offensive odors caused by such use, which were disagreeable to the guests of the hotel—it having once been used for that purpose, and found to be objectionable, and the plaintiffs afterwards, and before the lease to Sam Chouris, having refused to lease it for use as a restaurant or café, though a much larger rent was offered than that proposed to be paid by Chouris. It is further alleged that Chouris agreed to accept the lease upon the terms and conditions just stated, and expressly covenanted that he would not use the room as a restaurant or café, but as a fruit, ice-cream, and candy kitchen, which should be so conducted as not to emit therefrom any offensive odors and thereby render it objectionable to the hotel guests; that subsequently, on the 16th day of April, 1904, Chouris requested the plaintiff to give him a written memorandum of the lease, stating merely its duration and the amount of rent to be paid, and giving as his reason for wanting this memorandum that there had been frequent changes in the management of the hotel, and that he would need it for his protection; that plaintiffs, for his accommodation, complied with the request; the plaintiff Cobb dictating a letter for Chouris, which was afterwards written and signed by the plaintiffs, and accepted by Chouris in writing over his signature. The letter described the premises leased with some particularity, and also certain changes to be made by Chouris at his own expense in the arrangement of the room and the adjoining hall, but did not contain any reference to the alleged stipulation that it should not be used as a restaurant or café. It is then charged that the defendant, who is a business rival of the plaintiffs, well knowing or having the means of knowledge that said agreement had been made, and refusing to investigate the matter, in July, 1904, bought the lease from Sam Chouris, who had leased the room only for a candy kitchen, or from his brother John Chouris, to whom a pretended sale had been made, and announced his purpose to establish a restaurant and café at the place, whereupon the plaintiffs immediately notified him of said covenant of Sam Chouris not to use it for such a purpose, and insisted that the assignment to him was void, and that any use of the room as an eating place was clearly prohibited by the original lease, and he was forbidden to devote it to any such purpose, but that defendant, notwithstanding the notice and protest from plaintiffs, began at once to make the necessary changes in the room to adapt it to said use as a restaurant, furnished and equipped it for that purpose, and has since conducted a restaurant in it, to the great annoyance and irreparable damage of the plaintiffs. It is alleged in the second, third, and fourth sections of the complaint that the agreement not to use the room as a restaurant, while contemporaneous with the making of the lease, was wholly independent of and collateral thereto, and that even if, in any sense, an integral part of the contract, it was not intended to be inserted in the written memorandum or to be reduced to writing at all, but to remain in parol, and in that way to be a binding covenant or stipulation between the parties to the lease. Each of those sections of the complaint is denied by the defendant as follows: "The defendant has not sufficient information to form a belief as to the allegations contained in [said] paragraph of the complaint, and therefore denies the same to be true." There were other allegations made in the complaint and denied in the answer, but it is not necessary, in the view of the case taken by the court, to set them forth. The defendant averred in his answer that he bought the lease from John Chouris, assignee of Sam Chouris, for full value, and without any notice of the alleged covenant, and that he has conducted a restaurant at the place in an orderly and cleanly manner, and without any annoyance to the plaintiffs' guests. Affidavits were filed by the respective parties in support of their allegations, but we need do no more than state that a careful examination tends to show that, as the case now stands, the proof preponderates decidedly in favor of plaintiffs' contention that there was a covenant between Chouris and themselves to the effect stated above. Upon the complaint filed, Judge Shaw granted an order to the defendant to show cause why an injunction should not issue as prayed for, and in the meantime restrained the defendant from conducting a restaurant in the room contrary to the alleged covenant, and at the hearing of the motion for an injunction before Judge Bryan, upon the return of the order to show cause, his honor continued the injunction to the hearing, whereupon the defendant, having duly excepted, appealed to this court.

W. P. Bynum, Jr., Scales, Taylor & Scales, and G. S. Ferguson, Jr., for appellant. Fuller & Fuller and King & Kimball, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The plaintiffs contend that the contract of lease was not one required to be in writing, and that, as the entire agreement was not reduced to writing, and not intended to be, but a distinct and independent part of it remained in parol, the plaintiffs are not forbidden to show the existence of the unwritten stipulation by oral evidence. They admit that, when parties reduce their agreement to writing, it is a rule of evidence that parol testimony is not admissible to contradict, add to, or vary it, for, although there may be no law requiring the particular agreement to be in writing, yet the written memorial is regarded as the surest evidence. But they insist that this case is not within either the letter or the spirit of the rule, as the writing is not a memorial of the whole agreement, which was severable into parts, one of the parts only having been committed to writing, and the other stipulations and terms of the agreement having been left open to parol proof, and that in such a case the rule is that the stipulations may be proved orally, unless the contract is one required to be in writing. They have cited numerous authorities to sustain their contention, and among them the following: Twidy v. Saunderson, 31 N. C. 5; Manning v. Jones, 44 N. C. 368; Johnson v. McRary, 50 N. C. 369; Kerchner v. McRae, 80 N. C. 219. Counsel also insisted that the rule they rely on applies even when the contract is an entire one, for which position they cited Braswell v. Pope, 82 N. C. 57; Ray v. Blackwell, 94 N. C. 13; and Terry v. Railroad, 91 N. C. 236, in the last of which cases the court cites Hawkins v. Lee, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 42, for the following proposition, which is therein stated: "When it is not intended that a written contract should state the whole agreement between the parties thereto, evidence of an independent verbal agreement is admissible." In the last edition of Clark on Contracts, which was recently published, the principle is thus stated: "Where a contract does not fall within the statute, the parties may at their option put their agreement in writing, or may contract orally, or put some of the terms in writing and arrange others orally. In the latter case, although that which is written cannot be varied by parol evidence, yet the terms arranged orally may be proved by parol, in which case they supplement the writing, and the whole constitute one entire contract." Clark on Contracts (2d Ed.) p. 85. The defendant's counsel, on the contrary, argued that the above-stated rule upon which plaintiffs rely does not apply to the facts of this case, and that parol evidence is not competent, as its effect will be not to prove an independent part of the agreement which was not reduced to writing, but to vary and contradict the contract as written by the parties, and which the law presumes contains all the provisions by which they intended to be bound. In support of their view they cited Parker v. Morrill, 98 N. C. 232, 3 S. E. 511; Meekins v. Newberry, 101 N. C. 17, 7 S. E. 655; Bank v. McElwee, 104 N. C. 305, 10 S. E. 295; and especially relied on Moffitt v. Maness, 102 N. C. 457, 9 S. E. 399, in which the court, through Shepherd, J., admonishes us that the rule against the admissibility of parol testimony to vary the terms of a written instrument has, perhaps, been relaxed too much, and that the farthest limit has been reached in admitting such testimony, beyond which it will not be safe to go. The court sounds the alarm, and warns us against the dangers ahead. It may be better, we admit, to trust to the writing—the memorial selected by the parties for preserving the integrity of their treaty—than to confide in human memory for the exact reproduction of the facts, for, says Taylor, J., "time wears away the distinct image and clear impression of the fact, and leaves in the mind uncertain opinions, imperfect notions, and vague surmises." Smith v. Williams, 5 N. C. 426, 4 Am. Dec. 564. But whether this salutary principle does apply and should control in this case is a question which must be left open for future adjudication.

We have stated the contentions of the respective parties for the purpose of showing the impracticability of deciding upon the ultimate merits of the controversy in this, the preliminary stage of the case. This court should, when feasible, always avoid expressing an opinion which will anticipate the decision of the case at the final hearing, and when the facts have not been found by the tribunal appointed by law to pass upon them. The practice in this respect seems to have been long since well settled in applications for injunctions. It was based at first upon the distinction between a common and a special injunction. The former was granted in aid of or as secondary to another equity, as in the case of an injunction to restrain proceedings at law, in order to protect and enforce an equity which could not be pleaded, and it issued, of course, upon the coming in of the bill, without notice. As soon as the defendant answered, he could move to dissolve the injunction, and it was then for the court, in the exercise of its sound discretion, to say whether, on the facts disclosed by the answer, or, as it is technically termed, upon the equity confessed, the injunction should be dissolved or continued to the hearing. If the facts constituting the equity were fully and fairly denied, the injunction was dissolved, unless there was some special reason for continuing it. Not so with a special injunction, which is granted for the prevention of irreparable injury, when the preventive aid of the court of equity is the ultimate and only relief sought, and is the primary equity involved in the suit. In the case of special injunctions the rule is not to dissolve upon the coming in of the answer, even though it may deny the equity, but to continue the injunction to the hearing, if there is probable cause for supposing that the plaintiff will be able to maintain his primary equity, and there is a reasonable apprehension of irreparable loss unless it remains in force, or if, in the opinion of the court, it appears reasonably necessary to protect the plaintiff's right until the controversy between him and the defendant can be determined. It is generally proper, when the parties are at issue concerning the legal or equitable right, to grant an interlocutory injunction to preserve the right in statu quo until the determination of the controversy, and especially is this the rule when the principal relief sought is in itself an injunction, because a dissolution of a pending interlocutory injunction, or the refusal of one, upon application therefor in the first instance, will virtually decide the case upon its merits, and deprive the plaintiff of all remedy or relief, even though he should be afterwards able to show ever so good a case. The principles we have attempted to state are, we think, well supported by the authorities upon the subject. 1 High on Injunction (3d Ed.) § 6; Jarman v. Saunders, 64 N. C. 367; Hellig v. Stokes, 63 N. C. 612; Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. v. McElwee, 94 N. C. 425; Purnell v. Daniel, 43 N. C. 9; Bispham's Eq. (6th Ed.) § 405. The cases of Marshall v. Commissioners, 89 N. C. 103, Lowe v. Commissioners, 70 N. C. 532, and Capehart v. Mhoon, 45 N. C. 80, would seem to be directly in point. In the first of these cases the court says: "The injunctive relief sought in this action is not merely auxiliary to the principal relief demanded, but it is the relief, and a perpetual injunction is demanded. To dissolve the injunction, therefore, would be practically to deny the relief sought and terminate the action. This the court will never do where it may be that possibly the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded. In such cases it will not determine the matter upon a preliminary hearing upon the pleadings and ex parte affidavits, but it will preserve the matter intact until the action can be regularly heard upon its merits. Any other course would defeat the end to be attained by the action." Mr. Justice Bynum, for the court, in the second case cited, says: "The injunctive relief sought in this action is not auxiliary to another and main relief, but is the main relief itself and the object of the action, and therefore the dissolution of the injunction would be equivalent to a dismissal of the action. In such cases, where a reasonable doubt exists in the mind of the court whether the equity of the complaint is sufficiently negatived by the answer, the court will not dissolve the injunction, but continue it to the hearing. Much must depend upon the sound discretion of the court to whom the question of dissolution is referred." While the principle as stated in the last quotation is in itself sufficient to sustain our decision, we think the able and learned justice had in mind the rule of practice in the cases of a common injunction, which was dissolved upon the answer, unless the equity was confessed, or the answer was evasive, or the equity was not sufficiently denied. Capehart v. Mhoon, supra. This will appear clearly from the following language of the court, speaking by Nash, J., in Troy v. Norment, 55 N. C. 318: "In applications for special injunctions (and this is such a one), the bill is read as an affidavit to contradict the answer; and where they are in conflict, and the injury to the plaintiff will be irreparable if the relief be not granted, the injunction will not be dissolved on motion, but will be continued to the hearing to enable the parties to support by proofs their respective allegations. Justice demands this course. When there is nothing before the court but oath against oath, how can the chancellor's conscience be satisfactorily enlightened?" It will also appear by what is said by Pearson, J., for the court, in Purnell v. Daniel, 43 N. C. 9: "This is not the case of an ordinary or common injunction, in aid of and secondary to another equity; but it is the point in the cause—it is to prevent irreparable injury, as is alleged—and to dissolve the injunction decides the case, for to dissolve it allows the act to be done. By way of illustration, take the case of an injunction to stay waste in cutting down ornamental or shade trees. If the injunction be dissolved on bill and answer, and the trees are cut down, the damage is done, for the trees cannot be made to grow again. To dissolve this injunction before hearing the cause on proof, the defendant must show that the plaintiff has no case fit to be heard; and if, from the answer, it appear that there is any question of doubt on a matter that should be further inquired into, the injunction will be continued until the hearing." In Capehart v. Mhoon, supra, Pearson, J., states the difference between common and special injunctions with great clearness.

The injunction sought in this case is special, and we must be governed by the established rule applicable to that class of injunctions in deciding the question now presented. The Code provides expressly for such an injunction. Code, § 338 (2). Judge Bryan has merely granted a provisional injunction to the hearing, so that the controverted matters may then be settled by a jury, and the plaintiffs' right to a perpetual injunction be thus determined upon the merits. As said by Justice Bynum in Lowe v. Commissioners, supra, "The novel and important questions raised by the pleadings, and ably discussed before us, do not come up for decision now." We decide nothing upon the merits, but simply hold that the facts should be found in the ordinary way, so that we may consider and decide the case, if it again comes before us, on all of the facts as ascertained, and not merely upon facts, now disputed, which may never be found by the jury.

Before taking leave of the case, it may be well to state that the answer does not contain any denial of the second, third, and fourth sections of the complaint, which comprise the main allegations of the plaintiff. The Code requires that the answer shall contain a general or specific denial of each material allegation of the complaint controverted by the defendant, or of any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief. Instead of such a denial as is required by the Code, the defendant simply disavows any information of the facts alleged. This, of course, is not a denial even on information, nor is it in any respect a compliance with the Code. Durden v. Simmons, 84 N. C. 555; Fagg v. Loan Ass'n, 113 N. C. 364, 18 S. E. 655; Bank v. Charlotte, 75 N. C. 45. In other words, unless the defendant denies on knowledge, or on information which is held to be sufficient to raise an issue (Kitchen v. Wilson, 80 N. C. 192), or unless he wishes to be considered as admitting the truth of the allegation, he must disclaim both knowledge and information of the matter alleged (Durden v. Simmons and other cases supra).

Without passing upon the controverted facts, we are of the opinion that, in the present state of the pleadings and proofs, there was no error in the ruling of the court below, and the injunction should be continued to the hearing. This is in accordance with the practice in such cases as stated in Erwin v. Morris (at this term) 49 S. E. 53.

No error.

(137 N. C. 163)

WALKER BROS. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 18, 1904.)

CARRIERS OF FREIGHT—DELAY IN TRANSPORTATION—PENALTY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

1. Acts 1903, p. 999, c. 590, providing that any railroad company failing to transport goods received by it for shipment, and billed to any place within the state, for a longer period than four days after receipt of the same, unless otherwise agreed between the parties, shall pay a penalty, etc., refers to a delay in beginning the transportation or starting the goods from the station of their receipt, and does not require a delivery at their destination within the time specified.

2. In an action against a railroad company, under Acts 1903, p. 999, c. 590, to recover a penalty for a delay of more than four days in the transportation of goods, the burden of showing where the delay occurred is on plaintiff.

Clark, C. J., and Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Cooke, Judge.

Action for a penalty by D. M. Walker and another, constituting the firm of Walker Bros., against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

This action was brought to recover the penalty for failure to transport freight given by chapter 590, p. 999, § 3, of the Acts of 1903. Plaintiffs alleged that there had been a delay of four days, and demanded judgment for $40; that is $25 for the first day and $5 per day for the next three days of delay. The material portion of the evidence was as follows: (1) Bill of lading issued by the defendant, bearing date Cumnock, N. C., May 27, 1903, for a car load of lumber, to be transported to the defendants, at Graham, N. C. J. R. Burns was the shipper. (2) The receipt of the plaintiff for the said freight, bearing date, "Graham, N. C., June 4, 1903." D. M. Walker, one of the plaintiffs, testified that he and J. C. Walker constitute the firm of Walker Bros. The witness identified the bill of lading and freight bill hereinbefore referred to, and said the dates as therein stated were correct. The plaintiffs operated a sawmill situated about 160 feet from the main line of the North Carolina Railroad Company, some 300 or 400 yards east of the station at Graham, in Alamance county, and were accommodated by what is ordinarily known as an industrial or spur track running from the main line into their yard, which is inclosed. When they receive freight by the car load, the car is placed by the defendant on this spur track and unloaded in the millyard of the plaintiffs. The car in question was delivered to them in their yard on June 4, 1903. The bill of lading was received by the plaintiffs through the mails about the 28th May, 1903. Plaintiffs made demand upon the agent of defendant at Graham. The spur or industrial track was put in at the instance of the plaintiffs, and operated, as witness supposed, for the accommodation of both the plaintiffs and defendant, as the cars could be unloaded sooner. No extra charge was demanded or made against the plaintiffs for shifting and carrying cars from the main track of the defendant into the yard of the plaintiffs by means of the spur track. The cars containing freight for other parties were not put upon the spur track of plaintiffs without their permission, nor carried inside the gate of plaintiffs' yard. The witness did not know of his own knowledge when the car in question arrived at Graham Station. The train passed, but he did not see it come. The freight in question was brought in the car from Cumnock by way of Greensboro, and from the latter place to Graham. There are four stations or stops between Greensboro and Graham, and ten stations between Greensboro and Cumnock. The 31st day of May, 1903, was Sunday. Witness made demand on the railroad company for the car of freight in question, and at that time the car had not arrived in Graham. It was admitted by the parties that the defendant transported freight and passengers through several states, including this state, and is engaged in interstate commerce; and it was admitted that Cumnock and Graham are stations on different roads, both of which are operated by defendant within this state. Plaintiffs here rested their case. The defendant thereupon moved to nonsuit the plaintiffs, under the statute, which motion was allowed, and judgment was rendered accordingly. Plaintiffs excepted and appealed.

Long & Long, for appellants. F. H. Buebee and King & Kimball, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts). It is provided by Acts 1903, p. 999, c. 590, § 3, that any railroad company failing to transport goods received by it for shipment, and billed to any place in this state, for a longer period than four days after the receipt of the same, unless otherwise agreed between the parties, or allowing such goods to remain at any intermediate point more than forty-eight hours, shall pay to the party aggrieved a penalty of $25 for the first day, and $5 for each succeeding day, of unlawful delay or detention, if the shipment is in car-load lots, and, if in smaller quantities, then a less sum, which is prescribed by the act. The plaintiffs claim that by the statute the defendant is allowed only four days to make the shipment, and any delay beyond that time subjects it to the penalty. We do not think that is the proper construction of the law. The word "transport" does mean to carry or convey from one place to another, but it also means to remove, and this is one of its primary significations, according to the lexicographers. Whatever may be the precise meaning of the word when considered by itself and apart from the special connection in which it is used, the context of the act under review clearly shows that the Legislature did not intend to be understood as requiring the entire transit to be made within four days from the receipt of the goods. Such a construction might produce serious results, and impose upon transportation companies not only a very onerous duty, but one which in some cases it would be difficult, if not impossible, to perform. It has been said that in regard to laws, as in other cases, difficulties will arise, in the first place, from the disputed meaning of individual words, or, as it is usually expressed, of the language employed, and, in the second place, assuming the sense of each separate word to be clear, doubt will result from the whole context. This is due in large measure to the imperfection of language and its inadequacy in conveying our meaning. We must therefore regard the context and the general scope of the law, as well as the mischief to be suppressed and the remedy provided for that purpose, so as to arrive at the intention of the Legislature. "When we see what is the sense that agrees with the intention of the instrument [or statute], it is not allowable to wrest the words to a contrary meaning. No text imposing obligations is understood to demand impossible things." Sedgwick, Stat. & Const. Law (1857) c. 6, pp. 225-235. Whenever the intention can be discovered it ought to be followed, with reason and discretion, in construing the statute, although it may not seem to conform to the letter. Sedgwick, supra. We have no doubt as to the true intention of the Legislature in passing this act. The very phraseology of the statute indicates clearly the purpose that the penalty shall be incurred if the company delays to begin the transportation or to start the goods on their journey within four days after they are received for shipment. The fact that the law provides against unreasonable delay during the course of the transportation at any intermediate station is conclusive evidence that the neglect or omission to transport for a longer period than four days refers to a delay at the initial point or the place of departure. To hold it to have been contemplated that four days only from the time of receipt should be allowed for the shipment of the goods and their delivery at the place of final destination would impute to the Legislature an intention to adopt a harsh and impracticable rule, and therefore an unreasonable one, as the time allowed might not be sufficient in many cases for the transportation, as thus understood. Having concluded that the four days must apply to the time of shipment, we find no evidence as to when the goods left Cumnock, nor as to when they reached Graham; and, even if there had been such evidence, we have failed to discover any proof as to the distance between Cumnock and Graham, or as to the time reasonably required to carry the goods from the one place to the other. The burden was on the plaintiff to bring forward the proof necessary to establish his allegations and to make out his case, and, in the absence of evidence, we can raise no presumption in his favor. If the defendant has violated the law and incurred its penalty, the plaintiff must show it affirmatively. There is not in this case the slightest evidence as to the essential fact to be proved. The plaintiff, in the case of a nonsuit, is entitled to have the benefit not only of every fact which the evidence tends to prove, but of every legitimate inference from the facts as well, but this does not mean that he will be permitted to recover upon mere conjecture. The court did not err in refusing to submit the case to a jury, as there was a total failure of proof. The nonsuit was properly entered.

In the answer the defendant sets up as a defense the unconstitutionality of the act upon the ground that it interferes with interstate traffic. We were told by counsel in the argument before us that this defense was not relied on in the court below, nor did he insist upon it in this court. We think the point was properly abandoned. The act cannot be successfully assailed upon this ground. It has been thoroughly settled that such legislation does not contravene the commerce clause of the Constitution. The most recent decision of this court upon the subject is Currie v. Railroad, 135 N. C. 535, 47 S. E. 654. But other decisions on the point are abundant. Bagg v. Railroad, 109 N. C. 279, 14 S. E. 79, 14 L. R. A. 596, 26 Am. St. Rep. 509; Smith v. Ala., 124 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508; Railroad v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 560, 21 L. Ed. 710; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. Ed. 819; Railroad v. Dwyer (Tex. Sup.) 12 S. W. 1001, 7 L. R. A. 478, 16 Am. St. Rep. 926. Numerous authorities sustaining the right of the state to pass such a law are collected in the cases we have cited. Legislation of a state which incidentally or indirectly affects commerce between the states, and especially such as is passed in the exercise of the police power, is not to be considered regulation of that commerce, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. Besides all this, it appears in our case that the traffic was to be conducted wholly within this state, and it cannot, therefore, in any allowable view, be regarded as interstate trade; nor can the statute, in so far as it affects that traffic, be held invalid as an attempt to usurp the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

In deciding this case, we have confined ourselves, as we should do in all cases, to the facts as they appear in the record. We have no right to supply any defect in the plaintiff's proof by assuming the existence of any fact which the testimony does not tend to establish. If the plaintiff has a good cause of action against the defendant, he must show it by legal evidence, and not leave anything essential to its completeness to surmise or conjecture. This must be required of him and all others similarly situated, as we cannot in any other way decide safely, and with a due regard for the rights and interests of litigants, which must be determined by well-settled methods of judicial procedure applicable alike to all cases, and not by any arbitrary or capricious notion of what should be done in any particular case in order to mete out justice. By pursuing the latter course, we would often base our judgments upon mistaken or misunderstood facts, and defeat the very purpose intended to be accomplished in all judicial investigations.

We find no error in the case, and it must be so certified. No error.

DOUGLAS, J. (dissenting). I am not disposed to dissent from the principles of law so ably laid down by the court in its opinion, as far as I understand them, but I fail to see the legal or logical connection between its premises and its conclusion. I do not think that the primary meaning of the word "transport" is simply to remove. It is from the Latin word "transportare," compounded from the words "trans," meaning over or beyond, and "portare," to carry. It does not mean simply to remove from one place, but includes also the idea of carrying to another place. And yet I agree with the court that the Legislature did not intend to impose the penalty where the transportation was begun, but not completed, within the 4 days mentioned in the statute. To my mind, its clear intention was that the transportation should be begun within four days—that is, within 96 hours—after receipt of the goods, and should be continuously carried on and completed within a reasonable time. It certainly did not mean that the railway company could lawfully leave the goods at the initial point for 4 days, then transport them a mile or so and leave them there for 48 hours, and then transport them another mile or so, with another 48 hours' delay, and so on for perhaps a month. Neither did it mean that the railway company could keep the goods for a week or a month, and then say to the owner, "Prove, if you can, where the goods have been all this time." The railway company alone knows where they have been, and alone has the means of proving it. To place the burden of directly proving it upon the plaintiff deprives him of all remedy for a substantial injury, under the guise of a rule of evidence. If the circumstances tend to prove the plaintiff's case, it should be left to the jury, who alone can say what they do prove. If circumstantial evidence is sufficient to hang a man, I do not see why it is not sufficient in a civil suit to fasten upon a common carrier the just responsibility resulting from its breach of public duty.

The opinion of the court says: "There is not in this case the slightest evidence as to the essential fact to be proved." I presume it refers to the delay at Cumnock. Let us see about that. There is evidence that the car load of lumber was received for shipment by the defendant on May 28th, and was delivered to the plaintiffs on June 4th, seven days thereafter. It is also in evidence that both Cumnock and Graham, the terminal points of the shipment, are within this state, and on roads operated by the defendant, and that there were only 15 stations between them. Allowing 10 miles as an average between stations, but which is much above the average, there would be only 150 miles of transportation, which, at 20 miles per hour, would require only $7\frac{1}{2}$ hours. I do not know to what extent this court will take judicial cognizance of the geography of its own state. If it takes any, we will know that Cumnock is in Chatham county, on the Sanford & Mt. Airy Branch of the Southern Railway, 54 miles south of Greensboro, and Graham on the North Carolina Division of said railway, 23 miles this side of Greensboro. The entire distance between Cumnock and Graham would therefore be 77 miles. It seems to us that, with or without such judicial cognizance, under the circumstances in this case, the fact that 7 days elapsed between the receipt and delivery of this lumber is sufficient evidence from which the jury might reasonably infer that it was not transported from Cummock within the 4 days allowed by law. It is difficult to believe that it would require 3 days to transport an unbroken car load 77 miles, or that 1 mile per hour is a reasonable rate of speed over the greatest trunk line of the South. If there are other facts tending to exculpate the defendant, they are peculiarly within its own knowledge, and should be alleged and proved by it.

CLARK, C. J., concurs in the dissenting opinion.

(137 N. C. 96)

PEOPLES v. NORTH CAROLINA R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1904.)

RAILROADS—DEATH OF SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

1. Where, in an action for the death of a train hand, the evidence tended to show that the decedent was killed while attempting to mount a shifting engine, with his back to approaching box cars, which gave no warning of their approach, and which were not manned with a lookout, the question of the company's actionable negligence was for the jury.

2. In an action against a railroad company for the death of a train hand by being struck by cars while mounting a shifting engine coming towards him from the opposite direction, an instruction that if decedent was informed that the cars were to be added to his train, and that the time between the receiving of this information and the time the cars were actually dropped in was short, it was his duty to keep a lookout, and, if he failed to do so, there could be no recovery, was erroneous, because it assumed that the failure to keep a lookout was the proximate cause of the injury.

3. The instruction was erroneous because it placed on plaintiff the burden of proving freedom from contributory negligence on the issue of defendant's negligence.

4. Where, in an action for the death of a train hand by being struck by moving cars while mounting a shifting engine coming towards him, the evidence for plaintiff showed that decedent was between the tracks, looking toward the approaching engine, and that on the track next to him and back of him were dead cars, which without warning were caused to move and roll down on him as he was making ready to mount the engine, the question of decedent's contributory negligence was for the jury.

5. Where a train hand was standing on a track, and a number of cars were kicked on the track some 200 yards from where he stood, and rolled down an incline, and collided with detached cars on the same track, and forced the latter against the servant and killed him, and no signal was given, the railway company was guilty of actionable negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; McNeill, Judge.

Action by J. M. Peoples, administrator of John B. Peoples, deceased, against the North Carolina Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This was an action for the negligent death of plaintiff's intestate. The issues submitted to the jury were: "(1) Was the plaintiff's intestate injured or killed by the negligence of the defendant's lessee, as alleged in the complaint? (2) Did plaintiff's intestate by his own negligence contribute to his injury and death?"

George F. Bason, for appellant. Burwell & Cansler and T. C. Guthrie, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. There is an irreconcilable conflict between the version given for plaintiff and for defendant. His honor submitted both phases of the evidence to the jury, and instructed them that, if they should adopt the defendant's version of the facts, they must answer the first issue, "No." The only exceptions are to the refusal to give three prayers for instruction asked by defendant, and fourthly to a paragraph in the charge, and are as follows:

1. Refusal to charge that, if the jury believed the evidence, to answer the first issue, "No." This was properly refused. There was evidence that at the time the intestate was killed he was in the discharge of his duties as an employé of the defendant, with his mind absorbed in the attempt to mount a shifting engine coming towards him, with his back to the approaching box cars, which were giving him no warning of their approach, and which were not properly manned with a lookout upon the leading car. The question whether or not the defendant was negligent in these particulars, and whether such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, was properly submitted to the jury. Lassiter v. Railroad, 133 N. C. 247, 45 S. E. 570; Smith v. Railroad, 132 N. C. 824, 44 S. E. 663.

2. The second exception was for refusal to charge that if the jury found that "the intestate was informed that the string of cars was to be added to his train, and that the time between the conversation at which he received this information and when the cars were actually dropped in was short, and he was walking on No. 4 track, it was his duty to keep a sharp lookout for this string of cars, and, if he failed to do so, the answer to the first issue should be, 'No.'" This was properly refused, because the prayer assumed as a fact that intestate's failure to keep a sharp lookout was the proximate cause of the injury. Besides, this prayer was upon the first issue, and seeks to throw upon the plaintiff the burden of proving, not that the defendant was guilty of negligence, but that the intestate was not guilty of contributory negligence. Such instruction would have been clearly erroneous, if given. Fulp v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 525, 27 S. E. 74.

3. The third exception is for refusal to charge, "If the jury believe the evidence, the answer to the second issue shall be, 'Yes.'" This was properly refused for reasons given in considering the first exception. The plaintiff's evidence was that the intestate was not on the track, but between the tracks; that he was looking in the opposite direction towards his approaching shifting engine, which he was preparing to mount; that on track No. 4, next to him, and towards his rear, were some "dead cars"; and that without warning the defendant "kicked" some cars onto track No. 4, striking the dead cars, and rolling them down on him as he was making ready to get upon his engine; there being no one on the rolling cars or dead cars to give notice of danger.

4. The fourth exception is that the court charged that "if the intestate was standing between the track, and some sixteen cars were kicked on the track some 200 yards or more from this place where the intestate was, and, rolling down an incline, they collided with two detached box cars, with no engine attached, and on the same track that the shifting cars were on, and forcing these two cars against the plaintiff's intestate, in close position to the cars, if that was his position, and, in consequence of that, killing him, and no signal was given, and no agent in charge of this train, this was negligence on the part of the defendant; and, if you are so satisfied that the plaintiff was injured in consequence of this want of care, you ought to answer the first issue, 'Yes.'" We find no error in this instruction. Smith v. Railroad, 132 N. C. 819, 44 S. E. 863. This was doubtless the defendant's own view, upon reflection, for he does not refer to this exception in his brief. State v. Register, 133 N. C. 746, 46 S. E. 21. Indeed, his brief is chiefly based upon the statement of facts averred by the defendant, and the court charged that, if the jury found that to be the truth of the occurrence, to find the first issue, "No," but the jury responded, "Yes."

No error.

(137 N. C. 140)

U. B. BLALOCK & CO. v. W. D. CLARK & BROS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1904.)

SALES—TENDER OF PAYMENT—METHOD OF PAYMENT—CUSTOM—DELAY—QUESTION FOR JURY—EVIDENCE.

1. In an action for nondelivery of cotton, option for sale of which plaintiff had accepted by telegram, it was competent to prove the telegram by the testimony of the operator at the sending office, who, though not the operator who sent it, testified that he brought it from the file in his office.

2. In an action for nondelivery of cotton, evidence that plaintiff had to go on the market and buy cotton at an advance by reason of defendant's failure to comply with his contract was competent.

3. The error, if any, in admitting in an action for nondelivery of cotton evidence that plaintiff had to buy cotton on the market at an advance, was harmless, when the evidence was ruled out on the issue of damages.

4. In an action for the nondelivery of cotton, it was competent for plaintiff to state that when he went to get it he was prepared to pay for it.

5. Where a contract for the sale of cotton was silent as to the mode of payment, it was competent to prove a general custom among cotton dealers as to the method of payment.

6. A motion for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence is waived if not renewed at the close of all the evidence.

7. Before plaintiff in an action for nondelivery of cotton can recover, he must show that when he demanded it he was able to pay for it in the method fixed by the custom among cotton dealers.

8. Where a contract for the sale of cotton is silent as to time of delivery, the buyer has a reasonable time within which to demand it, and what is a reasonable time is for the jury.

9. A refusal of a seller to deliver the article sold because the price has gone up, and on account of the buyer's delay, renders it unnecessary for the buyer to tender the price, to maintain a suit for nondelivery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanly County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by U. B. Blalock & Co. against W. D. Clark & Bros. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Shepherd & Shepherd, R. T. Poole, and J. A. Spence, for appellants. R. E. Austin, R. L. Smith, and Adams, Jerome & Armfield, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. This case was before the court in 133 N. C. 306, 45 S. E. 642, where the facts are fully stated.

The first exception, to the admission of the telegram, is without merit. It was proven by the operator at the sending office, who, though he was not the operator who sent it, testified that he brought it from the file in his office. Besides, the defendant, in his testimony, admits its receipt by him. The second exception, to the evidence of plaintiff that he had to go on the market to buy other cotton, at an advance, by reason of defendant's failure to comply with his contract, was competent. Even if error, it was harmless, as no price was given, and the court subsequently ruled it out upon the issue as to damages, to which alone it was applicable. Nor was it error (third exception) for plaintiff to state that when he went to get the cotton he was prepared to pay for it. The defendant could have cross-examined him upon that point. The contract being silent as to the mode of paying for the cotton, it was competent for plaintiff to show a general commercial custom and usage among cotton dealers as to the method of paying for cotton in large lots. Simpson v. Pegram, 112 N. C. 541, 17 S. E. 430; Brown Chemical Co. v. Atkinson, 91 N. C. 396; Norris v. Fowler, 87 N. C. 9; Bank v. Williams, 79 N. C. 141; Moore v. Eason, 88 N. C. 568. The defendant himself testified that he "never knew a large lot sold for spot cash. It is always sold for check, or shipped with bill of lading attached to sight draft." The plaintiff testified that this was the well-established custom. To same purport is the testimony of McAulay and Eard. Exceptions 4, 6, 8, and 12, addressed to the competency of such evidence, are without merit, as is exception 5, to the testimony of plaintiff that he had made arrangements to pay in the customary mode. Nor was it error (exception 7) to admit testimony that defendant sold the cotton to McAulay. The defendant, in his testimony, stated the same fact.

The motion to nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence was waived by not renewing it at the close of all the evidence. Jones v. Warren, 134 N. C. 392, 46 S. E. 740, and cases there cited. Besides, the same point was presented and held adversely to defendant in the former appeal.

There were several prayers for special instruction. The first eight were refused, but require no discussion, for, so far as applicable to this case, they were disposed of by the former decision. Prayers 9 and 10, that, as to conditions precedent, the act of God would not excuse, the court charged, were correct propositions of law, but properly held that they had no application to this case. The eleventh prayer was "that, before the plaintiff would be entitled to recover, he must satisfy the jury by a preponderance of evidence that at the time he demanded the cotton he had then and there the money ready to pay for the cotton," which the court gave, but added, "or was able, ready, and willing to pay for the cotton according to the custom of the community in buying and paying for cotton in large lots, of 160 bales or more, by giving valid checks for the same, or by shipping with bill of lading attached to sight draft, if the jury shall find first by a preponderance of the evidence that there was a well known and established custom in that community to pay for cotton in such lots in that way, and if the jury shall further find by a preponderance of the evidence that there was nothing said in the contract, or at the time of making it, about how the cotton should be paid for." The court further charged, after stating what is necessary to make a contract: "If you answer the first issue 'Yes,' you will then consider the second issue. In contracts for products like cotton, time is important in compliance with the contract, but the law gives the plaintiff a reasonable time to comply in a case like the one on trial; but it gives him a reasonable time only, and no more, and the jury is to be the judge, from all the circumstances, as to what is a reasonable time." So far there was no exception to the modification. ("If the contract was made, and the plaintiff came within a reasonable time, and was then ready and able to pay the cash, or, if not ready to pay the cash, and if the jury find by a preponderance of the evidence that there was a well known and established custom among persons in that section, embracing Troy, who bought and sold cotton in large lots, to pay in valid checks, or to ship with bill of lading attached to sight draft, and the plaintiff was ready to comply with this custom, and the defendant did not demand the cash, but refused to deliver the cotton because the price had advanced and because of delay, then he would be entitled to damages, if the demand for the cotton was made within a reasonable time after 8th February.") That part of the above charge which is in parentheses was excepted to by the defendant. The court further charged: "If, when the plaintiff went after the cotton, on 12th February, it was raining, and if the jury find from a greater weight of evidence that the cotton was out in the open, and had to be weighed, and that the rain was his excuse for not complying with the contract on that day, that should be considered by you in determining whether he demanded the cotton in a reasonable time on the 15th February. It is hard to give a rule as to what is a reasonable time. If a man is careless or negligent in complying, or offering to comply, said offer would not be in a reasonable time. If he goes and offers to comply as soon as a prudent man would, under the circumstances, it is within a reasonable time"—and plaintiff excepted; but we see no prejudice accruing to defendant from the two additions above excepted to.

The defendant, in his testimony, stated: "I refused to deliver cotton on the 15th because cotton had gone up, and on account of plaintiff's delay." If so, there was no necessity to tender the money; and, even if the custom to pay by check with bill of lading attached had not been shown, it was immaterial. This was held in the former appeal. 133 N. C. 308, 45 S. E. 642, citing Smith v. B. & L. Ass'n, 119 N. C. 257, 26 S. E. 40, and Grandy v. Small, 50 N. C. 50. As to the other ground of reasonable delay, that was a matter for the jury, and upon proper instructions they found the issue in favor of plaintiff. Blalock v. Clark, 133 N. C., at page 308, 45 S. E. 643.

No error.

(137 N. C. 145)

BOND et al. v. WILSON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1904.)

EXECUTION — AMOUNT — ASCERTAINMENT BY REFEREE — DEPARTURE FROM JUDGMENT — APPEAL—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE.

1. The Supreme Court cannot pass upon the weight of the evidence.

2. A judgment awarded a recovery of such sums as might be found by calculation to be due on the notes sued upon, and described the notes as reduced by certain enumerated credits, and provided the rate at which interest was to be computed. An execution was issued on the judgment, in which execution the debt was described as in the judgment, with each credit likewise set out. The court, on appeal from an order of the clerk refusing to recall the execution, appointed a referee to calculate the amounts due on the notes; the order of reference providing that the referee should not hear evidence of any kind. The referee failed to follow the judgment as to one credit, and adopted a different method of calculation than that prescribed by the judgment and the court set aside the original execution and affirmed his report. Held error: that there was no necessity for the intervention of the referee, and, he having been appointed, should have followed the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Burke County; Neal, Judge.

Action by L. N. Bond and others against J. W. Wilson. From a judgment setting aside an execution issued on a judgment for plaintiffs and overruling exceptions to the report of a referee, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

John T. Perkins and A. C. Avery, for appellants. Avery & Ervin, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. This case is an old acquaintance. It has been several times before the court. The action was commenced to recover the amount alleged to be due on two promissory notes, one for $2,000 and the other for $3,000, executed by the defendant to the plaintiffs. The defendant pleaded payment and the statute of limitations. The latter plea was found against him, and, judgment being rendered for the plaintiffs, he appealed to this court. A new trial was granted because of a failure of the judge to give certain instructions to the jury requested by the defendant on the question of the statute of limitations. Bond v. Wilson, 129 N. C. 387, 40 S. E. 182. On the second trial the defendant claimed several credits to have been made by him on the notes, but which were not indorsed upon the notes themselves; one of the credits being for the amount of $800, paid for a mill wheel at the request of the agent of the plaintiffs, and the other was for the payment of $240 freight charges on the wheel. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that the notes had been paid in part; that the balance was not barred by the statute of limitations; and in answer to the second issue, "What credit is defendant entitled to on said notes or either one of them?" they said, "All credits entered upon notes and all credits claimed by the defendant after January 1, 1879; also credit of $1,040 for mill wheel, credited January 1, 1876." The court, in rendering judgment upon the verdict, after reciting the issues and answers of the jury thereto, further said: "And the court having submitted to the jury all of the credits pleaded by the defendant prior to January 1, 1879, as claimed by him upon trial, also all credits appearing upon the notes, together with the following credits, to wit, April 5, 1879, $100; September 5, 1879, $200; July 4, 1879, $100; May 10, 1880, $200; September 1, 1880, $200; and having instructed the jury, not to consider any other credits than those submitted, and also having instructed the jury that the credit of $600 growing out of the lot transaction, as pleaded by the defendant in his answer, was barred by the statute of limitations: Now, therefore, it is ordered and adjudged by the court that the plaintiff recover of the defendant such sum as may be found to be due by calculation on the notes sued upon, to wit, one note of $3,000, dated January 1, 1875, bearing interest from date at 8 per cent., payable semiannually; and one note of $2,000, dated February 1, 1875, bearing interest from date at 8 per cent., payable semiannually; subject to and reduced by the following credits, to wit, January 1, 1876, $1,040; January 1, 1877, $480; January 1, 1879, by interest in full due on these notes to said date; April 5, 1879, $100; July 4, 1879, $100; September 5, 1879, $200; May 10, 1880, $200; September 1, 1880, $200; September 1, 1881, $500; November 26, 1883, $2,500; June 3, 1884, $509.04; August 12, 1884, $154.90; September 11, 1890, $310.03; August 7, 1893, $258.21. That in ascertaining the amount due under this judgment interest is to be computed at 8 per cent., payable semiannually. It is further adjudged by the court that the defendant pay the cost of this action, to be taxed by the clerk." Both parties appealed from the judgment, the plaintiffs on the alleged ground and exception that there was no evidence to sustain the credit of $1,040 for the mill wheel, and because his honor allowed the jury to return to their room and find the date of the credit of $1,040, they having failed to fix that date when they first returned the verdict; and the defendant for alleged misdirection by his honor on the question of the statute of limitations. On the hearing in this court it was declared in both appeals that there was no error in the conducting of the trial below. Bond v. Wilson, 131 N. C. 505, 42 S. E. 956. A rehearing of the case was had upon the petition of the plaintiffs. The petition was dismissed, the court being still of the opinion that there was more than a scintilla of evidence to support the finding of the jury as to the credit of $1,040. We could not pass on the weight of the evidence. It appeared to us to be very slight, and that the evidence offered on the other side was strong. But that was not a matter for us. It was for the jury. Upon the judgment the clerk of the superior court of Burke issued to the sheriff of McDowell county an execution against the defendant, in which execution the debt was described precisely and exactly as it was set out and described in the judgment, with each and every credit as to date and amount particularly set out just as they were in the judgment. Upon a motion made by the defendant to recall the execution the clerk of the court refused to interfere, and denied the motion on the ground that the execution was issued in strict conformity to the judgment. The defendant appealed to the judge of the district. At the hearing of the matter, C. D. Bennett, Esq., was made a referee "to calculate the amounts due on the notes and allow the credits according to the judgment." In that order of reference was included the following sentence: "The said referee to hear no evidence of any kind, but simply to calculate the amount due the plaintiffs according to said judgment." The referee reported, amongst other things, that: "The entry January 1, 1879, 'By interest in full due on these notes to said date,' was intended to and does cover the interest up to that date, without taking into consideration $1,040 mill wheel item directed by the judgment to be credited as of January 1, 1876. This your referee finds from an inspection of the whole judgment." The referee further, in his calculations of the amount due on the judgment, does not credit the amount $1,040 as of date January 1, 1876, as directed by the judgment, but credited on the 1st day of January, 1879, with interest on the same, viz., $187.20, from the 1st day of January, 1876. Upon the return of the report of the referee the plaintiffs filed the following exception: "(1) The judgment or order of Judge W. H. Neal directs the referee to ascertain the amount due on account of the judgment in this case by making the calculation of the interest and principal due thereon according to the provisions of the judgment in the case, and the said referee has allowed all the credits and entries on the two notes sued on to go in payment of the interest to January 1, 1879, and, instead of crediting the note sued on with the $1,040 on account of the mill wheel on January 1, 1876, as directed in the judgment, the referee calculated interest on the $1,040 from January 1, 1876, until January 1, 1879, and deducted the amount of $1,040 and interest thereon from the sum of $5,000 on January 1, 1879. The difference between the two methods of calculation amounts to more than $2,000 at the present time. (2) The plaintiffs except to the report of the referee, C. D. Bennett, for that he fails to enter the credit of $1,040 as of date January 1, 1876, as directed by the order referring it, and, as the plaintiffs contend, the judgment and the law direct. A. O. Avery, J. T. Perkins, and E. J. Justice, Attorneys for Plaintiffs." And the court overruled the exceptions, to which the plaintiffs excepted in apt time. Upon the report and exception the exception was overruled, and the report of the referee in all things affirmed, and a judgment rendered that the execution be set aside, that the amount due on the judgment was $2,854.82, and that execution might issue for the same. Costs were allowed against the plaintiffs, and they excepted to the judgment.

The exceptions must be sustained. The judgment upon which the execution was issued was clear in its terms. The original notes sued upon were mentioned and described as to amounts, date of execution, maturity, rate of interest, and time of its payment. The credits on the note were particularly set out, both as to amounts and dates. The execution which was issued upon the judgment as we have said, was a recital of the judgment in every particular, and the amount due on the execution is a simple mathematical calculation. There was no necessity for the intervention of a referee, and he did not follow the judgment as to the credit of $1,040. As we have already said, the jury, in allowing that credit, when they brought in their verdict had failed to fix the date when it should have been credited on the notes. They were instructed to return to their room and find the date. They fixed it as of the 1st day of January, 1876. The plaintiffs excepted to that procedure, and appealed to this court, but we held that it was a proper one.

His honor's order and judgment must be reversed.

CLARK, C. J., and WALKER, J., did not sit on the hearing of this case.

(127 N. C. 130)

AVERY v. OLIVER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1904.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—
FELLOW SERVANTS—RAILROADS—STATUTES—APPLICATION—NONSUIT.

1. Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, provides that any employé of any railroad company in the state who shall suffer injury in his employment by the negligence of any other servant, etc., shall be entitled to maintain an action against such company. Held, that where plaintiff was injured by the negligence of a fellow servant, while in the employ of defendant O., who was engaged by defendant railroad company to lower a grade in its track, and plaintiff claimed that O. was the servant of the railroad company, and not an independent contractor, as the railroad claimed, it was error to direct a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, without first requiring a determination of the relation of the defendants to each other.

2. Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, providing that railroad companies shall be liable for injuries to employés by the negligence of fellow servants, has no application to injuries sustained by the servant of an independent contractor of a railroad company by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Burke County; M. H. Justice, Judge.

Action by Rufus Avery against W. J. Oliver and another. A nonsuit was directed at the close of the plaintiff's testimony, and he appeals. Reversed.

The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for injuries to himself, which he alleges were caused by the negligence of the defendants. The testimony tended to show that he was employed by one Walter Queen, foreman of defendant Oliver, the latter having been employed by his codefendant, the Southern Railway Company, to lower a grade on the line of its railway about one mile west of Morganton. In order to do the work it was necessary to remove earth and rock from a cut, which was carried in cars over the road of defendant company to a place where the grade was being raised by it about two miles east of Morganton, and dumped there from the cars. While the plaintiff was thus employed, Walter Queen ordered him and others to go behind one of the dump cars, which was on a trestle, and knock the chains loose and dump the car which was loaded with earth and stone. He obeyed the order, and tilted the car, but it would not dump the contents, and, on account of the greater weight of the earth and stone at the end of the car where he was placed, it fell back and caught and injured him. The cars were secured by chains on each side, and when they were dumped the stay chains were unfastened on what appeared to be the lightest side, so that the car would dump from the other side by reason of the greater weight there. If it did not dump, the hands would go on the side where the chains were loose and push the car over, without unfastening the chains on the other side, which were intended to stay the car, or to keep it in the proper position, and to prevent it from rebounding and injuring the hands. The chains on the other side had been unfastened by one of the hands, Will Largent, and the plaintiff knew, at the time he attempted to dump the car, that the chains on that side were loose, but did not think it was his business to have them fastened. If the chains on that side had been fastened, the accident would not have occurred, and the plaintiff knew this at the time. "The right way to dump is to fasten the chains on the other or opposite side of car and keep out of the way." There was further testimony tending to show that one Parsons, an engineer of the defendant company, was in charge of the work when Oliver was doing the grading. He showed how to make the grading, and set pegs, and inspected the work. McDowell testified that Parsons was the resident engineer of defendant company, and had charge, as engineer, of the work Oliver was doing, and everything was under his control. He would sometimes direct the work and the dumping. "He was all over the work." He would tell the hands when to dump the rock. Oliver had charge and employed his own hands, but Parsons directed the work. A freshet washed the piles away, and Parsons directed the work of restoration. This is a sufficient statement of the evidence to present the view taken by this court of the case. At the close of the testimony for the plaintiff, the court, on motion of defendant, nonsuited the plaintiff, who excepted and appealed.

Avery & Avery and Avery & Erwin, for appellant. J. T. Perkins, for appellee W. J. Oliver. S. J. Ervin, for appellee Southern Railway Company.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts). In an action for negligence the first issue always is, was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of defendant? When contributory negligence is pleaded, the next issue is, did the plaintiff, by his own negligence, contribute to his injury? And in a case like this one these are the only issues necessary to be submitted to the jury in order to ascertain whether the plaintiff has established his cause of action, as the third issue, sometimes submitted when the last clear chance to avoid the injury may have been open to the defendant, does not arise. The issue as to damages merely determines the amount of the recovery, and does not affect the cause of action, for, if the plaintiff succeeds in the action, he is entitled to recover something—at least nominal damages. In this case, the issues being those relating to negligence and contributory negligence, it was necessary, before the latter issue could be reached, that the jury should have found with the plaintiff on the first issue, namely, that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of the defendants. If the defendant Oliver was an independent contractor, employed by the railway company to do the work specified in their contract, and not subject to the control and direction of the railway company, and the plaintiff was a servant in the employ of Oliver at the time he was hurt, the defendant company is not liable for the injury to him. If Oliver was an independent contractor, he is not liable to the plaintiff, because the injury was caused by the act of a fellow servant, as appears by the plaintiff's own testimony, and there is none to the contrary. The direct cause of the rebound of the car which struck the plaintiff was the loosening of the chain on the north side, and this was done by Largent, who was in the same service with the plaintiff, and actually co-operating with him at the time of the occurrence. Again, it may be said, if Oliver was an independent contractor, the question of the assumption of risk by the plaintiff may arise, because, when the servant enters into the employ of the master he assumes all of the ordinary perils and dangers of the service, though not those arising from the negligence of the master. It is incumbent on the master to furnish a reasonably safe place for the servant to perform his work, and reasonably safe machinery and appliances with which to do his work. Marks v. Cotton Mills, 135 N. C. 287, 47 S. E. 432; Witsell v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 557, 27 S. E. 125. When he has discharged this duty towards his servant, the latter then assumes all risks which may be incident to the service in which he is employed. These principles are, of course, modified, as to railway companies, by Act 1897, c. 56 (Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83), but they apply to individuals and to other corporations. It has always been held that one of the risks ordinarily incident to the service is the negligence of a fellow servant. If in this case, therefore, the injury was caused by the negligence of Largent, who was the plaintiff's fellow servant, the defendant Oliver, if he was an independent contractor, is not liable to the plaintiff, and, of course, the other defendant cannot be, as its liability depends upon that of Oliver, and, even if the latter was negligent, and thereby caused the injury, the railway company would still not be liable unless Oliver was its servant, and not, as we have said, an independent contractor. It became necessary, therefore, to determine the relation of the defendants to each other. The court should have submitted this question to the jury with proper instructions as to the law, so that it might first be ascertained whether Oliver was an independent contractor, for, if he was, and the negligence of Largent, a fellow servant, caused the injury to the plaintiff, the act of 1897 would not apply, and the defendants would be acquitted of any and all liability, not because of any negligence on the part of the plaintiff which contributed to the injury, but for the reason that there was no negligence on the part of the defendants, as the law would attribute the injury to the negligence of the fellow servant, which was one of the risks and perils of the service assumed by the plaintiff. The question of contributory negligence could not, therefore, arise in that state of the case. The error of the court consisted in holding that the case turned, in the present stage of it, upon the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, whereas that question was not presented unless there was prior negligence on the part of the defendants. The defendants, indeed, may have been negligent, and it may become necessary in the development of the case to consider the issue as to the plaintiff's negligence; but the evidence now before us is such as to require the jury to first decide whether there was any negligence of the defendants upon the principles we have stated. The decision of the case by nonsuit upon the second issue was consequently premature.

We will not undertake to decide whether the evidence, taken in the most favorable light for the plaintiff, makes out a conclusive case of negligence on his part, which proximately caused the injury, but we will leave that question open for discussion if the case should again come before us. The evidence may be materially changed at the next trial. It is undoubtedly true, as argued by counsel, that if a servant is ordered to do certain work, and he attempts to do it in a way that is unsafe, when there is a perfectly safe way to do it, or if he does the work with a machine or implement which, in the language of the present chief justice, "is so grossly or clearly defective that the employé must know of the extra risk," he is deemed "to have voluntarily and knowingly assumed the risk," and if he is injured he cannot complain of his employer. Lloyd v. Hanes, 126 N. C. 359, 35 S. E. 611; Whitson v. Wrenn, 134 N. C. 86, 46 S. E. 17. The negligence of the servant which defeats his recovery depends not only upon the danger, but upon its obviousness. He is not permitted to do that which will necessarily result in injury to himself, and then hold his master responsible, because in such a case his act is willful, and therefore voluntary, and no man can by his voluntary and wrongful act impose liability upon another. "Volenti non fit injuria." What we have said is subject, of course, to the full operation of the act of 1897. If Oliver was an independent contractor, the act does not apply; if he was not, but was an agent or servant of defendant company, it does apply. In the latter case the question of contributory negligence will arise. It will also arise in the former case if the jury should find that Oliver was an independent contractor, but that the injury was not due to the negligence of a fellow servant. If, however, they should find that it was caused by the negligent act of a fellow servant, it would not be necessary to consider the plaintiff's negligence. There was error in nonsuiting the plaintiff.

New trial.

(137 N. C. 150)

LASSITER v. RALEIGH & G. R. CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1904.)

MASTER — DEATH OF SERVANT — NEGLIGENCE — JURY QUESTION — RULE OF COM-PANY — STATUTE.

1. Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, § 1, provides that the personal representative of any employé who shall have suffered death in the course of his services with any railroad company operating in the state by the negligence of any other employé or by any defect in the machinery, ways, or appliances, shall be entitled to maintain an action against the company. Section 2 provides that any contract or agreement, express or implied, made by any such employé, to waive the benefit of that law shall be void. Held, that the question whether, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of such employé, in an action for his death, the defendant had the last clear chance to avoid the injury, and would have done so by the exercise of proper care, is not taken from the jury merely because of a rule of the company, in a book for which the employé had receipted, providing that, "when a train is being pushed by an engine (except when shifting and making up trains in yards) a flagman must be stationed in a conspicuous position on the front of the leading car to immediately signal the engineer in case of danger"; the parenthetical expression contained in the rule falling within the inhibition of the statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Bryan, Judge.

Action by Albert Lassiter, administrator of the estate of A. O. Lassiter, deceased against the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

For former opinion, see 45 S. E. 570.

Day & Bell, T. B. Womack, and Murray Allen, for appellants. Battle & Mordecai and N. Y. Gulley, for appellee.

OLARK, C. J. This case was before this court, 138 N. C. 244, 45 S. E. 570. The defendant appellant says in its brief that "the facts developed by the plaintiff's testimony on the second trial do not differ materially from those on the former trial," but adds that the defendant had put in evidence rule 404 of the rulebook (for which book plaintiff's intestate had receipted), which reads as follows: "When a train is being pushed by an engine (except when shifting and making up trains in yards) a flagman must be stationed in a conspicuous position on the front of the leading car to immediately signal the engineer in case of danger." The first exception for refusal to dismiss at the close of the plaintiff's testimony was waived by the introduction of evidence by the defendant (Prevatt v. Harrelson, 132 N. C. 251, 43 S. E. 800; Jones v. Warren, 134 N. C. 392, 46 S. E. 740), and, besides, is settled by the former decision in this case.

The second exception is to the admission of evidence that greater care must be exercised in moving cars in a large town than in a small one. This is so held in Arrowood v. Railroad, 126 N. C. 631, 36 S. E. 151, and even if it had been error, it would be harmless error. This was not a yard off to one side of the town, but it was a side track in the main street of the town, and the town ordinance forbidding a higher rate of speed than six or eight miles was proved.

The third exception—for refusal to nonsuit at the close of all the evidence—was properly refused upon the former ruling in this case. Any conflict created by the defendant's evidence was a matter for the jury.

The fourth exception merely raised the same point by asking the court to instruct the jury that upon the whole evidence the plaintiff could not recover.

The fifth exception is without merit, for the court, in its charge, did instruct the jury, as asked, that the plaintiff's intestate, in any aspect of the evidence, was guilty of contributory negligence, and the jury so found. Whether this did not conflict with what was said in Smith v. Railroad, 132 N. C. 824-827, 44 S. E. 663, is not before us on this appeal by the defendant.

Exceptions 6, 7, 8, 9, 13, and 16 depend upon the effect of rule 404, and present really the only question in this appeal, the others having been decided on the former appeal. This rule can affect the right to recover only upon the assumption that it was a contract by the deceased, by implication, that, "when shifting and making up trains in yards a flagman need not be stationed in a conspicuous position on the front of the leading car to immediately signal the engineer in case of danger." If the intestate had entered into an express stipulation to that effect, it would have been void. Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56; Coley v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 537, 39 S. E. 43, 57 L. R. A. 817; Mott v. Railroad, 131 N. C. 234, 42 S. E. 601; Sigman v. Railroad, 135 N. C. 184, 47 S. E. 420. Whether or not, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's intestate, the defendant had the "last clear chance" to avoid the injury, and would have done so by the exercise of proper care, was a question of fact properly submitted to the jury. The plaintiff was not, as defendant contends, barred of the right to have that question submitted to the jury by reason of rule 404.

Exceptions 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, and 20 were settled by the former decision in this case.

Exception 18 is to the usual charge as to the "last clear chance," which was given in accordance with what was held in the former appeal, 133 N. C., near bottom of page 247, 45 S. E. 571.

Exception 21 is to a charge in favor of the defendant. The appeal substantially presents the proposition that the court should have told the jury, as a proposition of law, that it was not negligence in the defendant, as to an employé, not to have some one stationed in a conspicuous place on the front of the leading car to immediately signal the engineer in case of danger, when shifting cars backwards on the side track in Henderson. The court submitted to the jury the question whether there was negligence of the defendant in that respect upon the facts of this case, and whether, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's intestate, such negligence of the defendant (if the jury found it to be negligence) was the proximate cause of the death of the plaintiff's intestate. In this there was no error of which the defendant could complain. Smith v. Railroad, 132 N. C., and cases cited at pages 824-827, 44 S. E. 663. A case exactly in point upon almost identical facts is Railroad v. Boisseau, 32 Can. 424.

No error.

(137 N. C. 237)

JONES et al. v. NANTAHALA MARBLE & TALC CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION—WAIVER—ACTION FOR FEES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

1. Where an attorney wrote a letter to his client as to the litigation, bearing on the amount that might be recovered against the client, and which, if known to the opposing side, might be harmful to the client, a copy of the letter sent by the attorney to his associate counsel constitutes a privileged communication.

2. Where defendant in an action to recover attorney's fees introduces as a witness an attorney who was associated with the plaintiffs in the litigation in which the claims for fees arose, for the purpose of showing that the plaintiffs' charges are excessive, he thereby waives the privilege of secrecy attaching to a confidential communication between the witness and defendant, a copy of which the witness had sent to the plaintiffs, and hence such communication is admissible to show that the witness entertained a different opinion at the time the communication was made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Long, Judge.

Action by W. W. Jones and others against the Nantahala Marble & Talc Company.

From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Carter and H. D. Chedester, for appellant. Merrick & Barnard and Locke Craige, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. The plaintiffs, partners in the practice of the law, brought this action to recover of the defendant certain fees for professional services rendered. The defendant denied that it owed the plaintiffs anything for professional services, averring that it had paid to the plaintiffs a reasonable compensation for the same. The only exception in the appeal arises on a matter of evidence. One of the plaintiffs, in his own behalf, testified as to the value of his services and his contract of employment. The defendant introduced as a witness an attorney who was associated with the plaintiffs as one of the defendant's attorneys in the suit in which the plaintiffs alleged that they earned the fees which are the subject of this action, for the purpose of showing that the fees and charges claimed by the plaintiffs were excessive and exorbitant. His testimony as to the amount involved tended to show that the fees were excessive. On his cross-examination the plaintiffs, to show that the witness had on a former occasion expressed himself otherwise than he testified as to the amount involved in the suit in which the plaintiffs' fees were alleged to have been earned, showed him a carbon copy of a letter which the witness had written and sent to the president of the defendant company on that subject, and which copy the witness had sent to the plaintiffs. The witness identified it, and, over the objection and exception of the defendant, his honor admitted it. The witness, for himself, was willing to waive any privilege he might be thought to have, but disclaimed any right to represent the defendant. The objection was that it was a confidential communication between attorneys and client, and could not be received as evidence over the objection of the client (the defendant). The letter, upon its face, shows that the matter was of a confidential nature between lawyer and client. It contained matters directly connected with the important features of the litigation, bearing on the amount that might be recovered against the defendant, and which, if they had been known to the opposing side, might have been harmful. The matters being confidential at the time the letter was written, they remained so perpetually, unless they should be afterwards waived by the client. It makes no difference that the carbon copy of the letter was sent to the plaintiffs by the witness. It was just as much a confidential communication as if it had been sent by the client to the plaintiffs. All communications, whether by conversation or in writing, between the attorneys for a party concerning the subject-matter of the litigation, are privileged. 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 57, and authorities there cited.

The question then arises, did the defendant, by introducing the witness to prove that the charges of the plaintiffs were excessive, waive the privilege of secrecy and confidence? We think it did. The purpose and object of the defendant, as we have said, was to show that the plaintiffs' charges were exorbitant, and the chief method of doing that was in examining the witness as to the amount involved in the litigation. The witness, in his examination in chief, gave testimony on that head, the effect of which upon the jury was calculated to damage the plaintiffs' case. The views of the witness on that matter in the written communication to his client, the plaintiffs contended, were favorable to them, and different from his opinion expressed on the witness stand. Certainly the defendant could not get the benefit of the witness' testimony to disparage the plaintiffs' claim, and then exclude the plaintiffs from the benefit of an opinion of the witness expressed at another time, and which the plaintiffs claim was favorable to them. Opening up the question of the excessive amount of the plaintiffs' services through the method of showing the small amount involved was a waiver by the defendant of the seal of confidence which the law imposed upon the communication between the witness and the defendant on that question.

No error.

DOUGLAS, J., concurs in result.

(137 N. C. 204)

HARRIS v. BALFOUR QUARRY CO. .

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

INJURIES TO EMPLOYÉ—NEGLIGENCE OF VICE PRINCIPAL—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. In an action for personal injuries received while drilling out an unexploded blast in a rock, it appeared that defendant's vice principal in charge of the quarry, without himself making an examination of the hole, ordered plaintiff and other laborers to clean it out. While doing so, the blast exploded, causing the injury sued for. Held, that there was sufficient evidence of negligence to submit to the jury.

2. An employer is responsible for the negligence or incompetency of the vice principal in the scope of his authority.

3. In an action by an employé for personal injuries resulting from the negligence or incompetency of a vice principal, it need not be alleged that such person was vice principal, or that his incompetency was known to the principal, to let in proof that the injury occurred by the negligence or incompetency of such vice principal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Henderson County; Shaw, Judge.

Action for personal injuries by I. G. Harris against the Balfour Quarry Company.

¶ 2. See Master and Servant, vol. 24, Cent. Dig. § 422.

From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Smith & Valentine, for appellant. Merrick & Barnard, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. This case was before us in 131 N. C. 553, 42 S. E. 973, and a new trial was granted because, in the opinion of a majority of the court, the pleadings were insufficient to justify the admission of evidence, and also that the evidence as then sent up did not show any negligence. The pleadings have since been amended to conform to the views then expressed by the court, and the evidence is also fuller, and the case should have been submitted to the jury. The witness who, on the former appeal, was not shown to be an expert, was on this trial found by the court to be an expert, and testified in effect that it was dangerous, and known to be dangerous, to drill out an unexploded hole without ascertaining that it had actually fired; that it could be learned by proper examination whether or not it had been fired, and that it was carelessness not to make such examination before ordering the hole to be drilled; that it could be ascertained whether the charge had gone off, and ordinarily this was ascertained by using a battery. No battery was used on this occasion, and there was no examination by the "boss" or any skilled operative. The evidence is that, two laborers supposing (after first differing about it) the hole had been fired, the vice principal in charge of the quarry, without making any examination himself or having it made by a skilled man, ordered the two men to clean it out; that they called the plaintiff to come and help them "churn" out the hole; that he did not go, whereupon the vice principal ordered him to go; that the hole was cleaned out by "churning" (which is done by raising a steel drill and dropping it hard into the hole); that the plaintiff was employed to drill holes, and it was not the rule in the quarry for men who drilled holes to clean out the tamping; that, while "churning," the boss told them to hurry up, and in so doing they raised the drill higher, when it fell exploded the charge, by which the plaintiff lost an eye and an arm, one of the other laborers was killed, and the third was badly injured. There was evidence of negligence, and the case should have been submitted to the jury, after opportunity to the defendant to show a different state of facts, if it could.

The ruling on the former appeal (131 N. C. 553, 42 S. E. 973) that in actions for negligence, where the negligence alleged is that of a vice principal, the complaint must allege that the negligence was that of a vice principal, that he was such vice principal, and that the employer had knowledge of his incompetency, cannot be questioned on this second appeal in the same case (Perry v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 333, 40 S. E. 191), and, if it could be, it is not presented, because the pleadings have been amended in that particular, and there is no exception presenting the point. We would not overrule any case upon an obiter dictum. We simply would not be understood by our silence as reaffirming the former opinion upon that point. The employer is responsible for the negligence or incompetency of a vice principal in the scope of his authority, and it need not be alleged that he was vice principal, or that his incompetency was known to the principal, to let in proof that the injury occurred by the negligence or incompetency of such vice principal. His act is the act of the principal.

Error.

(137 N. C. 107)

SPENOER et al. v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1904.)

RAILROADS — CONSOLIDATION — DISSENTING STOCKHOLDERS — PAYMENT FOR STOCK — STATUTE — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — EMINENT DOMAIN — EQUITY — JURISDICTION — LACHES — ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

1. Whether corporate acts are ultra vires is a conclusion of law to be drawn from the facts stated.

2. Priv. Laws 1901, p. 463, c. 168, confers authority on the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company to consolidate with any railroad or transportation company in the United States. Power is also conferred on any railroad or transportation company "now or hereafter incorporated" by the state of North Carolina, etc., to consolidate with the Sea Board Air Line Company. The Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company was organized under an act of the General Assembly of North Carolina (Acts 1835-36, p. 17, c. 25). Held, that it was included in the class of companies with which the Seaboard Air Line Company was authorized to consolidate.

3. Under the act, power is conferred on both the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company and the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company to consolidate each with the other.

4. Priv. Laws 1901, p. 463, c. 168, empowering a majority of stockholders of certain railroads to consolidate with other companies, is an enabling act, and therefore imposes no duty or obligation on the corporations or their stockholders.

5. Priv. Laws 1901, p. 463, c. 168, empowering a majority of the stockholders of certain railroads to consolidate with other companies, and providing for assessing and paying the value of the dissenting stock, is an exercise of the power of eminent domain.

6. Since the right of railroads to consolidate under Priv. Laws 1901, p. 463, c. 168, authorizing payment of the value of dissenting stock, is an exercise of the power of eminent domain, a dissenting stockholder cannot rely on the inhibition of the federal Constitution as to the impairment of the obligation of a contract to defeat a consummated consolidation under the act, though her stock was purchased prior to Const. 1868, taking effect, reserving to the state the right to amend charters granted by it, and though her stock was issued by a company whose charter was granted when there was no constitutional reservation of power to amend.

7. Where, under the power conferred by Priv. Laws 1901, p. 463, c. 168, on railroads to consolidate, certain roads duly exercised the power, and the consolidation became effective, so that an interference therewith would involve millions of dollars of private interests, a stockholder dissenting from such consolidation, who, instead of asserting her rights promptly by appeal to the preventive jurisdiction of the court, waits more than two years before invoking the equitable power of the court to declare the consolidation invalid, is in no position, because of laches, to pursue that remedy.

8. Where, under the power conferred on railroads to consolidate by Priv. Laws 1901, p. 463, c. 188, certain roads duly consolidated, so that an interference therewith would involve millions of dollars of private interests, a stockholder dissenting from such consolidation, who has been guilty of laches in pursuing her equitable right to appeal to the courts, is fully protected by the offer of the defendant to pay the value of the stock, notwithstanding plaintiff's failure to proceed to have her stock valued as prescribed by the act; it appearing that the court granted plaintiff, with the assent of the defendant, the right to amend her complaint and have the value of her stock ascertained pursuant to the statute, and also directed the production of the books of the corporation for use in proving the value of the stock.

Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Brown, Judge.

Suit by R. P. Spencer and another against the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment upon a demurrer ore tenus at the October term, 1904, of the superior court of Wake county. The feme plaintiff, Ida T. Spencer, alleged: That she was the owner of seven shares of stock in the defendant corporation, the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, of the par value of $100 each; that she acquired the said stock in 1887, and has owned the same continuously to the date of the institution of this action; that said stock is represented by certificate No. 1,644, bearing date of April 13, 1887. "(2) That the defendant the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company was created and organized under an act of the General Assembly of North Carolina (chapter 25, p. 17, of the Acts of 1835-36), and has since that day continuously exercised the corporate powers thereby conferred, until the alleged merger of said corporation in what is known as the Seaboard Air Line Railway. (3) That the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, acting under and by virtue of certain alleged and assumed powers attempted to be granted under an act of the General Assembly of the state of Virginia, has endeavored to merge and consolidate itself with certain other railroads under the corporate name of the Seaboard Air Line Railway, and has become the alleged holding corporation in respect to said other subsidiary corporations; that such alleged merger and consolidation was and is ultra vires, and beyond the corporate powers of said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, and is invalid and void in so far as the plaintiffs are concerned. (4) That at a meeting of the stockholders of the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company held in the city of Raleigh on May 20, 1901, in pursuance of a notice, a copy of which is hereto attached as part of this complaint, a majority of said stockholders undertook and attempted to take such action as would result in the merger and consolidation of said corporation as aforesaid; that said notice did not warrant such action; that at said meeting the said Ida T. Spencer, by her attorney in fact, said R. P. Spencer, appeared and protested against the action proposed to be taken by a majority of said stockholders, and thereupon filed a written protest against such action, a copy of which is hereto attached as a part of this complaint; that prior to said meeting several other meetings had been held, at which plaintiffs were not present, and of which they had no notice, at which certain proceedings were had, which plaintiffs cannot state, because the records of said corporation are not kept within the limits of the state, and plaintiffs have not been able to obtain access thereto; that the action of said meeting of May 20, 1901, was ultra vires and illegal and invalid and void as to the plaintiffs; that, after filing of said protest, said R. P. Spencer, for himself, and on behalf of said Ida T. Spencer, withdrew from said meeting, and was not present thereafter, and took no part in the proceedings. (5) That the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, so far as plaintiffs are concerned, has since the alleged merger and consolidation preserved its corporate identity and separate existence as a corporation, notwithstanding that since then it has nominally constituted an integral part of the so-called Seaboard Air Line Railway, and although it has not since then separately exercised its corporate powers and discharged its corporate duties; that it has not held any meeting of its stockholders or of its directors; that it has not published any statements of its receipts and disbursements; that it has not declared any dividends, but has subordinated itself to the management and control of the officers and directors of the said Seaboard Air Line Railway, although, as plaintiffs allege, it has done so contrary to law and in violation of its corporate duties and obligations. (6) That immediately prior to or immediately after said stockholders' meeting of May 20, 1901, the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, acting through certain officers and agents, of whom plaintiffs cannot procure definite information, attempted to sell, and sold 1,828 shares of the stock of said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, which was held in its treasury for certain definite purposes; that the same was not sold for such purposes, but was sold in violation of the duties of said officers and of the rights of the plaintiffs; that it was sold to certain parties whose names plaintiffs cannot ascertain, but who were directly interested in the organization of the said Seaboard Air Line Railway; that it was sold secretly, without being offered for subscription to the stockholders of said road, including the plaintiffs, or to the public, and without any opportunity for bidders to bid for same; that it was sold at a grossly inadequate price, and no account has ever been rendered in respect to its sale and purchase. (7) That, under the charter and amendments thereto of the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, it had no right or power to acquire stock of other corporations, nor to do any of the acts which it has attempted to do and has done in connection with said merger and consolidation; that said acts are unknown to plaintiffs in detail and in their entirety, and will be, if possible, ascertained and disclosed to this court during the progress of this action; that all of said acts and doings which have resulted in said so-called merger and consolidation have been ultra vires, contrary to law, and in derogation of the manifest and inherent rights and privileges of the plaintiff Ida T. Spencer as a stockholder in said corporation. (8) That, if the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company had maintained and discharged its separate duties as a corporation created and existing under the laws of North Carolina, the said stock of the plaintiff Ida T. Spencer would have largely increased in value, and would now have been a valuable asset of said plaintiff, but that the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company having undertaken to purchase the stock of other corporations and operate the same as a so-called holding corporation, having issued bonds to an amount at present unknown to plaintiff, having assumed the debts of many other corporations, having indorsed or guaranteed bonds of other corporations, having assumed the burden of extending lines of railway upon its own credit, all of which it has done, and done many other things which were ultra vires and destructive of plaintiff's rights in the premises as one of its stockholders, the said stock has been prevented from receiving the dividends the said road would otherwise have earned; that if the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company had been operated as a separate and distinct corporation, as it was originally chartered, and as it was intended that it should be, the plaintiff's stock would have produced for her large dividends during the past few years, whereas, owing to the illegal and destructive acts hereinbefore mentioned, her stock has produced for her no dividends whatsoever. (9) That the value of plaintiff's stock is not measurable in any degree by its present market value, because it has none, nor by its antecedent market value, which is not pertinent to this controversy; that the effect of the merger and consolidation has been to completely destroy the corporate existence of said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, in so far as the actors therein could affect such destruction, and to destroy completely the value of the plaintiff's said stock, both commercially and intrinsically. (10) That the said Raleigh &

Gaston Railroad Company, or the officers thereof, if any there be, or the officers of the Seaboard Air Line Railway, have either destroyed the books, records, and papers of the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, or have removed them beyond the limits of the state, either of which acts is contrary to law and in derogation of the rights in the premises of the said Ida T. Spencer as a stockholder in said corporation. (11) That the said corporation, the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, has ceased to act under and in pursuance of its charter and in compliance with its corporate duty and the laws of North Carolina for the two years last past, and since May 20, 1901; that thereby it has forfeited its charter, under the provisions of section 688 of the Code of North Carolina.

"Wherefore the plaintiffs demand judgment: (1) That the defendants the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company and the Seaboard Air Line Railway be required to disclose to this court as follows: When the attempted merger mentioned in this complaint went into effect, and what are its terms; what relation the defendant Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company bore and now bears to said merger; what have been the annual receipts and disbursements of the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, as a separate entity, and in its distinct and separate corporate capacity, from January 1, 1901, to this date; what have been its annual net profits during said period; what stock of other companies it has acquired or attempted to acquire, what bonds of other companies it has purchased or assumed or guaranteed or endorsed; to whom it sold said 1,828 shares of treasury stock, when, and at what price; to what uses or purposes the proceeds derived from the sale of said stock were applied; what disbursements it has made out of the funds of said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, or otherwise, to effect such merger and consolidation, or in connection therewith or incidental thereto; who are the present corporate officers of the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company; when and where the stockholders of said corporation held their last annual meeting, and what were the proceedings of such meeting, if any such meeting was held. (2) That the defendant the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company be required, under the direction of this court, to render an accounting of all its receipts and disbursements since January 1, 1901, to this date, as a separate and distinct corporation. (3) That the alleged merger and consolidation of the said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company with other corporations into what is known as Seaboard Air Line Railway be declared ultra vires and void as to these plaintiffs. (4) That a receiver be appointed for said Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company."

At the session of 1899, p. 127, c. 34, the Legislature of this state incorporated the Richmond, Petersburg & Carolina Railroad Company, a Virginia corporation, and, by virtue of said act, declared that said new corporation should succeed to all of the rights, etc., of the Virginia & Carolina Railroad Company, etc. By the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of Virginia approved January 12, 1900, the Richmond, Petersburg & Carolina Railroad Company was authorized, upon petition filed in the circuit court of Richmond, to change its name, etc. The said railroad company duly filed its petition in said court, praying that it be permitted to change its name to the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company, and pursuant to said petition an order was duly made by said court changing the name of said corporation in accordance with the prayer in said petition. By chapter 168, p. 463, Private Laws of 1901 of North Carolina, the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company, successor to the Richmond, Petersburg & Carolina Railroad Company, was empowered to exercise in this state all of the powers, etc., vested in the Richmond, Petersburg & Carolina Railroad Company under its charter and amendments thereto, etc. It was also provided that: "With the approval of two thirds in amount of its stockholders given at any annual or special meeting * * * it may * * * lease, use, operate, consolidate with or purchase or otherwise acquire * * * the Seaboard & Roanoke Railroad Company, or any railroad or transportation company now or hereafter incorporated," etc., " * * * and from time to time it may consolidate its capital stock, property * * * of any other such railroad or transportation company upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the respective companies, power being hereby granted to any railroad or transportation company or companies now or hereafter incorporated by or under any act of the General Assembly of the state of North Carolina with the approval of a majority in amount of its stockholders respectively given at a meeting called for such purpose or at which all of the shares of capital stock are represented in person or by proxy to make and carry out such contracts of consolidation or lease, sale or other mode of acquisition or disposition," etc. Provision is made setting forth the terms of such contracts of lease, sale, etc., and requiring that a copy of the agreement be filed in the office of the Secretary of State. The statute contains the following proviso: "Any stockholder who dissents from any such consolidation or sale may within sixty days thereafter apply by petition to the superior court of Warren county, or any county in this state of which the dissenting stockholder was a resident at the time of the ratification of this act, to determine the value of his stock and shall be entitled to receive from said consolidated or purchasing corporation the value as thus determined of such stock upon transfer thereof to the new corporation; such value shall be assessed by a jury trial if the same be requested by either party and if the owner of said stock shall be a non resident of this state application may be made to United States courts having jurisdiction."

The following notice was issued: "To the Stockholders of Raleigh and Gaston Railroad: Notice is hereby given that a special general meeting of the stockholders of the above named Company will be held at its office in the City of Raleigh, N. C., on the 20th day of May, 1901, at 9 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of taking into consideration Articles of Agreement of merger and consolidation of the following named railroad companies: Seaboard Air Line Railway, The Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company [and other corporations named], heretofore entered into by the directors of said respective Companies, and at which meeting a vote by ballot will be taken for the adoption or rejection of said agreement. By order of the Directors: J. M. Sheerwood, Secretary."

The plaintiff filed the following protest: "To the Stockholders of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company in Session at Raleigh, May 20, 1901, and to the President and Secretary of said Company: Mrs. Ida T. Spencer, upon whom notice was served of the meeting of stockholders of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Co., on May 20th, at 9 a. m., in Raleigh, to consider articles of agreement of merger and consolidation of a number of Ry. Companies, to wit, the Seaboard Air Line Ry., the Raleigh and Augusta Air Line Ry. Co., and others, appears by attorney in meeting only to protest against such action, and does hereby protest against the consideration of said agreement, or of the adoption of the same, as being ultra vires, and injurious to and in derogation of her rights as a stockholder. Respectfully, R. P. Spencer, Attorney in Fact for Ida T. Spencer."

Pursuant to said notice a meeting of the stockholders was held in the city of Raleigh, N. C., on May 20, 1901. The chairman submitted the proposed agreement of merger and consolidation which had been duly executed by the other corporations; also a certified copy of the resolutions of the board of directors of the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company in relation thereto. The plaintiff thereupon filed the protest set out herein. The following resolution was thereupon unanimously adopted by a stock vote by ballot: "Resolved," etc., "that they do hereby approve and adopt the agreement of merger and consolidation between," etc.; naming all of the roads entering into the merger or consolidation. It is not necessary to set out the terms of the agreement, as no controversy is made in regard thereto. The contract was duly executed as alleged in the complaint. His honor upon the hearing rendered the following judgment: "In this cause the plaintiffs move the court for an order compelling the defendant the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company to bring within the jurisdiction of this court the records and books of the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, and to permit plaintiffs to inspect the same. At the same time the defendants move the court to dismiss the action, and demur ore tenus to the complaint, because no cause of action is stated which plaintiffs can maintain, and that upon the pleadings the action cannot be sustained. The court is of opinion that under the provisions of the act of the General Assembly ratified February 27, 1901 (chapter 168, p. 463, Priv. Laws 1901), and the other acts pleaded and referred to in the answer, the only remedy the plaintiffs have is given by said chapter 168, viz., sue for the value of their stock at time of the consolidation, with interest thereon. The defendants having consented thereto, the plaintiffs may, if desired, file within thirty days an amended or new complaint for the purpose of recovering the value of their stock, and having the value assessed in the manner pointed out in said act. After such complaint is filed it will be competent to require the production of such books, records, etc., of the Raleigh & Gaston Company as tend to show such value. If the plaintiffs shall elect not to file such amended complaint to recover the value of their stock, then the court adjudges that this action must be dismissed, and defendants go without day and recover costs." From which judgment the plaintiffs appealed.

Busbee & Busbee, for appellants. Day & Bell, T. B. Womack, Shepherd & Shepherd, and Murray Allen, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). The plaintiff attacks the validity of the contract of consolidation or merger whereby the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, together with a number of other companies owning and controlling connecting lines, became a part of the Seaboard Air Line System, upon several grounds, which it will be convenient to consider in the order in which they are discussed in the very excellent brief of her counsel. It is, of course, conceded that as the cause was disposed of by his honor in the superior court, and is before us, upon a motion to dismiss as upon a demurrer ore tenus, every allegation made in the complaint, with such construction thereof as is most favorable to the plaintiff, must be taken as true. This, of course, is so for the purpose of drawing the legal conclusions therefrom. The plaintiff says that certain acts of the defendant are ultra vires. This is a conclusion of law to be drawn from the facts stated. It is also to be noted that although the complaint makes no reference to the several statutes enacted by the General Assembly, which, being private acts, do not come under our cognizance unless referred to and ven, his honor's judgment expressly refers to at least one of them, and, in the argument before us, counsel treated them as being properly before us. The plaintiff says that a careful analysis of chapter 168, p. 463, Priv. Laws 1901, fails to show that any authority is conferred upon the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company to consolidate, merge with, or purchase from any other railroad than the Seaboard & Roanoke Railroad Company; that the statute conferring such extraordinary power upon railroad corporations should be clear and explicit, leaving nothing to construction or doubt. Why that single corporation should have been named, in conferring the power, and other railroad companies referred to in general terms, does not very clearly appear. We think, however, that, by a fair and reasonable interpretation of the language of the act, the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company is included among those companies with which the Seaboard Air Line Company is empowered to consolidate—"and any railroad or transportation company now or hereafter incorporated by the laws of the United States or any of the states thereof." In conferring power upon other companies to consolidate, the language is equally comprehensive—"power being hereby granted to any railroad or transportation company or companies now or hereafter incorporated by or under any act or acts of the General Assembly of the state of North Carolina," etc. The Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company certainly comes within this classification. It would seem to follow that the other provisions of the act, unless otherwise expressed, must be construed as referring to all companies thus included in the class upon which the power is conferred to consolidate. Any other construction would render nugatory the power conferred.

The plaintiff next insists that no consolidation can take place unless the power to so consolidate is expressly conferred upon both consolidating corporations. This proposition is sustained by the authorities cited. The reasons therefor are manifest. 10 Cyc. 293. We think that such power is conferred upon both corporations. Chapter 168, p. 463, § 1, Priv. Laws 1901, expressly confers upon the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company the power, "with the approval of two thirds in amount of its stockholders," etc., "to lease, operate, consolidate with or otherwise acquire," etc. As we have seen, the power is conferred upon the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company to enter into the contract of consolidation, etc. The evident purpose of the Legislature was to enable the Seaboard Air Line Railway to form, by consolidation, merger, or purchase, a system of transportation through the state, connecting with railroads in Virginia and South Carolina. The legislation in this state, together with that in Virginia, in regard to the Seaboard Air Line Company, which is expressly referred to in the preamble to chapter 34, p. 127, Laws 1899, and chapter 168, p. 463, Laws 1901, shows this to be the purpose and scope of the several statutes. This being ascertained, the principle by which we should be guided in interpreting the statute is thus stated: "Every statute is to be construed with reference to its intended scope and the purpose of the Legislature in enacting it; and where language used is ambiguous, or admits of more than one meaning, it is to be taken in such a sense as will conform to the scope of the act and carry out the purpose of the statute." Black on Interpretation of Laws, 56; Endlich, 78. It is settled that the power to consolidate may be conferred either in the charter, or by a general enabling act. 10 Cyc. 289.

The plaintiff next contends that, assuming that the statute confers the power upon the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad to consolidate, such power can be exercised only by the unanimous consent of the stockholders; that a dissenting stockholder cannot be compelled to surrender his stock in the corporation, and accept in lieu thereof stock in another company; that unless such power is conferred upon the majority of the stockholders in the charter, or by amendment thereto made before the subscription of the dissenting stockholder, an act of the Legislature conferring such power would be invalid, as impairing the obligation of the contract between the stockholders. This proposition is amply sustained upon principle and authority. The Supreme Court of the United States, in Clearwater v. Meredith, 68 U. S. 25, 17 L. Ed. 604, discussing a statute permitting a consolidation of several railroad companies, says: "The power of the Legislature to confer such authority cannot be questioned, and, without the authority, railroad corporations organized separately could not merge and consolidate their interests. But in conferring the authority the Legislature never intended to compel a dissenting stockholder to transfer his interest because a majority of the stockholders consented to the consolidation. Even if the Legislature had manifested an obvious purpose to do so, the act would have been illegal, for it would have impaired the obligation of a contract. * * * When any person takes stock in a railroad corporation, he has entered into a contract with the company that his interest shall be subject to the direction and control of the proper authorities of the corporation to accomplish the object for which the company was organized. He does not agree that the improvement to which he subscribed should be changed in its purpose and character, at the will and pleasure of a majority of the stockholders, so that new responsibilities, and, it may be, new hazards, are added to the original undertaking. He may be very willing to embark in one enterprise, and unwilling to engage in another—to assist in building a short-line railway, and averse to risking his money in one having a longer line of transit." Botts v. Turnpike Co. (Ky.) 10 S.

W. 134, 2 L. R. A. 594; McCray v. R. Co., 9 Ind. 358. The defendant, conceding this to be the law, says that the statute conferring the power upon the several railroad companies consolidating expressly provides for paying the dissenting stockholder the full value of his stock at the time of the consolidation. This provision can only be sustained by invoking the right of eminent domain, and condemning the stock for a public use by making compensation therefor. The plaintiff contends that, at the date of the charter of the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company (1835), no power to amend charters of corporations was reserved by the Constitution of this state, and that, under the decisions of this court, they come within the protection of the doctrine of the Dartmouth College Case; that all of the stock was issued prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1868, by which such power was reserved. He also says that no general statute was in force in this state authorizing such consolidation. This contention is undoubtedly correct. It will be noted, however, that chapter 168, p. 463, Laws 1901, does not undertake to amend the charter of the company, or to do more than empower a majority of the stockholders to consolidate with the other companies. It is an enabling act, and imposes no duty or obligation upon the corporation or its stockholders. It must be conceded, also, that the act of the majority of the stockholders does not change the relation of the plaintiff towards the corporation. The Legislature, in the exercise of its power, confers upon the majority of the stockholders the power to consolidate with the other constituent companies, and accept in consideration therefor such number of shares in the new or consolidated corporation as may be agreed upon. This can be done only with the consent of the Legislature. The Legislature, having decided that such consolidation was promotive of the public welfare, recognized that it had no power to compel a dissenting stockholder to accept stock in the new corporation. Therefore, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, it empowers the corporation to condemn the stock of such dissenting stockholder when it cannot otherwise be acquired. This power is entirely distinct from the power to amend the charter. The right of eminent domain which resides in the state is defined to be "the rightful authority which exists in every sovereignty to control and regulate those rights of a public nature which pertain to its citizens in common, and to appropriate and control individual property for the public benefit as the public safety, necessity, convenience, or welfare may demand." Coolley, Const. Lim. 524; 1 Lewis on Em. Domain, 1; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. 1048. This right or power is said to have originated in state necessity, and is inherent in sovereignty, and inseparable from it. It is a part of the sovereign power of every state. Id.;

Railroad Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451. When the state incorporated the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, a contract was entered into with the corporation, the obligation of which could not be impaired. The state did not, in respect to the property of the corporation or its shareholders, divest itself of, or in any degree impair, its right of eminent domain. The Legislature could not divest itself of a power so essential to the integrity of the state. Mr. Justice Daniel, in West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 47 U. S. 531, 12 L. Ed. 535, says: "No state, it is declared, shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts; yet, with this concession constantly yielded, it cannot be justly disputed that in every political sovereign community there inheres necessarily the right and the duty of protecting and promoting the interests and welfare of the community at large. This power and this duty are to be exerted not only in the highest acts of sovereignty and in the external relations of the government; they reach and comprehend likewise the interior polity and relations of social life, which should be regulated with reference to the advantage of the whole society. This power denominated the 'eminent domain' of the state is, as its name imports, paramount to all private rights vested under the government, and these last are held in subordination to this power, and must yield in every instance to its proper exercise. * * * A correct view of this matter must demonstrate, moreover, that the right of eminent domain in no wise interferes with the inviolability of contracts; that the most sanctionious regard for the one is perfectly consistent with the possession and exercise of the other." 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. 1050. "The Legislature has the power to authorize the consolidation of railroad and other quasi public corporations, without the unanimous consent of their stockholders, when it makes provision for appraising and paying for the stock of dissenting stockholders. This power is entirely unaffected by the constitutional prohibition against impairing the obligation of contracts, and is based upon the sovereign power of eminent domain. Corporate shares, as well as other property, are subject to the paramount necessities of the state for the promotion of public interests." Noyes on Intercompany Rel. 51; Black v. Delaware Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 469. "In this busy age of restless activity and enterprise, when the brain of man is exhausting itself in his struggle with time and space, the two forces that most oppose his progress, the taking of private stock in such corporations to advance any of the purposes above indicated must be regarded as the taking of it for public benefit. There can be no doubt that a railroad company may be empowered to extend their road beyond the point to which it was built under the original grant, if proper compensation is provided for stockholders who may resist it; and I can see no difference, in principle, whether the original company, in order to secure a through route under one management, is authorized to take the lands of individuals, or to take the property which individuals have in the stock of an existing road. In the first case, for the purpose of establishing a through route, one kind of private property, to wit, the lands of individuals, are taken by the corporation; in another case another kind of property, to wit, the shares of stock of individuals in an existing company, are authorized to be condemned. * * * The same rule applies to both cases, unless property in stock can claim a superior right to protection. This, with all other private right, is held under the dominant right of eminent domain."

In a very able opinion by Bigelow, J., in Central Bridge Corp. v. Lowell, 4 Gray, at page 481, it is said: "Nor is the principle thus recognized any violation of justice or sound policy, nor does it in any degree tend to impair the obligation or infringe upon the sanctity of contracts. It rests on the basis that public convenience and necessity are of paramount importance and obligation, to which, when duly ascertained and declared by the sovereign authority, all minor considerations and private rights and interests must be held in a measure, and to a certain extent, subordinate. By the grant of a franchise to individuals for one public purpose, the Legislature do not forever debar themselves from giving to others new and paramount rights and privileges when required by public exigencies, although it may be necessary, in the exercise of such rights and privileges, to take and appropriate a franchise previously granted. If such were the rule, great public improvements rendered necessary by the increasing wants of society in the development of civilization and the progress of the arts might be prevented by legislative grants which were wise and expedient in their time, but which the public necessities have outgrown and rendered obsolete. The only true rule of policy, as well as of law, is that a grant for one public purpose must yield to another more urgent and important, and this can be effected without any infringement on the constitutional rights of the subject. If in such cases suitable and adequate provision is made by the Legislature for the compensation of those whose property or franchise is acquired, there is no violation of public faith or private right. The obligation created by the original charter is thereby recognized." We have in the history of the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, a striking illustration of the operation of the principle so clearly stated by Justice Bigelow.

The right to take private property by condemnation proceeding for the purpose of constructing a railroad was first asserted, recognized, and enforced by this court in R. & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. 453. Ruffin, C. J., wrote for a unanimous court an able and exhaustive opinion, tracing the power to its source, and giving it the application asserted by the defendant in this case. This opinion has always been cited and approved in this court as settling the law in this state. The same public convenience or necessity which would have justified taking the land of the citizen to open and construct a highway to meet the needs of the public in 1800 was invoked for taking the same land to meet the needs as they existed in 1836 to construct a railroad. The advancing needs and changed conditions in regard to transportation and travel are deemed by the Legislature to demand the formation of a great trunk line or interstate system of railroad in 1901. If the Seaboard Air Line Company had, instead of consolidating with the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, constructed a separate line or track from Ridgeway to Raleigh, every foot of land on the route necessary therefor could have been condemned for that purpose. We can see no reason why, in the exercise of the same inherent sovereign power, the Legislature may not empower the corporation to condemn the plaintiff's stock. Whether the power is in this respect wisely conferred or exercised is beyond our province to say. This is a question for the decision of the Legislature. We have examined with care all of the authorities cited by the plaintiff's counsel. In those cases where the consolidating acts are declared invalid, no provision is made for assessing the value and paying for the dissenting stock. We find no more difficulty in holding that the condemnation of plaintiff's stock is for a public use than did Ruffin, C. J., and his learned associates, in finding that the railroad was originally constructed for such use. Clark & Marshall on Private Corp. 1051; N. C. R. Co. v. C. C. R. Co., 83 N. C. 489. We are of the opinion that the Legislature had the power to confer on the corporation the right to condemn the dissenting stock, and that, upon a reasonable interpretation of the statute, it has done so. We find no valid objection to the mode prescribed for ascertaining the value of the stock. It is expressly provided that the value so assessed must be paid before the stock is transferred. It would seem that the mode prescribed is exclusive and must be pursued. Railroad v. McCaskill, 94 N. C. 751. It seems to us to be the only practicable remedy.

The mode of trial is free from any reasonable objection.

There is another view of this case presented by the defendant's brief which we think fatal to plaintiff's action. The board of directors of the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company on April 29, 1901, met and adopted a resolution reciting that the consolidation would greatly facilitate the business and promote the interests of the company, etc. Thereupon a meeting of the stockholders was duly called, and May 20, 1901, fixed as the day for such meeting. Notice thereof was duly served on the plaintiff, and she filed her protest, setting forth that notice of the meeting and the purpose thereof had been served on her. At the meeting she appeared by her attorney and entered her protest. The tellers reported that all of the stock (14,988 shares) represented voted for the consolidation. It appears that the consolidation was entered into by eight separate railroad companies, traversing hundreds of miles, and representing millions of dollars of capital. The consolidation became operative at once, and new stock, common and preferred, to the amount of $100,000,000, together with bonds secured by mortgage to the amount of many million dollars, were authorized to be issued and executed. It is a matter of general and public information, and known to the court by records before us at each term, the published reports of the Corporation Commission, and other public and official sources, that the consolidation of the roads forming the Seaboard Air Line System has become an accomplished fact; that vast private interests are involved, and public duties assumed. The plaintiff, instead of asserting her rights promptly by an appeal to the preventive jurisdiction of the court, waits more than two years before invoking the equitable power of the court to declare invalid and set aside the consolidation. It is not to be understood that the courts will refuse to protect the rights of a single stockholder, if invaded by the majority, however large, or refuse relief against aggression of consolidated capital, however powerful. The chancellor originally took jurisdiction in many cases because of the inability of the complainant to maintain his suit at law with his adversary, because of his great power and large number of retainers. The question is not whether the plaintiff is without remedy, but, rather, whether the law has given to her an adequate remedy otherwise than by the exercise of the extraordinary power vested in the court. She demands that the court declare the charter of the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company forfeited; that the merger and consolidation be declared void as to her; that a receiver be appointed, etc.; that an accounting be had of the receipts of the company since the merger etc. It is an elementary principle of equity jurisprudence that relief is granted to the vigilant, and will be refused when there has been unreasonable delay, amounting to laches. This is especially true where valuable rights have been acquired by innocent persons. This familiar principle was announced and enforced by this court in Pender v. Pittman, 84 N. C. 372; Smith, C. J., saying, "But this equity ought to be promptly asserted, and not deferred until by a sale other interests may intervene rendering it inequitable, if practicable, to reverse what has been done, and restore matters to their former condition." In that case it was held "that an injunction against carrying out a contract of sale made under a power contained in a mortgage will not be granted when the relief to which the plaintiff considers himself entitled is not sought until the sale has been made and the rights of a purchaser have intervened." Mr. Noyes says: "Acquiescence for an extended period, during which time the interests of third parties have intervened, may itself constitute laches, and prevent a stockholder from attacking a consolidation even on the ground of fraud." Inter corporate Rel. 49. The authorities upon this subject are uniform and abundant. As was said by Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls: "Shareholders cannot lie by, sanctioning, or by their silence at least acquiescing in, an arrangement which is ultra vires of the company to which they belong, watching the result; if it be favorable and profitable to themselves, abide by it and insist on its validity, but, if it prove unfavorable and disastrous, then to institute proceedings to set it aside." Gregory v. Patchett, 33 Beav. 595. The proposition is tersely stated by Van Fleet, V. C., in Rabe v. Dunlap, 51 N. J. Eq. 48, 25 Atl. 959: "If he wants protection against an ultra vires act, he must ask for it with sufficient promptness to enable the court to do justice to him without doing injustice to others." McVicker v. Ross, 55 Barb. 247; Watts' Appeal, 78 Pa. 370; Kent v. Mining Co., 78 N. Y. 159.

We think that, in any view of the case, the plaintiff is not entitled to the extraordinary relief demanded. We are at a loss to see how it is practicable to preserve the status of the corporation as she suggests for her benefit. We notice that the defendant, in its answer, says that notwithstanding the failure of the plaintiff to proceed to have the value of her stock ascertained within the time and by the method prescribed by chapter 168, p. 463, Laws 1901, it is now willing to pay her the value thereof. His honor granted to the plaintiff, with the assent of the defendant, the right to amend her complaint and have the value of her stock ascertained. He also directs upon the trial of that issue that the books of the corporation be produced, etc. We think that the order of his honor fully protects the rights of the plaintiff. She will have 30 days from the next term of the superior court to amend her complaint and proceed to have the value of her stock ascertained, and judgment rendered therefor.

Upon a full and careful consideration of the record, the agreement of counsel, and the authorities, we find no error in the judgment of his honor. Let it be so certified. No error.

DOUGLAS, J. (dissenting). I wished to express my views more fully upon this case, but circumstances which I regret confine me to a few lines. I do not see how the right of eminent domain, one of the sovereign powers of the state, can be invoked in favor of railroad consolidation, where not a foot of additional road is built, and nothing is added to the public convenience. Private property can be taken only for a public use. What use can the public make of the private stock of a corporation, aside from its roadbed and other material property, which are already devoted to the use of the public? Is it not establishing a dangerous principle to permit the consolidation of railroads without the consent of their minority stockholders—dangerous not only to private rights, but equally so to the great economic principle of railroad competition, in which the public is so vitally interested?

(127 N. C. 128)

HALL v. MISENHEIMER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—STATUTE OF FRAUDS—MEMORANDUM OF SALE—SUFFICIENCY OF SIGNATURE—NECESSITY OF EXECUTION BY VENDEE—EXPRESSION OF PRICE—NECESSITY.

1. A receipt by the vendor of land, reciting that the vendee—naming him—had made a payment, the receipt having been drawn at the instance of the vendee, was sufficiently signed by the vendee to bind him under the statute of frauds.

2. Under Code, § 1554, requiring a contract to sell land, or some note or memorandum thereof, to be put in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, the vendee cannot be held unless he has signed the required memorandum.

3. The doctrine that part performance of a sale of land takes it from within the statute of frauds is not recognized.

4. Code, § 1554, requires a contract to sell land, or some note or memorandum thereof, to be put in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith. Held, that a memorandum of a contract for the sale of land is not good as against the vendee unless it shows the price to be paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Justice, Judge.

Action by J. A. Hall against M. J. Misenheimer. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action by the vendor against the vendee for the specific performance of a contract to convey land, or, stating it in another way, to recover the price agreed to be paid for the land. The plaintiff testified that he agreed to sell the land to the defendant for $1,200, and the defendant, on the other hand, agreed to buy it at that price. That afterwards defendant presented to him a paper, and said: "The price is very high, but I will take the land. Here is a receipt that I have prepared; you sign it now, and I will pay you five dollars"—and the latter signed the receipt, which is as follows: "Salisbury, N. C. Jan. 18, 1904. Received from M. J. Misenheimer five dollars, part payment on one five room house and lot, extending across Tar branch, on Boundary Street, No. house 630. [Signed] J. A. Hall. Witness: M. D. Lefter." The receipt was written by M. O. Ruffly for the defendant, and at his request and dictation. Plaintiff surrendered the premises to defendant, who took possession thereof, but afterwards refused to pay the purchase money, though plaintiff tendered a deed for the land on the 21st day of January, as defendant had requested him to do. Defendant alleges in his answer that he was to have until the 20th of January to decide whether or not he would take the lot, and he notified the plaintiff before the expiration of the time that he would not take it. At the close of plaintiff's testimony the court, on motion of defendant, nonsuited the plaintiff, who excepted and appealed.

¶ 2. See Frauds, Statute of, vol. 22, Cent. Dig. § 230.

Walter H. Woodson, for appellant. Burton Craige and Walter Murphy, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The argument in this court proceeded mainly upon the question whether there had been a sufficient signing of the receipt, under the statute of frauds, to bind the defendant. Upon this point our opinion is with the plaintiff. It has been held in England, whose statute (29 Car. II) has been substantially copied by us, that if the name of the party to be charged appears in the memorandum, so as to be applicable to the whole substance of the writing, and was written by the said party or by his authorized agent, it is immaterial where in the instrument the name happens to be placed, whether at the top or at the bottom, or whether it is merely mentioned in the body of the memorandum, the statute not requiring that the name should be subscribed. Evans v. Hoare, 1 Q. B. (1892) 593. The principle, as thus stated, has been adopted by Clark in his work on Contracts (2d Ed.) p. 89, and he cites numerous cases to sustain it. To those he cites may be added Higdon v. Thomas, 1 Har. & G. 139. We think the same rule has been approved by this court in Plummer v. Owens, 45 N. C. 254, in which case it appeared that the names of the vendor and the vendee were written at the top of the memorandum, the latter being in the form of an account. The court held that the memorandum would have been sufficient in other respects if the description of the land had been more specific. See, also, Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484, and the other cases cited in Clark on Contracts (2d Ed.) p. 89, note 110. In our case, the name of the vendee was inserted in the paper by his own direction, and it cannot be questioned that he fully intended thereby to bind himself by the receipt as evidence of a contract to buy the land, so far as a signing of the writing was necessary for that purpose.

Cherry v. Long, 61 N. C. 468, seems to be directly in point. It was not contended that the defendant was not bound by what his agent did in writing the receipt, though the latter's authority was given by parol. Neaves v. Mining Co., 90 N. C. 412, 47 Am. Rep. 529.

But we think there is a serious obstacle in the way of plaintiff's recovery. The statute expressly requires a contract to sell land, or some note or memorandum thereof, to be put in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by his lawfully authorized agent. Code, § 1554. In order, therefore, to charge a party upon such a contract, it must appear that there is a writing containing, expressly or by implication, all the material terms of the alleged agreement, which has been signed by the party to be charged, or by his agent lawfully authorized thereto. Gwathney v. Cason, 74 N. C. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 484, especially at page 10, 74 N. C., 21 Am. Rep. 484, where Rodman, J., states the rule: Miller v. Irvine, 18 N. C. 104; Mizell v. Burnett, 49 N. C. 249, 69 Am. Dec. 744; Rice v. Carter, 33 N. C. 298; Neaves v. Mining Co., 90 N. C. 412, 47 Am. Rep. 529; Mayer v. Adrian, 77 N. C. 83. Many other cases could be cited from our Reports in support of the rule, but those we have already mentioned will suffice to show what is the principle and how it has been applied. In commenting on the policy of the statute, so far as it affects the vendee, and answering a suggestion that the statute applies only to the vendor, who alone conveys the land or any interest therein, Ruffin, C. J., for the court, in Simms v. Killian, 34 N. C. 252, says: "The danger seems as great that a purchase at an exorbitant price may by perjury be imposed on one who did not contract for it, as that by similar means a feigned contract of sale should be established against the owner of the land. Hence the act in terms avoids entirely every contract, of which the sale of land is the subject, in respect of a party—that is, either party—who does not charge himself by his signature to it after it has been reduced to writing." So, in a case where a stipulation that the vendee would open a street, which constituted a part of the price to be paid for the land, was not stated in the writing, it was held by this court that the vendor could not recover for a breach of the stipulation, because, being a part of the price, it was also a part of the agreement, and was not evidenced by a writing which had been signed by the defendant. Hall v. Fisher, 126 N. C. 205, 35 S. E. 425; Ide v. Stanton, 15 Vt. 685, 40 Am. Dec. 698. The fact that the defendant in this case paid $5 on the purchase money and took possession of the land does not change the result. The doctrine of part performance is not now recognized by this court.

The party to be charged upon a contract, within the meaning of the statute, is the defendant in the action, or the party against whom it is sought to enforce the obligation of the contract. It is not the vendor, unless he occupies upon the record the position of the party who is called upon to perform his contract. "The object of the statute was to secure the defendant." Pearson, J., in Rice v. Carter, 33 N. C. 298. See, also, Mizell v. Burnett, 49 N. C. 249, 69 Am. Dec. 744; Love v. Welch, 97 N. C. 200, 2 S. E. 242; Green v. Railroad, 77 N. C. 95; Love v. Atkinson, 131 N. C. 544, 42 S. E. 966. Anything said in Taylor v. Russell, 119 N. C. 30, 25 S. E. 710, in conflict with this view of the statute, cannot, we think, be sustained. Green v. Railroad, supra, which is cited in Taylor v. Russell, does not support the proposition that the vendee is not protected by the statute. In that case the plaintiff, who was the vendee, sued the defendant, who was the vendor, to recover the value of the wood which he agreed to give for the land at a stipulated price. The court held merely that as the plaintiff had sued on the contract, and the defendant had waived the statute, he was bound by its terms, and must recover, if at all, not the value of the wood, but the price agreed upon. He could not in such a case repudiate his contract when defendant was willing to perform it. In support of this ruling, the court cited Mizell v. Burnett, supra, which case directly sustains the doctrine as we have stated it. The defendant, therefore, can avail himself of the statute as the party to be charged.

This court has held, it is true, that the consideration of the contract need not be stated. Miller v. Irvine, 18 N. C. 104; Ashford v. Robinson, 30 N. C. 114; Thornburg v. Masten, 88 N. C. 293. But in each of those cases the vendor was the defendant and the party to be charged. There is quite a difference between the price to be paid by the vendee and the consideration necessary to support the contract and enforce it against the vendor. The latter can be shown by parol, as at common law, and the writing, as said by Ruffin, C. J., in Miller v. Irvine, supra, need not contain any matters but such as charge him (the vendor); that is, such stipulations as are to be performed on his part. He is to convey, and the writing must be sufficient to show that this duty rests upon him, as one of the parties to the contract, when he is sought to be charged. The vendee is to pay a certain price, and the writing must likewise show his obligation—its nature and extent—when the action is against him. Clark on Contracts (2d Ed.) pp. 85, 86, and 87; Williams v. Morris, 96 U. S. 444, 24 L. Ed. 360. It must show the price, for otherwise the true contract of the vendee, as to one of its essential terms, would not be reduced to writing, and we could not see from the writing what it is, so as to enforce it against him. If we permitted the vendor to supply this defect by parol proof, it would at once introduce all the mischiefs which the statute was intended to prevent. Slims v. Killian, supra; Williams

v. Morris, supra. The receipt in this case does not show the price. How, then, can the court be informed as to what the price is, unless it admits parol testimony to prove the fact? To do so would be in direct violation of the statute—its letter and its spirit. The judgment of nonsuit was properly granted in the court below.

No error.

DOUGLAS, J., concurs in result only.

(127 N. C. 171)

PINCHBACK v. BESSEMER MIN. & MFG. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 18, 1904.)

DEEDS — MISTAKE — CORRECTION — EQUITY — PARTIES — REFERENCE — STATUTES — CORPORATIONS — RESOLUTION OF STOCKHOLDERS — CONTRACT — MODIFICATION.

1. Where a contract between a grantor and grantee required the grantor to convey all its real estate to the grantee, but the secretary of the grantor mistakenly represented to the attorneys instructed to draw the deed that certain lots had been sold by the grantor, whereby they were not inserted in the deed, the deed was subject to correction in equity.

2. A deed by one corporation to another recited a resolution of the grantee's stockholders that the corporation acquire all the property of the grantor, and a resolution of the stockholders of the grantor that a conveyance of all the grantor's property be executed to the grantee, and all the property of the grantor was conveyed by appropriate recitals, but certain lots were excepted and reserved. Held, that on the face of the deed the grantor had no beneficial interest in such lots.

3. Where a stockholder sued the corporation to compel it to sell certain lands and distribute the proceeds among the stockholders, but the defense was that the land should have been included in a conveyance previously made by the corporation, but that by mistake the lands had not been included, the court should have made the corporation's grantee a party to the suit.

4. Where a stockholder sued to compel the corporation to sell certain lands and distribute the proceeds among the stockholders, and the defense was that the lands were mistakenly omitted from a conveyance previously made by the corporation, the stockholder was entitled to introduce evidence to show that recitals in the deed of the corporation, excepting the lands in question, correctly expressed the purpose and intention of the parties.

5. Where two corporations, pursuant to resolutions of their stockholders, made a contract whereby one was to convey all its property to the other, and at a meeting of all the stockholders of both corporations the spokesman for the grantee corporation stated that the grantee did not care for certain lots belonging to the grantor, his remarks could not have the effect of surrendering the rights of the grantee in such lots under the contract.

6. The fact that a corporation has gone into the hands of a receiver, and that its property has been sold, has no effect as concerns the existence of the corporation.

7. Clark's Code, § 421, subsec. 5, provides that, where the parties do not consent, the court may on application of either, or on its own motion, direct a reference, where issues of fact and questions of fact arise in an action of which the courts of equity of the state had exclusive jurisdiction prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1868. Held, that where a stockholder sued to compel the corporation to sell certain lands and distribute the proceeds among the stockholders, and the corporation claimed that such lands should have been included in a conveyance previously made by it to another corporation, but that they were omitted by mistake, whereby an issue was raised as to the intention of the parties, it was a proper case for a reference.

8. Where the stockholders of two corporations by a resolution authorized a conveyance by one of all its property to the other, a claim that the contract between the corporations had been modified, so as to except certain property, could only be substantiated by a showing that the modification was made by an act of all the stockholders.

Appeal from Superior Court, Gaston County; McNeill, Judge.

Suit by J. A. Pinchback against the Bessemer Mining & Manufacturing Company. From a decree in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

The defendant company was, on and prior to November 16, 1892, the owner of certain real estate, a portion of which had been surveyed and laid off into building lots. A plat was made showing the location, number, etc., of each lot. Some time prior to November 16, 1892, the Bessemer Mining Company made a proposition to the defendant company to take a conveyance and assignment of the real estate and all other property and assets of the defendant company, in consideration whereof the said mining company agreed to pay $50,000, a part of which was to be applied to the discharge of certain indebtedness of the defendant company and the balance paid in cash, and to issue to the stockholders of the defendant company stock in the said mining company to the amount of $325,000, to be apportioned among them as they should determine. The proposition was duly accepted by the stockholders of the defendant company. Thereupon the defendant company executed a deed to the said Bessemer Mining Company, reciting the action of the said company, evidenced by a resolution duly adopted at a meeting of the stockholders. So much of said resolution as is material to the decision of this appeal is in the following words: "Whereas, for the purposes of its business, it is deemed advisable for this company to acquire all the property, real, personal, and mixed, including all accounts, bills receivable, and assets of every name and nature, of the Bessemer Mining & Manufacturing Company," etc. The deed further recited that the proposition of the said mining company, at a special meeting of the stockholders of the defendant company called for that purpose, had been duly accepted, and that a resolution had been duly passed authorizing the directors, president, and secretary to execute "all such deeds of conveyance, bills of sale, inventories, transfers, and legal instruments as may be necessary to vest the title to the property of said company in the Bessemer Mining Company, and to carry into full and complete effect the foregoing action of this company," etc. Following these recitals is appropriate language to convey and transfer to the Bessemer Mining Company "all the real estate, property, and rights of property owned by the said Bessemer City Mining & Manufacturing Company is in any manner entitled, wheresoever situate and by whatsoever name known, and more specifically and particularly the lands * * * hereafter described," etc., "to wit." Following is a description of the lands conveyed: "Excepting and reserving, however, from the operation of these presents the following town lots and blocks in Bessemer City, N. C., to wit." Twenty-six lots are thereupon described by block, number, etc. "Also the lot on which T. A. McGill now resides, * * * described in the deed to McGill, but not yet registered." Then follows a reservation of certain lots conveyed to the Bank at Durham, etc. This deed was duly proven and recorded. It was shown in evidence that the 325 shares of stock was duly issued, of which the plaintiff received 650 shares. The debts were canceled and the balance of the $50,000 paid and distributed among the stockholders of the defendant company. Since November 16, 1892, the defendant company has transacted no business, held no meeting of its stockholders, nor in any manner exercised any corporate powers. The plaintiff was the owner of 375 shares of the stock of defendant company, the certificate of which the jury find has been lost or mislaid.

Maj. Guthrie, introduced by the defendant, testified that he was attorney for defendant company; that the resolutions set forth in the deed were duly passed; that all of the stockholders were present, including plaintiff; that Mr. Cooley and himself undertook to draw a deed in accordance with the terms of the resolution and for the purpose of carrying it into effect; that it was their purpose and intention to so draw it as to convey all of the property, real and personal, belonging to the Bessemer Mining & Manufacturing Company; that J. A. Smith, the secretary and treasurer, had a map showing the location, etc., of the property; the company had sold off a number of lots, as shown on the map, and they incorporated a clause, intending thereby to except from the operation of the deed all the lots which had been sold by the defendant company; they obtained the information in regard to the number of lots sold from Mr. Smith; he called out the lots which he said had been previously sold, and they, relying upon him, excepted from the operation of the deed the 26 lots mentioned in the complaint; if they had been notified by Mr. Smith that the lots had not been sold, they would not have excepted them; the deed was delivered to the mining company, and he heard no more of it until a short time before this suit was instituted; that the witness and Mr. Cooley read the deed over to the parties and explained it; that defendant company executed the deed with full knowledge that the lots described in the complaint had been excepted, and the mining company accepted it with like knowledge. The said mining company is not complaining of the excepted lots, so far as witness knew. Maj. Guthrie further testified that Mr. Cooley and himself excepted the lots because they thought that they had been sold and conveyed to third parties, as was the case with the other deeds excepted from the operation of the deed.

Mr. J. A. Smith was introduced by the plaintiff, and testified that he stated to Maj. Guthrie and the stockholders of the defendant company, when the stockholders of both companies were present for the purpose of purchasing and selling the property, that the 26 lots had been sold before that day, and under what circumstances; and it was agreed by all of the stockholders of both companies there assembled in meeting, with a full knowledge of all the facts, that said 26 lots should be reserved from the operation of the deed. The company had contracted to sell the lots to Capt. Runlett. He was present at all of the meetings. He had bought 60 or 80 shares of stock of the company, and was entitled, when the shares were paid for, to one lot for each share. The company had agreed by written contract to convey them to him. Witness made known the contract to the stockholders, explaining it fully. Mr. Carrington, who was spokesman for the mining company, said that they did not care for the lots; wanted the land for the minerals. The stockholders said that the contract with Runlett should be carried out. Witness gave the written contract to the mining company, books, papers, etc., at the time the deed was made, and has not had them since; does not know what became of them. Carrington said that the mining company had no stock to sell at 50 cents on the dollar. He suggested that the only way to carry out the contract was to reserve the lots from the deed, and that witness gave some of his stock to Runlett for the defendant, and to reserve enough lots to make the contract good. Runlett had paid a part of the amount due for the stock. It was unanimously agreed that the defendant company should carry out its contract with Runlett, and that witness should give him some of his individual shares for the company; that when the same were fully paid for, the defendant company should deed him the 26 lots, which should be reserved from the operation of the deed. All understood this. The mining company were eager to get the property; wanted it for mining purposes; said that it was worth $3,000,000. The defendant company, on the day before the deed was executed, made a deed to Runlett for 43 lots, which represented a part of the lots it was to convey to him, being all of the lots which he was able to pay for that day. This represented as many shares as he had paid for. When Maj. Guthrie drew the deed, witness told them that 26 lots described in the complaint had been sold, and should be excepted from the deed, in accordance with the agreement. It was agreed that everything that the old company had should be conveyed to the new company. Runlett did not pay for the shares and lots. He died some four years afterwards. The contract fell through. Witness told Gen. Carr, the president of the company, that Runlett had not paid for the lots; but, as he had accounted to the company for the stock, he was entitled to them, and asked him to make me a deed for the lots. He is not now contending for the lots, but thinks that they should be sold and the proceeds divided between the stockholders. Gen. Carr said that he thought witness was entitled to them. Witness did not give in the lots for taxation, had not been consulted about the matter, and does not consent or desire that the company should set up the defense that this or that lot should be conveyed to the mining company. It has no right to same and has not made any claim for them.

This action is brought by the plaintiff to compel the defendant company to sell the said lots, to divide the proceeds between the stockholders, to have a receiver appointed, etc. The defendant in its answer says that it is advised, informed, and believes that the defendant company does not own any property, assets, or effects which should be sold or distributed among its stockholders; that the exception from the operation of the deed of the 26 lots described in the complaint was the result of a mutual mistake of the parties and the draftsman; and that the deed should be corrected in that respect. The defendant, upon the whole evidence, moved for judgment of nonsuit, which was denied, and defendant excepted.

The court submitted to the jury the following issue in regard to the alleged mistake: "Were the lots described in the complaint excepted from the conveyance by the mutual mistake of the Bessemer City Mining & Manufacturing Company and the Bessemer Mining Company?" The defendant then asked the court to charge the jury: "If the jury shall believe, from the evidence, the defendant company contracted to sell and to convey to the Bessemer Mining Company all of its property of every description; that it was represented to Maj. Guthrie and Mr. Cooley, the attorneys instructed to draw the deed, that the 26 lots described in the complaint had been sold; that by reason of this representation, which was made by the secretary of the defendant company, the said 26 lots were excepted from said deed; that but for this representation the said 26 lots would have been conveyed by said deed; and therefore the jury will answer the fifth issue, 'Yes.'" This instruction was refused, and the defendant excepted.

From a judgment upon the verdict the defendant excepted and appealed.

Burwell & Cansler, for appellant. Osborne, Maxwell & Keerans and C. E. Whitney, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts). The defendant was entitled to the instruction asked. It was not alleged that the officers of the defendant company did not know that the lots were excepted when they signed the deed, but that the insertion of the exception was the result of Mr. Smith's mistake in saying to the draftsman that the lots had been conveyed. It is clear how the mistake was made. Mr. Smith was evidently not advertent to the difference between the status of the 26 lots as it existed and the status of those which had been in fact conveyed. Maj. Guthrie testifies that, if he had been informed as to the real condition of the title to the lots, he would not have excepted them from the operation of the deed. If the jury accept his testimony, there can be no question in respect to the equity for correction. If one sign a deed supposing it to convey black acre, and the insertion of white acre was purposely made by the draftsman, it is fraud in the factum. It is not the "act and deed" of the party signing. Lee v. Pearce, 68 N. C. 76. If the insertion of white acre was caused by the mutual mistake of the parties, under an erroneous impression that it was included in the negotiation, equity will give relief, not upon the ground that both parties were ignorant of the fact that it was included in the description, but that it was so included by mistake. Ordinarily the mistake will be shown by extrinsic evidence. When, however, the terms of the negotiation—the contract pursuant to which the deed is executed—is inserted in the deed as an essential recital, as for the purpose of showing the power vested in the person signing, and the description of the property is inconsistent with such recital, a court of equity will make the correction upon inspection of the deed. "When the instrument purports to carry into execution an agreement which it recites, and exceeds or falls short of that agreement, there is no difficulty in rectifying the mistake; for then there is clear evidence in the instrument itself that it operates beyond its real intent. If, however, there is no recital of any agreement, but a mistake is alleged, and extrinsic evidence tendered in proof that it was made, the limits of the equity for correction are most difficult to define. The prima facie presumption of law is that the written contract shows the ultimate intention, and that all previous proposals and arrangements, so far as they may be consistent with that contract, have been deliberately abandoned. It seems, however, that the instrument may be corrected if it is admitted or proved to have been made in pursuance of a prior agreement, by the terms of which both parties meant to abide, but with which it is in fact inconsistent, or if it is admitted or proved that an instrument, intended by both parties to be prepared in one form, has, by reason of some undesigned insertion or omission, been prepared or executed in another." Adams, Eq. 109; Vickers v. Leigh, 104 N. C. 248, 10 S. E. 308; Fort v. Allen, 110 N. C. 183, 191, 14 S. E. 685. If the defendant had rested its defense upon the recitals in the deed, and asked for correction, or relied upon the recitals as a defense to the plaintiff's demand, we are of the opinion that the court should have either made the mining company a party, so that the title should be settled before a decree was made, or dismiss the action. A court of equity will not compel a trustee to sell a doubtful title, especially where it is apparent upon the face of the bill that by bringing in other parties the title may be settled before decree. The plaintiff, however, was entitled to introduce evidence to show that in truth the recitals did not set forth the real contract, or that, as contended here, the contract set out in the recitals was modified, and that the deed, taken in all of its parts, correctly expressed the purpose and intention of the parties. Certainly, either upon the face of the deed or upon Maj. Guthrie's testimony, if accepted by the jury, the defendant company had no beneficial interest in these lots. The question thus arises what effect Mr. Smith's testimony has upon the rights of the parties. He concurs with Maj. Guthrie in many respects, but goes further, and says that he explained to the stockholders of both companies the status of these 26 lots; that the defendant company had made a contract with Runlett by which he had subscribed for certain shares, which, when paid for, entitled him to 26 lots; that Mr. Carrington suggested that the lots be excepted, so that the company should be in a position to carry out the contract; that he gave the written contract with Runlett to the secretary of the mining company. It would seem clear that under the contract expressed in the resolutions the purchase money due by Runlett belonged, when paid, to the mining company. This was recognized by Mr. Smith when he delivered the writing to the secretary. The exception of the lots from the operation of the deed, from this point of view, left the legal title in the defendant company for the purpose of conveying to Runlett, when he complied with his contract; the purchase money going to the mining company. Runlett having failed to carry out his contract, it would seem that they should be conveyed to the mining company.

Mr. Smith, however, says that it was understood that he was to transfer to Runlett, when paid for, some shares belonging to himself. It is not very clear what were the terms of this understanding, or what was done by Mr. Smith. He says, however, that Runlett never took the shares. Whether the contract made by the defendant company with the mining company was modified by the conversations testified to by Mr. Smith is not very clear. While it is true, as contended by plaintiffs, that, unless expressly required by the by-laws, it is not necessary that a written record of the proceedings of a stockholders' meeting be made, and that they may be proven by parol, it is also true that before the solemn acts of a corporation, especially when contractual, can be set aside, it must appear that a meeting was held, and that the stockholders, acting as such, voted to do so. Duke v. Markham, 105 N. C. 131, 10 S. E. 1017, 18 Am. St. Rep. 889. It would endanger the integrity of corporate contracts, if, after being solemnly made and reduced to writing in the form of resolutions, they could be changed and modified by mere conversational statements of the stockholders. We should require very strong and satisfactory proof, both as to the manner and clearness of such conduct, before giving it such effect. The remarks of Mr. Carrington could not be given the effect of surrendering the rights of the mining company in the property. It is true that Mr. Smith says that all parties assented to the exception of the lots. Maj. Guthrie says the same, but it is evident that they did not understand such consent in the same way.

It seems that the defendant corporation has gone into the hands of a receiver, and its property sold. This, of course, does not affect the existence of the corporation. The officers of the defendant corporation, being, as they say, convinced that their corporation does not own any beneficial interest in the lots, very properly brought the facts to the attention of the court. They could not have done less, when called upon by the plaintiff to sell property which they do not believe belongs to them. It is not material that Mr. Smith does not wish the defense made. They, in justice to themselves, could not have done otherwise.

There are a number of exceptions to the introduction of testimony, which in our view of the case are not material. We are of the opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and a new trial ordered. If the defendant company wishes to have the deed corrected, we think: (1) That, in the absence of any parol evidence, sufficient appears on the face of the deed to entitle it to have a decree. (2) That, if the plaintiff seeks to repel this equity by showing by parol evidence that there was a modification of the contract by the stockholders of both corporations, he should be required to show clearly that such modification was made by the act of all of the stockholders. (3) If the defendant company relies upon the equity to have the title settled before any sale is made, all parties in interest should be brought before the court. In the present condition of the title neither corporation can sell the lots for their face value. It would seem that this case is a proper one for a reference under the provisions of section 421, subsec. 5, Clark's Code. It was one of which a court of equity had exclusive jurisdiction prior to 1868. The mining company should be made a party, to the end that a final decree may be made settling the title. In view of the peculiar condition of the appeal, neither party will recover costs.

New trial.

WALKER, J., did not sit on the hearing of this case. DOUGLAS, J., concurs in result only.

(137 N. C. 206)

HELMS v. HELMS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

DEEDS—CONDITION SUBSEQUENT—ASSIGNMENT OF POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER.

1. Where a deed conveys land in consideration of the support of the grantor for life by the grantee, and provides that the land shall stand good for such support, and if the grantee fails to support the grantor the deed shall be void, the support is not a condition precedent, but a condition subsequent.

2. The bare possibility of reverter under a condition subsequent in a deed is not assignable.

Clark, C. J., and Douglas, J., dissenting.

On rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 47 S. E. 415.

CONNOR, J. We directed a rehearing of this case upon the question raised by the defendants' exception to the refusal to submit the issue in regard to the alleged mistake of the parties and draftsman in failing to insert in the deed certain parts of the contract. We have examined the authorities with care, and, with all possible deference to the learned gentlemen of the bar who differ from us, we are unable to see any error in our former decision. 47 S. E. 415. The counsel thus clearly state their contention: "Suppose the words alleged to have been omitted were actually in the deed; then we would have the stipulation that the deed is made in consideration of the support during the natural life of the party of the first part by the party of the second part, * * * and it is further understood and agreed between the parties that the above land shall stand good for the support and maintenance of the said Elmira Helms during her natural life, and if the said W. L. Helms fails to support her, then this deed is to be void." This, they say, would clearly express the intention that the support was a condition precedent. We think that the contrary intention is manifest. The consideration is the support. The land is to "stand good" (that is, to be charged with the support); and by the failure to support the grantor, the deed is to be void. An estate is granted. Apt and appropriate words are used for that purpose. The grantee is to do something in the future as the consideration. No words appropriate to making a condition precedent are used, as "if he shall support" or "provided he support," but "in consideration of the support"; that is, his undertaking to support. The charge is made; that is, the land is to "stand good," be liable for, etc. Then follow the words, if inserted, "If he fails to support, this deed is to be void." These are apt words to create a condition subsequent. If no title was to pass, then there was no necessity for declaring that the deed should be void.

[1. See Deeds, vol. 14, Cent. Dig. § 690.

In Nicoll v. Railroad, 12 N. Y. 121, the deed was made upon the express condition that the grantee should build a railroad track, and the court said that "this was not a condition precedent, as was argued by plaintiff's counsel, but a condition subsequent. The fee vested at once, subject to being divested on a failure to perform the condition." Marshall, C. J., said: "If the act on which the estate depends does not necessarily precede the vesting of the estate, but may accompany or follow it, if this is to be collected from the whole instrument, the condition is subsequent." The deed is not made to take effect upon the happening of a certain event, but in present, and is to be divested by the grantee's failure to perform the condition. Land was devised, "provided a schoolhouse is built." Held a condition subsequent. Hayden v. Stoughton, 22 Mass. 528. To construe the language as creating a condition precedent would lead to the singular result of postponing the vesting of any title until Elmira Helms died; hence a failure to support her to the last moment of her life would prevent the estate vesting, because the rule is well settled that conditions precedent must be literally and punctually performed. 13 Cyc. 688. We fail to find any authorities supporting the position that such language creates a condition precedent.

While it is true that the intent must control, it is equally true that the intent must be gathered from the whole instrument. The defendants' counsel say, however, that the doctrine that none but the grantor can take advantage of the breach of the condition is no longer law. We find in the last volume of Cyc. (volume 13, p. 689) the law laid down as held by the Supreme Court of the United States as late as 1878: "If the condition subsequent is broken, that did not ipso facto produce a reverter of the title. The estate continued in full force until the proper step was taken to consummate the forfeiture. This could be done only by the grantor during his lifetime, and after his death by those in privity of blood with him. In the meantime only the right of action subsisted, and that could not be conveyed so as to vest the right to sue in a stranger." Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693, 24 L. Ed. 1101; 1 Jones on Conveyances, 728; Nicoll v. Railroad, supra, where the question is discussed and decided. But where a fee simple, without a reservation of rents, is granted upon a condition subsequent, as in this case, there is no estate remaining in the grantor. There is simply a possibility of reverter, but that is no estate. There is not even a possibility coupled with an interest, but a bare possibility alone. It has been said that such possibilities were assignable in equity, but those were interests of a very different character. Chancellor Kent says: "A court of equity will never lend its aid to divest an estate for the breach of a condition subsequent." 4 Kent, Com. 130.

While it is true that contingent interests and choses in action are assignable in equity, and under our Code actions may be brought in the name of the assignee, we find no case holding that a bare possibility of reverter comes within this principle. We have carefully examined the case of Cross v. Carson, and notes, 44 Am. Dec. 742, and find nothing therein inconsistent with the trend of authority on the subject.

The petition to rehear must be dismissed. Petition dismissed.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). The written agreement was that the "lands shall stand good for the support and maintenance of said Elmira Helms during her natural life." This shows that the intention was that the lands should stand good for Elmira's benefit. While inartificially drawn, it would seem clear that the title was not finally and irrevocably to pass from her, and the lands were not to become the property of the grantee, until that condition precedent had been complied with. Otherwise, the lands could not "stand good" to secure her maintenance. This was but prudence, and the grantor evidently intended to be prudent by holding her grasp on the land till the consideration had been paid. Till then the lands "stood good"; were still hers, notwithstanding prior words of conveyance, till the promised maintenance for her lifetime had been furnished. There is nothing unusual in this. Mortgages and deeds retaining vendor's liens are similarly written to retain a similar security. If the parties did not intend this, but that the grantee should get a full title, with no remedy to the grantor upon a breach but a lawsuit, would this have been ordinary prudence on her part? And why, if such was the agreement, did the grantee not take possession? Surely the issue should have gone to the jury to ascertain whether or not, by mistake of parties and the draftsman, words to make this meaning clear had not been omitted. The issue is presented upon the pleadings, and the defendants have a right to have it passed upon by the jury.

There was evidence offered that the deed had never been delivered, and that the plaintiff so admitted. That, coupled with the fact that the grantee did not take possession, was some evidence that the deed was not as favorable to the grantee as now claimed, and that words which the parties intended to be in the deed, and supposed to be there, have been omitted by ignorance or mutual mistake. Evidence was offered, and rejected at the instance of the plaintiff, that he has paid nothing for this property. How the deed got upon record has not been explained. The grantee, having abandoned the contract, should not recover this land against the defendant, to whose grantor Elmira conveyed it subsequently, in consideration of a maintenance fully rendered. No case more powerfully appealing to a court of conscience could be presented; and reasoning which might be properly based upon a technical and accurate use of words, when written down by skilled draftsman, ought not to prevail against what is undeniably the right. A jury of "good men and true" should be allowed to pass upon the question whether the parties intended that the absolute title was not to pass till the support had been rendered, and whether by ignorance or mistake material words to express that intent were not omitted. The failure of the grantee to take possession, and evidence tending to show nondelivery of the deed, would be potent in that view.

In such circumstances as surround this transaction, subtle shades of meaning as to "conditions precedent" and "conditions subsequent," of which these parties doubtless never heard, are but "as the small dust in balance." Elmira knew naught of technical differences between conditions precedent and subsequent, but she had no intention of her land passing from her till the consideration, her life support, had been paid for it. Whether a condition in a deed or will is a precedent or subsequent one depends upon the intention of the grantor or testator, to be gathered from the whole instrument. Tilley v. King, 109 N. C. 463, 13 S. E. 936. Whether they be precedent or subsequent is a question purely of intent, and the intention must be determined by considering, not only the words of the particular clause, but also the language of the whole contract, as well as the nature of the act required and the subject-matter to which it relates. Railroad v. Brewer, 67 Me. 295, 299. The deed upon its face showed that the consideration was something to be performed in the future, and that the lands "stood good" for the future performance of this consideration. The lands therefore remained the property of the grantor, certainly, at least, until the grantee should accept the contract and trust; and he having failed to do this or to do anything toward carrying out his contract, and the grantor having remained in possession, so that no re-entry was necessary, the legal title of the grantee never became complete, and the grantor could make the subsequent conveyance. The plaintiff, out of possession, suing to recover possession under the deed, the consideration of which is the subsequent support of the grantor, cannot recover without showing compliance with that agreement.

The case of Driesbach v. Serfass (Pa.) 17 Atl. 513, 3 L. R. A. 836, is exactly on all fours with this case. In that case, Peter Berger made a deed to his niece, Mrs. Serfass; the consideration being the future support of the grantor. Mrs. Serfass and her husband entered into possession and carried out the contract until the death of Mrs. Serfass, after which her husband abandoned the premises and refused to carry out the contract. Berger, finding himself abandoned, made a similar deed to Driesbach, who supported the grantor until his death. The heirs of Mrs. Serfass then brought an action to recover possession against Driesbach. The defendant on the trial offered to prove the failure of Serfass to carry out the contract to support, which evidence was excluded; the court below holding that Mrs. Serfass took a fee in the land, which descended to her heirs at law, and that Berger had no right to make a second conveyance to Driesbach, his only remedy being an action of covenant against Mrs. Serfass for nonperformance. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in reversing this ruling, says: "The right of Serfass to recover possession in this action depended upon whether the consideration agreed upon had been paid. Being out of possession, he could not recover upon the contract, unless he could show performance. This he was not required to do. The defendant then proposed to take up the burden of proof that rested on the other side, and to show affirmatively the nonperformance of the contract, under which alone the plaintiff could recover. This evidence should have been admitted. It would be contrary to the original intention of the parties, as well as against good conscience, to permit the vendee to recover the possession of land from his vendor, or one holding his title, without rendering or offering to render the equivalent contracted for."

By the words "deed to be void" the grantor doubtless meant "to be void and of no effect" till the consideration was fully paid. This view was presented by the evidence offered and ruled out upon the plaintiff's objection. It should have been admitted. And if the defendant's pleading that the agreement was that "the deed should be void," technically construed, means a "condition subsequent," it is in conflict with the whole tenor of the evidence offered, and the defense intended, and the solemn interest of justice requires that the case should go back, that the evidence may be admitted, and a "condition precedent" pleaded in more technical language, according to the clear intent of the defense set up.

DOUGLAS, J. (dissenting). Where the law is in doubt, my mind naturally turns to the great equities of humanity. These are all on the side of the defendant. The plaintiff is seeking to recover land under a contract which he repudiated and for a consideration which he never gave. He is seeking to get something for nothing, and take the land away from those who have done what he should have done, and have paid what he should have paid. I concur in the dissenting opinion of the Chief Justice.

(187 N. C. 240)

DEAVER v. DEAVER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

COVENANTS—AGAINST INCUMBRANCES—BREACH—DEEDS—RECITALS—CONCLUSIVENESS—STATUTE OF FRAUDS—COLLATERAL UNDERTAKINGS—PAROL TRUSTS—WITNESSES—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEASED PERSONS—TRIAL—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES.

1. Where the payment of the consideration is necessary to sustain the validity of a deed or contract, the acknowledgment of payment is contractual in its nature, and cannot be contradicted by parol proof; but where it is to be treated merely as a receipt for money, it is only prima facie evidence of the payment, and the fact that there was no payment, or that the consideration was other than that expressed in the deed, may be shown by parol.

2. A promise by a purchaser of land, in consideration of the sale to him, to assume and pay a debt secured by deed of trust on the land, is not a promise to answer for the debt or default of another within the meaning of the statute of frauds.

3. One who merely holds the legal title to land, and conveys it, without consideration, to the beneficial owner at the latter's direction, is not bound to pay an incumbrance on the land assumed by the beneficial owner in the transaction by which he acquired the beneficial ownership, and for failure to do so is not liable on the covenant against incumbrances.

4. In an action for breach of a covenant against incumbrances, the fact that the nonliability of defendant depends on his having held the land merely as a trustee under an admitted parol trust does not prevent the court, because of the statute of frauds, from investigating the matter and awarding defendant relief from liability.

5. Under Code, § 590, providing that a person interested in the event of an action, or a person from whom an interested person derives his title, shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf or interest, or in behalf of his successor in interest against the executor, etc., of a deceased person, concerning a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased person, a distributee of an estate of a grantee, who had purchased an interest in the property from the grantor and had afterwards conveyed that interest to the grantee, was not incompetent to testify, in an action by the administratrix of the grantee for breach of the covenant against incumbrances, that the grantor held the property merely as a trustee for the grantee, and conveyed it to the grantee without receiving any consideration, and that the grantee assumed, as part consideration for the transaction by which he acquired the beneficial interest, the incumbrance on account of the existence of which suit was brought.

6. It is not material in what form issues are submitted to the jury, provided they are germane to the subject of the controversy, and each party has a fair opportunity to present his version of the facts and his view of the law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Long, Judge.

Action by Ella B. Deaver, administratrix of A. E. Deaver, deceased, against R. M. Deaver. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

This is an action upon a covenant against incumbrances contained in a deed for a tract of land from the defendant, R. M. Deaver, to his brother, A. E. Deaver, dated May 11, 1897. The deed also contained covenants of seisin and of warranty. The consideration recited in it is $3,000, the receipt of which by the defendant is acknowledged. The breach alleged consists in the fact that at the time the deed was executed there was an incumbrance on the land, to wit, a deed of trust dated October 21, 1890, from the defendant to J. E. Rankin, securing a debt of $1,000, which was evidenced by a note of the defendant payable to Mrs. Mary J. Lusk, and due January 1, 1891. The defendant admitting the execution of both deeds and the existence of the indebtedness to Mrs. Lusk, secured as above stated, alleges in his answer that the plaintiff's intestate became the beneficial owner of the land, and that the defendant, having only the naked legal title, and having no other interest of any kind, executed the deed of May 11, 1890, and thereby conveyed the land to the intestate, the latter for a valuable consideration having at the time assumed the debt due to Mrs. Lusk and promised to pay the same to her, and thereby satisfy and discharge the deed of trust to Rankin. The defendant further alleges that the deed of May 11th was executed with the distinct understanding and agreement that it was intended merely to convey the legal title which was then in the defendant, and for no other purpose, and that in fact no such consideration as is mentioned in the deed passed from the intestate to the defendant, and that the intestate never paid the defendant anything for the land in money or money's worth. Issues were submitted to the jury, and, among others, three, which are numbered 5, 6, and 7, were based upon the averments of the answer just set forth. In order to sustain the affirmative of those three issues, the defendant proposed to prove by W. E. Logan that the tract of land was originally purchased by the intestate and the defendant from one Roberts, who was directed to convey it to the defendant, Deaver, for the purpose of being held by him in trust for himself and his brother until some pending matters could be adjusted. The witness afterwards bought the interest of the defendant, with the understanding between himself and the intestate that the defendant should continue to hold the legal title for them; that afterwards the witness sold his interest to the intestate, and it was agreed in the settlement between them that the intestate should assume and pay the debt due to Mrs. Lusk as a part of the consideration for the land, and that the defendant, instead of making the deed to the witness for his interest, should convey the whole interest directly to the intestate; that no consideration passed to R. M. Deaver in the trade and transfer, but he was merely required to convey the legal title held by him to the intestate, in order to carry out the agreement between the witness and the intestate; that the plaintiff, who is the administratrix of A. E. Deaver, was notified of the arrangement between the witness and her intestate as to the assumption by the latter of the debt due to Mrs. Lusk. The court, upon objection by the plaintiff, excluded this testimony, except the part concerning the notice to Mrs. Lusk, and the defendant excepted. There was other similar testimony offered by the defendant which was also ruled out by the court, and the defendant excepted. Evidence was introduced tending to show that A. E. Deaver bought the one-half interest of W. E. Logan at the same price the latter had agreed to pay the defendant for it. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appealed.

Tucker & Murphy, for appellant. Merrimon & Merrimon, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts). We do not see why the testimony of the witness Logan was not relevant and admissible, nor why he was not a competent witness. The testimony certainly tended to show that A. E. Deaver had agreed in the settlement with Logan, who had bought the defendant's one-half interest, that in consideration of the sale to him of that interest he would pay the Lusk debt and satisfy the deed of trust, and it is not incompetent because it contradicts the recital in the deed, namely, that the $3,000 had been paid. Where the payment of the consideration is necessary to sustain the validity of the deed or the contract in question, the acknowledgment of payment is contractual in its nature, and cannot be contradicted by parol proof; but where it is to be treated merely as a receipt for money, it is only prima facie evidence of the payment, and the fact that there was no payment or that the consideration was other than that expressed in the deed, may be shown by oral evidence. Washburn thus states the rule, and the quotation seems to fit this case exactly: "Although it is always competent to contradict the recital in the deed as to the amount paid, in an action involving the recovery of the purchase money, or as to the measure of damages, in an action upon the covenants in the deed, it is not competent to contradict the acknowledgment of a consideration paid, in order to affect the validity of the deed in creating or passing a title to the estate thereby granted." 3 Wash. R. P. (5th Ed.) marg. p. 614. This passage from Washburn is quoted and approved in Kendrick v. Insurance Co., 124 N. C. 815, 32 S. E. 728, 70 Am. St. Rep. 592, and the authorities in support of the principle are there collected and cited by the present Chief Justice. See, also, Harper v. Dail, 92 N. C. 397, where Ashe, J., states clearly the distinction recognized in the books between a case where the evidence would affect the validity of the contract or deed, and one where it would not, but would only rebut the prima facie case made by the acknowledgment, treated as a receipt for money.

The assumption by A. E. Deaver to Logan of the Lusk debt was not within the statute of frauds. It was an original promise, and not one superadded to the liability of R. M. Deaver. The intestate bought Logan's interest in the land, and, in consideration of the sale to him, promised to pay the Lusk debt. It seems to us that the case, in this respect, comes directly within the principle of Mason v. Wilson, 84 N. C. 51, 37 Am. Rep. 612, and Voorhees v. Porter, 134 N. C. 591, 47 S. E. 31, where other like cases will be found. The sale of the land to the intestate by Logan constituted a new and original consideration for the promise of the former to pay the Lusk debt, and is in no respect a promise to answer for the debt or default of another within the intent and meaning of the statute of frauds. If, in the arrangement between the parties when the intestate acquired Logan's interest, he promised to pay the Lusk debt, it would indeed be unjust if he or his representative should be allowed to repudiate the promise and subject the defendant to the payment of damages.

If the facts are found to be as we have stated them, and the defendant merely held the legal title by agreement of all the parties, and conveyed it by their direction, there was no breach of the covenant, for it was not the defendant's duty to pay the debt. If the defendant did not in fact receive the consideration recited in the deed, there is no rule of law, and certainly none of equity, which forbids him to show the truth of the matter in order to defeat the enforcement of an inequitable claim.

We are at a loss to understand how the doctrine of parol trusts has any bearing upon the case. There is no attempt here to establish any such trust. The person supposed to be charged with the trust—that is, the defendant—admits it. The law concerning parol proof of trusts has nothing to do with the case, as we view it. The sole purpose is to show the entire nature of the transaction from its inception, when the defendant bought from Roberts and took the legal title for himself and his brother, the intestate, to its conclusion, when the alleged promise was made by the intestate to pay the Lusk debt. We cannot, therefore, conceive how the fact that an admitted parol trust comes incidentally into the case as part of the proof of the ultimate fact prevents the court, even under the most rigid application of the statute of frauds, from proceeding to investigate the matter with a view of ascertaining the facts and then of doing jus-time between the parties upon the facts as found.

The witness Logan was not incompetent as a witness under section 590 of the Code: (1) He is not a party to, nor is he in any way interested in the event of, the action; nor (2) does he propose to testify in behalf of himself, or (3) in favor of a party who derived his interest from him, or (4) against the representative of a party deceased who claims adversely to his assignee; nor (5) does his testimony relate to a personal transaction or communication with a deceased person whose representative is suing, or being sued by the assignee of the witness. A careful reading of section 590 will show that the objection to the witness upon the ground of his incompetency is not within either the letter or the spirit of the enactment. Bunn v. Todd, 107 N. C. 266, 11 S. E. 1043. The case appears to show that instead of proposing to testify so as to affect himself beneficially, either directly or indirectly, the witness was in fact ready to testify against his own interest, as he is the heir and distributee of A. E. Deaver, who was his uncle.

If it was at all necessary to plead specially the matters set up in defense, it may be that the answer was not drawn with that fullness and technical precision required by the rules of good pleading, but this defect may be remedied by amendment. We are inclined to the opinion, though, that while issues 5, 6, and 7 were properly submitted under the answer as it is now framed, yet that the excluded testimony was admissible under issues 8 and 9. It is not material in what form issues are submitted to the jury, provided they are germane to the subject of the controversy and each party has a fair opportunity to present his version of the facts and his view of the law, so that the case, as to all parties, can be tried on the merits. Warehouse Co. v. Ozment, 132 N. C. 389, 44 S. E. 681. The court erred in excluding the testimony as above indicated.

New trial.

(137 N. C. 214)

BARKER v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

RAILROADS—RIGHT OF WAY—HOW ACQUIRED—PRESUMPTIONS—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

1. In ejectment for a strip of land adjacent to the defendant's railroad, evidence of a charter granted in an adjoining state to a railroad of that state which afterward by consolidation became a part of defendant's lessor was admissible for the purpose of showing the history and original creation of defendant's lessor.

2. In ejectment against a railroad company, the act of the Legislature relating to the consolidation of a local railroad company with a company of an adjoining state—the consolidated company being defendant's lessor—is admissible, though the act confers no power to condemn land.

3. A railroad charter (Laws 1854-55, p. 274, c. 229, § 11) provided that, in the absence of a contract between the company and the landowner in relation to the lands through which the road may pass, it shall be presumed that the lands on which the road is constructed, together with 100 feet on each side of the center of the track, have been granted to the company for railroad purposes only, unless the owner shall, within two years after the construction of the road, sue for the recovery of the same. Held, that, on a foreclosure of a mortgage given by the company, the purchaser took the rights that the company had acquired under such section.

Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Henderson County; Shaw, Judge.

Action in ejectment by T. G. Barker against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This was an action brought for the recovery of a strip of land described in the complaint as bounded by the main line of the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad on the east, by W. H. Ray on the north, by the street leading from Anderson avenue by the machine shops of the Henderson Lumber Company on the west, and by Henderson avenue on the south. The plaintiff showed a chain of title from the state to himself. The defendant admitted that it was in possession of the locus in quo. It was alleged that such possession was held by virtue of the lease from the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad Company; that the road claimed the right of possession as and for a right of way; that possession of the land was taken by the grantee charter of its grantee, a right of way was acquired in and over the land.

tee of the company for railroad purposes, and the land is used and is necessary for the operation of the road; and that by virtue of such lease and possession, by the terms of

The plaintiff located the land as described in the deed and complaint, and it was shown that the land was used for railroad purposes to load and unload cars, and had been used for depot purposes since 1878-79. The road was extended from Hendersonville to Asheville in 1880, and completed in 1886. The defendant introduced the charter (Laws 1854-55, p. 269, c. 229) entitled "An act to incorporate the Greenville & French Broad Railroad Company." Section 11 of the act is as follows: "In the absence of any written contract between the company and any owner or owners of said land through which the said railroad may be constructed, in relation to said land, it shall be presumed that the land upon which the said railroad may be constructed, together with 100 feet on each side of the center of said road, has been granted to said company by the owner or the owners thereof; and the said company shall have good right and title to the same, and shall have and hold and enjoy the same unto them and their successors so long as the same may be used only for the purposes of said road and no longer, unless the person or persons to whom any right or title to such land * * * descend or come, shall prosecute a suit for the same within two years next after the construction of such part or portion of said road as may be constructed upon the land of the person or persons so holding or acquiring such right to the title as aforesaid; and if any person or persons to whom the right or title to said lands, tenements or hereditaments belong, or shall hereafter descend or come, do not prosecute a suit for the same within two years next after the construction of the part of said road upon the land of the person or persons so having or acquiring said right or title as aforesaid, then he or they and all claiming under him or them shall be forever barred to recover the same." The defendant, under plaintiff's objection, introduced the law of South Carolina (15 St. at Large, p. 848, No. 274) entitled "An act to incorporate the Spartanburg & Asheville Railroad Company." Section 4 of said act conferred upon said corporation power to construct a railroad from Spartanburg, S. C., to the North Carolina line, in the direction of Asheville. Plaintiff excepted. (3) The defendant introduced chapter 27, p. 23, Laws 1874-77, entitled "An act to amend the charter of the Greenville & French Broad Railroad Company." The preamble of said act is as follows: "Whereas the Greenville & French Broad Railroad Company of North Carolina and the Spartanburg & Asheville Railroad Company of South Carolina have, in pursuance of the laws of North and South Carolina, been consolidated into one company; and whereas it is deemed expedient to repeal some of the restrictions contained in the charter of the Greenville & French Broad Railroad Company." The plaintiff objected to this statute for the reason that it does not appear that there was in fact any consolidation of the two companies mentioned in the act, and because no power is given in the act to the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad Company to condemn land, and no corporate rights are given whatever. The objection was overruled, and the plaintiff excepted. A certified copy from the records of Buncombe county of a deed in trust from the Spartanburg & Asheville Railroad Company to Inman & Cleveland. This deed has been registered in Henderson county from this certified copy. The plaintiff objected to the deed because it appears to be a copy, and was ordered to registration and was registered in Henderson county from a copy from the records of Buncombe county, and because it was not properly admitted to probate and registered in Henderson county. The objection was overruled, and the plaintiff excepted. The defendant next offered a certified copy of the record in the case of Tomny v. Spartanburg & Asheville Railroad Co. and others, in the Circuit Court of the United States, in which the mortgage deed was foreclosed and the property sold, and also the deed from Inman & Cleveland, trustees, to the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad Company, conveying all of the property rights of said company, bearing date April 4, 1881, and duly registered. The defendant rested. The plaintiff introduced Book 37, p. 162, of the record of deeds of Henderson county, showing the deed from T. G. Barker, plaintiff, to the Spartanburg & Asheville Railroad Company, conveying land known as the "Stock Lot," on the side of the railroad track, opposite the land in controversy. This land was conveyed to the company for use as a stock lot and other railroad purposes. The plaintiff showed the location of the stock lot. And at the conclusion of the testimony his honor directed the jury to answer the first issue, "Is the plaintiff the owner and entitled to the land in controversy set out in the complaint?" "Yes," subject to the right of way of the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad Company, as provided in the charter of the Greenville & French Broad Railroad Company, as contained in chapter 229, Acts 1854-55; to the second issue, that plaintiff was not entitled to the possession. Plaintiff excepted. From a judgment upon the verdict, the plaintiff appealed.

Smith & Valentine, for appellant. G. F. Bason and F. H. Busbee, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts). The plaintiff's first exception to testimony becomes immaterial by reason of the answer to the first issue. His second exception is pointed to the introduction of the South Carolina statute, for that it is irrelevant and cannot affect the rights of a citizen of this state. The exception is based upon a misconception of the purpose for which the statute was introduced. For the purpose of showing the history, original creation, and consolidation of the two corporations, we can see no valid objection to its competency. It certainly could not confer upon the corporation chartered in South Carolina any rights, privileges, or powers in respect to the property of the plaintiff in this state, nor does it profess to do so. It simply charters a railroad company, with power to construct a road to the North Carolina line. The exception was not urged in this court, and cannot be sustained.

The third exception is directed to the act of 1874-75, because (1) it does not appear that in fact there was any consolidation of the two companies; (2) it does not confer any power on the corporation to condemn land. These objections go rather to the effect of the act than to its competency. The recital that a consolidation had been made in pursuance of the laws of the two states must be taken as prima facie true for the purposes of this case. In regard to the second ground, the claim of the defendant does not depend upon the right of eminent domain, but upon a statutory presumption. The exception cannot be sustained. The exception to the introduction of the deed in trust must also be overruled.

We are thus brought to the consideration of the real question presented by the appeal. Whatever corporate rights vested in the Greenville & French Broad Railroad Company passed to and vested in the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad Company by the consolidation. 10 Cyc. 808, 804. The power to enter upon land for the purpose of constructing the road was clearly conferred upon the Greenville & French Broad Railroad Company. It was further provided by section 11 that, in the absence of a written contract, it shall be presumed that the land upon which the said road may be constructed, together with 100 feet on each side of the center of the road, has been granted to said company by the owners thereof. The validity of the consolidation is not material to this controversy. It was recognized by the General Assembly in the manner herein set forth. The trust deed executed by the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad Company vested in the trustees, for the purposes therein set out, the title to the property of the consolidated railroad companies. This title passed to and vested in the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad Company by virtue of the proceedings, decree, sale, etc., of the Circuit Court of the United States. By virtue of section 697 of the Code the purchaser became the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad Company. We do not think that the decision of this court in James v. Railroad, 121 N. C. 523, 28 S. E. 537, 46 L. R. A. 806, conflicts with this view. The question presented in that case is easily distinguished from the one under consideration. At the time of the purchase, April 4, 1881, the Spartanburg & Asheville had entered upon and constructed its track over the land in controversy. The plaintiff's witness puts it at about 1879 or 1880. This court, in Railroad v. McCaskill, 94 N. C. 746, discusses and construes language similar to that contained in section 11 of the charter of the Greenville & French Broad. It was held that "the presumption of the conveyance arises from the company's act in taking possession and building the road, when, in the absence of a contract, the owner fails to take steps, for two years after it has been completed, for recovering compensation. It springs out of these concurring facts, and is independent of inferences which a jury may draw from them. If the grant issued, it would not be more effective in passing the owner's title and estate. Thus vesting, it remains in the company as long as the road is operated, of the specified width, unaffected by the ordinary rules in reference to repelling presumptions." The decision in this case has been modified in Railroad v. Sturgeon, 120 N. C. 225, 26 S. E. 779. It is there held that under similar conditions, construing the same language, the road acquires not a title to the land, but an easement which entitles it to possession of the whole right of way only when it shall appear that it is necessary for its purposes in the conduct of its business. We do not understand that in any of the decisions of this court the doctrine of McCaskill's Case has been otherwise modified. In Dargan v. Railroad, 131 N. C. 623, 42 S. E. 979, Stur-

geon's Case was approved. A railroad under a charter such as the one before us may acquire its right of way in three different methods: (1) By purchase, which includes dedication, in which case it will be confined to the width set forth in the deed and act of dedication. (2) By condemnation, in which case it will be confined to the width set forth in the map or profile which is required to be filed under the statute. If in either case it contents itself with accepting and paying for less than 100 feet, it must be content to be restricted to such limits as are fixed. The first method, of course, arises out of a contract. The second is in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and all statutory provisions for taking property in this way must be strictly construed, and no such power can be granted by implication. This is elementary learning. (3) In the absence of any written contract, it shall be presumed that the land upon which the road may be constructed, together with 100 feet on each side of the center of the road, has been granted to the company by the owners thereof, and it acquired a good right and title to the same, so long as the land may be used only for the purposes of the road, and no longer, unless the owner shall prosecute a suit within two years to recover either the land or damages by way of condemnation. This mode of acquisition is not an exercise of the right of eminent domain. It is based upon a purely statutory presumption. The concurring conditions are (1) entry and construction of the road; and (2) the failure of the owner to prosecute an action for two years. These concurring conditions existing, the statute fixes the term of two years within which the owner may prosecute his action, and in default of which the road acquires the easement described, to wit, "one hundred feet on each side of the center of the road," with the limitation fixed as to time and use. It would seem that there could be no doubt in regard to the meaning of the Legislature. With the policy which prompted the Legislature in the early history of railroad building in this state to put this provision in the charters of the contemplated roads, we have nothing to do. Finding them to be constitutional, it is our duty to interpret and enforce them in accordance with well-settled principles of legal construction.

The boundary is fixed at "one hundred feet on each side of the center of the road," and we have no right to restrict it. The duration of the easement is "so long as the same may be used only for the purposes of the road, and no longer." This court, in Sturgeon's Case, has defined the extent of the easement, both in respect to the width and the use to which it must be confined. It is said, however, that the presumption only arises in the absence of any written contract, and the burden is upon the defendant to show this condition. It must be conceded that, when one relies upon a presumption to establish a right, he must show every fact out of which the presumption arises. While we have no disposition to violate the elementary principle of law that a party who claims to have acquired the title to property, or any easement therein, or right to put any burden thereon by presumption, must establish his claim by showing the facts upon which it is based, we must not refuse to give to the clearly expressed intent of the Legislature, especially when it assumes the form of a contract, a fair interpretation. Whether, in the first introduction of railroad building in this state, the Legislature conferred power, in respect to the acquisition of rights of way and other special privileges, too freely, it is not within our province to say. Whether the growth in wealth and development of the natural resources of the state, incident to the improvement of facilities for transportation, has compensated for such grants, it is equally beyond our province to discuss. This court best serves its purpose and discharges its legitimate function in our governmental system when it confines itself to its constitutional orbit—"to review any decisions of the courts below upon any matter of law or legal inference." Const. art. 4, § 8.

When the defendant showed its actual occupancy of the land for two years in the manner and for the purposes to which it was appropriated, in the absence of any deed or written contract or proceeding for condemnation, the statutory presumption arose with the effect upon the rights of the parties declared by the statute. If one is sued by the state for land, and shows a possession, either by himself or others, for 30 years, under the law as it existed prior to 1863, then arose a presumption of a grant as against the state, and a similar possession of 21 years presumed a deed as against an individual. The charter simply defines the kind, character, and purpose of the possession, and raises the presumption of a grant of an easement of fixed limitations at the end of two years. Charters containing these provisions have been granted in this state since 1833. No serious question has ever been raised as to their validity. Railroad v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451; Railroad v. McCaskill, supra; Railroad v. Sturgeon, supra. The plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title. The easement having been acquired by the statutory presumption, and the defendant being in the actual enjoyment of it, the plaintiff cannot oust it.

His honor stated that there was no contradiction in the testimony, and, as a question of law, directed the verdict. In his ruling we find no error.

DOUGLAS, J. (dissenting). This is another case in which I would wish to state my views at greater length; but it is perhaps unnecessary to do so, in view of my dissenting opinions in Jones v. Commissioners, 130 N. C. 457, 42 S. E. 144, and Dargan v. Rail- road, 131 N. C. 626, 42 S. E. 979. I need only repeat that in my opinion any construction of a statute which has the effect of taking private property without compensation, and without giving the owner any adequate remedy for obtaining compensation, is contrary to the Constitution of this state, as well as the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I may also say that in my opinion any statutes of limitation which discriminate against the citizen by taking from him his property while in the actual possession thereof, and giving it to a railroad corporation upon a mere constructive possession, is contrary to the letter and spirit of section 3, art. 8, of the Constitution of this state, which provides that "all corporations shall have the right to sue and shall be subject to be sued in all courts in like manner as natural persons." I am especially interested in the principles decided in this case on account of its unjust tendencies and dangerous possibilities. Hitherto the lands thus taken have been of comparatively small value; but, if the principle is correct, what is there to prevent railroad companies from demanding a right of way 200 feet wide through our principal cities, and thus appropriating perhaps millions of private property without the shadow of compensation? The value of the property would make no difference in the justice and legality of the claim. The cabin of the poor is as sacred as the mansion of the rich, and both should equally receive the fullest protection of the law.

(56 W. Va. 220)

MARTIN v. THOMAS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE—POSSESSION—EQUITABLE DEFENSES.

1. A court of equity will not enforce, against an innocent purchaser, who has paid the purchase money and taken legal title to land, without notice, a prior executory contract for the purchase of the land.

2. An answer which seeks to defeat the right of a bona fide purchase of land on the claim that the party filing the answer had made a prior executory contract for its purchase from the same owner must aver that when the plaintiff paid purchase money and took title he had notice of such prior contract.

3. To make possession of land notice to subsequent purchasers, such possession must be inconsistent with the occupant's apparent or record title, because such possession will be presumed to be under such title, rather than under another right.

4. The mere sole possession of one coparcener or tenant in common is not notice to subsequent purchasers of shares of other coparceners or tenants in common of the right of such occupant to those shares under a prior unrecorded purchase of them by such occupant.

5. Section 20, c. 90, Code 1891, allowing equitable defense under a writing for the purchase of land applies only to suits involving possession, not to a contest for the land between two purchasers of the same land from the same vendor.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Preston County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bill by Isaac P. Martin against Elisha Thomas. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part.

P. J. Crogan, for appellant. J. A. Brown, for appellee.

BRANNON, J. Elisha Thomas and Elizabeth Corbin were joint equal owners of a tract of 244 acres of land in Preston county. Mrs. Corbin died childless, and her half went by descent to kindred—Elisha Thomas, a brother; the children of a dead brother, Frank Thomas; and three sisters, Hannah Coombs, Mary Ann Cole, and Permella Jenkins. Elisha Thomas acquired the share of Permella Jenkins, and, owning his original half, equal to five-tenths, and one-tenth as a brother of his dead sister, Elizabeth Corbin, and the one-tenth acquired from Permella Jenkins, he owned seven-tenths. Hannah Coombs and Mary Ann Cole, by deed of March 28, 1898, and the heirs of Frank Thomas, by deed of same date, conveyed their shares to William G. Brown, which deeds were for money consideration cash paid. Brown, being thus owner of three-tenths, conveyed the same to Isaac P. Martin by deed December 28, 1898, for the consideration of $1,000. Martin brought a chancery suit against Elisha Thomas conceding that Thomas owned seven-tenths of said land, and claiming himself three-tenths, and asking a partition according to such ownership. Elisha Thomas defended the suit, claiming the whole tract, denying Martin's right to any share on the ground that in December, 1895, he had entered into a written contract with an agent of Mrs. Coombs, Mrs. Cole, and the heirs of Frank Thomas, not recorded, whereby they sold their shares to him. He claimed that the deeds to Brown were illegal, wrongful, and not on adequate consideration, and denied Martin's right. He asked a decree for the whole tract. The court dismissed the bill, and Martin appealed.

The answer and amended answer, which were objected to, but admitted, present no defense to defeat the bill. The plaintiff is a purchaser of the shares of Mrs. Cole, Mrs. Coombs, and Frank Thomas for valuable consideration, and the answers charge no actual notice on Martin, or his grantor, Brown, of the right of Elisha Thomas when they obtained the legal title. When two persons claim the same land as purchasers from the same vendor, if neither has the legal title, but that is still in the vendor, the purchaser first in time has preferential right to call for the legal title; but where the junior has paid purchase money and received a conveyance of legal title he is accorded preference in equity, since his legal title gives him superiority in a court of common law. Urpman v. Lowther Oil Co., 53 W. Va. 501, 44 S. E. 433, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027, point 10. In 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 475, is a full discussion of this important subject, and a reference to the many authorities. Such a purchaser has the legal title, and his claim upon the conscience of a court of equity, if he is honest, is as high as that of his adversary. "No party can occupy a higher ground than that in a court of equity, and if he can maintain that position his title is established and his position impregnable." Briscoe v. Ashby, 24 Grat. 478. We find in 1 Am. & Eng. Dec. in Equity, 249, that equity "will not interfere, either for relief or discovery, against a bona fide purchaser of a legal estate for valuable consideration, without notice of the adverse title, or of any circumstance affecting the apparent right to that which he purchases." "Courts of equity will not take the least step imaginable against an innocent purchaser in such a predicament; and will, on the other hand, allow him to take every advantage which the law gives him, for there is nothing which can attach itself upon his conscience in such a case in favor of an adverse claim." 2 Story, Eq. § 1503. "Relief of cancellation will not be granted against a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the fraud or other ground for cancellation." 6 Cyc. 319. This rule is universal. Turk v. Skiles, 45 W. Va. 82, 30 S. E. 234; Lough v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 679, 17 S. E. 181, 470; National Bank v. Harman, 75 Va. 609; Carter v. Allen, 21 Grat. 241. Seeing that the title of Martin is good, unless he had notice of the claim of Thomas, surely those answers should charge notice. One who would nullify a deed because fraudulent as to creditors must aver notice against the purchaser, because his title is good, unless he had notice, just as Martin's title is.

Though neither of the answers charge actual notice, yet one of them charges that, in pursuance of his purchase of the interests of Mrs. Coombs, Mrs. Cole, and Frank Thomas, Elisha Thomas took actual possession, and such possession, prior to the deeds to Brown and Martin, is alone notice of the rights of Elisha Thomas under said executory contract of purchase. Urpman v. Lowther Co., 53 W. Va. 501, 44 S. E. 433, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027, point 11. This raises the question whether, when one of several coparceners is in possession, and others not themselves in actual possession, and that one in possession makes an executory contract to purchase the shares of those others, such possession of that one is constructive notice to the world of his purchase, so as to warn all persons from purchasing the shares of those purchasers not in possession themselves. We know that the possession of one coparcener is the possession of all, in the absence of an actual ouster. His possession is not adverse to, but consistent with, the rights of his co-owners. In 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 506, is the rule that, to give possession the force of notice, "the possession must be inconsistent with the apparent or record title of the grantor, else it will not be sufficient to put upon the purchaser the duty of making further inquiry; the reason being that in such case the possession is presumed to be under the grantor's title." Many cases are cited for the text. Warvel on Vendors, p. 330. 3 Washburn R. Prop. § 2201, says, "No inference is to be deduced from possession when it is consistent with the possessory title on record." Apply this principle to this case. Elisha Thomas was in possession under his joint tenancy with Elizabeth Corbin, and on her death with her heirs. The recorded title showed his right. One had right to ascribe his possession to his own apparent title on the record. He was, after Mrs. Corbin's death, as one of her heirs, a coparcener in her half with her other heirs, and the law would ascribe his possession both to his right as original owner of an undivided moiety and as a coparcener with other heirs in the Corbin moiety under her recorded right. His possession would not be inconsistent, but would be consistent with, the rights of her other heirs. Mullins v. Nickel, 25 Mont. 525, 65 Pac. 1004, 87 Am. St. Rep. 430, holds in point with our case: "In so far as persons other than the tenants themselves are concerned, the actual occupancy of one tenant in common is the rightful possession of all the owners; and if a title under which they might hold is on record, and is consistent with the occupancy, the possession must be referred to the record, and will not be constructive notice of any other title." "Where a person occupies premises, and the record shows a conveyance under which he would be entitled to the possession, in such case his possession will be referred to the record title, and a subsequent purchaser will not be charged by it with any other undisclosed title or equity which the occupant may have. The possession is a matter which may incite inquiry; but the fact that the occupant has placed upon record written evidence of his right, with the terms of which his possession is consistent, arrests inquiry at that point, and reasonably informs the purchaser that he may rest upon the knowledge thus obtained. Thus a wife was entitled to an interest in land by inheritance. A partition was had with other heirs, but the deed made thereupon was to both husband and wife, vesting title to her portion in them as tenants in common, and as against lien creditors of the husband her possession was held notice only of an undivided half interest." Webb on Record Title, § 232. The deed was made to husband and wife by mistake by the other heirs after voluntary partition. It was the wife's land. The creditor knew nothing of her equity to the whole. Farmers' Bank v. Wallace, 45 Ohio St. 152, 12 N. E. 439. A tenant in common in possession purchased the interest of his co-tenant not in possession, and failed to record his deed, and there is no visible change in the possession except some improvements, and later the interest of the co-tenant who had conveyed to his co-tenant was sold on execution. The purchaser, who had no actual knowledge of the prior conveyance, is not chargeable with notice from possession of the co-tenant's right under the deed. May v. Sturdivant, 75 Iowa, 116, 39 N. W. 221, 9 Am. St. Rep. 463. A possession justified by the record title is referable to it, and is not notice of any other title, unrecorded, which may have been subsequently acquired. Dutton v. McReynolds, 31 Minn. 68, 16 N. W. 463. There is much authority for the position that possession begun under one right is not notice of a later acquired right. 2 Pom. Eq. § 817. However this may be generally, surely the occupation by one heir might be assumed to be only under his own heirship right, and would not hint that he had a secret right for his brother's share. Must the purchaser go to him to inquire if he has acquired his brother's share? May he not assume that he has only his own apparent right? Wade on Notice, § 297, says that when one is in possession under a recorded title which would justify that possession, possession is attributed to it, and is not notice of any undisclosed title or interest which the possessor may have. For these reasons the answers on their face are not good to defeat Martin's right, or call for specific performance by taking title from him as a bona fide purchaser.

The answer charges that the deeds to Brown are fraudulent. Wherein we are not told. No facts of fraud are given. It also charges inadequacy of consideration. What has Thomas to do with that? This would not hurt the deeds even between the parties thereto. Wood v. Harmison, 41 W. Va. 376, 23 S. E. 560. The answers appeal to section 20, c. 90, Code 1891, and say that the deeds to Brown and Martin are of no force by reason of that statute, which reads: "A vendor, or any person claiming under him, shall not at law recover against a vendee, or those claiming under him, land sold by such vendor to such vendee, when there is a writing stating the purchase, and the terms thereof, signed by the vendor or his agent." This statute has no point in this case. By common law a title bond or executory contract for sale of land stipulating for future conveyance of legal title conveyed no right to the land whatever. It would only be basis for action for damages for nonconveyance. A court of law knew no right to land save the legal title. Such an instrument gave an equity recognized in equity as basis for specific performance. At law the vendor could bring ejectment or writ of right, repudiate the contract, and turn the vendee out of possession, even if he had paid all the purchase money. The Virginia statute changed this by allowing the purchaser to plead his equity in such action for its defeat, if he had fully complied with the contract. Our statute dispenses with performance. Thus, an equitable title is now recognized in a law court. It does not give the purchaser right to recover possession of the vendor, unless it provide for possession; but, if let into possession, he can hold it. Newell, Eject. pp. 435, 318; Warvel on Vendors, § 874. The vendor's only remedy is in equity to sell the land. The statute was made only to remedy this defect in the common law, to give some force to the writing in a law court for defense of possession. The statute applies only in actions to recover possession in law courts. Davis v. Teays, 3 Grat. 284; Suttle v. Railroad, 76 Va. 284. This is not an action of ejectment or unlawful detainer involving possession. This is a suit in equity involving a right to some interests between conflicting claimants under a common vendor; not an action merely involving right between vendor and vendee. If Mrs. Cole, Mrs. Coombs, and the Frank Thomas heirs were to sue Elisha Thomas for possession, he could use his contract, under the statute, against them. Or if Martin had notice of Elisha Thomas' purchase, and were to sue for admission to possession at law, Thomas could use the contract. This is a suit in equity involving the right under a common vendor to the same thing—conflicting claims. The statute is irrelevant, because the solution of the controversy depends on the equity law as between two purchasers of the same thing, depending not merely on a sale, but the superadded question whether the one party is a bona fide purchaser, or his right is inferior by reason of fraud. I do not understand that adverse possession is involved. Viewed without the right of Elisha Thomas under the sale, there is no show of ouster as between coparceners. Viewed with that contract, as possession of the purchaser under an executory contract is not adverse to his vendor or those under him, it cannot be sustained.

Another reason against Elisha Thomas is delay. Thomas claims that he bought the contested shares from an agent of the parties. That agent says the contract was conditional. He was to have the shares, if he paid for them in a given time, which Thomas himself says was four months. He also says himself that it was a sale "providing I should pay in a certain time." Not having paid within that time, we may fairly say it never became a contract. In this view he could not enforce it. But, say that it was not conditional. The writing was mislaid; but a paper was filed pending the cause as the paper, though not clearly proven. It fixed no time for payment, but provided for a deed on payment. It was thus payable at once. Payment was demanded of Thomas, but he did not pay or offer to do so. He was insolvent, unable to pay. The contract dates December 18, 1895. The agent who sold to Thomas considered the arrangement ended. Three years afterwards Brown purchased. Why wait longer when Thomas was utterly insolvent, as he himself says? He could not perform. Thomas never sought performance until he filed his answer in December, 1899. If these interests had not been sold to Brown, I would say that Thomas could not enforce his alleged contract, because to get equity to grant performance one must show himself prompt and willing to comply on his part; but these shares have been conveyed to Brown, and he has paid $400, and Brown conveyed to Martin, Martin paying $1,000. Thus the condition of things has changed. The rights of Brown and Martin have intervened; and they must lose heavily, without hope of indemnity, if Thomas is allowed to awake from his supineness and get advantage from his negligence. Equity will not grant specific performance of a contract to convey land when the vendee has unreasonably delayed in performing the contract and asking relief. Conditions have changed in the situation of the parties, and it would work hardship and loss to the vendor or other persons affected thereby. Urpman v. Lowther Co., 53 W. Va. 502, 44 S. E. 433, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027; Dyer v. Duffy, 39 W. Va. 149, 19 S. E. 540, 24 L. R. A. 339. I have assumed that the agent had power to sell the contested shares, and that there was a valid contract, though these facts are contested, and there is grave reason to doubt them; but, as they involve no law necessary to be stated, I will not prolong this opinion, now too long for the case, by discussing them. I add that, even if the answers did charge actual notice of the alleged sale, the evidence is doubtful, and short of sustaining it, whereas the law requires full proof as it is a charge of fraud.

We reverse in part the decree of the circuit court, and do adjudge, order, and decree that Isaac P. Martin is entitled to have partition made between him and Elisha Thomas of the tract of land in the record of the cause described, assigning and confirming, to be held by him free of other parties, respectively, in severalty to said Martin three-tenths and to said Thomas seven-tenths, according to quantity and quality; and the cause is remanded to the circuit court with direction to make such partition.

(56 W. Va. 215)

STATE v. GOOD.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ILLEGAL SALE—EVIDENCE.

1. Proof of an unlawful sale of a mixture, preparation, or liquid "which will produce intoxication" will sustain a conviction upon an indictment charging the unlawful sale of "spirituous liquors, wine, porter, ale, beer, and drinks of like nature," without a state license therefor. For the purposes of chapter 82, § 1, of the Code of 1899, such mixture, preparation, or liquid is, in law, spirituous liquor, whether it be such, in fact, or not.

2. When such mixture is sold in labeled bottles, as put up by the manufacturer, and has a commercial name or designation, the evidence of persons who have purchased it from the defendant and drunk it, whether at the same time or on different days and occasions, as to whether it is intoxicating, is admissible both for the state and the defendant.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Circuit Court, Hancock County; H. C. Hervey, Judge.

Elmer S. Good was convicted of an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, and brings error. Reversed.

John R. Donehoo, for plaintiff in error.
The Attorney General, for the State.

POFFENBARGER, P. Reversal of a judgment of conviction of the unlawful retailing of spirituous liquors is asked here because the indictment charges the unlawful selling of spirituous liquors, wine, porter, ale, beer, and drinks of a like nature, while the proof shows a sale of an intoxicating liquid called "Rikk"; it being urged that as the article sold was not, in fact, one of the prohibited liquors mentioned in the indictment, the charge is unsustainable by proof. In addition to the liquids named in the indictment, the law prohibits the sale of "all mixtures, preparations or liquids which will produce intoxication, whether they be patented or not," and declares that they "shall be deemed spirituous liquors within the meaning" of the statute; but the contention is that the indictment, to sustain a conviction of a sale of such mixture, preparation, or liquid, must contain a count specifically covering such mixture, preparation, or liquid. No authority directly confirming this view has been produced. The argument is one of deduction only. State v. Oliver, 28 W. Va. 422, 53 Am. Rep. 79, is referred to, and an attempt made to show that, if the indictment had charged the selling of an intoxicating mixture, preparation, or liquid, proof of sale of crab cider would have made out an offense. But that clause is referred to in the opinions, and the case made by the evidence tested by it, just as if an offense under it had been specifically charged in the indictment. Judge Wood said: "Not being a distilled liquor, neither is it a mixture known as 'bitters' or otherwise, which will produce intoxication, and therefore declared, for the purposes of the act, 'spirituous liquor.'" Judge Snyder, in his dissenting opinion, said: "The very section under which the indictment here was found uses the terms 'intoxicating drinks' and mixtures 'which will produce intoxication,' and expressly prohibits their sale without a license." He opposed a reversal of the judgment, and it was reversed by the other judges, because, in their opinion, the statute did not, by any terms used, prohibit its sale. If that decision or the views expressed by the court has any bearing upon the question, its effect is exactly the reverse of what is claimed in respect to it.

The legislative declaration that intoxicating mixtures "shall be deemed spirituous liquors" is equivalent to a declaration that they are spirituous liquors for the purposes of the act. An unlicensed sale of spirituous liquors is made an offense, and, as an intoxicating mixture, preparation, or liquid is, by force of the statute, such a liquor, an unlicensed sale thereof constitutes the offense. This is admitted, but it is said this statutory classification does not make a mixture which contains no alcohol spirituous in fact. It cannot change the nature of the preparation, and it was not the purpose of the statute to prescribe a mode of pleading, but only to create and define an offense. All of this may be true, but the courts have uniformly held that, under such statutes, a conviction may be had upon an indictment alleging the acts constituting the offense, without reciting the means by which it was committed. One court has gone so far as to say that an indictment for larceny by embezzlement must allege that the defendant "feloniously did steal, take, and carry away the property which is the subject of the indictment." Com. v. Pratt, 132 Mass. 246. Commencing with Dowdy v. Com., 9 Grat. 727, 60 Am. Dec. 314, in 1852, the Virginia court of last resort has asserted and adhered to principles of criminal pleading which render it impossible to sustain the position taken for plaintiff in error, and they have been followed by this court. For obtaining money or other property which may be the subject of larceny by false pretense, the indictment may be in the common-law form, or it may charge the specific facts which the statute declares shall be deemed larceny. Leftwich v. Com., 20 Grat. 716; Fay v. Com., 28 Grat. 912. "Upon an indictment for simple larceny, the state may convict by proving either that the subject of the larceny was received with knowledge that it was stolen, or that it was obtained by a false token or false pretense." State v. Halida, 28 W. Va. 499; State v. Edwards, 51 W. Va. 220, 41 S. E. 429, 59 L. R. A. 465. The principles announced in Dowdy v. Com. are declared to extend to embezzlement also (Pitsnogle v. Com., 91 Va. 808, 22 S. E. 351, 50 Am. St. Rep. 867); the statute saying, if any person embezzle any money, etc., he shall be deemed guilty of the larceny thereof.

The conclusion that proof of a sale of an intoxicating mixture without a license will sustain an indictment for selling spirituous liquors, under our statute, is reached by a more direct and shorter method of reasoning. The statute does not say a sale of such mixture shall be deemed a sale of spirituous liquor, or that a person making such sale shall be deemed guilty of the offense of selling spirituous liquor. It says all such mixtures, preparations, or liquids shall be deemed spirituous liquors, and it prohibits the sale thereof as a sale of spirituous liquors. In law, whether in fact or not, it is a spirituous liq-nor; and the Legislature, no doubt, intended to eliminate all cavil and controversy about the composition and definition of the many intoxicating drinks then existing, and thereafter to come into existence, by the classification and declaration referred to.

The state having introduced witnesses who testified to having purchased from the defendant the bottled preparation called "Rikk," and found the effect of drinking it to be stimulation such as is produced by beer or any similar liquor, the defendant offered to prove by other witnesses that they had purchased from him at other times, near the same date, bottles of the same description, and containing what was called the same kind of drink, and used it without experiencing any stimulation therefrom; and the court ruled that what they proposed to introduce as evidence was inadmissible. He was of the opinion that it must be shown that these purchases were made on the same day, and probably on the same occasion, as the purchases referred to by the witnesses for the state. This view is clearly erroneous. The identity of the liquor, as well as its effect in use, is for the jury, and not for the court, and the weight of the evidence is also for the jury. Its weight, whether great or slight—a question for the jury—is a thing entirely different from its admissibility. Owing to the difference in time and occasion, the character of the witnesses, and other circumstances, the jury may not give the evidence much force, but that is immaterial on the question of admissibility. The defendant is entitled to have it go to the jury, to have such weight as they may deem it entitled to. The admissibility of this evidence is clearly established by Com. v. O'Donnell (Mass.) 9 N. E. 509; Com. v. Goodman, 97 Mass. 117; Com. v. Pease, 110 Mass. 412. "In a criminal prosecution for the sale of intoxicating liquors in violation of a local prohibitory law, the article sold being compounded by a druggist, and the bottles labeled 'Elixir Cinchona,' or 'Cinchona Bitters,' it is permissible for the prosecution to prove that it was bought and used by many persons as a beverage, the use to which it was applied being illustrative of its nature and properties; and a person who had swallowed it may state its exhilarating effect on himself, and, though not technically an expert, may testify that, 'in his opinion, it would produce intoxication.'" Carl v. State, 87 Ala. 17, 6 South. 118, 4 L. R. A. 380. Evidence of this character being proper for one side, it must be for the other. The rule must work both ways. "In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors in violation of a local prohibitory law, a witness for the prosecution having testified that the liquor or beverage sold by the defendant produced on him effects similar to those produced by whisky, it is competent for the defendant to prove by other witnesses who had drunk it that it had no intoxicating effect on them." Knowles v. State, 80 Ala. 9. In the case just quoted from, the purchases testified to by the witnesses were made at different times, and the witnesses gave the same description of the article purchased.

Certain remarks of the court on refusing to admit this evidence are excepted to. If his ruling had been correct, the remarks would have been harmless and not improper. The evidence will go in on the new trial, and we do not presume the court will nullify or impair its effect by improper comment.

An exception is grounded upon the refusal of the court to admit testimony as to what a government inspector had declared as the result of an analysis of Rikk made in his presence. The ruling of the court on this was right. It is mere hearsay.

It is urged the court should have compelled an election by the state as to the sale relied upon. As there is to be a new trial, in which the motions may be different from those made in the one which has been had, and the law on the subject is fully elucidated in State v. Chisnell, 36 W. Va. 659, 15 S. E. 412, it is useless to consume time on that subject.

For the error aforesaid, the judgment will be reversed, a new trial allowed, and the case remanded.

(56 W. Va. 194)

WILSON et al. v. MAXON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)

RESCISSON OF CONTRACT—PROOF OF FRAUD— OUTSTANDING TITLE—REMEDIES.

1. To rescind an executed contract in equity on the grounds of fraud, such fraud must be clearly alleged, and fully sustained by proof if denied.

2. A litigant relying on the outstanding title of a third person to sustain his action or defense must fully establish such title by competent and sufficient proof.

3. A verbal contract for the exchange of personal property may be rescinded by either party thereto for good cause, and a suit at law maintained for the restitution of the property.

4. In such cases resort should not be had to a court of equity, unless for some special reason the remedy at law is unavailing or inadequate.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Cabell County;
E. S. Doolittle, Judge.

Bill by John T. Wilson and D. J. Jenkins against Elizabeth Maxon and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Marcum, Marcum & Sheppard, Simms & Enslow, and M. D. Phillips, for appellants.
Vinson & Thompson, for appellees.

DENT, J. John T. Wilson and D. J. Jenkins instituted a suit in chancery in the circuit court of Cabell county against Elizabeth Maxon as administratrix and widow, and Oscar Maxon and Mrs. M. D. Phillips as children and heirs at law, of Thomas Maxon, deceased, including therein the husband of Mrs. M. D. Phillips, for the purpose of rescinding and canceling the sale of a certain removable house situated by permission on Ninth street, in the city of Huntington, and which the plaintiffs, on the 23d day of September, 1896, by verbal contract sold to Thomas Maxon, now deceased, for five shares of paid-up stock of the par value of $500, in the Maxon-Miller Company. Such proceedings were had in said suit that on the 9th day of July, 1901, the circuit court entered a decree cancelling such sale, restoring the possession of such house to the plaintiffs, and awarding costs against the defendants, from which the defendants appealed.

There was no demurrer to the bill, yet on the hearing the cause should have been dismissed as to all the defendants being heirs of Thomas Maxon, deceased, with the exception of the administratrix, as the suit only involved the right of possession of a movable house. 22 American and English Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 748. The personal estate of Thomas Maxon, deceased, alone was called in question, and the full title thereto was invested in his administratrix, and his widow and heirs had no legal interest in the controversy. So they were improperly made parties to the suit and adjudged to pay the costs thereof. To sustain this suit for possession of this house against the administratrix, the sole ground is that the deceased had obtained possession thereof by fraudulent representation as to the ownership of the patent on which the issue of the stock transferred to the plaintiff was based. The allegations of the bill in relation thereto are as follows, to wit: "Plaintiff further says: That there were issued to said Thomas Maxon in his lifetime certain letters patent for a lifting jack bearing numbers and dates as follows: No. 292,441, dated January 22, 1884; No. 298,306, dated May 6, 1884; No. 298,307, dated May 6, 1884; No. 306,341, dated October 7, 1884; No. 306,340, dated October 7, 1884; No. 312,878, dated February 24, 1885; No. 315,807, dated April 14, 1885. That afterwards—the date of which is unknown to your complainant—said Thomas Maxon, in his lifetime, transferred and assigned to one James W. Carpenter, of Dayton, Ohio, an undivided one-half interest in and to said letters patent. That afterwards, to wit, on the 26th day of January, 1887, said Thomas Maxon, in his lifetime, and James W. Carpenter, transferred and assigned unto D. E. McSherry & Co., of Dayton, Ohio, all their rights, title, and interest in and to said patents and all improvements then made, together with all improvements and patents thereafter to be gotten or owned in whole or in part by either the said Maxon or said Carpenter, to manufacture, use, and sell in the United States of America and its territories all such lifting jacks, which said transfer was recorded and registered in the Patent Office of the United States, as required by law. Plaintiffs further say that on or about the 28th day of August, 1894, said Thomas Maxon, in his lifetime, secured from the United States letters patent for an improved lifting jack, which patent is No. 525,223, and that afterwards—the date of which is unknown to your complainant—said Thomas Maxon, in his lifetime, transferred to one George A. Miller of Dayton, Ohio, an undivided half interest in said patent improved lifting jack; and that afterwards, on or about the — day of September, 1895, a corporation known as the Maxon-Miller Company was organized in Huntington, West Virginia, by said Maxon and Miller, along with others, for the manufacture of the improved lifting jack, and that afterwards, to wit, on the 9th day of September, 1895, the said Thomas Maxon, in his lifetime, and George A. Miller, pretended to convey to the Maxon-Miller Company the exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell in the United States of America and its territories lifting jacks under the letters patent above recited. That in exchange therefor the said Maxon-Miller Company was to give to the said Thomas Maxon certain paid-up shares of stock in the Maxon-Miller Company, and did issue and deliver to him said shares. The plaintiffs further say that the said Thos. Maxon was the president and general manager of said company and its affairs from the time of its organization until the time of his death in January, 1900. Plaintiffs further say: That they were the owners of a certain office building situated on the east side of Ninth street, between Fourth and Fifth avenues, in the city of Huntington, being the same building now occupied by Peyton and Perkins as a law office, on the property belonging to the city of Huntington. That by their agreement with the city they were to have the use of said ground for a yearly ground rental for $— per year, with the privilege of removing said building whenever they wished so to do. That on or about the 23d day of September, 1896, the said Thomas Maxon, in his lifetime, came to them, seeking to buy said building, and to give them in exchange therefor stock in the Maxon-Miller Company, which said stock he represented to them as being worth the par value thereof, or $100 per share, and that the said company had the sole and exclusive right to manufacture said lifting jacks in the United States, and that said plaintiffs, relying on said statements, did deliver to said Maxon, in his lifetime, the possession of the building above described, and that in exchange therefor the said Maxon, in his lifetime, delivered to them five shares of stock in the Maxon-Miller Company of the pretended value of $100 each. The plaintiffs further say that afterwards—the date of which is unknown to your complainant—the Maxon-Miller Company was notified by the D. E. McSherry & Co., of Dayton, Ohio, or its assignee, of the former transfer of the letters patent, and were prohibited and stopped from manufacturing said lifting jacks, and that afterwards, to wit, on the — day of —,

1900, said company, having failed of its purpose by reason of the failure of the title of the patent sold to it, was forced to abandon the manufacture of said lifting jacks, and to have a receiver appointed to wind up its affairs."

The defendants, in their answer, positively deny these allegations of the bill in so far as they allege the nonownership of the Maxon-Miller Company of the patent involved, and attack the right of Thomas Maxon to transfer the same to such company; and they further deny that D. E. McSherry & Co., or its assignee, ever laid any claim to such patent, or ever stopped the manufacture of such lifting jacks by the Maxon-Miller Company, during the lifetime or since the death of Thomas Maxon, deceased.

There is an agreed statement of facts in the record. This does not cover the true ownership of the patent involved, nor is it admitted that the Maxon-Miller Company was prevented, either during the lifetime or after the death of Thomas Maxon, deceased, from operating fully and completely under the patent involved, and the plaintiffs are wholly without proof to sustain such latter allegations.

It is true that the McSherry manufacturing contract of the 27th day of January, 1887, includes all improvements on such lifting jacks for which patents might be thereafter obtained by Thomas Maxon. As such patents had no potential existence at the time of the contract, the sale or transfer therefore is void at law, while equity will regard the same as an executory contract, enforceable or not, in the sound discretion of a court of conscience, if not contrary to public policy and the several rights of the parties as they appear. Such an executory contract may be rescinded by the verbal agreement of the parties thereto. Proof of abandonment is sufficient evidence of the existence of such agreement, unless the contrary is shown. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 1042; 9 Cyc. 524; Huling v. Cabell, 9 W. Va. 522, 27 Am. Rep. 562; Bank v. Kimberlands, 16 W. Va. 555. To sustain their case to the satisfaction of a court of equity, it devolves upon the plaintiffs to show that D. E. McSherry & Co. are still claiming under, and have fully complied with all the important provisions of, the contract, or that their legal assignee has so done and is continuing to do so. On these important questions neither the allegations nor proof come up to the requirements of a court of equity. There is no allegation that D. E. McSherry & Co. or their assignee have fully complied with their manufacturing contract, or that they are still complying with it, and regard it as enforceable. Nor is there any proof or admission that such is the case. On the contrary, as appears from the circumstances, they had abandoned it long before the death of Thomas Maxon. At least, they never attempted to enforce it against him during his lifetime, and now that he is dead they must make out a very clear case to have it enforced. It is admitted that neither they nor their assignee have tried to so do. The plaintiffs can take no advantage of their stale and abandoned rights. Hence their allegations and proof wholly fail to make out a case of fraud against Thomas Maxon, deceased, calling for the interference of a court of equity. The allegations and proof are insufficient to overthrow the title of the Maxon-Miller Company to the patent involved, and, as this is really the only foundation for the charge of fraud or the want of consideration, the bill should have been dismissed. Not only is this true, but the plaintiffs, if showing a good case for relief, had a good and adequate remedy at law. So far as rescission is concerned, they could have accomplished this by their own act, and then sued for the possession of the house at law. 24 Am. and Eng. Enc. of Law, 643; Id. 614. There were no writings between the parties, but the contract was a verbal exchange of personal property, which might be rescinded by either party for just cause, and a suit at law maintained for restitution of property. Why, then, incur a court of equity with such a suit, the only object of which is to try the right to the possession of personal property? The legal remedy is adequate and complete. Id. 617.

Decree reversed, and suit dismissed.

(56 W. Va. 200)

McPECK'S HEIRS v. GRAHAM'S HEIRS.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)

EQUITY—PLEADING—DURESS—INSANE PERSONS
—CONTRACTS—PRESUMPTIONS—LACHES.

1. A general charge of duress or fraud in a bill, without statement of facts constituting it, is not sufficient.

2. A confirmed insane person may, in a lucid interval, make a valid contract.

3. If insanity is occasional and intermittent, the presumption of insanity at the time of making a contract does not prevail, and he who relies on insanity proven to have existed at another prior time must also prove its existence at the time of the contract.

4. The defense of laches is applicable in equity to a married woman, as to her separate estate. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Preston County; John H. Holt, Judge.

Bill by Melinda McPeck's heirs against David Graham's heirs. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Wm. G. Brown and P. J. Crogan, for appellants. R. W. Monroe, for appellees.

BRANNON, J. On 22d of May, 1888, David Graham conveyed to Melinda McPeck, wife of William McPeck, a tract of 130½ acres of land in Preston county, in consideration of land owned by William Mc-

§ 1. See Fraud, vol. 23, Cent. Dig. § 37; Pleading, vol. 39, Cent. Dig. § 28½.

Peck, and conveyed by him to Graham. By deed dated 25th of April, 1889, in consideration of $1,175 recited in the deed as the indebtedness of McPeck and wife to Graham, McPeck and wife conveyed back to Graham said 130¼ acres. Graham died in 1892. In June, 1896, a suit began in the circuit court of Preston county in the name of Melinda McPeck against the representatives of Graham to cancel the deed from herself and husband to Graham. Pending the suit Mrs. McPeck died, and it was revived in the names of her heirs. A decree was pronounced avoiding the deed. The bill alleged that Mrs. McPeck was mentally incompetent to make the deed. The representatives of Graham took an appeal.

There is some evidence intended to show that Mrs. McPeck was unwilling to sign the deed to Graham, but was forced to do so by her husband by a threat that he would take his pension and leave the family without support, he receiving a pension as a soldier; but we need not consider coercion as an independent ground of relief, on the theory of fraud or duress, because it is not a basis of relief made by the bill. No feature of the bill approaches that basis of relief, save the too general charge that "David Graham improperly procured this plaintiff to attempt to convey to him the said tract of land for a pretended consideration of $1,175." How he improperly did so, the bill does not say. This does not specify the facts constituting fraud or duress. Zell Co. v. Heatherly, 38 W. Va. 409, 18 S. E. 611; 7 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 247. It would be pertinent to undue influence, if charged, but it is not charged.

We must treat the bill as grounded alone on the insanity of Mrs. McPeck. Was she mentally competent to make the deed? A basic rule, at the outset, is that it is a legal presumption that the grantor in a deed was sane and competent to make it at the time when made, and he who asserts the contrary must fully and clearly prove it. Dalaplain v. Grubb, 44 W. Va. 612, 30 S. E. 201, 67 Am. St. Rep. 788; Snodgrass v. Knight, 43 W. Va. 294, 27 S. E. 233. To one reading the lengthy evidence, it must be plain that not only is this legal presumption going to sustain the deed not overthrown, but the weight of the evidence—the preponderance—goes decidedly the other way. We cannot lightly overthrow monuments of men's titles on trivial evidence, leaving the mind unwilling to do so. The depositions show seven nonexpert, nonprofessional witnesses, testifying in a general way, that, in their opinion, Mrs. McPeck was not sane. They give no defined reasons. They say she was eccentric; would stand and say nothing; would take children and wander over premises when visiting, and say nothing to people, and stand silent and apparently troubled. No violent action was shown, no raving mania. We can explain her silence and melancholy on rational ground. In February, 1888, her son died, and she was greatly troubled over his death, as the plaintiffs proved by one of her sons. He says she was insane. The strongest manifestation of insanity which he gives, or which the record discloses, is that he says: "The first I noticed of her being rattled was about six weeks after Charley died. She was laying in bed one night, and I heard her say she could see him in Heaven—she could hear him call her." Is it to be received as even a token of insanity that this illiterate, unread, bereaved mother, while brooding on her restless bed in the stillness and solitude of the night, should seem to see her lost son and hear his call for his mother, even from Heaven? How many cultivated, educated, favored mothers, lying on soft couches under gilded canopies, stung with a like grief, see similar apparitions, and think they hear the voices of loved ones in the still watches of the night? It may argue superstition or excessive or diseased imagination, but does it prove that she knew not what she did when conveying her land? That she did know, the plaintiffs' evidence, if true, fully proves. A son says that when the deed was brought to the house his mother objected, when the father told her that she would have to sign the deed, as judgments would be rendered against him next day. This son, strange to say, does not say she was incompetent. By another son it is proven that she flatly declined to sign, and was told by his father that she would have to do so. By other evidence still the plaintiffs sought to show that she refused to sign the deed, but was induced by fear of creditors of her husband attacking the land as purchased with his means, and vested in her to cheat them, and by threat of the husband to deprive the family of the benefit of his pension and leaving home. Now, this evidence, if true—and it is claimed by the plaintiffs to be true—proves that she knew the effect of the deed, and establishes her mental capacity to execute it. It shows that at the very moment of the execution of the deed she knew its character, and that is the moment of time, above all other times, that controls in deciding upon capacity. Delaplain v. Grubb, 44 W. Va. 612, 30 S. E. 201, 67 Am. St. Rep. 788. This evidence of the plaintiffs ought alone to sustain the deed. There is evidence that Mrs. McPeck's mother, grandmother, and aunt committed suicide; evidence that some years before she was committed to a hospital in Pennsylvania. In July, 1890, she became worse, as all say, and at Christmas, 1890, was committed to the Weston Hospital as an insane person, but the next spring returned home, and seemed all right till her death. She told several persons that she had conveyed the land, and that the bargain was that she was to give possession in the spring. She told all about it. She said she was under obligations to Graham. Thus it is clear that for the bulk of the time she was sane, and her spells of insanity transient. By the great preponderance of evidence, she was not insane at the date of the deed, April, 1889, and did not become so till July, 1890. The physician and justice who later pronounced her a fit subject for the Weston Asylum so state, and from the evidence it is clear. Ellen Radabaugh, a witness for the plaintiffs, who pronounced her insane, says she first noticed her insanity in July, 1890. One of her sons says she became so in July, 1890. Margery Moser says she was insane in April, 1889, but also says she was sent to Weston the winter after this April; and as it is fixed beyond question that Mrs. McPeck went to the Weston Asylum in December, 1890, we must say that the point of time fixed by Margery Moser for her insanity was really April, 1890, not 1889. So it is clear that the insanity did not exist when the deed was made, but came on later. If she ever was insane before—and it is not clearly shown that she was—for years she was restored, and was sane again after a few months spent at Weston. Even one habitually insane has sometimes lucid intervals, and is then capable of contracting. Bishop on Contracts, § 959. The insanity of Mrs. McPeck, at utmost, was not confirmed. "If the malady is occasional or intermittent in its nature, the presumption [of continuance] does not arise, and he who relies on insanity proved at another time must prove its existence also at the time alleged." 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 606. As stated above, the fact that she objected to the deed shows her capacity. And a son (Frank) swears that when he came home to dinner on the day, in the morning of which the deed was made, he found his mother crying, and she told him all about the deed; told him that they had come unexpected to her, and she told them she would not sign the deed; that the farm was her home; that she received nothing for it; that her husband said for her to sign it, and stood over her and told her she had to sign it, or he would take his pension and leave, and she told him when she signed it she was doing so against her will. This shows her full comprehension of the act. There are seven witnesses giving the opinion—the mere opinion—that Mrs. McPeck was incompetent. They state few facts to substantiate such opinions. Mere opinions of nonexpert witnesses, not supported by good reasons on facts warranting them, are entitled to little or no regard. If such reasons and facts, as in this case, are frivolous, the opinions are worth little or nothing. Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 584; Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668. These witnesses give no substantial facts. Two of those to sustain the suit are sons and heirs of Mrs. McPeck, deeply interested in the suit.

The defense introduced eleven witnesses, all well acquainted with Mrs. McPeck, and seeming impartial and fair, who fully sustain her competency. One of them was a justice, notary, school-teacher and farmer, of evident intelligence. He took the acknowledgment to the deed, and is clear in stating Mrs. McPeck's competency. The cases say that the evidence of the officer taking an acknowledgment is entitled to peculiar weight on the question of a grantor's capacity. Buckey v. Buckey, 38 W. Va. 168, 18 S. E. 383. President Pendleton, in Beckwith v. Butler, 1 Wash. (Va.) 224, holds this rule; telling us of an early case where the evidence of such an officer overcame all other evidence before and after the deed. This witness is the same justice who afterwards committed Mrs. McPeck to the Weston Asylum. And her family physician, whose evidence afterwards sent her to Weston, gives evidence that at the date of the deed she was competent. These witnesses say her insanity did not occur till the summer of 1890, in July, more than a year after the deed.

It adds strength to the defense that Graham sold this land back to William McPeck, by title bond, 4th July, 1889, and on 4th October, 1893, Mrs. McPeck signed her name as a party to it. She thus treated Graham as owner, and thus when she was confessedly sane recognized her deed.

It appears probable from the whole case that the husband of Mrs. McPeck caused this deed to be made to Graham to protect the land from creditors, and that it was the sedate act of both husband and wife. The justice says that, when he was at their house to take the acknowledgment, McPeck and wife retired and consulted. This land had been paid for, as all admit, and the deed to Mrs. McPeck from Graham states, with the husband's property, and was thus liable to creditors; and later McPeck wanted to get back the property. He was active in the suit. The wife was not. He never sued while Graham lived to give his version and defend his right. He waited till the man who befriended him was in his grave. Several witnesses swear that he offered to bribe them to give evidence of his wife's insanity. We cannot overthrow the deed on the ground of insanity. And if duress were involved, the only undue influence was that of the husband, with which Graham could not be chargeable.

Another sufficient reason against the case of the plaintiffs is laches. It was more than seven years from the deed to the suit, and four years after Graham's death. It was more than five years from Mrs. McPeck's return from the Weston Hospital till suit. It is proven that Mrs. McPeck was sane after such return until her death. She gave an intelligent deposition. When the suit began, Graham was dead and unable to speak. Circumstances had changed. He was never attacked until after death. How long are titles to remain in uncertainty? Diligence, not lethargy and sleep, is required. Bryant v. Groves, 42 W. Va. 10, 24 S. E. 605; Christian v. Vance, 41 W. Va. 754, 24 S. E. 596. No excuse for such delay is given. A married woman, as to her separate estate or right, is subject to laches. The statute of limitation excepts her, but not as to separate estate, and she is under the bar of laches, as applied in equity. Phillips v. Piney Co., 53 W. Va. 543, 44 S. E. 774, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1040; Waldron v. Harvey, 54 W. Va. 608, 46 S. E. 603, 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 107; McKneely v. Terry (Ark.) 33 S. W. 953.

We reverse the decree and dismiss the bill.

(56 W. Va. 123)

CIPHER v. BOWEN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)

APPEAL—DECREE PRO CONFESSO—DISMISSAL.

1. An appeal from a decree on a bill taken for confessed will not be entertained by this court unless a motion to have such decree reversed be first made and overruled by the court or the judge thereof that rendered it.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pleasants County; L. N. Tavenner, Judge.

Bill by India Cipher against J. H. Bowen and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Dismissed.

S. M. Noyes, for appellants. C. P. Craig, for appellee.

MILLER, J. India Cipher (plaintiff below) instituted her suit and filed her bill in the circuit court of Pleasants county against J. H. Bowen, George W. Wentz, John Schauwecker, B. F. Riggs, J. B. Parker, Robert M. Clendenning, Lora M. Clendenning, George W. Brown, Laura Brown, Susan Taggart, Rosa Welty, and C. W. Welty and F. P. Wingerter, executors of the last will and testament of Peter Welty, deceased, in which bill the plaintiff claimed dower in lot No. 12 in the town of St. Marys. The bill was filed at October rules, 1901, and decree nisi taken thereon. At November rules following, the decree nisi was confirmed, and the cause was set for hearing. On the 10th day of June, 1903, the following decree was made and entered by the court: "This cause came on this day to be heard on the bill and exhibits filed, and, summons having been accepted by J. B. Parker, and been duly served on all the other defendants, and none of the defendants appearing by pleadings or otherwise, and the cause having been submitted for final decree, and it appearing that the plaintiff elects to accept her dower in gross sum, and it further appearing that the value of the property described in these proceedings was of the value of $2,000 at the time of the alienation, and that the age of the said India Cipher at the time of the death of A. P. Riggs, her husband, was 47 years, and that there is now due her as her dower in said property in gross sum the sum of $393.84, it is therefore adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the said India Cipher do recover of the defendants in this cause the same sum of $393.84 and her costs in her behalf expended." From this decree Rosa Welty and C. W. Welty and F. P. Wingerter, executors of Peter Welty, were allowed an appeal.

The above is a decree on a bill taken for confessed. No motion has been made in the said circuit court, or before the judge thereof in vacation to have it reversed. Under section 6 of chapter 134 of the Code of 1899 the appeal was improvidently granted, and must therefore be dismissed. Watson v. Wigginton, 28 W. Va. 533; Miller v. Aracoma, 30 W. Va. 606, 5 S. E. 148; Ferguson v. Millender, 32 W. Va. 30, 9 S. E. 38.

(56 W. Va. 190)

HAMILTON v. AMMONS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)

ERROR—DISMISSAL—CONTEST AS TO OFFICE.

1. Syllabus in Elbon v. Hamrick, 46 S. E. 1029, approved and reaffirmed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Wirt County; L. N. Tavenner, Judge.

Action by J. Y. Hamilton against Z. F. Ammons. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Dismissed.

C. Powell and B. L. Butcher, for plaintiff in error. C. H. Leeds, for defendant in error.

McWHORTER, J. This is a writ of error and supersedeas from the final judgment of the circuit court of Marion county, rendered on the 26th day of May, 1901, involving the title to the office of mayor of the town of Fairview, a municipal corporation in the county of Marion, for which office J. Y. Hamilton was contestant, and Z. F. Ammons was respondent or contestee. Upon submission of this case, the following stipulation was filed:

"J. Y. Hamilton, Defendant in Error, v. Z. F. Ammons, Plaintiff in Error. Writ of Error and Supersedeas. From the Circuit Court of Marion County. The undersigned, C. H. Leeds, attorney for the defendant in error, and B. L. Butcher and C. Powell, attorneys for the plaintiff in error, in the above-styled action or suit, hereby stipulate and agree that the writ of error in this suit or action involves a contest as to the office of mayor of the town of Fairview, a municipal corporation in the county of Marion, and that during the pendency of this writ of error the term of said office has ended, and that this stipulation may be filed in the Supreme Court of Appeals in lieu of any argument or brief on the part of either of us. Dated this 26th day of May, 1904. C. H. Leeds, Attorney for J. Y. Hamilton, Defendant in Error. B. L. Butcher, O. Powell, Attorneys for Z. F. Ammons, Plaintiff in Error."

This case comes clearly within the purview of Elbon v. Hamrick (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 1029, and cases and authorities there cited. Therefore the writ of error will be dismissed, without costs.

(56 W. Va. 185)

CROSS v. CROSS et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)

CONTINUANCE — WAIVER — DECREE — SETTING ASIDE — PARTITION — REPORT OF COMMISSIONERS.

1. When a party in a suit in equity submits the cause for hearing without asking a continuance, it is a waiver of his rights thereto.

2. Where a cause has been submitted for hearing by the parties, and a final decree entered on such submission, it is not error to refuse the motion of the defeated party to set aside such decree and grant him a continuance merely for the purpose of enabling him to take further testimony in the cause.

3. Where a report of partition made by commissioners is proper on its face, every reasonable presumption is in favor of its fairness.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ritchie County; M. H. Willis, Judge.

Bill by A. M. Cross against W. W. Cross and J. E. Cross. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Davis & Son, for appellant. R. S. Blair and H. B. Woods, for appellees.

McWHORTER, J. A. M. Cross, J. E. Cross, and W. W. Cross, children and only heirs at law of Nathan Cross, deceased, inherited from their father a tract of 61 acres of land in Ritchie county. A. M. Cross removed to Kansas, and while a resident of that state filed his bill in the circuit court of Ritchie county at the September rules, 1902, against W. W. Cross and J. E. Cross, praying for a partition of said tract of land, filing as an exhibit with his bill a deed dated the 18th of May, 1873, from Rose R. Harris and her mother, Ann B. Harris, to the ancestor, Nathan Cross. On the 23d of October a decree was entered in the cause appointing commissioners to make partition of said land. On the 30th of October, 1902, the commissioners made their report of partition, showing that they had assigned to the plaintiff lot No. 3, containing 12 acres and 112 poles, and lot No. 2, containing the same quantity of land, to J. E. Cross, and lot No. 1, containing 35 acres and 96 poles, to the defendant W. W. Cross; describing each lot particularly by metes and bounds, together with a map showing the same. On the next day after the filing of said report a decree was entered confirming the same, and Thos. E. Davis was appointed a special commissioner to make partition deeds in accordance with said report of partition and the decree. At the December rules, 1902, the same plaintiff, A. M. Cross, filed his bill in equity in the same court against W. W. Cross and J. E. Cross, alleging the fact of his nonresidence here and being a resident of the state of Kansas, and that he had instituted and prosecuted the suit in which the land was partitioned, making the bill, decree, report of commissioners, and other proceedings in said cause part of his bill, and alleging that when he saw a copy of the plat filed with the commissioners' report "he was completely astounded and surprised that he should be only allowed a fraction of one-fifth of the tract of land, when he should have had at least one-third"; that lot No. 1 assigned to W. W. Cross was greater in value than the other two lots or tracts, combined, assigned to plaintiff and J. E. Cross; that the partition and decree thereon were manifestly unjust, unfair, contrary to equity and good conscience in the division, and tantamount to fraud, which was a fraud upon the rights of the plaintiff, and was surprise and mistake, and such a one that a court of equity might and would set aside, annul, and hold for naught; that S. S. Cowell, one of the commissioners who signed the report, was not present all the time said division was made, and, if present at all, was but for a few minutes, and that he signed said report simply because Cain and Douglas, the other commissioners, had signed it; that Cain acted more in the capacity of a surveyor than a commissioner; that no one was present other than the two commissioners during the whole time, except W. W. Cross; and that by reason of the conduct of said commissioners, and the making and filing of said report, he was taken by surprise, and his counsel was misled; and the court was asked to enter the decree confirming said report, which it would not have done if the facts and circumstances, as well as the fraud complained of, had been brought to its attention; and praying that the final decree entered on the 31st of October, 1902, as well as the report of partition be set aside, and the cause reinstated upon the docket, in order that said commissioners, or others appointed in their stead, might make fair partition of the land. The defendant W. W. Cross filed his demurrer and separate answer, denying the material allegations of the bill. Depositions were taken by plaintiff and by the defendant, and the cause was submitted for hearing on the 17th day of February, 1903, and on the 3d day of March, 1903, the cause was heard upon the demurrer to the bill, upon the answer of W. W. Cross, and general replication, and upon the depositions taken and filed in the cause. The demurrer was overruled, and upon the hearing on the merits the court was of opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief prayed for in his bill, and the same was dismissed, and the prayer denied, and judgment for costs awarded to defendant W. W. Cross. On the same day the plaintiff, A. M. Cross, by his counsel, appeared in open court, and moved that the decree theretofore entered, dismissing his bill, be set aside, and that the cause be continued, that he might take additional evidence in the case, and in support of his motion filed the affidavit of the plaintiff and the affidavit of H. Marsh; and in resistance of said motion the defendant W. W. Cross filed his affidavit and the affidavits of R. S. Blair, Jr., J. F. Russel, A. M. Lowther, and E. E. Ross; and the plaintiff tendered additional affidavits, including the affidavit of one of his attorneys, Thos. E. Davis, and also his own counter affidavit. On consideration of said motion the same was overruled, and the court refused to set aside the decree. The evidence taken in the case is very conflicting, and does not decidedly preponderate either in support of or against the commissioners' report. Several of the witnesses on the one side say that the partition is unfair and unjust, and that lot No. 1 is equal in value to both lots No. 2 and 3, while, on the other hand, quite as many witnesses testify that the partition is just and fair, while some witnesses say that the lot No. 3 is the most valuable lot in the partition. The weight of the evidence is to the effect that the quality of the land of lot No. 3 is decidedly the best part of the land, while it has more valuable timber than both the other lots. A point is attempted to be made by the plaintiff in the fact that he offered the defendant W. W. Cross $100 to exchange lot No. 3 for lot No. 1, which the defendant declined to do; but he gave a very good reason for his action in so declining. He is the owner of lot No. 2, which was assigned to J. E. Cross, and lot No. 1 adjoins other lands belonging to defendant, and by exchanging No. 1 for No. 3 would sever his lands by having it cut in two by lot No. 1. This being the fact, it is hardly a fair argument in favor of the higher estimate being put upon lot No. 1 by the defendant W. W. Cross, because, owing to the situation of his lands, No. 1 might be of much more value to him than No. 3, although in fact No. 3 might be much more valuable than No. 1 as an independent proposition.

¶ 2. See Partition, vol. 22, Cent. Dig. § 294.

It is claimed by appellant that the court erred in refusing to set aside the decree entered on the 3d day of March, 1903, and granting a continuance to the plaintiff for the purpose of taking further depositions. In his affidavit contesting the motion for a continuance, R. S. Blair, one of the attorneys for the defendant, states that on the 3d day of February, 1903, the plaintiff, A.

M. Cross, was present and gave his testimony, and counsel for plaintiff, T. E. Davis, at that time gave notice to the defendants, and to affiant, as his counsel, in the presence of the plaintiff, that he would insist upon a submission of said cause on the first day of the February term, 1903, which commenced on the 17th day of February; that they had all the testimony they wanted; and that plaintiff could get ready or not, as he chose. He further stated in said affidavit: "That on the day the depositions on behalf of the plaintiff were closed, which was on the 16th day of February, 1903, the counsel for defendant W. W. Cross requested the counsel for the plaintiff to consent to an adjournment of the said depositions to a day during the present term of court, in order that he (the defendant) could have an opportunity to examine other witnesses he had summoned, but that counsel stated he would not agree to any such thing; that his client was anxious to dispose of the case, was ready to dispose of it; and that he would insist upon submission of the said case on the first day of the term of this court." This affidavit was made on the 23d day of February, 1903. On said motion to set aside the decree and continue the cause the plaintiff filed several affidavits, among which was an affidavit of his counsel, Thos. E. Davis, sworn to on the 27th day of February, 1903, four days after the said affidavit of Blair, in which affidavit he makes no denial of the statement above quoted from Blair's affidavit, showing that plaintiff and his counsel refused defendant further time to take depositions and insisted on a submission of the cause at that time. "Where a party appears and goes to trial without asking a continuance, it is a waiver of his rights thereto." 9 Cyc. 156, and authorities there cited. In Amos v. Stockert, 47 W. Va. 109, 34 S. E. 821 (Syl., point 5): "The question of continuance is one addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and, unless it is plainly apparent that such discretion has been abused, this court will not interfere therewith." See, also, Bank v. Hamilton, 43 W. Va. 75, 27 S. E. 296; Marmet Company v. Archibald, 87 W. Va. 778, 17 S. E. 299; Buster v. Holland, 27 W. Va. 511; Logle v. Black, 24 W. Va. 21; Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 253. It would certainly be very unusual practice, and very irregular, after the submission and decision of the cause, the submission and hearing of the same having been pressed and insisted upon by the party defeated in the decision, especially where no grounds are set up except the mere fact that he wanted to take further depositions when the defendant closed his depositions, only because he had no time to take further depositions which he desired to take, and which plaintiff refused to grant the further time and announced himself ready for the hearing. If, under such circumstances, the decree could be set aside for the purpose of allowing the plaintiff to go into the country to seek further testimony to make his case, there would be no end to litigation.

The appellant in this cause occupies rather an anomalous position. He is seeking at the hands of the court to relieve himself against what he claims to be a mistake tantamount to fraud. He brought his suit for partition; had commissioners appointed to make the partition, who were duly sworn, and acted in pursuance of the decree appointing them, neither of the other parties interested in the partition appeared in the cause. The plaintiff sought and procured a decree confirming the report of partition, and had a commissioner appointed to execute deeds of partition. He then comes to the conclusion that a mistake has been made, and files his bill asking the court to correct his mistake, claiming that "equity relieves against a material mistake of facts as well as against fraud in a deed or contract in writing"; citing Allen v. Yeater, 17 W. Va. 128; Schuttler v. Brandfass, 41 W. Va. 201, 23 S. E. 808. The only fraud attempted to be proved is the fact that Commissioner Cowell was not present with the commissioners all the time they were together carrying out the decree of partition. This fact, as relied upon, is proved by the testimony of Commissioner Cowell himself. He merely states that he was sworn as commissioner, and was present but a short time, and looked over the work that had been done by the other commissioners, but did not know much about it, and stated that he was depending upon the other commissioners to make the partition; that his wife was sick with typhoid fever, and had no nurse, and he had to be with her. His name was signed to the report by his son, in his presence, and at his direction. There is no attempt to show that the commissioners, or any of them, attempted any unfairness between the parties, or were guilty of any improper conduct. It seems to be well settled, as held in Graham v. Bank, 45 W. Va. 701, 32 S. E. 245 (Syl., point 5): "Jurors will not be heard to impeach their verdict except in a few instances. They are heard more readily to sustain their verdict;" and this rule would apply as well to arbitrators or commissioners. 3 Cyc. 808: "An arbitrator is not a competent witness to prove his own fraud or misconduct, or the misconduct of a party involving also the misconduct of the arbitrator," and the authorities there cited; and on the same page: "Where objection is taken to an award proper on its face, every reasonable presumption will be indulged in its favor." Admitting the testimony of Cowell to be all true, it is not sufficient to impeach the report of the commissioners.

The plaintiff and appellant having failed to support the allegations of his bill, the decree of the circuit court will be affirmed.

(56 W. Va. 192)

FLAHERTY v. STEPHENSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)

WILLS—LIFE TENANCY—PAYMENT OF DEBTS—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—LIABILITY OF GRANTEE.

1. A provision in a will creating a life tenancy in the following language, to wit: "I give and bequeath to my son, James for life after the death of his mother, all that part of Oakland that lies North of the Northwestern road containing one hundred and eleven acres, more or less, reversion of the same in fee to his children, but the express condition of this bequest is upon the penalty of forfeiture, that the said land is not at any time to be subject to any liens or incumbrances of any kind by the reversioners. I trust that the devisees of this property will not permit the land with the residence to go out of the family"—does not relieve such life tenancy from the payment of the life tenant's debts.

2. A deed conveying property in consideration of the support of the grantor and his family is voidable at the instance of existing creditors.

3. The grantee in such voidable deed is not personally liable for the grantor's existing debts, nor for the rents, issues, and profits of the property until the same have been sequestered.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wood County; L. N. Tavenner, Judge.

Bill by W. P. Flaherty against J. H. Stephenson and E. G. Stephenson. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant E. G. Stephenson appeals. Affirmed.

J. S. Wade, T. O. Bullock, and J. S. Johnson, for appellant. Smith D. Turner, for appellee.

DENT, J. E. G. Stephenson appeals from a decree of the circuit court of Wood county subjecting the life estate of his father, J. M. Stephenson, in a certain tract of 111 acres, to the payment of the debts of M. Campbell, plaintiff, now deceased; such life estate having been conveyed to appellant by his father after the contraction of such indebtedness for the nominal consideration of $5 and the future support of himself and family. By this appeal, three propositions are presented:

1. Does the provision of the will creating the life estate operate to prevent the same from being subject to the payment of the life tenant's debts? It is in these words: "I give and bequeath to my son, James for life after the death of his mother, all that part of Oakland that lies North of the Northwestern road containing one hundred and eleven acres, more or less, reversion of the same in fee to his children, but the express condition of this bequest is upon the penalty of forfeiture, that the said land is not at any time to be subject to any liens or incumbrances of any kind by the reversioners. I trust that the devisees of this property will not permit the land with the residence to go out of the family." The object of this provision was undoubtedly to take away from the devisees the power of incumbering the fee of the land by liens of any kind, but it is not broad enough to prevent the life tenant's interest therein from being subject to the payment of his debts against his will. Nor is the life tenant thereby forbidden to sell or dispose of his interest in any manner he may see fit. The use of the words "reversion" and "reversioners" plainly refers to the remainder in fee, and not to the life tenancy. The life tenant's control and disposal is in no wise limited. Hence it is liable to the payment of his debts. McClure v. Cook, 39 W. Va. 579, 20 S. E. 612; Guernsey v. Lazear, 51 W. Va. 328, 41 S. E. 405; Hughes v. Hamilton, 19 W. Va. 389; Hutchinson v. Maxwell (Va.) 40 S. E. 655, 57 L. R. A. 384; 2 American & English Dec. Eq. 633.

¶ 2. See Fraudulent Conveyances, vol. 24, Cent. Dig. §§ 206, 354.

2. Is the deed from J. M. Stephenson to E. G. Stephenson, his son, void as to the existing debts of the grantor? This question is answered in the affirmative by the case of Hanna v. Bank (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 920. The consideration mentioned in the deed is as follows: "For and in consideration of five dollars paid by the party of the second part to the party of the first part the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged and for the further consideration that the party of the second part shall support the party of the first part and his family furnishing to them proper clothing and provisions during the natural life of the party of the first part." This, while it is a valuable consideration as between the parties, is a conveyance of the property for the use and benefit of the grantor himself, and, as to existing creditors, renders the deed void. The law permits no debtor to secure his estate to himself or family at the expense of his existing creditors. It treats all such conveyances as void at the instance of such creditors, as being without proper legal consideration in so far as their debts are concerned.

3. Should there be any personal decree against the grantee in such deed, as a participator in the fraud of the grantor? While the conveyance is void as to existing debts, it is good between the parties, and until it is avoided it is valid, and the grantee is entitled to the benefit thereof, as fully as the grantor would have been, had the deed not been made. Hence the grantee is entitled to the rents and profits of the life estate until they are sequestered by a court of chancery, and they are not liable in his hands to the creditors of the grantor, and no personal decree can be had against him by reason thereof, until such sequestration takes place. The grantee is not guilty of fraud in receiving the same, but they are legally his property until the creditors have subjected the life estate to the payment of the life tenant's debts. It would be therefore improper to render a personal decree against the grantee for any such rents and profits prior to their sequestration.

There is no error in the decree of the circuit court, and it is affirmed.

(56 W. Va. 174)

HILL, Sheriff, v. CRONIN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)EQUITY—APPEAL—DECREE—APPEALABLE ORDER.

1. A decree in a chancery cause, such as will support an appeal, is not necessarily the last decree rendered, by which all proceedings in the cause are terminated, and nothing is left open for the future judgment or action of the court; but it is a decree which determines the substantial merits of the controversy—all the requisites of the case—though there may remain a reference to be had, or the adjustment of some incidental or dependent matter.

2. Point 1 in syllabus of Wood v. Harmison, 23 S. E. 560, 41 W. Va. 376, approved and applied.

3. An order of reference founded on the expressed opinion of the judge, not followed by the sentence of the law thereon, is not appealable.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ritchie County; M. H. Willis, Judge.

Bill by B. F. Hill, sheriff, against J. B. Cronin and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Dismissed.

Duty & Fidler, for appellants. H. Adams, H. B. Woods, and M. L. Barron, for appellee.

MILLER, J. The first question which confronts us is one of jurisdiction. Have we the right to hear and determine the alleged errors of the circuit court appearing in the record? Is the decree complained of an appealable decree? Code 1899, c. 135, § 1, gives the right to an appeal for error in a case where the matter in controversy, exclusive of costs, is of greater value or amount than $100, wherein there is a final decree or order; or, in any case in chancery, wherein there is a decree or order adjudicating the principles of the cause. The courts have given to this language of the statute a certain and definite legal meaning, and many times have applied the rules thus established to particular cases. It is suggested that the decree complained of is neither a final decree, nor a decree adjudicating the principles of the cause.

B. F. Hill, sheriff of Ritchie county, and, as such, administrator of Andrew Cronin, deceased, filed his bill in equity in the circuit court of that county against J. B. Cronin, A. W. Cronin, Mathias Cronin, and John Cronin, defendants, in which he alleges that said Andrew Cronin died intestate, leaving surviving him Rebecca Cronin, his widow, and the defendants and other children, his only heirs at law; that said Andrew Cronin was a pensioner of the United States government; that with the proceeds of back pay and pension received by him he bought, for the consideration of \$300, a tract of 50 acres of land, which was conveyed to him by Jamison and wife by their deed bearing date on the 19th day of April, 1886; that on the 29th day of March, 1893, said Andrew Cronin and wife, for the recited consideration of \$25, and a "life lease reserved in the premises," conveyed said land to his son said A. W. Cronin; that on the 29th day of November, 1892, said Andrew Cronin, for the consideration of \$300, bought a tract of 54 acres of land of one Cain and wife, which was, by Cronin's direction, conveyed by them to his son J. B. Cronin; that on the 1st day of October, 1894, said Andrew Cronin, for the consideration of \$300, bought of said Cain, and took from him a conveyance for, another tract of 54 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres, which said Andrew Cronin and wife in 1895 conveyed to J. B. Cronin; and that in 1902 the said A. W. Cronin exchanged his said 50 acres with said J. B. Cronin for said two tracts of 54 and 54 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres, respectively. Plaintiff, on information and belief, charged that the said A. W. Cronin and J. B. Cronin, in consideration of the conveyances to them as above stated, agreed to and with the said Andrew Cronin to keep, support, and maintain him and his said wife, Rebecca, in a comfortable and proper manner during the remainder of their natural lives. It is further alleged in the bill that in the year 1897, after the said conveyances had been made as aforesaid, Andrew Cronin was stricken with paralysis, whereby he was rendered mentally incapable of transacting his ordinary business affairs during the remainder of his life; that, at the time he was so stricken and became mentally incapable of transacting any business, he had and possessed \$1,000 of pension money, and also horses, cattle, sheep, farming implements, and household and kitchen furniture, amounting in value to \$800; that afterwards his pension was increased by the government to \$72 per month, which he was entitled to receive up to the time of his death, and which at the time of his death, in June, 1902, amounted to \$3,700. It is then charged by plaintiff that said A. W. Cronin and J. B. Cronin disregarded their said contract with their father to keep, support, and maintain him and their mother in a comfortable and proper manner, and failed to do so; that said A. W. Cronin and J. B. Cronin took advantage of the mental incapacity of their father, and illegally assumed to act, and did illegally act, as his committee, and as such illegal committee, or committee de son tort, received and took into their possession the whole of said pension money and other personal property belonging to their father, which they and each of them have since that time wholly failed, neglected, and refused to pay over or account for to plaintiff, as administrator as aforesaid. The plaintiff further charges that, out of the said money and other personal property so obtained by said A. W. Cronin and J. B. Cronin, the said J. B. Cronin has built a dwelling house upon his said land of the value of \$1,500; that with the said money said A. W. Cronin has erected a dwelling house on his said land of the value of \$1,000;

that said A. W. Cronin and J. B. Cronin turned over to defendant Mathias Cronin a portion of said money so received by them, with which said Mathias Cronin has built a dwelling house of the value of $1,000 on lands belonging to him; and that some of said money may have been turned over to said John Cronin. The bill further alleges that said A. W. Cronin lived with said Andrew Cronin up to the time of his death; that said J. B. Cronin also lived with his father almost to the time of his death; that said Andrew Cronin did not dispose of, and could not legally dispose of, said pension money and other personal property by reason of his mental incapacity so to do, and that he was the legal owner thereof at the time of his death; that the said A. W. Cronin and J. B. Cronin illegally, wrongfully, and fraudulently converted the whole of said money and other personal property to their own use; that said A. W. Cronin and J. B. Cronin in their own wrong, assuming to act as a committee for said Andrew Cronin, took charge of said money and other property of said Andrew Cronin; and that there exists, in favor of plaintiff and the estate of Andrew Cronin, deceased, the right to charge said lands with the amount of money so expended in the erection of buildings, and the making of other improvements thereon, to the extent of the money belonging to said Andrew Cronin, used thereon, as aforesaid, and to have the amount of said money so used declared and decreed a lien on said property. The bill then prays that, "if necessary, this cause be referred to a master commissioner in chancery of this court to ascertain and report what money and other personal property belonging to the said Andrew Cronin or his estate have been received by the defendants and each of them, and how they have disposed of the same; that the plaintiff may have a personal decree against the defendants for the amount so received by them and found to be due the estate of the said decedent; that the same may be decreed to be a charge and lien upon the real estate of the defendants J. B. Cronin, A. W. Cronin, and Mathias Cronin to the extent that the funds belonging to the said decedent or his estate have been used in the erection of dwelling houses and other buildings and making improvements on said real estate, and that the said real estate, or so much thereof as is necessary, may be sold to satisfy the same; and that plaintiff may have all such other and further relief, both general and special, as the nature of the case may require and the court may see fit to grant."

To the bill the defendants J. B. Cronin, A. W. Cronin, Mathias Cronin, and John Cronin filed their general demurrer, which was overruled. Whereupon the defendants answered, admitting the allegations of the bill as to said conveyances, but denying that their father was ever mentally incapable of transacting business. They aver that all of the money received by said Andrew Cronin, as a pensioner or otherwise, was in fact received by him personally, and was expended, in the manner directed by himself; and that if respondents, or any of them, received any part of said money, they received it direct from their father, Andrew Cronin, with instructions as to what was to be done with the same, and that it was a gift to them to be used as their own. The defendants A. W. and J. B. Cronin deny that they acted as committee de son tort of their father. Respondents aver that said conveyances of real estate and gifts of personal property were made in consideration of the work of defendants for their father and mother and for their maintenance and support, and with the understanding and agreement between the said Andrew Cronin and respondents that whatever personal property should remain at the death of said Andrew Cronin should become and be the property of respondents.

Many depositions were taken and filed in the cause, on behalf of both plaintiff and defendants.

Upon the pleadings and proofs the court made and entered the following decree, which is the one appealed from: "On consideration whereof, the court is of opinion that during the remainder of the life, from and after the — day of November, 1897, the date at which, as shown by the proceedings and testimony in this cause, Andrew Cronin was stricken with apoplexy or paralysis, up until the time of his death he, the said Andrew Cronin, was mentally incapable of transacting business or disposing of his property and effects; and it is therefore adjudged, ordered, and decreed that from and after the said — day of November, 1897, the date of which the said Andrew Cronin was stricken with apoplexy as aforesaid, until the time of his death, the said Andrew Cronin was mentally incapable of transacting business, or of making any valid or legal disposition of his property and estate. And the court is further of opinion that the defendants J. B. Cronin and A. W. Cronin should be compelled to account to the plaintiffs and to the estate of Andrew Cronin, deceased, for the property and estate owned by and belonging to the said Andrew Cronin at the time he was so stricken with apoplexy as aforesaid, and for all moneys and other property received by the said Andrew Cronin, or by them or either of them, belonging to the said Andrew Cronin after the date at which the said Andrew Cronin was stricken with apoplexy as aforesaid; against which, however, they are entitled, by way of offsets, to credit for keeping, supporting, and maintaining the said Andrew Cronin, and any other just claim, if any, which they may have against the estate of the said Andrew Cronin; and that this cause should be referred to a commissioner in chancery of this court. It is therefore further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that this cause be and it is referred to H. Marsh, one of the master commissioners of this court, who is directed to ascertain and report the following: First, what money and other effects, real and personal, were owned by Andrew Cronin at the time he was stricken with apoplexy on the — day of November, 1897, and the value thereof. Second, what money and other property and effects were received by the said Andrew Cronin, or by the said J. B. Cronin and A. W. Cronin, or either of them, belonging to the said Andrew Cronin, from and after the date at which the said Andrew Cronin was stricken with apoplexy as aforesaid, the nature and value thereof, and how the said J. B. Cronin and A. W. Cronin have disposed of the same. Third, any just and legal offsets against the items above directed to be ascertained and reported which the said J. B. Cronin and A. W. Cronin, or either of them, may have, and for which they may be entitled to credit, either for support and maintenance of the said Andrew Cronin or otherwise. Fourth, any other matter deemed pertinent by the commissioner, or which may be required by any party in interest."

In drawing the distinction between final and interlocutory adjudications, the greatest difficulty has been experienced in cases of decrees in equity. The confusion has been occasioned principally from the peculiar nature of these decisions, and the wide range of means which chancery possesses both for informing the mind of the judge and for acting upon the parties concerned. In Walker v. Crawford, 70 Ala. 567, it is held that: "A final decree in a chancery cause, such as will support an appeal, is not necessarily the last decree rendered by which all proceedings in the cause are terminated, and nothing is left open for the future judgment or action of the court; but it is a decree which determines the substantial merits of the controversy—all the equities of the case—though there may remain a reference to be had, or the adjustment of some incidental or dependent matter." Black on Judg. vol. 1, § 41, says: "The difficulty appears to arise in relation to those decrees which, while settling the general equities of the cause, leave something for future action or determination. And the true rule seems to be that, if that which remains to be done or decided will require the action or consideration of the court before the rights involved in the cause can be fully and finally disposed of, the decree is interlocutory; but it is none the less final if, after settling the equities, it leaves a necessity for some further action or direction of the court in execution of the decree as it stands." Freeman on Judgments, vol. 1 (4th Ed.) § 22, says: "That if, after a decree has been entered, no further questions can come before the court except such as are necessary to be determined in carrying the decree into effect, the decree is final; otherwise it is interlocutory." In Sturm v. Fleming, 26 W. Va. 54, this court held that: "When a decree appealed from consists in part of an order of reference for a report upon certain specified matters, and for such other matters as the commissioner may deem pertinent or be required by any party, if such order is justified by the pleadings and proofs as to the matters specified, this court will not, before such report is made and acted upon by the court below, reverse or consider the order because some party under said general clause may require irrelevant or improper matter to be reported to the court." In the case of Desvergers v. Parsons, 60 Fed. 143, 8 C. C. A. 526, it is held that a decree will be considered as final where the issues raised by the pleadings were all submitted for final adjudication, and, as entered, it shows that the court passed upon and adjudicated all the merits of the case, leaving nothing to be further disposed of except to carry it into effect. In Wood v. Harmison, 41 W. Va. 376, 23 S. E. 560, it is held that: "An interlocutory decree that is appealable as one adjudicating the principles of the cause is one which adjudicates, not some, but all the questions raised in the pleadings or otherwise, and so far adjudicates that it determines the principles and rules by which relief is to be administered to the parties, so that it is only necessary to apply such principles and rules to the facts in order to decree the relative rights of the parties in the subject-matter of the suit." Brannon, J., in discussing the clause of the statute allowing an appeal from a decree adjudicating the principles of the cause, on page 380, 41 W. Va., and page 561, 23 S. E., says: "Not every decree that adjudicates principles of the cause is ground for appeal. It might warrant one as falling under some specified character giving a right of appeal, as, for instance, that it dissolved or refused to dissolve an injunction, or required money to be paid, or the possession or title of property to be changed, or real estate to be sold; but if coming under no other head, and seeking shelter under the clause quoted, it must still have a certain character, as adjudicating the principles of the cause—not part of them, but all of them, as it was not intended that a dozen decrees, disposing of the matters in controversy by piecemeal, should each be appealed. In Shirey v. Musgrave, 29 W. Va. 131, 11 S. E. 914, it was held that this statute authorizes an appeal under this clause only when the decree adjudicates all questions raised in the cause by pleading or otherwise, and that, if any one of a number of questions involved is left undetermined, it is not appealable. That case does not settle this case, however. It was not appealable, because it left some questions undisposed of, while in this case the question is whether, though the decree does not pass on all the questions in controversy, does it so far pass upon them as to enable us to say that it adjudicates the principles of the case? This decree ascertains no certain debts, decrees none against the property, sells no property, settles no accounts of administrators, but leaves those matters for the future, upon the return of the commissioner's report. Clearly, that deprives it of the character of a final decree; but does it still sufficiently decide the principles involved in the case to call for an appeal? I think it does, because it holds the conveyance to Mrs. Harmison from her husband void as to creditors with debts established by the record, and holds the land liable in her hands to their payment. The cardinal questions in the suit are whether the deeds are void as to certain debts, and the land liable therefor, and whether Mrs. Harmison is personally liable, and they are adjudicated, and all other matters are but subsidiary or sequential to those matters. It only remains to apply the principles so adjudicated, and the case is ended. The decree lays out the way for further adjudication." See, also, Hogg's Eq. Proc. p. 648, et seq.; Hill v. Als, 27 W. Va. 215. The decree under consideration adjudicates only one question raised by the pleadings. It determines that from and after the ——— day of November, 1897, the date on which said Andrew Cronin was stricken with apoplexy, until the time of his death, he was mentally incapable of transacting business, or of making any valid or legal disposition of his property and estate. The decree then says that "the court is further of opinion that the defendants J. B. Cronin and A. W. Cronin should be compelled to account to the plaintiff and to the estate of Andrew Cronin, deceased," etc.; but this is an expression of opinion only, and is not carried into judgment. It is the finding of the court from the facts upon that part of the case, but is not followed by the sentence or order of the court, the conclusion of the law, which would make it binding and obligatory upon the parties. In Corley v. Corley, 53 W. Va. 142, 145, 44 S. E. 132, 47 S. E. 145, Judge Poffenbarger, speaking of the requisites of a valid judgment, says: "There must be a declaration by the court of the consequences which the law attaches to the facts, in order to determine the subject-matter of the controversy between the parties. Until there be such declaration, there is no judgment." In the case of Armstrong v. Ross (decided by this court at its last term) 48 S. E. 745, it is held that an order of reference, founded on the expressed opinion of the judge, without adjudicating the principles involved, is not appealable. Thereupon the court says: "The expression of the opinion of the court is not such an adjudication, although an order of reference, properly or improperly, is entered in furtherance of such opinion. The matter is still in the breast of the court, and the judge may change his opinion before entering an appealable decree." Hannah v. Bank, 53 W. Va. 82, 84, 44 S. E. 152; 2 Cyc. 614, 616; 2 Encyc. Pl. & Pr. 62, 65.

One of the questions presented to the court is the liability of A. W. Cronin and J. B. Cronin to the plaintiff, and another is the right to charge the money which went into buildings and other improvements on the lands of said defendants as a lien on said property, and to declare a resulting trust therefor in favor of said estate. If the decision of these matters be delayed until the incoming of the commissioner's report, another appeal may follow—a result which the statute was designed to avoid. Besides, if the court should hereafter hold that there is no right in the plaintiff to charge said property with said money so expended thereon, the suit must fail, because plaintiff has a complete and adequate remedy at law. The court had the case before it, with the evidence, on all of the questions involved therein. It was the right of the litigants to have the principles of the cause settled before incurring loss of time and expense before the commissioner. If the case was not properly made out, it was error to direct a reference to a commissioner. In Bank v. Parsons, 42 W. Va. 139, 24 S. E. 554, it is held that: "An order of reference should not be made solely to enable the parties to take depositions. The cause should be so far developed by the pleadings and proofs as to show the propriety of an order of account, and the extent to which it should go."

In the light of the foregoing cases, we are of opinion that the decree complained of is neither a final decree, nor a decree adjudicating the principles of the cause. The appeal is therefore dismissed as improvidently allowed.

(56 W. Va. 205)

CROSTON v. MALE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 15, 1904.)

PARTITION—SALE OF REALTY—WHEN ALLOWED—INTEREST OF PARTIES—INFANTS—DOWER INTEREST—ADJUDICATION OF SHARES.

1. But for the statute authorizing it, a sale of real estate could not be decreed in a suit for partition thereof.

2. This statute is an innovation upon fundamental principles of the common law and of American jurisprudence, and cannot become a license to the courts to take from the citizen, for light or trivial causes, his freehold on payment of compensation, though full and adequate.

3. Before decreeing a sale in such case without the consent of the parties interested, the court must ascertain two things: First, that partition cannot be conveniently made; and, second, that the interests of the parties will be promoted by a sale of the property.

4. Inconvenience of partition, as one of the circumstances authorizing such sale, does not contemplate physical impossibility of division, but the requirement is not satisfied by anything short of a real and substantial obstacle of some kind to a division in kind, such as would make it injurious to the owners. Meagerness of area in some or all of the shares, due to the necessity of dividing a small tract of land among a number of people, and the existence of dower and curtesy estates in the land, do not per se make partition inconvenient, within the meaning of the statute.

5. To warrant compulsory sale in such case, it must appear that the interests of all the owners will be promoted by it.

6. Whether the aggregate value of the several parcels into which the whole premises must be divided will, when distributed among, and held in severalty by, the different parties, be materially less than the value of the same property if owned by one person, is a fair test by which to determine whether the interests of the parties will be promoted by a sale.

7. When a subdivision of one parcenary share is to be made among infants, their shares may be laid off together at the election of their guardians, or, for want of such election, by direction of the court, in the enforcement of equity and justice in the partition, and, without such election or direction, the commissioners appointed to make partition may so lay them off; and, if such shares are subject to a dower interest, it may be made contiguous to such shares, when the part assigned for dower is not divided subject thereto.

8. When an entire share goes to heirs, subject to an estate by the curtesy, it cannot be compulsorily partitioned until after the expiration of the life estate.

9. Commissioners ought not to be appointed, and no sale ought to be decreed, without a prior or contemporaneous adjudication as to the interests of the parties, fixing the shares or other interests to which they are entitled; and it is reversible error to decree a sale without such adjudication if there is any uncertainty as to the interests of the parties.

10. Upon a bill alleging facts sufficient to show a right to have partition and praying general relief, the court may decree a division in kind, although there is no specific prayer for it in the bill.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Taylor County; John H. Holt, Judge.

Bill by Martha J. Croston against Ruth Male and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Warren B. Kittle, for appellants. Ira E. Robinson, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, P. This case presents the question whether it was error for the court, upon the facts shown by the pleadings, and the report of commissioners appointed to make partition of certain lands, to decree a sale thereof, instead of a division in kind; the plaintiff having favored such sale, while, with a single exception, the adult defendants, having only life estates, opposed it. One third of the land, about 240 acres in all, belonged to one set of infants, subject to the dower of their mother, another third to another set of infants, subject to an estate therein by the curtesy belonging to their father, while the residue belonged to the plaintiff, and the whole estate was subject to dower of the widow of the decedent.

Hiram Male, being the owner of said 241 acres of land, unincumbered by any indebtedness, and also of considerable personal property, all in Taylor county, died, leaving surviving him his widow, Ruth Male, a son

¶ 3. See Partition, vol. 33, Cent. Dig. §§ 216, 217, 219, 223.

Boyer Male, a daughter, Amanda Minor, the wife of Charles Minor, and another daughter, Martha J. Croston, the wife of Charles Croston. Subsequently Boyer Male died, leaving his children Rosa Bell, Eugenius, Hiram, and Benjamin, and his wife, Berthena Male, surviving him. Amanda Minor also died, leaving her husband, and her children, Aldine, Sarah, and Ruth, surviving her. Martha J. Croston instituted this suit for partition of the land. The bill alleges that there are three tracts—one of 77 acres, another of 58½ acres, and a third of 106½ acres. These lands are all contiguous, but form an irregular body, the average length of which is more than three times the average breadth, with a narrow place near the center. The bill does not pray a division in kind, but alleges that the land cannot be so divided conveniently, and that the interests of those entitled will be promoted by a sale of the same, and a sale thereof is accordingly asked for; and there is also a prayer for general relief.

An answer for the infant defendants by guardian ad litem was filed in the usual form. Berthena Male answered the bill, denying that the land was not susceptible of partition without injury, alleging that it could be conveniently divided, denying that the interests of the parties would be promoted by a sale thereof, and praying a division in kind. Charles Minor filed an answer of the same kind. Thereupon the court appointed commissioners to go upon the land and make partition thereof, if it could be conveniently divided, and "assign to each heir of their descendant's per stirpes an equal one-third interest in said estate, quantity and quality considered, and return a plat and report of their proceedings," and, if they should find it inconvenient to make partition, report that fact to the court. Their report recommended a sale, and set forth certain facts in support of the recommendation. They considered the land as lying in two tracts—one of 135½ acres, and the other of 106½ acres. Of the former, they said about 80 acres was rough, situated on the bank of a river, almost destitute of good timber, and comparatively worthless for farming or grazing purposes, and that the residue was ordinary land, worth about $20 per acre, with ordinary frame buildings and other outbuildings on it, had but little good timber on it, the timber having been culled by former owners, and had grown up in briars, broom sedge, and other filth; that there was scarcely any fencing on it; and that the standing timber was inaccessible to most of the farm. Concerning the other tract, they said it was situated about two miles from the village of Webster, and about the same distance from the Valley river and a railroad; that it was the home farm, and better land than the other tract, and in better repair, having a good frame dwelling and outbuildings; that it had no timber except a small tract on the northeast corner; that the fencing was out of repair, and the land grown up in briars and filth; and that it was worth about $25 an acre as a whole. They further said there was a tract of bottom land in it, containing about 9 acres, of much greater value than the hill land, and that the two tracts lie on opposite sides of a high river hill, adjoining each other near the top of the hill. Considering these facts and the interests of all the parties, the dower of the widow, the infant children, their number, the dower of the widowed daughter, and curtesy of the son-in-law, the lack of uniformity of value by reason of locality and improvements, the commissioners thought the lands were not susceptible of partition in kind. They therefore assigned to the widow, Ruth Male, dower in the land, 25 acres in the 106-acre tract, including the mansion house, and 29 acres and 3 rods in the other tract, and recommended a sale of the lands subject to the dower thus assigned. To this report the defendants Charles Minor and Berthena Male excepted. Ruth Male, the widow, to whom dower had been assigned, filed an answer waiving her right to dower in the land, and agreeing to take a gross sum in lieu thereof; and thereupon the court overruled the exceptions and decreed a sale of the land, reciting, among other things, that it was "impossible to assign dower to the said Berthena Male in the one-half interest of said real estate." How she happened to be entitled to dower in such portion does not appear.

The general rule governing the determination of the question whether a sale of land shall be made upon a bill for partition is stated in Roberts v. Coleman, 37 W. Va. 143, 16 S. E. 482, as follows: "Joint owners of land are entitled to have partition in kind, each to have his share allotted to him in severalty, unless such right be waived. A sale cannot be decreed in a partition suit unless it appears, by report of commissioner or otherwise by the record, that partition cannot be conveniently made, and also that the interests of those interested in the land or its proceeds will be promoted by a sale." In any case such sale may be made if the parties are all adults and consent thereto. But the court has no right to decree a sale without their consent unless it finds, first, that partition in kind cannot be conveniently made; and, second, that the interests of the parties owning the land will be promoted by a sale. These two requisites are conditions imposed by the statute which alone confers upon a court of equity the power to make a sale at all. They are important and indispensable conditions. The statute is an innovation upon the common law, taking away from the owner the right to keep his freehold, and converting his home into money. That must not be done except in cases of imperious necessity. It is a legislative alteration of a canon of the law which forms part of the substructure of our jurisprudence. Forcible conversion of property into money is avoided wherever possible. To prevent this, the possessory writs such as detinue and replevin, etc., for recovery of the property itself, instead of turning the injured owner away to sue for its value as damages, are given; and, where the property is of such nature that the remedies of the law courts are inadequate to its recovery, equity supplies the defect by the use of its more diverse and flexible processes. Therefore it would be at variance with fundamental and basic principles to say the Legislature intended to authorize a sale, instead of a division, for any light or trivial cause. So sacred is the right of property, that to take it from one man and give it to another for private use is beyond the power of the state itself, even upon payment of full compensation. The jus publicum alone authorizes the conversion of the citizen's property into money without his consent.

An adjudication by the trial court that the conditions are such as to call for a sale on a bill for partition is entitled to great weight, and will not be overthrown by the appellate court unless it can clearly see that the trial court has erred in its conclusion, for it is presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that a solemn recital in a decree of a court of record and of general jurisdiction has not been entered without mature consideration and upon sufficient evidence. But if it appears that by reason of inadvertence or failure, for the time being, owing to haste in disposing of a large docket, to appreciate the spirit, purpose, and controlling influence of these limitations upon the power of sale, land has been decreed to be sold without sufficient cause, it is the duty of the appellate court to reverse the decree. Roberts v. Coleman, cited; Clason v. Clason, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 541.

What are the rules and principles which ought to govern the court in determining whether division in kind is inconvenient, and whether the interests of the owners will be promoted by a sale? Chancellor Walworth, in Clason v. Clason, cited, has given this question fuller discussion than is usual in the opinions of the courts. He says: "The question is not, as supposed by the master, whether it would be for the benefit of the infants to have their shares of the estate converted into money, instead of remaining in land producing a less income. For, if it is for their interest to sell their shares for the purpose of a better investment, it may be done afterwards under the general law relative to the sale of infants' estates, and when they will not run the risk of having their interest in a large property sacrificed for want of funds to compete with their adult tenant in common at the sale. The true question to be decided by the master, under the statute, is whether the whole property, taken together, will be greatly injured or diminished in value if separated into three parts, in the hands of three different persons, according to their several rights or interests in the whole—in other words, whether the aggregate value of the several parts, when held by different individuals in severalty, would be materially less than the whole value of the property if owned by one person. In this case, if the value of the land in different parts of the tract is nearly the same, the complainant would have a farm of about 250 acres for his share, and worth $50,000, and each of the infant defendants would have a little more than 60 acres, and worth about one-fourth of that sum. And if some portions of the land are much more valuable than others, a greater quantity of that which is least valuable might be set off for the shares of the defendants, so as to increase the size of their farms. But if a sale is to take place under a decree in partition, as the guardian ad litem has no funds to enable him to bid upon the property for the infants, this property, which is stated by the master to be worth $75,000, may be sacrificed for half that amount, unless the decree should contain special directions to the master not to sell it below a certain specified amount." It will be observed that in coming to a conclusion he considered the quantity of land, the number of shares into which it was to be divided, the status of the parties with reference to disability and ability to protect their interests at the sale, the extent of their respective interests in the land, and the relative value of the land when divided and the sum which might be realized by a sale of it undivided. Looking at the situation of the land and the owners in this case, it is to be noticed that the quantity is about 240 acres. One-third of this the widow is entitled to hold as her dower, leaving 160 acres, to the immediate possession of which the heirs are entitled. Of this residue, the plaintiff is entitled to one-third, unless since the commencement of the suit some changes have been effected by purchase or otherwise. This would give her immediately more than 50 acres, assuming that the land is of equal value. In another one-third of it—over 50 acres—Charles Minor has a life estate, and his children the remainder in fee. These children are dependent upon him for their support, and 50 acres of land, affording him a home for himself and them, may be much more valuable to them than its proceeds in money. The other third belongs to the children of the deceased son, Boyer Male, subject to the dower therein of their mother, their natural guardian. There is no reason why the shares of these children may not be laid off together. The statute provides that two or more parties may have their shares laid off together when partition can be conveniently made in that way. Code 1899, c. 79, § 2. The court has in its keeping the protection of infant parties, and the power of electing for them, and should exercise it, if it be apparent that their interests require it. Upon partition this one-third can be thrown together, giving the widow her dower, as one tract or parcel adjacent to the parts, to the possession of which her children are entitled, and thus a home for the mother and children may be provided. Nothing in this record indicates that the money which may be realized from a sale of their interests will be more to their advantage than a home so provided. On the contrary, she, on behalf of herself and children, protests against the sale, as does Charles Minor on behalf of himself and his children. Formerly the method of partition seems to have been to divide the land into equal parts, when the shares were equal, and then determine by lot the distribution of them. But now they may be assigned by the commissioners to avoid the risk of an unfortunate allotment. They may distribute them upon principles of equity and justice, and, of course, in this their action is under the control of the court. Cox v. McMullin, 14 Grat. 82.

Nobody insists upon a sale except the plaintiff, who is an adult, having a living husband, and better able to take care of herself than any of the other parties, so far as can be ascertained from this record. If, as indicated by the last decree, Berthena Male has in some way acquired the title of one-half of the land since the commencement of the suit, this circumstance only strengthens her opposition to the sale. What peculiar circumstance makes it to the interest of the plaintiff to have a sale, rather than a division in kind, the court cannot know. She may have a good home elsewhere. If so, she can live upon it, and take her interest in these lands, and then convert them into money at private sale. But a sale cannot be made merely to advance her interests. Before selling, the court must ascertain that the interests of all will be promoted. One test by which this is determined is declared to be "whether the aggregate value of the several parcels into which the whole premises must be divided will, when distributed among the different parties and held in severalty, be materially less than the value of the same property if it be owned by one person." Clason v. Clason, cited. The commissioners do not report that a division in kind will make the aggregate value of the several parcels less than the value of the property as a whole. The court must have inferred it from the facts reported. The report shows that this land is not located in the wilds of the mountain regions, far from human habitation, but, on the contrary, that it is about two miles from the railroad, and about the same distance from a village, and is improved agricultural land. It is perfectly apparent that small parcels of land thus situated bring better prices per acre at judicial sales than large ones. There are more people able to buy small tracts than large ones. A small tract near a railroad and village better answers the purposes of a home, and affords greater aid in supplying the wants of a family, than one situated far from markets, or not within easy access of them. In view of these circumstances, it seems clear that the court has erred in its conclusion with reference to the inconvenience of making partition and promotion of the interests of the parties. Though the bill does not specifically pray for it, partition may be had upon it, as the allegations are sufficient and there is a prayer for general relief. Furbree v. Furbree, 49 W. Va. 191, 38 S. E. 511.

The interlocutory decree appointing commissioners makes no reference to the dower interest of the widow of the decedent, to the estate by the curtesy of the husband of the deceased daughter, nor to the dower interest of the widow of the deceased son, nor does it ascertain and fix the interests of the other parties. Under some circumstances the failure to do these things is error, when carried into the final decree, prejudicing the rights of the parties, and works a reversal of it. Stevens v. McCormick (Va.) 19 S. E. 743; Childers v. Loudin, 51 W. Va. 559, 42 S. E. 637. In the latter case this court said, "It is the duty of the court, before decreeing a sale in a partition suit, to judicially determine the rights and interests of the co-tenants in the land, and failure to do so is ordinarily reversible error." Manifestly it is more important in the case of a sale than in that of a division in kind, for the parties interested ought to know their rights, so as to be able to protect them at the sale, as in the case of creditors interested in property about to be sold. But even where partition is to be made it ought to be done. Freeman on Co-T. & Par. § 518, says the interlocutory decree, determining the interests of the parties, furnishes the basis upon which the commissioners are to proceed. Manifestly much inconvenience and useless cost might result from proceeding without having made an adjudication as to the interests of the parties. Suppose a partition to be made upon a wrong basis, in consequence of which the commissioners would have to go back and make a new division of the land. Dower and curtesy must be set apart, and it is for the court, not the commissioners, to determine who is entitled to these estates, and in what lands, and to what extent. Good practice, at least, requires a settlement of all these questions in advance of the appointment of commissioners.

It is clear that the children of Charles Minor are not entitled to immediate possession of any part of the lands. Under the principles laid down in Merritt v. Hughes, 36 W. Va. 356, 15 S. E. 56, there can be no subdivision of this one-third among them until the expiration of their father's life estate, without his consent. It belongs to them subject to his life estate, however.

For the error aforesaid in directing the sale, the decree complained of will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings according to the principles herein announced, and, further, according to the rules and principles governing courts of equity.

(56 W. Va. 293)

BARRETT v. ARMSTRONG.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1904.)

ASSUMPSIT—MONEY PAID FOR ANOTHER'S USE.

1. Wherever one person requests or allows another to assume such a position that the latter may be compelled by law to discharge the former's legal liabilities, the law imports a request and promise by the former to the latter—a request to make the payment and a promise to repay—and the obligation thus created may be enforced by assumpsit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Taylor County;
John Homer Holt, Judge.

Action by J. M. Barrett against Adolphus Armstrong. Decree for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

John L. Hechmer, for plaintiff in error.
Ira E. Robinson, for defendant in error.

MILLER, J. J. B. Newlon, John W. Barrett, and A. Armstrong, the plaintiff in error, made their certain promissory note for $650, bearing date on the 23d day of June, 1885, payable by them jointly and severally to the First National Bank of Grafton, W. Va., 120 days after its date. The proof shows that Barrett and Armstrong were in fact sureties for Newlon. Barrett died intestate before any part of this debt had been paid. J. M. Barrett, his son, and plaintiff in this action, qualified as his administrator. Afterwards, at the suit of Barrett, administrator, Newlon's property was sold, and, from the proceeds of the sale, applied thereto by the administrator, the note was reduced to $363.72, as of the date of October 20, 1896. On that day J. M. Barrett and A. Armstrong made and delivered to the bank their joint and several promissory note for said $363.72, payable to it 120 days thereafter, in settlement of the balance due on the first-mentioned note. The last note, not being paid at its maturity, was renewed by the makers thereof; the discount on the renewal note being equally paid by Barrett and Armstrong. The renewal was not paid when due. Some time after it became due it was charged to the bank account of Barrett by the payee bank. Barrett then charged it to the estate of his intestate, John W. Barrett, deceased. Armstrong having failed to pay any part of the sum thus settled, an action in assumpsit was brought by Barrett in the circuit court of Taylor county, in his individual name, against Armstrong, to recover one-half of said sum, for which their note had been given to the bank. There was a trial, a verdict of a jury for $392.25 in favor of the plaintiff, a motion by defendant to set the same aside, which was overruled, and a judgment thereon against the defendant, who excepted thereto, and obtained a writ of error to this court.

The court instructed the jury "that if they believed from the evidence that the plaintiff, Barrett, and defendant, Armstrong, jointly and severally agreed to pay to the First National Bank the remaining balance of the original Newlon debt, and that the same was afterwards paid by plaintiff, then plaintiff has the right to recover from defendant one-half of such amount paid by him by reason of such joint and several obligation." This instruction was objected to by Armstrong, who contends that it was and is erroneous and misleading, because, as claimed by him, the transaction, as to him, was, in substance, with J. M. Barrett as administrator of John W. Barrett, and not with him individually; that the plaintiff, by bringing his suit in his individual capacity, and not as administrator, prevented defendant from showing the true relationship which existed between John W. Barrett and Newlon as to the first note for $650; that, if there was any liability on defendant by reason of the original note, he was prevented from having a settlement with the estate of Barrett, deceased, and from having allowed to him any claims or demands which he might have against the estate as an offset to this liability; and that, the transaction being one in fact with the estate, defendant will not be protected by the judgment thereon in favor of plaintiff in his individual capacity. We are of opinion that these contentions by plaintiff in error are not tenable. Had he paid the money to J. M. Barrett before suit, he would have been discharged from liability to John W. Barrett's estate. He did not choose to do so, but requested the substitution of J. M. Barrett in the place of John W. Barrett, deceased, in the liability with himself. Barrett and Armstrong thus became jointly liable to the bank for the balance of the original debt, for all of which Armstrong was up to that time legally liable. If the bank had recovered a joint judgment against Barrett and Armstrong on this note, and the judgment had been paid by Armstrong, he could have maintained his suit for contribution against Barrett individually. The personal representative of John W. Barrett would not have been a necessary party to such suit. The note for $363.72 was a new contract with the bank by Barrett and Armstrong, enforceable against them. So far as appears on the face thereof, they are equally liable thereon. There is evidence tending to prove that Armstrong requested Barrett to pay the note in question, and that, after the settlement thereof by Barrett as aforesaid, Armstrong promised to repay him his proper part thereof. Armstrong swears that he is not indebted in any sum to Barrett, and that he made no con tract with Barrett whereby he agreed to pay him any money. It seems to be conceded, however, that the Newlon estate was exhausted and insolvent before the $363.72 note was made and delivered to the bank by Barrett and Armstrong for the purpose aforesaid. "Wherever one person requests or allows another to assume such a position that the latter may be compelled by law to discharge the former's legal liabilities, the law imports a request and promise by the former to the latter—a request to make the payment and a promise to repay—and the obligation thus created may be enforced by assumpsit." Clark on Con. 760; Hammon on Con. 772. Armstrong was bound jointly and severally with Newlon and John W. Barrett to the bank for the $650 debt evidenced by the first note. Barrett died, and the liability thereon devolved upon his survivors, Newlon and Armstrong. Newlon became insolvent before the debt was fully discharged. Afterwards Armstrong not only allowed, but requested, the plaintiff to sign with him the new note and its renewal, and thus assume such a position that he could by law be compelled to discharge the whole of the remaining liability of Armstrong.

We find no error in the judgment, and therefore affirm it.

(56 W. Va. 296)

WAMSLEY et al. v. MILL CREEK COAL & LUMBER CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1904.)

PARTITION—REPORT OF COMMISSIONERS—NOTICE.

1. Although the statute does not in terms require notice to be given by commissioners in partition to the parties, yet the necessity of such notice must be implied, and an exception to the report for failure to give such notice will be sustained and the report set aside.

2. It is not required that such commissioners should report the money value of the lands partitioned, or of any share or lot thereof assigned by them.

3. In partitioning timber and coal lands, commissioners are not required to report the extent of coal deposits, and the acreage, quantity, and quality of timber, considered by them in arriving at their conclusion as to the relative value of the several parcels and shares assigned by them to the parties entitled thereto.

Miller and Brannon, JJ., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Action by Harriet S. Wamsley and others against the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Melville Peck and W. B. Maxwell, for appellants. O. W. Dalley and Talbott & Hoover, for appellees.

McWHORTER, J. Hamilton Stalnaker departed this life, intestate, in 1892, leaving surviving him 12 children and the children of one deceased. He died seised of several tracts of land, among which were two tracts of wild lands, containing in the aggregate 2,387 acres. In 1894 Martha D. Yokum, one of the heirs at law of said Stalnaker, filed her bill in the circuit court of Randolph county, alleging that the said lands could not be partitioned in kind, and praying that the same might be sold under a decree of the court, and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto. Benjamin C. Stalnaker and nine other of the heirs of the said decedent filed their answer to Mrs. Yokum's bill, denying that the land was not susceptible of partition in kind, and praying that said interest of the plaintiff, Mrs. Yokum, in the wild lands might be run off to her, and that the remainder might remain undivided. On the 24th of October, 1899, "it appearing to the court from the deed of conveyance of Martha D. Yokum, the plaintiff, and her husband, to Shelton L. Reger, trustee, that he has become the owner of her undivided interest in the land situate in this county, on Mill creek, and described in the bill of the plaintiff, it is therefore ordered, on motion of the said Reger, trustee, that this suit proceed to final decree in his name, and at his proper costs." And it being shown that said Reger, trustee, had acquired nine other interests in said lands, a decree of partition was made, appointing commissioners to go upon the lands in the bill and proceedings mentioned, and partition the same; assigning to said Reger, trustee, for the purposes of his trust, ten-thirteenths thereof, and to the defendants, Boston Stalnaker, Harriet S. Wamsley, and Caroline H. Dilley, each one-thirteenth interest thereof, taking into consideration quantity, quality, and value of lands so assigned; providing that, if it could be conveniently done, they should assign the said Reger, trustee, his interest in one body, and to the other owners their interest separately, unless they should elect otherwise. On the 6th day of May, 1902, a decree was entered filing a petition by the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company, showing that it had become the owner of eleven undivided thirteenths of the said 2,387 acres, and praying that the partition suit might proceed in its name, and that commissioners be appointed to partition the said land between it and Boston Stalnaker and Harriet S. Wamsley in accordance with their respective interests, laying off to petitioner its eleven-thirteenths in one body adjoining other lands belonging to it, and the other two-thirteenths be laid off separately to the said Boston Stalnaker and Harriet S. Wamsley, unless they should elect to have their interests laid off together in one body. The said decree of May 6, 1902, recited the fact that the said Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company had shown itself entitled to eleven undivided thirteenths, and the said Stalnaker and Wamsley were each entitled to one undivided thirteenth, of the said lands, and that the conditions as to the ownership of the said lands had been changed since the entry of the decree of, October, 1899, and that no action had been taken under said decree. All proceedings under said decree were ordered stayed, and another decree of partition was entered in lieu thereof, directing James Coberly, as surveyor, and F. M. White and K. B. Crawford, commissioners appointed for that purpose, to go upon the said two tracts of land situate upon Mill creek and its branches, and, treating them as one tract, partition the same between the parties entitled thereto; assigning to the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company eleven-thirteenths, and to Stalnaker and Wamsley each one-thirteenth, taking into consideration quality and value of the land so assigned. On the 13th of July, 1903, the defendant Harriet S. Wamsley, one of the heirs of Hamilton Stalnaker, and C. S. Wamsley, her husband, filed in the circuit court of Randolph county their bill of complaint against the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company, the Tygart's River Lumber Company, W. S. Tolbard, and Boston Stalnaker, alleging that the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company had acquired the fee-simple title to the undivided eleven-thirteenths of the said 2,387 acres of land by purchasing the interests of all the heirs except those of the plaintiff and her brother Boston Stalnaker; that said 2,387 acres was very valuable on account of the timber; that a large part of it was underlaid with one or more very valuable veins of coal, and the timber upon and the coal under said lands constituted almost its entire value; that the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company had sold the timber on its undivided eleven-thirteenths to the defendant Tygart's River Lumber Company at the price of $30 per acre for the timber alone; that the Tygart's River Lumber Company and W. S. Tolbard, acting under the rights acquired from the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company, had entered upon the said 2,387 acres of land, and had built a railroad thereon, which had greatly damaged the premises, and established a large lumber camp, which they were occupying with a large force of employes and laborers, etc., and had made log roads, built log ways thereon, and had removed and cut thousands of feet of very valuable timber, and were still continuing to cut and remove timber, without the permission or consent of the plaintiff or Boston Stalnaker; that, in the case of the said Yokum against Stalnaker and others for partition, the commissioners appointed had acted, laying off and assigning to the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company, for its eleven-thirteenths therein, 1,637 acres, but that an exception to said report by the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company was sustained by the court, and commissioners were again directed to go upon the land and partition the same; that partition on the last order had not yet been made; that plaintiffs were not familiar with the boundaries of the said 2,387 acres of land, neither were they informed as to what part was underlaid with coal, nor how many merchantable veins of coal there were on said land; and that all of said facts should be definitely ascertained before a partition of said land should be made; and prayed that the defendants Tygart's River Lumber Company and W. S. Tolbard be enjoined from cutting any timber on said 2,387 acres until such time as the rights of the parties should be ascertained and fixed, and their interests assigned to them, and that they be restrained and enjoined from operating any part of said railroad which was upon the lands assigned to plaintiff and defendant Stalnaker; that an accounting be had of timber cut upon the said 2,387 acres of land, and the same be ascertained and the value fixed, and a decree in favor of plaintiff Harriet S. Wamsley against said Tygart's River Lumber Company be rendered for the full, fair one-thirteenth part of the value of the timber so cut, and the damage to the said tract of land by reason of building of said railroad thereon and the erection of said lumber camp be ascertained, and a decree rendered for her one-thirteenth part of such damages; that the true boundaries of the said 2,387 acres of land underlaid with coal, and the character, amount, and quality of the said coal, be ascertained, and the land partitioned with reference thereto; and praying that the cause of Yokum against Stalnaker and others, together with all the papers and proceedings thereon, be taken and read as part of her bill, and for general relief. The Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company filed its answer to said bill, admitting that it had sold the timber on its eleven-thirteenths of the said tract of land to the Tygart's River Lumber Company, as well as the timber on over 6,000 acres adjoining said tract, and that, in its contract of sale of timber to said Tygart's River Lumber Company, it undertook to authorize the said company to put down on said tract a tram or other railroad over which to haul the timber which it should cut upon said tract, as well as the timber it should cut upon the other lands adjoining the same, as the respondent claimed it had a right to do; that respondent was not advised specifically as to what timber the said Tygart's River Lumber Company had cut upon the said 2,387 acres, but was informed that it had cut but a very small quantity of said timber, and that what cutting it had done upon said land had in no way interfered with the partition thereof by the owners according to their respective rights; that under the decree in the circuit court entered at its May term, 1903, commissioners were then proceeding to partition said land among said owners, which partition respondent had no doubt would be reported in a very few days; that whatever timber had been cut upon said land by the Tygart's River Lumber Company had been cut upon that portion which would, according to the rules governing courts of equity, be assigned or allotted to respondent, as it adjoins other large boundaries of land belonging to respondent. Respondent denied that the logging railroad would be of any damage to said property, and claimed that, if plaintiff had any right to or against the Tygart's River Lumber Company for damages or for relief of any kind, it was not by the extraordinary remedy of injunction; that any damage that could possibly result therefrom to the plaintiffs was susceptible of compensation in damages; and prayed for the dissolution of the injunction, or, in any event, the dissolution of that part of it which restrained the use of the logging road by the defendant the Tygart's River Lumber Company or defendant Tolbard.

The defendants the Tygart's River Lumber Company and W. S. Tolbard filed their separate answers, respectively, and admitted building the logging railroad upon a part of said 2,387 acres of land, and the cutting of timber on 200 or 300 acres of said land, but denied that it would in any way interfere with a fair partition of the land; that the cutting upon said land was upon that part assigned by the commissioners to the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company, and which respondents supposed would be confirmed by the court; and denied all the material allegations of the bill not admitted to be true; and asked that the injunction be dissolved, especially so far as to permit the use of the logging railroad. On the 11th of July, 1903, the injunction was so modified as to permit the defendants to operate the railroad constructed over said 2,387 acres of land. On the 8th day of August the commissioners filed their report of partition, allotting and assigning to Harriet S. Wamsley 250 acres, and to Boston Stalnaker 250 acres, and to the Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Company two lots, numbered 3 and 4, containing, respectively, 578½ acres and 1,813½ acres, making together 1,887 acres; describing said several lots or parcels so assigned to each of the several parties by metes and bounds. Harriet S. Wamsley and Boston Stalnaker filed their four exceptions to said report of partition: "(1) Because they had no notice of the time of executing the said order of partition; (2) because said commissioners do not show the acreage of coal on the said lots of land so assigned to the different parcels; (3) because said commissioners report nothing as to the value of the timber on the different lots of land so assigned by them; (4) because said commissioners do not report the value of any of the parcels of land." On the 19th of October, 1903, the cause was heard upon the papers and proceedings and upon said report and upon said exceptions. The court overruled the exceptions and confirmed the report and the said partition, from which decree overruling the exceptions and confirming the report and partition the said Harriet S. Wamsley, C. S. Wamsley, and Boston Stalnaker appealed.

The important question to be decided in this case, and which seems never to have been passed upon in this state, is raised by the first exception to the report of the commissioners, that no notice was given to Wamsley and Stalnaker of the time of executing the order of partition. Section 1, c. 79, Code 1899, gives jurisdiction to the circuit courts in cases of partition, and provides that, "in the exercise of such jurisdiction, may take cognizance of all questions of law affecting the legal title that may arise in any proceedings." The usual mode of exercising such jurisdiction is by suit in equity. All tenants in common, joint tenants, and coparceners interested in the real estate to be partitioned are necessary parties to such suit or proceeding, and must be summoned, or brought into court by order of publication if nonresidents or unknown, as in any other case. The statute does not prescribe the mode of procedure, and makes no provision for notice to be given to parties interested of the time of executing the decree or order of partition by the commissioners. In 15 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 827, it is said: "Such commissioners are usually required by statute to give notice of the time of their meeting to make partition." It seems a little singular that this question of notice to the parties of the time of executing the decree directing the partition by the commissioners has never been brought to the appellate court of this state. It is, however, probably accounted for in the fact that it is the general practice in most of the circuit courts, at least in the state, for the commissioners appointed to partition, either under the direction of the court, or from an innate sense of justice, as well as adhering to the immemorial custom, to give notice either to the parties in person or to their attorneys. This notice is usually informal, either by letter or word of mouth, informing the parties that on a day mentioned the commissioners will proceed to execute the decree of the court; and usually the parties are present, either in person or by agent or attorney, to look after their respective interests in the matter. The common-law proceeding in partition required notice. "The former statutes of Virginia contemplated the writ of partition (de partitione facienda) as the proper and regular proceeding to coerce partition between joint tenants and tenants in common; being founded in that particular, as in most others, on the statutes of 31 Hen. VIII, c. 1, and 32 Hen. VIII, c. 32, which, again, had derived the writ in question from the common law in respect to coparceners." 2 Minor, 482. And Freeman on Co-T. & Par. § 520, speaking of partition by proceedings at law, says: "In proceedings at law, after the entry of the first judgment in partition, the writ de partitione facienda was issued to the sheriff. By this writ he was commanded, with twelve good and lawful men of the neighborhood, to go to the manors and tenements, and there in the presence of the parties (who are to be forewarned), if they be willing to be present, by the oath of said twelve men, respect being had to the true value of the property, to cause the same to be divided." And in section 522: "The statutes usually require the commissioners to be sworn before entering upon the discharge of their duties, and also to give notice to the parties interested of the time and place when and where they will make the partition." And in 17 A. & E. E. L. 769 (1st Ed.): "Notice of the time and place of their meetings should be given to the interested parties, and usually they are all required to be present and deliberate together." And authorities there cited. Statutes in some of the states specifically require that such notice shall be given, while many of them make no such provision. The authorities differ somewhat in regard to the necessity of requiring notice of the time when the commissioners will meet to execute the decree of partition, in the absence of a statute to that effect; some of the best authorities holding that, when the statute is silent as to such notice, the requirement in such notice is always implied. In Doubleday v. Newton, 9 How. Prac. 71, it is held: "Although the statute does not in terms require notice of the proceedings to be given to the parties in partition (Row v. Row, 4 How. Prac. 133), yet the necessity of such notice must be implied. For it is one of those adjudications of a judicial nature affecting the rights and interests of the parties, in which they have a right to substantial and beneficial notice, and without it the report of the commissioners will be set aside." And in Simpson v. Simpson, 59 Mich. 71, 26 N. W. 235, the case was taken up, among other things, on the exceptions to the report of the commissioners, because the exceptants were not notified of the meeting or meetings, and neither of them attended said meeting or meetings of the commissioners, nor any one in their behalf. It was there held that notice "to the defendants of the meetings of the commissioners is essential to the validity of their action. The requirement of such notice is always implied when not expressed in the statute." In Row v. Row, 4 How. Prac. 133, it is held: "Notice of commissioners' proceedings in partition is not required by statute to be given to the parties. It would be proper, however, that the parties should have an opportunity to be heard before the commissioners, before making partition." Our statute has not repealed the common law in the matter of notice. It simply confers jurisdiction upon the circuit court, but does not give any directions as to the mode of procedure, and, being silent on the question of notice, the requirement of giving notice must be implied. The propriety of such notice is well expressed in the case of Doubleday v. Newton, supra: "It is one of those adjudications of a judicial nature, affecting the rights and interests of the parties, in which they have a right to substantial and beneficial notice."

Upon the question of notice by the commissioners of partition, to the parties, of the time of executing the decree of partition, appellees rely strongly upon the case of McClanahan v. Hockman (Va.) 31 S. E. 516, where it is held that such notice is not required. The only reason for the opinion of the court on this point seems to be the fact that the statute does not, in terms, require that notice should be given. It simply says: "It is not necessary, under our statute of partition, that the commissioners should give notice, though it is frequently done. The parties interested have their day in court when the report of the commissioners is made, and it comes before the court for approval or rejection." Only this and nothing more, and this is carried into the syllabus. It is true, as a rule, a party once summoned in a cause is in court for all purposes; but in a cause for partition, as in a cause referred to a commissioner for account and report, many things are to be done in the case which are not done in open court, and in which the parties interested should have notice that they may protect their interests in such proceedings. Parties in interest might be able to call to the attention of partition commissioners such facts and conditions as add materially to the value of particular portions of the real estate to be divided, or detract from such value, as the case may be—such facts and conditions as might not be discovered or noticed by the commissioners, who are entitled to have all the light possible in relation to the property to be partitioned, in order to enable them to make a fair and equitable partition. If parties interested have no notice of the action of commissioners until the same is brought into court, they are placed at a great disadvantage, when they have nothing to guide them except the map and report, in making exceptions thereto, in case exceptions should be necessary, while, if on the ground with the commissioners, they could view the premises, and not only see just wherein the commissioners were at fault, but aid them in arriving at just conclusions.

It is claimed that the report of the commissioners, on its face, shows the injustice to the parties, and especially on the face of the map, in the shape of the parcels set apart to Wamsley and Stalnaker. The portions allotted to the appellants do not seem to be laid off with a view especially to symmetry of proportions, being nearly 3 miles long and only 37 rods wide, but no exception was taken to the report on this ground. However, as the cause will have to be again recommitted to the same or other commissioners, this defect in the report, as well as others complained of, if they exist, can be then corrected.

The remaining exceptions after that of want of notice are the failure of the commissioners to show the acreage of coal on the several lots of land assigned to the different parties, and the value of the timber on the several lots, and that they do not report the value of any of the parcels of land. We hardly see the object of reporting the value of the parcels, or any of them, nor of the acreage of coal and timber. The commissioners go upon the land and view the same, taking into consideration everything whatever that may be known that gives value to each and every part of it, whether of coal, minerals, timber, or the surface for agricultural purposes; and these various elements of value are taken into consideration by the commissioners in arriving at their conclusions, and they equalize the value of the shares of the various parties entitled thereto by increasing the acreage of those shares which contain less of the elements of value, or decreasing the quantity, as the case may be. It is very evident from the report of the commissioners that they observed, or at least tried to observe, these principles, in allotting to the appellants their shares, as they increased their acreage from $185\frac{1}{12}$ acres to 250 acres each, making an excess of $64\frac{1}{2}$ acres of the quantity they would be respectively entitled to if each and every acre of the premises was of the same value. In McClanahan v. Hockman, supra (Syl., point 4), it is held, "A report of commissioners in partition is not defective for failure to place a money valuation on all or a portion of the lands." In Ransom v. High, 37 W. Va. 838, 17 S. E. 413, 38 Am. St. Rep. 67 (Syl., point 2), it is held, "When the action and report of the commissioners is excepted to on the ground that they have not set apart and assigned to any one his just and full share, unless it appear that the commissioners misunderstood or failed to perform some duty, or acted on a wrong principle, the court will not sustain such exception, unless it be shown by a clear and decided preponderance of evidence that the commissioners have made an unequal and unfair partition." See, also, Gillespie v. Bailey, 12 W. Va. 70, 29 Am. Rep. 445. And in Supervisors v. Stout, 9 W. Va. 703 (Syl., point 4), it is held, "In the absence of evidence clearly showing that the damages are insufficient, the inquest taken on the ground is conclusive." The evidence taken in case at bar is by no means sufficient to warrant the court in disturbing the report of the commissioners on the grounds constituting the last-named exceptions.

For the reasons herein stated, the decree complained of is reversed, the report of partition set aside, and the cause remanded for further proceedings to be had therein as indicated in this opinion, and according to the rules governing courts of equity.

MILLER and BRANNON, JJ. We dissent from the decree of reversal in this case, which is based on want of notice by the commissioners of partition of the time fixed for making the partition. We do not think that notice is essential. The statute of partition makes no mention of such notice. It is not required by that statute in any of its provisions. The notice which the decision in this case requires will be regarded as formal legal notice, and, carried out to its logical conclusion, would require publication of such notice as to a nonresident owner or party in interest, for it is a legal notice—one required by law—under the holding of this court; and how such publication can be dispensed with, we do not see. The nonresident is just as much entitled to notice as the resident owner or party in interest, and Code 1899, c. 121, § 2, provides that a legal notice to a nonresident may be published in a newspaper, and no other mode of notice to him is provided by law, except by service outside the state. This will be exceedingly inconvenient and costly, and we do not see any law requiring such notice. The parties have been brought before the court, and they must watch the proceedings therein, including the proceedings of the commissioners. Besides, they have their day in court upon the coming in of the report. They must be present when it comes in, and do what is necessary to protect their interests by exception or otherwise. If they desire to be present on the ground, they can ascertain from the commissioners the time when they will go upon the land to view it in order to make the partition. They must know that a decree for partition has been made, and they must exercise some diligence to be present when it is to be executed. The court simply employs the commissioners to view the land, instead of doing so itself, and they must attend, if they desire. Such a notice is neither original nor mesne process. It is simply a step of the court in the proceedings in the case preparatory to a final decree. In this view we are supported by the Supreme Court of Virginia in McClanahan v. Hockman, 31 S. E. 516, holding that "commissioner in partition need not give notice. The parties have their day in court when the report comes before it for approval or rejection." We cannot see any office to be performed by notice. True, the parties might be present before the commissioners to make their claim; but we can see no other office that the notice could perform, and we do not see that it is a right given by law to make any argument before the commissioners. We say "right." The commissioners go upon the premises, view them, and form their own estimate of the value of the whole tract, and the relative value of the parcels set apart to the different heirs. We do not suppose that the parties have right to summon witnesses and have their evidence heard by the commissioners. Under our practice, that is never done. Such evidence is to be heard in court when the report shall come in. No facilities, under our practice, enable evidence to be taken in the field. Who reduces it to writing? If not reduced to writing, how can incompetent evidence be eliminated? How can exception be taken and noted against the incompetent evidence? We do not suppose, in short, that there can be any trial before the commissioners in the country. Then what function does the notice perform?

(56 W. Va. 246)

FURST v. GALLOWAY.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1904.)

DEED—CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE—PREPONDERANCE.

1. When the consideration mentioned in a deed is merely nominal, and not contractual or of the essence of the contract, the true consideration for such deed may be shown by parol testimony.

2. If the evidence of the appellant, sustained by the undisputed facts and circumstances, plainly preponderates over that of the appellee, as shown by the records, this court will reverse the decree in favor of appellee, and direct a decree in favor of the appellant.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Preston County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bill by John H. Furst against George L. Galloway. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

R. W. Monroe, for appellant. P. J. Crogan, for appellee.

DENT, J. John H. Furst instituted a suit in the circuit court of Preston county to set aside and cancel a deed made by him to George L. Galloway on the 15th day of March, 1897, on the grounds that the same was obtained from him by fraudulent promises on the part of Galloway. The circuit court refused him the relief sought, and dismissed his bill, and he appeals to this court.

The bill alleges that the true consideration for the deed, recited therein to be $150 cash in hand, was the payment of plaintiff's debts, amounting to about $70, and the support and maintenance of his two aged maiden sisters and himself during life, and their decent burial after death; that the subject-matter of the deed was a tract of 70 acres of land, for which plaintiff paid the sum of $1,050; that plaintiff executed a clear deed to the defendant, at his instance, to enable him to borrow the money to pay off such indebtedness; that defendant obtained the sum of $110 by executing a deed of trust forthwith upon the land, part of which he expended on such indebtedness, and the residue he kept, paid no portion of the recited purchase price to plaintiff, and refused to support plaintiff and his sisters, but drove them from the farm. The defendant in his answer maintains that he purchased the land for the sum of $150, all of which, and more, he had paid on the indebtedness of plaintiff. The plaintiff sustains his bill by the evidence of himself and sister, and the corroborating evidence of several other witnesses as to admissions made by the defendant. Defendant relies upon his deed, the evidence of himself and wife, and certain corroborating statements and conduct of the plaintiff.

The recital of the deed as to the consideration can have very little weight in this controversy, for the reason that this is a direct attack upon it, and it is admitted that it nominally states the consideration to be $150 cash in hand paid. Knowlton v. Campbell, 48 W. Va. 294, 37 S. E. 581. The recital of the consideration not being of the essence of the contract, but nominal in form, the true consideration may be shown. 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 767.

The defendant is unable to show to whom he paid this $150, and for what purpose, and makes certain false statements as to payments made by him about which he is positively contradicted. His wife's evidence is of a negative character, and is, in effect, that she did not hear her husband agree to support and maintain the plaintiff and his sisters. The evidence of defendant's other witnesses relate to vague and uncertain admissions made by plaintiff susceptible of easy explanation under the circumstances, and add very little weight to defendant's otherwise discredited testimony. The strongest evidence against plaintiff is his own conduct in delaying to personally assert his rights promptly. This is easily accounted for by his age and disposition, being in the neighborhood of 70, affected with that simple childishness that overcomes so many on the approach of this age limit of the allotted time of man. Neither the defendant nor others are shown to have been in any manner injured by this delay and reticence on the part of the plaintiff. On the contrary, by reason thereof the defendant has had the enjoyment and use of the farm without other expense than the small amount of money he secured upon its credit. There is no sufficient evidence that he ever put a dollar of his own money into it. The money he used was obtained, not upon his own, but the credit of the land, and still rests on it unpaid. The consideration recited in the deed is shown to be, and is admitted to have been, wholly inadequate. The land was and is worth not less than $750 in actual value. While a person has a right to waste and give away his property if he wishes to do so, and, so long as he is of disposing memory, courts will not interfere with the disposition thereof, yet the inadequacy of the consideration tends strongly to corroborate the testimony of the plaintiff, and to disparage that of the defendant. There is no good reason shown why plaintiff should give his property to the defendant, while there are the most substantial reasons why he should so dispose of it as to secure the support of himself and sisters.

¶ 1. See Evidence, vol. 20, Cent. Dig. § 1912.

Taking all the circumstances into consideration, the plain and decided preponderance of the testimony is with the plaintiff, and the circuit court should have so held. There is no question but that the defendant deceived and misled the plaintiff, and thereby obtained a clear deed for his land on a nominal consideration expressed, and then refused to furnish to the plaintiff the true consideration that he (the plaintiff) believed that he was to receive therefor. Although the defendant may have been perfectly clear in his dealings, yet if the plaintiff was laboring under the mistaken belief that he was to receive the support of himself and sisters as a part consideration for the land at the instance of the plaintiff, a court of equity will cancel the deed, for the reason that the minds of the contracting parties never met, and there was no contract between them to which they mutually acceded. 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 110. In this case, however, the evidence tends to establish the allegation that the defendant knowingly took advantage of the plaintiff, hence the court cannot do otherwise than reverse the decree, cancel the deed, except as to the deed of trust given on the land the day of the deed, and remand the case to the circuit court with directions to place the parties in statu quo as near as possible, and to further proceed in the case according to the rules and principles of courts of equity.

(56 W. Va. 244)

CATON v. RABER et ux.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1904.)

EQUITY — VARIANCE — DISMISSAL OF BILL— EXECUTION OF DEED—MISTAKE.

1. If there is a material variance between the allegations of the bill and the evidence to sustain the same, unless the bill is amended to correspond with such evidence, it should be dismissed on the hearing of the case.

2. The allegation in a bill that the grantor in a certain deed failed to retain a certain reservation set forth in a written contract authorizing such deed is not sustained by proof that such reservation was omitted by reason of an agreement between the parties that the grantee in such deed should make a separate deed for such reservation.

3. Where there is a material variance between the allegations of the bill and the evidence, and the evidence fails to clearly show that the plaintiff is entitled to relief, the bill will be dismissed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ritchie County; M. H. Willis, Judge.

Bill by A. C. Caton against Jacob Raber and Sarah Raber. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Davis & Son, for appellants. B. F. Ayres, for appellee.

DENT, J. Jacob and Rebecca Raber, his wife, appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Ritchie county entered in the chancery suit of Alex C. Caton against them. The bill alleges that the plaintiff and defendant Jacob Raber, acting as agent for his wife, entered into a written contract for the sale of a certain tract of land by Caton to Rebecca Raber, retaining the one-fourth interest in the gas, oil, and mineral; the deed to be made by Creed Collins, the holder of the legal title, from whom Caton purchased; that Collins, on request, executed a deed according to such contract, but "wholly failed to reserve the one-fourth interest in the oil and gas in favor of this plaintiff, A. C. Caton, as he was required to do under the contract of sale." The prayer of the bill is that the defendants be required to execute to the plaintiff a deed for the one-fourth interest in the gas, oil, and mineral, in accordance with the contract, and not that the deed be reformed to correspond therewith. The defendants, answering, in substance, deny that the one-fourth interest aforesaid was omitted by neglect of Collins, but insist that it was purposely done, because Mrs. Raber refused to take the land subject to the reservation, and that by reason thereof it was left out of the deed by direction of Caton. Caton entered a general replication to the answers. In his evidence, he admits that the omission was made by his direction under an agreement between himself and Jacob Raber that Raber would make him a separate deed therefor.

The bill contains no allegation of any such arrangement or agreement, and the proof is a clear departure therefrom, and presents an entirely different case, not justified by the allegations. If the plaintiff relied on any such understanding or agreement, it should have been set out in the bill, so that the defendants would have had the opportunity to properly plead thereto. The Rabers, in their evidence, dispute the making of any such agreement, and Mrs. Raber is, by the plaintiff's evidence, in no wise connected therewith, except through the alleged agency of her husband. If he fraudulently obtained a deed to her for this property, she being innocent thereof, equity might rescind the sale in toto and restore the parties to their former condition,—but it would not compel her to keep the property and make a deed for the undivided one-fourth oil, gas, and mineral interest claimed to have been reserved. A wife is not bound by the unauthorized acts of her husband in relation to her real estate, unless he is guilty of fraud.

of which she reaps and retains the benefits after notice thereof, and thereby ratifies such fraud. Code 1899, c. 66, § 3; Dewing v. Hutton, 48 W. Va. 576, 37 S. E. 670. In the present case there is no allegation of fraud, and no sufficient proof thereof if there had been.

The omission of the reservation was the voluntary act of the plaintiff, without any binding agreement on the part of Mrs. Raber to make him a separate conveyance therefor. He, to secure the consideration of the sale, according to his own evidence, took the risk of obtaining a separate deed for the reservation. Mrs. Raber says that she refused to purchase subject to such reservation, and her deed sustains her contention. As against her, the plaintiff has shown no right to equitable relief. Hence the decree must be reversed, and the bill dismissed.

(56 W. Va. 251)

POLING v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF PHILIPPI INDEPENDENT DIST.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1904.)

PUBLIC SCHOOLS—CONTRACT WITH BOARD OF EDUCATION—VALIDITY.

1. A contract of sale to a board of education of articles for use in a free school, made by a member of a board of education, is void, and not enforceable, because it violates section 57, c. 45, Code 1899.

2. A contract in violation of a statute made to protect the general public against corrupt action, moved by self-interest and pecuniary gain in public officers, and against their bribery, and to protect the public treasury against corrupt action and wasteful expenditure, moved by self-interest in public officers, and to promote the public good, is void, and will not be enforced in the courts.

3. In an action to recover the price of goods under a sale that is void, because in contravention of a statute, a plea setting up its illegality need not aver that prejudice came to the purchaser.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Barbour County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Action by John W. Poling against the board of education of Philippi Independent District. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

J. Hop Woods, for plaintiff in error. Sam V. Woods, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, J. In an action of assumpsit in the circuit court of Barbour county by Poling, to use of Paul, against the board of education of Philippi Independent District to recover the price of maps and historical charts sold by Poling, by written contract signed by Poling as agent, to said board. The defendant was allowed to file a special plea, along with its plea of the general issue, setting up that when Poling sold the goods he was interested in such sale, and was a member of the board of education of Philippi Independent District, in Barbour county, and forbidden by law to act as agent for the introduction or sale of said articles. There was no evidence on either side, and the jury found for the defendant, the court gave judgment for it, and the plaintiff obtained a writ of error.

The case turns upon the question whether the special plea presented a defense to the action. Code 1899, c. 45, § 57, enacts: "No school officer, or teacher of any free school, shall act as agent for any author, publisher, bookseller, or other person, to introduce or recommend the use of any book, apparatus, furniture or other article, in the free schools of this state, or any one or more of them, or directly or indirectly contract for or receive any gift or reward for so introducing or recommending the same, nor shall such person be otherwise interested in the sale, proceeds or profits of any book or other thing used, or to be used, in said schools." Section 59 imposes a fine for the act of not less than $3 nor more than $10. We start with the rule of law that contracts violating positive law or against public policy are void. 9 Cyc. 464. "Courts will not aid parties to illegal contracts, which are executory only, to recover thereon." Capehart v. Rankin, 3 W. Va. 571, 100 Am. Dec. 779. The legislation given above is plainly designed to answer a high and healthful public policy; that is, to protect the public from loss in corrupt and extravagant sale and purchase of articles for schools made by school officers instigated to make contracts under motive of self-interest; to prevent speculation by them in paying undue prices under such bribing motive, to prevent their being bribed to buy unnecessary school equipment at corrupt and exorbitant prices, to protect taxpayers and the public treasury, and to promote official purity and honesty in the administration of the public school system, which, whilst the most noble, valuable, and beneficent department of the state government, involves annually the expenditure of great sums of money, and offers many opportunities for corruption, there being so many teachers and officers connected with it.

We must so construe the statute as not to emasculate it of its force and defeat its purpose. The very person who violated the statute seeks the enforcement of a sale in violation of it. Of what avail is the statute, if the very person at whom it is aimed takes the fruit of its violation? If we say that such a contract is good in law, then we encourage such contracts, promote the vice which the law condemns, and offer a premium for it. The law books say that it is a good test of the validity or invalidity of a contract whether its enforcement would encourage the mischief, condemned. If it would do so, the contract is void. We must carefully regard the nature of the contract and the purpose of the statute. Impartiality, honesty, purity in public officers, is a demand of public policy by common law; and this statute only applies that policy in this instance. "If a court should enforce such an agreement, it would employ its functions in undoing what it was created to do." 9 Cyc. 481. It is there said that public policy is that principle which holds that no one can lawfully do what is injurious to the public or against the public good. "Where a contract belongs to this class, it will be declared void, though in the particular instance no injury to the public may have resulted. In other words, its validity is determined by its general tendency at the time; and if this is opposed to the interests of the public, it will be invalid, even though the intent of the parties was good and no injury to the public would result in the particular case." 9 Cyc. 481. "Public officers should act from high consideration of public duty, and hence every agreement whose tendency or object is to sully the purity or mislead the judgment of those to whom high trust is confided is condemned by the courts." 9 Cyc. 485.

Long ago it was announced by Lord Holt that, if a statute prohibit an act and impose a penalty for doing it, every contract made in violation of the statute is void, though the statute do not say it shall be void. We cannot say that such is the hard and fast rule of our days. It is still the prima facie rule, the guiding star. It does not, in our day, inevitably follow from such prohibition and penalty that a contract banned by the statute is void; but we "look to the language of the statute, the subject-matter, the wrong or evil which it seeks to remedy or prevent, and the purpose sought to be accomplished, and if from all these it is manifest that it was not intended to imply a prohibition or to render the prohibited act void, the courts will so hold." 9 Cyc. 477. If we say that the Legislature meant to merely prohibit, and rely only on the penalty for the enforcement of the law, and in the nature of the case that will fairly accomplish the object of the statute, then the statute goes no further. But it ought to be plain that the penalty will accomplish the object. The courts ought, before giving such construction, to be able to say that by giving the contractor the fruit of the contract they do not deny the statute practical usefulness. Can we think that the imposition of the petty penalty of $10 at most was the only means in the legislative mind for the enforcement of this statute? Can one think the Legislature, when it both pronounced the act unlawful and penalized it, intended to legalize the contract?

There is a wilderness of differing cases on this subject. It is useless to try to analyze them. We are cited by the plaintiff to Ober v. Stephens, 54 W. Va. 354, 46 S. E. 195, holding that the act prohibiting a stockbroker from doing business without license and imposing a penalty did not forbid his recovery for service; the court being of the opinion that it seemed that the penalty would sufficiently answer the aim of the statute. That concerned only revenue, and it is there held that where it concerns only revenue, and the act was not designed for the public welfare in general, it is likely the legislation was only designed to inflict the penalty. Toledo Co. v. Thomas, 33 W. Va. 568, 11 S. E. 37, 25 Am. St. Rep. 925, is cited for the plaintiff. It holds that the act providing that foreign corporations may do business in the state by complying with certain requirements, and not otherwise, and imposes a penalty, does not avoid a contract, but that the penalty can alone be resorted to to enforce the statute. National Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. Ed. 188, holds that such a bank can enforce a deed of trust given to secure a note assigned to it. The act of Congress simply prohibited it from holding real estate under mortgage. There was no penalty. It was held not to come under the prohibition. The case is inapt here. Niemeyer v. Wright, 75 Va. 239, 40 Am. Rep. 720, involves whether a seller of fertilizers could recover their price under a statute saying that fertilizers should be labeled, and imposing a penalty for selling those not so labeled. The court said the general rule is that a statute containing a prohibition and penalty makes the act unlawful, but that it did not follow that it made a contract void. It admitted that when the statute is silent, and contains nothing from which the contrary can be properly inferred, a contract in contravention of it is void. Conceding this general rule, the court said that "the mere imposition of a penalty does not itself, in every case, necessarily imply an intention by the Legislature that every such contract in contravention of the statute should be void in the sense that it is not to be enforced in a court." The court allowed a recovery. I mention as a case along this line Middleton v. Arnolds, 13 Grat. 489, holding that bonds given for land sold under pretense title can be collected by law. The statute prohibited sale of pretense title and imposed a penalty.

I draw a marked line of demarcation between those cases and our case. The statutes which they passed upon did not so deeply and vitally concern the public weal, pure official conduct, protection against bribery of school officers, bribery of public officials, misuse and waste of public money, as does the section of the Code governing this case. The old case of Wilson v. Spencer, 1 Rand. 76, 10 Am. Dec. 491, lays down the true rule in such a case as this in holding that neither a court of equity nor law will enforce a contract in violation of laws "enacted for the public good." "A contract in violation of a law which seeks only collection of revenue is not void. It is otherwise when the design of the lawmaking power is to protect the public from fraud in the contract or for the promotion of some object of public policy." Banks v. McCosker, 82 Md. 518, 34 Atl. 539, 51 Am. St. Rep. 478. It may be that the distinction is not sound, and also that contracts against laws made only to protect revenue are void. Story on Contr. (5th Ed.) § 758. Many cases, however, make the distinction. 2 Mechem on Sales, §§ 1045, 1046; Benj. on Sales (7th Ed., by Bennett) § 531; Hammon, Contracts, p. 339. The Supreme Court has twice said that if the statute prohibits and penalizes an act, and is silent as to whether the contract is void, and contains nothing from which the contrary may be inferred, a contract in contravention of it is void. Harris v. Runnels, 12 How. 79, 13 L. Ed. 901; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421, 12 Sup. Ct. 884, 36 L. Ed. 759. Tested by these cases this contract is void.

It is mentioned, but not urged in argument, that Poling, who as agent made the contract, was a member of a board of education of another district. The statute makes no such exception. It prohibits all school officers from acting as agents or being interested in sales to schools. True, we see that, if he were one of the board of the district buying, it would be a plainer wrong against law; but, though of another district, he might collude with other school officers. He might have, from his office, undue influence in selling articles not needed, or for excessive price, to other districts. As a school officer he should do no act to the harm of any district, nor be induced to do so by self-interest.

It is merely suggested that the plea should set out that the district was prejudiced, and offer to return the goods sold. If the statute makes the sale void, it does not matter whether the district was prejudiced, as authority cited above from Cyc. shows. The law implies prejudice. Offer to return goods is not a condition precedent to this defense. No law is cited to support this suggestion.

It is suggested that the plea should be under Code 1899, c. 126, § 5. It is simply a plea of illegality of the contract, not of fraud in its procurement, or breach of warranty, or failure of consideration. The statutory provision above quoted was made to execute section 9, art. 12, of the Constitution, reading thus: "No person connected with the free school system of the state, or with any educational institution of any name or grade under the state control, shall be interested in the sale, proceeds or profits of any book or other thing used, or to be used therein, under such penalties as may be prescribed by law: provided, that nothing herein shall be construed to apply to any work written, or thing invented, by such person." This seems broader than the statute words. It is very comprehensive and sweeping in words and purpose, and the statute words should, in view of that section of the Constitution, be given broad remedial meaning. But the Constitution itself would make this contract void. It would apply to the party making this contract, though he was not an officer of the district buying the articles, because of the words

"no person connected with the free school system."

Objection is made to the affidavit to the plea. Where is the law that requires such a plea to be sworn? None is cited.

Judgment affirmed.

(56 W. Va. 289)

REASE v. KITTLE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1904.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—CONTRACT TO SELL—REVOCATION—ASSIGNMENT OF RIGHTS—TITLE ACQUIRED.

1. A contract in writing, by which one party for a valuable consideration agrees to sell and convey to the other a tract of land for a specified price within a certain time thereafter, the whole amount of the purchase money to be paid in cash within such time, and, on failure to take and pay for the land within the time stipulated, the contract to be void, is a continuing offer to sell, and not revocable within the time limited.

2. Before payment or tender of the purchase money within the time stipulated, such contract does not vest in the person to whom the offer of sale is made any title to the land, either legal or equitable, and his assignment of his rights under the contract passes no title to the assignee.

3. When such offer is made to a particular person, and not to the party and his assigns, it can be accepted and enforced by him alone, and an assignment thereof to a third party bestows no right upon the assignee to convert the offer into a contract of sale by tender or payment of the purchase money.

4. Verbal acceptance of such contract, without payment or tender of the purchase money, within the time limited, is not sufficient to convert the offer into a contract of sale.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Action by F. P. Rease against C. B. Kittle and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant O. C. Womelsdorf appeals. Reversed.

W. B. Maxwell, for appellant. J. B. Ware and Fred O. Blue, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, P. The principal inquiry in this case is whether a continuing offer in writing under seal to sell land, irrevocable because based upon a valuable consideration and made to a particular person, vests in that person an equitable title to the land, which he can convey to a third person, or is capable of assignment to such third person.

C. B. Kittle executed and delivered to J. E. Howell such a contract, which reads as follows, omitting formal parts and description of the land: "That the aforesaid C. B. Kittle has this day agreed to give the aforesaid J. E. Howell an option on a certain tract of land, hereinafter described and bounded, containing 50 acres, for the sum of $47.50 per acre, of which $1 cash in hand is paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged. Now, if the aforesaid J. E.

Howell pays the aforesaid C. B. Kittle the aforesaid sum of money before the expiration of five years from this date, the aforesaid C. B. Kittle binds himself to make the aforesaid J. E. Howell a general warranty deed for the aforesaid tract of land herein-after described. And it is further agreed that, in case the aforesaid J. E. Howell fail to pay the aforesaid C. B. Kittle the aforesaid sum of money before the expiration of five years from this date, then this contract is to be void."

Before the expiration of the time limit fixed by this paper, Kittle conveyed the land to O. C. Womelsdorf by deed dated September 2, 1899, reciting a cash consideration of $1,000. On the 12th day of February, 1900, Howell executed and delivered to F. P. Rease a paper purporting to assign all his right to purchase said land, and all rights pertaining to said option, and further stipulating that, whenever Howell should settle with Kittle, the amount due Kittle, about $80, should be paid Howell by Rease. On or about the 16th of November, 1900, Rease sent his agent to Kittle to close the option and pay the purchase price of the land; but the latter refused to accept the money or to make a deed, and Rease caused a written notice of his claim under the assignment from Howell, his own acceptance of the option according to its terms, and his readiness and willingness to make payment of the purchase money, to be served on Kittle on the 16th day of November, 1900. Immediately afterwards Rease brought this suit in equity to compel specific performance of the alleged contract, making Kittle, Womelsdorf, Howell, and certain creditors of Kittle defendants, and the court granted the relief prayed for.

Some other features of the case, based upon facts not yet stated, will be noticed later on, as upon mature consideration they are considered insufficient to change the case as stated. They are postponed to avoid possibility of confusion in the discussion of the main question, which is one of great importance in this state, where so much valuable property is constantly changing hands under instruments similar in character and form to the one above described.

That this contract, if such it may be termed, without acceptance in the manner therein prescribed, namely, payment of the whole amount of purchase money within the time limited, for it expressly says that, if full payment is not made within that time, it shall be void, is a unilateral contract, binding only one party, and giving him no right of action in any event against the other party, seems to admit of no doubt. It is a mere offer on the part of Kittle to sell at a certain price at any time within five years, and it does not bind him to convey, except upon payment of the entire purchase money. It contains no covenant on the part of Howell to take the land within the period of five years, or at any other time. His failure to do so gives no right of action for damages, nor can the contract be enforced against him in equity. It is well settled that ordinarily a court of equity will not compel specific performance of a contract when the agreement is of such nature that an action at law will not lie for damages for a breach of it. 5 Vern. Abr. 537.

There are some exceptions to this rule in favor of contracts peculiar in their nature. Where the option is founded upon a valuable consideration, the holder of it may compel performance of the offer, although there is no covenant on his part to take and pay for the property. Illustrations of this are found where a lease is taken which contains a stipulation providing that at any time during the lease, or at its expiration, the lessee shall have the right to purchase the property at a price named. By this he is not bound to purchase, and only has the privilege of doing so; but he may enforce specific performance of it by the lessor. And a purchaser of the land so leased must take notice of this right of purchase in the option, for his possession is sufficient notice to put a stranger upon inquiry, and he is held to have knowledge of all rights on the part of the tenant which reasonable inquiry would have disclosed. Kerr v. Day, 14 Pa. 112, 53 Am. Dec. 528, citing numerous English and American cases. "It is now well settled that an optional agreement to convey or renew a lease, without any covenant or obligation to purchase or accept, and without any mutuality of remedy, will be enforced in equity, if made upon proper consideration, or forms part of a lease or other contract between the parties that may be the true consideration for it." Hawralty v. Warren, 18 N. J. Eq. 124, 90 Am. Dec. 613; Backhouse v. Mohun, 3 Swanst. 434; Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 265; Fowle v. Freeman, 9 Ves. 351; Western v. Russell, 3 Ves. & B. 192; Aormand v. Anderson, 2 Ball & B. 350; Olason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484; Street Railway Co. v. Spencer, 156 Pa. 85, 27 Atl. 113, 36 Am. St. Rep. 22; House v. Jackson, 24 Or. 89, 32 Pac. 1027; Souffrain v. McDonald, 27 Ind. 269; Stansbury v. Fringer (Md.) 11 Gill & J. 149; Maughlin v. Perry, 35 Md. 353.

This apparent exception to the rule harmonizes with other principles of the law concerning rights founded upon consideration. Thus a license coupled with an interest is irrevocable, while one unconnected with any interest on the part of the licensee is always revocable. An agency coupled with an interest is also irrevocable, but if the agent has no interest in the business his powers may be cut off at any time. A man may be willing to take a lease with the privilege of the purchase of the property or a renewal of the lease, but unwilling to accept it in any other way. The option of purchase inserted in the lease is the inducement to the contract on both sides. Without it the owner is unable to procure a contract of lease, and but for it the lessee would not take the property. His purpose may be to build up a mercantile or other kind of business, with a view to permanent location if he succeeds, and with the intention to purchase if he does succeed, and the wish to be free to abandon the property at the end of his term if his experiment should prove to be unsuccessful. It is a partially executed contract so far as he is concerned, for by taking the lease he has paid for that right of purchase, and, having secured it, may exercise it or abandon it at his pleasure.

In Stansbury v. Fringer, 11 Gill & J. 149, the court say: "When a contract consists of several distinct and separate stipulations on one side, and a legal consideration is stated on the other, it must be considered that the entire contract was in the contemplation of the parties in each particular stipulation, and formed one of the inducements therefor; and no one stipulation can be supposed to result from or compensate for the consideration, or any portion of it, exclusive of other stipulations, unless the parties have expressly so declared."

In Benedict v. Lynch, 1 Johns. Ch. 370, 7 Am. Dec. 484, Chancellor Kent said: "It has been ruled in several cases (Armiger v. Clarke, Bunb. 111; Bromley v. Jeffries, 2 Vern. 415) that a bill for specific performance will not be sustained, if the remedy be not mutual, or where one party only is bound by the agreement. This doctrine received a very clear illustration and an explicit sanction in a late decision by Lord Redesdale. Lawrenson v. Butler, 1 Schoale & Lefroy, 13. Though there are other cases in which an agreement has not been deemed within the statute of frauds, and specific performance has been decreed, when the contract was signed only by the party sought to be charged (Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 285; Fowle v. Freeman, 9 Ves. 351), yet the contrary opinion appears, from the most recent decisions, to be now prevailing (Champion v. Plummer, 5 Esp. N. P. 240; Huddleston v. Briscoe, 11 Ves. 592)."

The peculiarity of contracts of this class, which makes them anomalous and sometimes difficult to construe, is the want of mutuality of remedy. The distinction, however, between want of mutuality of remedy and lack of mutuality in the contract must not be overlooked. The privilege of purchase is bought and paid for. The contract of purchase of the privilege, the option, not the contract of purchase of the land, is fully performed by the optionee. It is executed on his side, and needs no remedy for its enforcement. It is executory and unperformed on the other side, and may be enforced. Here, again, it is to be observed, in cases of this kind, the court does not, strictly speaking, enforce the option. What it really enforces performance of is a contract of sale that grows out of the option, and to which the plaintiff has been able to bind the defendant by reason of the option. The defendant has made an offer, which he cannot withdraw. The plaintiff accepts it by tender of the money. This makes a complete contract of sale, enforceable in equity. The defendant needs no remedy against the plaintiff, because the offer is so drawn that the latter must perform or tender performance of every duty to be performed by him in the premises, before any contract of sale is effected. It comes to life by full antecedent performance of all requirements on the part of the plaintiff. This vests in him an equitable title. The defendant then, and not until then, becomes a trustee, holding the legal title for the use of the plaintiff. Equity is without power to give any aid until the parties are in this situation. So it is the contract of sale, growing out of the option, that is enforceable in equity.

Some decisions of reputable courts hold contracts like the one under consideration to be of the same class. Thus, Ross v. Parks, 93 Ala. 153, 8 South. 368, 11 L. R. A. 148, 30 Am. St. Rep. 47, decides that "a writing signed by the owner of a tract of land, promising to sell and convey to another on payment of a specified sum by a named day, and reciting the payment of a nominal sum as its consideration, is a valid contract, though not signed by the other party, and a court of equity will enforce it, at his instance, not only against the owner of the land, but also against a subsequent purchaser from him with notice; nor is it necessary to the maintenance of such bill that the complainant should be in possession of the land." That contract concluded with this clause: "We acknowledge the receipt of 50 cents on this contract, as an advance payment thereon; and, should the balance herein agreed to be paid at the [time] agreed on, we hereby agree to accept said advance payment as a consideration for the cancellation and annulment of this contract, and said contract shall be so treated and held for naught." Johnston v. Trippe (C. C.) 33 Fed. 530, enforces a similar contract. It gave the period of one year in which to purchase at the price of $1,000, $50 was paid on it, and it provided that, if the balance should not be within the year, the contract, which the parties termed an "option bond," should be null and void. In these two cases the agreements were termed unilateral contracts, because there was a remedy on one side only. But there was no want of mutuality in the contract for the privilege of purchase. That was paid for just as in the case of a lease with privilege to purchase. In the first of these two cases, the consideration was only 50 cents; but it was held to be sufficient for the privilege. In the other, it was $50; and the contract said that it should be forfeited in case of failure to complete. In both of the cases the consideration might be said to have been inadequate, because the 50 cents in one was merely nominal, and it appears that in the other case the optionee was offered $1,500 for his land before the expiration of the year in which the optionor had the right to take it at $1,000.

A peculiarity of these two contracts is that in no event could the optionor have any remedy against the optionee. He could not sue within the time limited for performance, for all that time was accorded to the optionee in which to perform or not as he might elect. The contract provided that, upon the expiration of that time, it should be null and void, so that neither party could then have any remedy against the other. That is one of the peculiarities of the contract in this case. There was no time when Kittle could sue Howell. He could not sue within the five years, nor after the expiration of that period. However, there is mutuality in the contract, for a consideration has been paid, although it is insignificant in amount. In Guyer v. Warren, 175 Ill. 328, 51 N. E. 580, upon a contract somewhat similar, in which the consideration was $1, for the privilege of purchase within about a year, with a stipulation that, by the payment of $50 on or before the expiration of that time, it should be extended for another year, which sum was paid, and the option thus kept alive, the court said the rule requiring mutuality had no application to an option contract like the one here under consideration. "There is here an optional sale upon a fair consideration. The consideration named in the written agreement is $1. As the parties agree to sell an option to buy for the sum of $1, there is no reason why such an expression of consideration is not an adequate one." No reference is made to the cash payment of $50 for the extension of time.

A case involving a question somewhat similar to the case last above mentioned is Lowther Oil Co. v. Guffey, 52 W. Va. 88, 43 S. E. 101, in which an oil lease was given upon a recited consideration of $1, providing that, in the event of failure to complete a well within two years, the grant should become void, unless kept alive by the payment of an annual rent. Judge Dent, speaking for the court, said: "While one dollar is a small consideration, yet it is a valuable consideration, and the court cannot say that it was inadequate under the circumstances, as the lessors did not consider it so. It was only intended to hold the grant for two years, and after that time a further consideration to prevent forfeiture was provided. During the two years the lessors did not object to the inadequacy of the consideration, and it is too late to do so now." For this he cites certain similar cases, as will be seen by reference to the opinion.

Courts of law, as a rule, will not enter upon any inquiry as to the adequacy of a consideration in a contract. They presume this to have been determined by the parties to the contract, if they are capable of contracting. Duffy v. Shockey (Ind.) 71 Am. Dec. 348; Bell v. Hewitt, 24 Ind. 282; Hind v. Holdship (Pa.) 26 Am. Dec. 107; Woolfolk v. Blount (Tenn.) 9 Am. Dec. 786. "A different rule would in every case impose upon the court the necessity of inquiring into and of determining the value of the property received by the party giving the promise. Such a course is obviously impracticable. In all cases, therefore, where the assumption or undertaking is founded upon the sale or exchange of merchandise or property, or upon other than a money consideration, and the promise had been deliberately made, the law looks no further than to see that the obligation rests upon a consideration; that is, one recognized as legal and of some value. But the reason of the rule ceases, and hence the rule ceases, when applied to contracts to pay money and founded solely upon a money consideration." Shepard v. Rhodes, 7 R. I. 470, 84 Am. Dec. 573. After noting some apparent exceptions to this rule, the court proceeds as follows: "Aside from these and some other exceptions, at common law a contract for the exchange of unequal sums of money at the same time, or at different times, when the element of time is no equivalent, is not binding, and in such cases courts may and do inquire into the equality of the contract; for its subject-matter, upon both sides, has not only a fixed value, but is itself the standard of all values; and so for the difference of value there is no consideration." Courts of equity, however, will refuse to enforce the specific performance of contracts because of inadequacy of the consideration, for the exercise of the power to compel specific performance rests in the sound discretion of the court; but in the case of a contract for the sale of land the inadequacy, to stay the hand of the court, must be so gross as to be evidence of fraud. Seymour v. Delancy (N. Y.) 8 Cow. 445, 15 Am. Dec. 270. A note to this case, in 15 Am. Dec., citing a large number of authorities, says that the rule as settled by Lord Eldon and Sir William Grant is "that inadequacy of consideration is no ground for refusing to enforce a contract specifically, unless it is so gross as to amount to conclusive, or at least satisfactory, evidence of fraud, or unless accompanied by other circumstances going to show fraud." Whether, under this rule, a court ought to refuse specific performance of an optional contract of sale for five years, based upon a consideration of $1, by which a man deprives himself of the power to dispose of his land for so long a time, is a question we are not called upon to decide, for the reason that another principle of law, applicable to contracts of this kind, effectually precludes the granting of the relief sought.

A contract of this kind is in no sense a sale of the land, and vests no equitable title in the optionee. It amounts at the most to an irrevocable privilege of purchase. It is unlike an accepted offer of sale, which constitutes a contract of sale, giving mutuality of remedy to both parties, by which either may enforce the specific performance of it. "An option contract to purchase is but a continuing offer to sell, and conveys no interest in the property." Caldwell v. Frazier (Kan.) 68 Pac. 1076. This was the case of a lease with an option of purchase, which, as above shown, is in all respects similar to the contract involved here. Between the offer and acceptance, the improvements on the property were destroyed by fire, and the plaintiff sought performance of the contract, with the improvements restored, or with an abatement in price equal to the value of the lost improvements. The court held that he had no interest in the property at the time of the fire, and, having accepted the contract after the loss, he must pay the full price. Upon a similar contract in Gilbert v. Port, 28 Ohio St. 276, the court held that the optionee had no title to the land. There was a loss by fire of property on the premises covered by insurance. After the loss, the optionee made his election to take the property, and endeavored to hold the insurance money, but was not permitted to do so. A similar case is that of Edwards v. Vest, 7 Ch. Div. 858. The court held as follows: "Under the terms of a lease the landlord covenanted to insure, and the tenant had the option to purchase for a fixed sum. Before the time for exercising the option, the buildings demised were burnt, and the landlord received the insurance money. The tenant then exercised his option to purchase, and claimed the insurance money as part of his purchase. Held, that under the circumstances the tenant had no claim to the insurance money."

Although based upon a consideration, it is but an offer, a privilege extended, differing from an ordinary offer only in this: that it is not revocable, because based upon a valuable consideration. An assignment of it, therefore, passes no interest in the property to which it relates. Hence Howell's assignment to Rease could carry nothing except the continuing offer of purchase. That he had no right to pass to another. The offer was limited to him. It was not made to the world at large, nor does the contract say it was made to J. E. Howell and his assigns. Whether, if it did, he might turn it over to another, there is no occasion to say. The offer is personal to him. As this is coal land, it may be said that it is immaterial to whom the sale is made, and that the reasons for limiting an offer to sell to a particular person in the case of property near, or adjacent to, a man's residence, or to the residence of a relative, a friend, or a neighbor, do not apply. But there is no rule countenancing any such exception. The authorities say that an offer made to a particular person can be turned into a contract by him alone. "When an offer is made to a particular person, it can be accepted by him alone, and is not assignable to another." 9 Cyc. 255. In Newton v. Newton, 11 R. I. 390, 23 Am. Rep. 476, the court held as follows: "Defendant gave J. S. a bond conditioned that J. S. might, at his own option, within a certain time, purchase certain real estate belonging to defendant upon paying a sum named. J. S. dying before the expiration of the time without having availed himself of the option, held, that the option was neither a chose in action nor a transmissible right of property, but a personal privilege in J. S., and that upon his death the bond lapsed."

This accords with a general principle of the law of contracts. "A party has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent. It may be of importance to him who performs the contract, as when he contracts with another to paint a picture, or write a book, or furnish articles of a particular kind, or when he relies upon the character or qualities of an individual, or has, as in this case, reasons why he does not wish to deal with a particular party." Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9. The nature of that contract will appear from the headnote of the case, which reads as follows: "A., who had purchased ice from B. under a contract, becoming dissatisfied, terminated that contract, and made a new contract for ice with C. B. afterwards bought C.'s business and delivered ice to A., who had no notice or knowledge of the purchase until after the ice was delivered and used. Held, that B. could not recover for the ice from A." In Wilder v. Wheeler, 60 N. H. 351, the defendant had, in consideration of $1 and an annual rent of $6, granted to a cotton factory the right to lay down an aqueduct upon his land and draw water therefrom for the use of the factory, and the court held that he did not thereby have an assignable interest, as the contract used no words of inheritance, and it could not be inferred from the language of the whole deed that there was any intent of the parties that the right should be assignable. The company, after making the connection and using water for a long time, conveyed its buildings to a third party, who subsequently conveyed to the plaintiff. In Pearson v. Hartman, 100 Pa. 84, the owner of a lot of ground conveyed it to trustees, to be used as a graveyard, reserving the right, to and for himself, and every member of his family or other offspring, to mark off within the lot one square perch of ground, wherever they might think proper, for their own and separate use, forever, for the burial of the dead; and the court held that the privilege thus reserved was personal to the grantor and his family, and was incapable of assignment to a stranger.

Reliance is placed upon an alleged payment by Howell of $90 to Kittle on account of the purchase money, in 1896, and verbal acceptances of the option by Howell prior to the sale to Womelsdorf. As to the payment, Howell says he took up two notes for him, and let him have hay enough to make the total of $90, and it was agreed between them that this sum should be treated as part payment for the land. But Howell admits that he took Kittle's note for that money, and, having lost the note, had brought an action before a justice to recover said sum of $90, which was still pending on appeal at the time his deposition was taken. He endeavors to explain away this inconsistency by saying Kittle had refused to admit the credit without production of the lost note, and that the suit was brought to establish the right to credit for said sum. This, again, is inconsistent; for no action can be maintained for money which the plaintiff admits has been paid to the defendant on account of a debt or contract, unless in the latter case he proceeds upon the basis of a rescission. If such part payment, accepted by the optioner, would convert the contract into one of sale, this evidence cannot be regarded as establishing such payment. Its inconsistencies condemn it. Substantial rights cannot be taken away in such manner. If Howell's conduct does not overthrow his statements, it weighs fully as much as they do, and the burden is on him.

For the reasons given, the decree complained of must be reversed, the demurrer sustained, the bill dismissed, and the appellee must pay to the appellant his costs about his defense expended in the court below, as well as his costs in this court.

(56 W. Va. 281)

GILBERT BROS. & CO. v. LAWRENCE BROS. et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1904.)

BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—TRUST DEED—CONSIDERATION—FRAUD—RESULTING TRUST—CREDITORS' SUIT—PROVING LIEN.

1. Trustees and cestuis que trust are, in this state, always treated as purchasers for value.

2. A pre-existing debt is of itself a valuable consideration for a deed of trust executed for its security, which deed, if it be duly recorded, and was not executed with a fraudulent intent, known to the trustee or to the beneficiaries therein, will be valid against all prior secret liens and equities, and all subsequent alienations of and incumbrances on the trust property.

3. To establish a resulting trust in land by parol, the evidence must be full, clear, and satisfactory.

4. C. obtained a judgment against L. and others, which became a lien on several separate tracts of land owned by L. A creditors' suit was brought against L. and others to enforce their liens against some of said tracts of land. There was a reference, and the notice to lien-holders was published and posted. The lands proceeded against were sold, and the proceeds of the sale distributed among the several lienholders who appeared and proved their liens. C. did not present or prove his lien in that suit. He received no part of the proceeds of the sale made therein. Another creditors' suit was brought against L. and others, in which the other lands, not proceeded against in the first suit, were sold. Held, that the failure of C. to present and prove his lien in the first suit does not bar him from proving and having it allowed in its proper order in the second suit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bill by Gilbert Bros. & Co. against Lawrence Bros. and others. Decree for plaintiff, and Daniel Cooper, Sr., and others appeal. Reversed.

Talbott & Hoover and Strader & Strader, for appellants. W. B. Maxwell, A. Jay Valentine, Harding & Harding, Jones & Heiner, Cunningham & Stallings, and Samuel V. Woods, for appellees.

MILLER, J. J. N. B. Crim on the 22d day of May, 1890, recovered a judgment against G. W. Gall, Jr., Shelton L. Reger, S. L. Lambert, J. H. Lambert, H. C. Lambert, and N. Pennington for the sum of $576.29, with interest thereon from its date, and $17.50, the costs thereof. Crim caused an abstract of this judgment to be duly docketed in the judgment docket in the office of the clerk of the county court of Pendleton county on the 25th day of January, 1891, in the names of all of said parties thereto, both plaintiff and defendants. On the 19th day of October, 1892, Homan S. Nelson and wife, by their deed of that date, conveyed to said J. H. Lambert a tract of land containing 262 acres, situate in the county of Pendleton, which deed was duly recorded in that county on the 14th day of November, 1893. By deed bearing date on the 9th day of April, 1895, duly recorded in said county on the 25th day of May, 1895, J. H. Lambert and his wife conveyed this tract of land to R. B. Lawrence, G. W. Lawrence, and W. C. Lawrence jointly for the consideration of $6,000 cash, the payment of which is acknowledged in the deed. The last-named grantees, by their deed dated May 4, 1895, duly recorded in the county last aforesaid, on the 14th day of November, 1895, conveyed said land to Daniel Cooper, Sr., in trust to secure the payment of the joint promissory note of R. B. Lawrence, G. W. Lawrence, and W. C. Lawrence for $1,045.88, bearing even date with the trust deed, and payable to Daniel Cooper, Jr., one day after its date. By their second deed of trust, bearing date on the 9th day of May, 1895, duly recorded in Pendleton county on the 31st day of May, 1895, said R. B., G. W., and W. C. Lawrence conveyed this land to one Sol W. Phares, trustee, to secure to R. M. Sutton & Co. the payment of $684, in monthly installments. On the 23d day of August, 1895, Gilbert Bros. & Co., appellees, commenced their suit in chancery in the circuit court of Randolph county, and at the September rules, thereafter, filed their creditors' bill against R. B. Lawrence, G. W. Lawrence, and W. C. Lawrence, partners trading as Lawrence Bros., and also against certain other persons and firms as judgment creditors of Lawrence Bros. At August rules, 1903, the plaintiffs filed in the cause an amended bill, making parties defendant thereto certain other judgment creditors of Lawrence Bros., and, in addition to the lands specifically mentioned in the original bill, alleged the ownership of the 262 acres in fee in Lawrence Bros. By their deed bearing date on the 24th day of October, 1896, R. B. Lawrence, G. W. Lawrence, and W. C. Lawrence, with their wives, in consideration of $1, conveyed the 262 acres of land to one Bessie L. Teter, née Bessie L. Phares, who was the ward of W. C. Lawrence, which deed was also placed on the record. It also appears from the record that the Kenneweg Company, a corporation, had also instituted a chancery suit and filed a creditors' bill against Lawrence Bros. and others in the circuit court of Pendleton county, which suit was removed to, and on the 15th day of May, 1897, docketed in, the circuit court of Randolph county, wherein it was ordered to be joined, proceeded in, and heard with the cause of Gilbert Bros. About this time Bessie L. Teter, née Phares, by H. C. Teter, her husband and next friend, filed her petition in these suits, wherein she, among other things, alleges that by the last will and testament of her mother she was entitled to the sum of $1,800; that said W. C. Lawrence was duly appointed, qualified, and acted as her guardian; that as such guardian he received $1,800 of her money and estate; that he did not loan out said money, taking bond with good security, as he should have done, but used it in his business, and that said money was used by him to pay for said 262 acres of land conveyed to himself, R. B. Lawrence, and G. W. Lawrence as aforesaid, and afterwards by them conveyed to her as hereinbefore stated; that the reason said land was conveyed to her by them was and is that her money was used to purchase it, and that said Lawrences desired to reimburse her. She further alleges that her guardian, W. C. Lawrence, had squandered her money; that her said guardian and R. B. Lawrence, his surety, are both insolvent, and that neither of them have any real estate, except their interest in said tract of land. She also says that she is entitled to hold said real estate under said deed to her; that her title thereto is superior to any judgment obtained against W. C. Lawrence and docketed after her said deed was placed on record; and that if said real estate is sold, and any money be left after payment of judgments obtained and docketed against her guardian before said deed was recorded, she is entitled to such money. Petitioner was made a defendant to said causes at the October rules, 1898. She then filed an amended and supplemental petition, in which she says that W. C. Lawrence, shortly after his qualification as her guardian, received, in his capacity as such, a large sum of her money, derived from her mother's estate, to wit, the sum of $1,800; that, instead of placing said sum of money at legal interest and securing the same for the benefit of petitioner, her said guardian invested the whole thereof for her in certain real estate lying in Pendleton county, which the said R. B. Lawrence, G. W. Lawrence, and W. C. Lawrence purchased from J. H. Lambert, and had the same conveyed to them by deed bearing date on the 9th day of April, 1895; that, while the said sum of $1,800 was actually the money of petitioner at the time of the purchase of the land, and was then and there invested in said real estate for her by her guardian, yet, by some omission of duty on his part, he failed to have her name inserted in the deed therefor as one of the grantees therein; and that, to repair the unintentional wrong done her as aforesaid, her said guardian procured the deed of October 24, 1896, to be executed to her as aforesaid for the whole of said land in fee simple, the actual and only consideration therefor being said sum of $1,800 and its accrued interest, which her guardian, W. C. Lawrence, had used in the purchase thereof. Various orders and decrees were made in said causes. Nine several reports of commissioners were made and filed therein at different times. Sales were made of the land described in the papers and proceedings of the causes aforesaid. By consent of all the parties in interest, sale of the 262-acre tract was made on the 30th day of June, 1899. The land brought the sum of $4,920, and the sale thereof was confirmed by the court on the 5th day of July, 1899; but the decree of confirmation directs the special commissioner who made the sale to retain in his hands, to abide the future order of the court in relation thereto, the net proceeds of sale, after paying costs and expenses thereof. Some time in 1902 Bessie L. Teter died intestate, and H. C. Teter qualified as her administrator. The suits were then revived in his name as such administrator.

On the 12th day of October, 1903, Commissioner Baker, to whom the causes had been referred, filed his report therein, from which the following excerpts are taken:

"As to the liens existing and unpaid against the funds arising from the sale of the 262 acres of land, your commissioner has ascertained and reports as follows:

"First in order of priority as a lien thereon is due to Nelson Bros. the vendor's lien which is prior to the other debts, the amount of which was $745.33 as of May 5, 1903, when A. M. Cunningham, special commissioner, paid the same to himself as attorney for said Nelson Bros.

"Next in order your commissioner reports that he finds in respect to the rights of Bessie Teter, deceased, and her personal representative, in respect to the 262 acres of land in Pendleton county conveyed on the 9th day of April, 1895, by James H. Lambert and wife to Robert B. Lawrence, George W. Lawrence, and William Clarke Lawrence, that in the purchase thereof William Clarke Lawrence, who was the guardian of Bessie Teter, his infant ward, invested in the said land the sum of $1,800 then in his hands, of the separate and distinct funds belonging to Bessie L. Teter, which she derived under the will of her mother, the late Martha S. Phares; said will bearing date on the 2d day of February, 1890, which is established before me by the said will and the depositions of W. Clarke Lawrence, H. C. Teter, Bessie L. Teter, and others, filed on the 23d day of January, 1890, in this cause. I further find that, to the extent of said investment of the funds of Bessie L. Teter in said farm in the name of her guardian, a resulting trust exists in her favor, and that she is entitled to have the amount thereof decreed to her, without abatement for any credits on account of her guardian, or for any of the costs incurred by any of the parties to this procedure; and I further find that her interest in this land is not abated or reduced by any of the liens suffered by the said Lawrences, or required by any of the other creditors, which are sought to be charged thereon. And I find that the amount due to the administrator of said Bessie L. Teter out of the proceeds of said fund standing to the credit of this cause, and treated as land, amounts to $2,718, including the interest to October 10, 1903, and that she ought to be allowed her costs incurred in the cause, which I also find to be $3.05, being the costs of her petition and her depositions and her exhibits filed before me. * * *

"Third in order of priority, as a lien thereon, there is due to—

R. M. Sutton & Co. the amount of their deed of trust debt, for the sum of....	$664 00
Interest on same to October 10, 1903....	287 40

Total due October 10, 1903..... $951 40

"Next in order of priority as a lien thereon there is due to—

Daniel Cooper, Sr., his deed of trust debt for the sum of.....	$1,045 85
Interest to October 10, 1903.....	457 08

Total due October 10, 1903..... $1,502 91

"As to the third requirement under said decree hereinbefore spoken of, your commissioner reports that the Lawrence Bros. purchased jointly said 262 acres of land, at the price of $8,000; W. Clarke Lawrence purchasing with his two brothers, as guardian of Bessie L. Teter, and invested therein $1,800 of her separate funds which she derived under the will of her mother, hereinbefore mentioned, as shown by the depositions of W. Clarke Lawrence, H. C. Teter, Bessie L. Teter, and James H. Lambert. * * *

"As to the seventh requirement under said decree, your commissioner reports that he finds that there arose out of said sale of said land purchased with the funds or estate of Bessie L. Teter $1,800, with interest thereon from April 9, 1895, to October 19, 1903, making a total of $2,718.00.

"As to the judgment set out in the petition of J. N. B. Crim, filed in this cause, your commissioner does not report said judgment, for the following reasons: (1) Because he finds that in the chancery suit pending in Pendleton county, of Geo. W. Adamsou against James H. Lambert and others, there was an order of reference to a commissioner, and a notice to lienholders published and posted by said commissioner, in which the defendant Crim failed to prove his said judgment; and in the said suit James H. Lambert and wife, by deed dated on the 1st day of November, 1898, a copy of which is appended to the amended answer of Robert B. Lawrence and others, filed herein, conveyed to Benjamin H. Hiner several tracts of land, containing 148 acres, for the price of $1,400, out of which the said Hiner agreed to pay the liens reported and found in the said chancery cause to exist thereon, in which county the judgment of said Crim was then docketed. Your commissioner therefore reports that, under section 7 of chapter 139 of the Code of 1890, he is barred of his rights to prove the said debt herein. (2) Because I find the said Crim's judgment was docketed in Tucker county on the 26th day of July, 1890, and that at that time H. Clay Lambert, one of said judgment debtors, owned a farm composed of four tracts, containing 240 acres, on Sapling Ridge, which by memorandum in writing dated June 5, 1899, and made a part of the deed filed before me, directed W. B. Maxwell and A. Jay Valentine, special commissioners, to convey to J. S. Teter said land, which was done by deed dated on the 4th day of December, 1899, a copy of which is made a part of this report, of the said memorandum thereto attached. Further, the said H. C. Lambert was also the owner of a lot in the town of Davis, which he conveyed on the 23d day of October, 1900, to R. D. Roberts, in consideration of $250.

"Considering the facts hereinbefore set out relative to said Crim judgment, your commissioner refuses to report said judgment as a lien upon the 262 acres of land conveyed by James H. Lambert, and for those reasons, in addition to the fact that said judgment against Gall, Reger, and others, when docketed in Randolph county, was not docketed as to James H. Lambert, his name being omitted therefrom."

This report was excepted to by Crim and the other creditors, as will hereinafter appear.

On the 21st day of October, 1903, said causes came on to be finally heard together upon the papers and proceedings therein, including the settlement of the accounts of W. C. Lawrence as guardian of Bessie L. Teter, and the report of Commissioner Baker, with exceptions thereto by Crim, Daniel Cooper, Sr., and other creditors of Lawrence Bros., whereupon the court overruled all of said exceptions, save exception No. 1, indorsed by Crim, which is hereinafter referred to, and confirmed the report; and then, proceeding to adjudicate and fix the rights of the parties with respect to the sum of $4,005.89 standing to the credit of these causes, the court adjudged, ordered, and decreed that there should be paid therefrom to Henry C. Teter, administrator of Bessie L. Teter, the aggregate sum of $2,718, with interest thereon from October 10, 1903. It was further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that William Clarke Lawrence, guardian for his infant ward, Bessie L. Teter, having on the 9th day of December, 1895, invested in the said land $1,800 of the separate estate of the said infant ward, derived by her under the will of her deceased mother, held the said land, to the extent of the said investment, in trust for the said Bessie L. Teter, and that none of the creditors of Lawrence Bros. had any right to charge or diminish the said funds, or the proceeds thereof, with any of their debts against the said firm or any member thereof, and that "in lieu of the said land, which, by consent decree heretofore entered, was converted into money, the administrator of said infant is therefore entitled to have and receive the said sum of $2,718, with interest thereon from the 10th day of October, 1903, and the costs of her said petition herein, including a docket fee, and her costs incurred before the commissioner, to the extent of $3.95. It is therefore further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the West Virginia Trust Company, general receiver of this court, do pay to H. Clay Teter, administrator as aforesaid, the said sum of $2,718, with interest from October 10, 1903, as aforesaid, and the said costs. It is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the rights of other creditors in respect to the residue of the said funds, and their priorities thereon, are as follows: Next in priority and next entitled to be paid is the trust lien in favor of R. M. Sutton & Co., aggregating on the 10th of October, 1903, $951.40. Next in order of priority is the lien thereon of Daniel Cooper, Sr., for his trust debt, aggregating $1,502.91. * * * But the exception first indorsed by defendant Crim, because of the failure of Commissioner Baker to report his judgment for $576.92, with interest thereon from May 24, 1890, is sustained; and no decree is made therefor allowing defendant Crim to participate for payment thereof out of the proceeds of the lands of Lawrence Bros., for the reason that it appears to the court, from the record of this cause, that all of said real estate was sold under a consent decree herein, and realized a sum insufficient to pay the prior liens fixed thereon." From this decree, Crim and Daniel Cooper, Sr., obtained an appeal, and have assigned various grounds of error, not necessary to be here specifically set out.

It is contended on behalf of the deed of trust creditors of Lawrence Bros. that they are purchasers of the said 262-acre tract of land for value, and without notice of the alleged resulting trust thereon in favor of Bessie L. Teter; and also, for all of the creditors, that said alleged resulting trust has not been established. Crim insists that his judgment against J. H. Lambert and others was and is a valid and subsisting lien on the said 262 acres, subject only to the vendor's lien thereon in favor of Nelson, the grantor of Lambert, and that it is also a lien on said funds in the same order and priority. The questions relating to the rights of the deed of trust creditors to the aforesaid funds will be first considered and determined.

It is not claimed that the trustees or cestuis que trust in the deeds of trust, or either of them, had notice or knowledge of the alleged demand of Bessie L. Teter at the time of the execution or delivery of the trust deeds. Trustees and trust creditors in deeds of trust are treated in this state as purchasers for value. Fidelity Co. v. Railroad Co., 32 W. Va. 244, 259, 9 S. E. 180; Duncan v. Custard, 24 W. Va. 730; Wickham v. Martin, 13 Grat. 427; Douglass Mdee. Co. v. Laird, 37 W. Va. 687, 17 S. E. 188; McClaskey v. O'Brien, 16 W. Va. 794; W. M. M. Co. v. Peytona C. O. Co., 8 W. Va. 409; Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Grat. 157. In the last-mentioned case the court says: "A pre-existing debt is of itself a valuable consideration for a deed of trust executed for its security, which deed, if it be duly recorded, and was not executed with a fraudulent intent, known to the trustee or the beneficiaries therein, will be valid against all prior secret liens and equities, and all subsequent alienations and incumbrances. * * * I think it has been the constant course of the courts of this state to regard the creditors in a deed of trust made by their debtor, bona fide for their indemnity, in the light of purchasers for value." In Wilcox v. Calloway, 1 Wash. (Va.) 42, the court says: "A purchaser of the legal title is not to be affected by any latent equity, whether founded on trust, fraud, or otherwise, of which he has no actual notice, or which does not appear in some deed necessary in the deduction of the title, so as to amount to constructive notice." Hooe v. Pierce, 1 Wash. (Va.) 212. In Marshall's Ex'r v. Hall, 42 W. Va. 644, 26 S. E. 301, the court says: "Whenever a trust fund has been converted into another species of property, if its identity can be traced, it will be held, in the new form, liable to the rights of the cestui que trust. So long as it can be identified either as the original property of the cestui que trust, or as the product of it, equity will follow it; and the right of reclamation attaches to it until detached by the superior equity of a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice." 1 Perry on Trusts, § 218 et seq. Further citation of authorities is not necessary. It is plain that, if Bessie L. Teter had any money invested in the 262 acres of land by her guardian, her claim cannot prevail against the said trust deeds and the debts of Lawrence Bros., mentioned therein and secured thereby. To establish her alleged claim against the 262 acres of land, Bessie L. Teter, proved by W. C. Lawrence, her guardian, that he qualified as such in 1893; that he received as such guardian about $1,813 of the money belonging to his ward—$1,013 thereof in March, 1893, and the residue in November, 1894; that he paid $1,800 of said money on the purchase of said 262 acres of land; that before the said purchase he had put the money into cattle and sheep, and paid the money arising from the sales thereof into the land; that he paid the money for Bessie L. Teter, née Phares. Lawrence further testifies that he put the money into cattle and sheep some time after he got it; that he could not tell exactly from whom he bought all of the stock; that he put all of the money used by him into stock; that he generally kept the stock from one to two years after its purchase; that a part of the guardianship money was handled by his brother; that he handled about $1,200, and his brother R. B. Lawrence the balance of it; that his brother also put the money which he handled into stock; that the first purchase of stock was about $400 in value, and was made by him in 1893; that the next purchase, about $800 in value, was made in 1894; that this stock was bought with his ward's money; that at the time of the purchase of the Lambert 262 acres of land he had on hand stock so purchased, of about the value above given; that he paid out the $1,800 of his ward's money by taking up the paper and notes of J. H. Lambert; and that he and his brother R. B. Lawrence took up this paper. J. H. Lambert, grantor of the land to Lawrence Bros., testifies that, as part of the $6,000 consideration for the land, he bought of Lawrence Bros. their store at Herman for $3,300, and another house and lot at $1,200, and that for the balance they paid him money, and assumed and paid debts for him, one of which debts was $1,400. The settlement of said W. C. Lawrence as guardian for Bessie L. Teter, voluntarily made by him before the commissioner of accounts for Pendleton county, hereinbefore mentioned, is for the years 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, and 1898. It charges the guardian with $1,013 of money belonging to his ward for 1894, $1,709.96 for 1895, $1,862.87 for 1896, $1,804.56 for 1897, and $1,855.42 for 1898. For all of said years it gives credit to the guardian for taxes paid by him on said money, and for other items expended by him for his ward. In addition to this evidence, W. C. Lawrence joined in both of said deeds of trust, and was and is a joint maker of the note executed to Daniel Cooper, Sr., as aforesaid, after he had taken the title to the land to himself and brothers; thus allowing innocent purchasers for a valuable consideration, without notice of the said claim of his ward, to become interested in the land. He says in his evidence: "I meant to purchase the land for her. When I purchased this land I didn't know there was anything to amount to anything against me." Bessie L. Teter was a witness on behalf of herself. She says nothing as to the purchase of the land for her by her guardian. Asked what money she had received from her mother, and who has had it since, she answered: "Something over $1,800, and W. C. Lawrence has had the money ever since."

The facts in all cases in which resulting trusts are sought to be established must be proved with great clearness and certainty. 1 Perry on Trusts, § 187. Bright v. Knight, 35 W. Va. 40, 13 S. E. 63, holds that such proof must be full, clear, and satisfactory. Troll v. Carter, 15 W. Va. 567; Smith v. Turley, 32 W. Va. 14, 9 S. E. 46; 6 Hurst's Dig. 742. The trust must arise at the time the title is taken. No subsequent oral agreement or payment will create it. Smith v. Turley, supra. In Myers v. Myers, 47 W. Va. 487, 35 S. E. 868, it is held that, to create a resulting trust in favor of a ward in a tract of land purchased by his guardian, the trust funds must either have been paid at the time of, or entered into the consideration for, the contract of purchase, though afterwards paid. 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 250 et seq. The proof in this case does not establish a single necessary element of the alleged resulting trust in favor of Bessie L. Teter.

It is insisted that no error was committed in barring Crim from participation in the proceeds of the sale of said 262 acres of land. His judgment is properly proved. There is no evidence that it has ever been paid or released. It was a lien on all of the lands of which J. H. Lambert was possessed, or to which he was entitled, at or after the date thereof. Code 1899, c. 139, § 5. The judgment was a lien on said 262 acres at the time of the alienation thereof by Lambert to Lawrence Bros. Before and at the date of said conveyance the judgment was docketed in Pendleton county. Crim's lien was prior to all other judgment liens on the land. Lawrence Bros. took the land with legal notice of, and subject to, this lien. Id. § 6. Crim could have enforced his lien in a suit in equity against this, or any other land upon which his judgment was a lien. Id. § 7. In the said cause of Adamson v. Lambert et al. Crim was not made a formal party. The 262 acres was not proceeded against or involved therein. No liens thereon were as certained or reported in that cause. Crim had the right, under the statute cited, to enforce his judgment lien against the lands described in that suit, or against the 262 acres in the suit against Lawrence Bros. We are therefore unable to see how his lien could be discharged in the last-named suit by his failure to present and prove his judgment in the first-mentioned cause. We are of opinion that he did not, by his omission to prove his judgment in the first-mentioned suit, lose the benefit of his lien on said 262 acres of land, or upon the proceeds of the sale thereof in the last-mentioned cause, but that he is entitled to have the same reported and allowed therein in its proper order and priority.

For the reasons stated, we are also of opinion that there is error in the decree complained of. The same must therefore be reversed and annulled, the exceptions to Commissioner Baker's report sustained, and the cause remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings to be had therein according to the views herein expressed, and further according to the rules and principles governing courts of equity.

(56 W. Va. 249)

JAMES CLARK DISTILLING CO. v.
BAUER et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1904.)

NEW TRIAL—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. A verdict of recovery by a plaintiff bearing the burden of proof, when the evidence is plainly insufficient to warrant it, should be set aside. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Randolph County;
John Homer Holt, Judge.

Action by the James Clark Distilling Company against B. F. Bauer and another. Verdict for plaintiff. From an order granting a new trial, it brings error. Affirmed.

Talbott & Hoover, A. Jay Valentine and J. P. Scott, for plaintiff in error. O. H. Scott, for defendants in error.

BRANNON, J. Action by James Clark Distilling Company against Bauer and Boyd, partners in trade as B. F. Bauer, begun before a justice, and appealed to the circuit court of Randolph. Service was had on Boyd, but not on Bauer. The case resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, and from the action of the court in setting this verdict aside the distilling company has obtained a writ of error.

The only question in the case is whether the evidence shows that Boyd was a partner with Bauer. The business was a saloon. The account is for liquors sold for saloon use. The only evidence to charge Boyd is that of the traveling salesman who sold the liquors. When asked what connection Boyd had with Bauer, he answered, "Partners;" and, when asked to say how he knew Boyd was a partner, he answered: "Mr. Boyd's own words. He stated that he did not want the goods shipped to B. F. Bauer & Co., fearing that it would interfere with his merchandise business. Q. Then, as I understand you, R. C. Boyd represented himself to be a member of the firm of B. F. Bauer, and it was at his suggestion that the goods were shipped in the name of Mr. Bauer. Please state if I am correct in this. A. Yes, sir." He does not say how Boyd represented himself to be a partner—what he said—and we may say that, under the inspiration of the suggestive question by the attorney, he gave a mere conclusion of his own. This is short and unsatisfactory evidence to charge Boyd, who was dead at the trial, and could not make a defense. Bauer sold out and left, and is not produced as a witness. The business was in the name of Bauer alone. The license in his name. The plaintiff sold six bills at different times, all in Bauer's name alone. Not a paper is in a partnership name or has a partnership earmark. The salesman makes on cross-examination a statement strongly against plaintiff. He was asked if, when at Bauer's place when he sold the first bill, the time when Boyd made the statement to which the salesman refers, he did not refuse to send the goods without Bauer got Boyd's "recommendation." He answered, "Yes." This shows that Boyd only recommended. When that first bill was ordered, before it was sent, a telegram warned the distilling company to ship only a part, not all that had been ordered. It is charged, on the statement of a letter of Bauer's to the plaintiff, but not proven, that Boyd sent that telegram, and thence it is urged that this shows Boyd a partner; else why would he send the telegram? If he had only gone security verbally, or even recommended, he might do so in justice to the plaintiff and himself. The telegram is signed, "B. F. Bauer." It is not claimed that Boyd represented himself as a partner, except on the occasion when the saloon began and the first bill was ordered. That first bill was paid. It is a subsequent bill of liquors that is sued for. In that letter we find Bauer opening thus, "Mr. Boyd, who went my security for stock, is the cause of the countermand of order," and added that Boyd became alarmed, and Bauer assured the company that everything was right, and he would do all in his power "to make a success of the business in order that it may be a benefit to us both." He asked the plaintiff to send on goods, assuring them he would pay, and added, "I will control the orders in future." This letter indicates a sole business, not a partnership. He tells the plaintiff that Boyd had gone his security for the first bill. That word "security" alone is a declaration of Bauer that Boyd was only a security, and a warning to the plaintiff that he was not a partner. And if he had been, why did the plaintiff after that letter sell Bauer the goods now sued for? There is a receipt from Boyd to Bauer, just before the last bill, while the alleged partnership was going on, for payment for ice. If it was a firm, it is not likely the receipt would be given. It was likely for ice in the saloon. It is a circumstance against the partnership.

We agree with the circuit judge that the evidence falls short of sustaining the verdict. When evidence, plainly, clearly, decidedly, is not sufficient, the verdict should be set aside. Limer v. Traders' Co., 44 W. Va. 175, 28 S. E. 730.

Order affirmed.

(137 N. C. 285)

COBB v. RHEA.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

REFERENCE—FEES OF REFEREE—APPORTIONMENT—STATUS—DECEDENTS' ESTATES—PREFERRED CLAIMS—APPEAL—TITLE OF CAUSE.

1. A motion by a referee for the payment of reference fees in consolidated causes is not an action, and an appeal from the decision rendered should be entitled by the name of the first action in which the motion was made.

2. Under Clark's Code (3d Ed.) § 533, providing that the fees of a referee shall be fixed by the court and taxed against either party, or apportioned as seems right to the court, the apportionment of referee's fees is a final judgment both as to the amount and the apportionment.

3. Under Clark's Code (3d Ed.) § 533, providing that the fees of a referee shall be fixed by the court and taxed against either party, or apportioned as seems right to the court, the apportionment of referee's fees rests in the discretion of the judge making the allowance, subject to exception and review by appeal, but his order cannot be changed by a subsequent co-ordinate judge.

4. Under Clark's Code (3d Ed.) § 533, providing that the fees of a referee shall be fixed by the court and taxed as seems right to the court, referee's fees are simply a part of the costs, and, when not paid in advance by an administratrix, judgments therefor, including the part of the referee's fees adjudged against the estate, not being enumerated as preferred debts by Code, § 1416, take no greater pro rata than the judgment of which they are a part; nor does the fact that funds derived from a sale of realty to make assets in another proceeding are in the hands of the clerk authorize the court to order the payment of such fees out of those funds as a preferred debt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Long, Judge.

Motion by T. H. Cobb, referee in certain consolidated actions, for the payment by H. E. Rhea, administratrix, of reference fees as a preferred debt. From a judgment for the movant, the administratrix appeals. Reversed.

Geo. A. Shuford and W. J. Peele, for appellant. Davidson, Bourne & Parker, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. There were three actions pending in the name of H. E. Rhea, Adm'x,

v. R. R. Rawls et al. These were consolidated into one action. There were three other actions—Buchanan v. Rhea, Adm'x, Asheville Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. H. E. Rhea, Adm'x, et al., and Summey, Adm'x, v. Rhea, Adm'x, et al. The plaintiff, Cobb, having been allowed fees as referee and as arbitrator in said several causes years ago, and the settlement of the estate having been unaccountably delayed, made a motion in each of said four actions that the administratrix, Rhea, pay his reference fees as a preferred debt. The four motions were consolidated, and from the judgment thereon the administratrix appeals.

This not being an action, but a motion in the cause, the appeal should regularly have been entitled by the name of the first action in which the motion was made, as is the practice in taxing a prosecutor with costs (State v. Hamilton, 106 N. C. 660, 10 S. E. 854) or judgment in a cause against a witness or other person for contempt, though the practice has not always been observed in the latter class of cases. In the case of Buchanan v. Rhea, Adm'x, there was judgment at fall term, 1893, that plaintiff recover of the administratrix $3,018.60, with interest, etc., "and the costs of this action, in which costs shall be included the sum of one hundred dollars allowed to T. H. Cobb for his services as such herein rendered." In Asheville Tobacco v. Rhea, Adm'x, a similar judgment for recovery of a debt, with interest and costs, was rendered, adding, as above, a recovery by plaintiff of "the costs of this action, including the sum of one hundred dollars to T. H. Cobb, referee." In Summey v. Rhea, Adm'x, judgment was rendered at December term, 1895: "By consent T. H. Cobb, referee herein, is hereby allowed $300 for his services as such referee, and to be paid out of the assets of H. K. Rhea, deceased, and as part of the costs of this action, and to be taxed therein." The three actions pending in name of H. E. Rhea, Adm'x, v. Rawls et al., having been consolidated, at December term, 1895, the judgment included an allowance of $1,000 to T. H. Cobb as arbitrator, subject to a credit of $300, already paid, "leaving due him $700 in this judgment, and as between H. E. Rhea, administratrix of H. K. Rhea, H. E. Rhea individually, and R. A. Rawls, said $700 shall be adjusted in the proportions in said award directed." The award thus made a part of the judgment in paragraph 13 thereof adjudged the $700 to be paid as follows: "$350 by H. E. Rhea individually; R. R. Rawls $350, to be credited with $150, leaving $200 due by him; and $300 by H. E. Rhea, administratrix of H. K. Rhea, of which $150 has been paid, leaving balance of $150 due by her as administratrix."

Originally, under Code, § 533, referees' fees were taxed, like other costs, against the losing party; but by amendment (Laws 1889, p. 59, c. 37) the court was authorized to apportion them, in its discretion (Clark's Code [3d Ed.] § 533). A practice has grown up, owing to such delays as this, of granting judgment for referee's fees, whether awarded against one party or divided between them, and issuing execution at once. There is nothing to be said against this, and frequently a similar order is rendered for other costs, especially when a continuance is granted upon payment of costs. The question is not of ordering payment, but whether such order can be made a preferred debt against an estate.

By the above summary it will be seen there are judgments against the administratrix for $100 each as part of plaintiff's recovery of costs in first two cases, Buchanan v. Rhea, Adm'x, and Asheville Tobacco Co. v. Rhea, Adm'x; also in Summey v. Rhea, Adm'x, $300, "to be paid out of assets of H. K. Rhea, deceased, and as part of the costs of this action, and to be taxed therein"; and, finally, in the consolidated cases of Rhea, Adm'x, v. Rawls, a "balance of $150 due by her as administratrix"—making a total of $650 adjudged against the administratrix as cost. The apportionment of referee's fees is a final judgment both as to the amount and the apportionment, and rests in the discretion of the judge making the allowance, subject to exception and review by appeal in case of abuse. Such order cannot be changed by a subsequent co-ordinate judge. "There is no appeal from one superior court judge to another." May v. Lumber Co., 119 N. C. 98, 25 S. E. 721; Alexander v. Alexander, 120 N. C. 474, 27 S. E. 121; Henry v. Hilliard, 120 N. C. 487, 27 S. E. 180; Scroggs v. Stevenson, 100 N. C. 358, 6 S. E. 111; Cowles v. Cowles, 121 N. C. 276, 28 S. E. 476.

The only remaining question is whether such judgment for referee's fees is a preferred debt. Referee's fees, by the statute, and also the decisions—Wall v. Covington, 76 N. C. 152, Young v. Connelly, 112 N. C. 650, 17 S. E. 424—are simply "a part of the costs," and of no higher dignity than any other costs, nor than the debt to whose recovery they are a mere incident, and, as against the administratrix, must take the pro rata allowed the judgment. It is true the clerk and other officers may demand their fees in advance as the case progresses, and so may the referee, and, if paid by the personal representative, they may be allowed by the clerk as "necessary disbursements and expenses" in managing the estate; but not so as to costs recovered by the opposite party. And when administratrix's costs are not paid in advance, judgments for such costs, including the part of referee's fees adjudged against the estate, which are a part of the costs, have no greater dignity and take no greater pro rata than the judgment of which they are a part, or any other judgment. The fact that funds derived from a sale of realty of H. K. Rhea to make assets in another proceeding is in the hands of the clerk gives the court no authority to order the costs in these cases, nor the referee's fees as part of such costs, to be paid out of such fund as a preferred debt. They are not preferred by Code, § 1416, which determines the order of priority of indebtedness in the settlement of estates nor by any other statute. The proceeds of sale of realty to make assets, so far as necessary to pay debts, will in due course be paid the administratrix, and will be disbursed by her in accordance with law.

Error.

(136 N. C. 566)

STATE v. DAVIS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

ASSAULT WITH DEADLY WEAPON—REMARK OF COURT—INSTRUCTION.

1. Where, on a criminal trial, an expert on handwriting testified as to the similarity of defendant's handwriting with that of a writing in question, and was asked to explain to the jury the similarity, whereupon the court declined to allow the witness to testify further, saying that he had fully explained for an hour, and "to the satisfaction of the court," the similarity of the writing, it was prejudicial error, as expressing the effect the evidence had produced on the mind of the court.

2. The court charged that the state insisted on the facts detailed by the witnesses, pointing to the guilt of the defendants; that the state had shown that a crime was committed under such circumstances that no eyewitness could be had; that the jury had been shown a motive; that all the defendants were living on the land of one defendant, and connected with him by blood or marriage; that the number of persons engaged in the crime were from six to ten, or more than enough to include all the defendants; and that, while it was impossible to get all the guilty ones, there was no danger of getting too many. Held, that the omission to caution the jury to convict neither of the defendants until his guilt had been shown beyond a reasonable doubt rendered the charge erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Bladen County; Peebles, Judge.

E. J. Davis and others were convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and they appeal. Reversed.

McLean, McLean & McCormick, for appellants. The Attorney General, for the State.

MONTGOMERY, J. The bill of indictment against the defendants for an assault with a deadly weapon upon D. A. Singletary seems to be, from certain parts of the evidence offered by the state, a very mild charge of the real offense committed against the peace of the state. In the nighttime several persons were discovered on or in the road at the prosecutor's premises, and, on his opening his door to learn what he could of the matter, he was fired at by one or two of these persons and wounded so as to lose the sight of one of his eyes. There was evidence tending to connect the defendants with the crime, but, for errors which occurred in the trial below, and which will be presently pointed out, there must be a new trial. The new trial is granted to the defendant Freeman because of certain remarks made by his honor upon the examination of the witness Kerr, and to the other defendants because of error in his instructions to the jury.

It seems that, on the morning next after the wounding of Singletary, there was found stuck up on Singletary's stables an unsigned writing in these words: "Mr. Singletary—You better put up fence as soon as you can, and if have to come after any more hogs, you will find yourself in hell some morning." The evidence had disclosed that Singletary had impounded, under the stock law in force in that section, some hogs of the other defendants than Freeman; that Freeman lived with the Davises, and that Freeman and E. J. Davis on the day before the night of the shooting had demanded of Singletary the release of the hogs, and had gone off saying they did not intend to pay damages; and that on the night of Singletary's injury his hogpen had been torn down, and Davis' hogs carried off. The state insisted on the trial below that the paper writing found posted near the hogpen was in the handwriting of Freeman, and, to prove that fact, it offered as a standard of comparison a certain affidavit which he had made before a registrar of election in his county in order that he might be enrolled as a permanent voter under Acts 1901, p. 756, c. 550. The contention of the state was that, as that affidavit had been found in the office of the clerk of the superior court, witnessed by the registrar of election, it was therefore equivalent to, and of the same dignity as, an affidavit made in the trial of a civil action, and, in law, furnished a sufficient standard of comparison. That insistence of the state raises a most important question of evidence, and, as the state on the next trial may prove the handwriting of Freeman by other means, it is not necessary to decide it here.

Kerr, an expert witness on handwriting, was being examined as a witness for the state, and, after he had been examined and cross-examined at length, was asked by the defendants' counsel to explain to the jury the similarity in the handwriting of these papers. The witness said, "I will not go over to the jury and point this similarity unless his honor instructs me to do so." It is stated in the record that just then his honor, declining to allow the witness to further testify as to this matter, said in the presence and hearing of the jury that "the witness had fully explained for at least an hour to the jury, and the satisfaction of the court [italics ours], the similarity of the writing in these papers." No doubt the judge and the witness were tired out with the protracted cross-examination of the witness, but his honor ought not to have expressed himself in the presence of the jury as to the effect the evidence of the witness had produced on his mind. What he said was equivalent to instructing the jury that the witness had proved the similarity of the writings to his satisfaction. That he had no right to say.

His honor, in giving the contention of the state, and to which the eighteenth exception was filed, was in error. Instead of presenting it as he did, it seems to us that he should have cautioned the jury against the spirit of its conclusion. The language of his honor was as follows: "The state further insists that the circumstances and facts detailed by the witnesses point to the guilt of the defendants; that the state has shown that a crime was committed under such circumstances that no eyewitness could be had; that it has shown you a motive for the crime; that all the defendants were living on the land of E. J. Davis, whose hogs were shut up, and connected with him by blood or marriage; that the number of persons engaged in the crime were from 6 to 10—more than enough to include all the defendants; that only one other man lived in the locality where the tracks were traced; and that, while it was impossible to get all the guilty ones, there is no danger of getting too many." As long as he saw fit to present the argument of the solicitor, he should have cautioned the jury to have convicted neither one of the defendants until his guilt had been shown beyond a reasonable doubt.

New trial.

(126 N. C. 674)

STATE v. BELL et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—CROPS—REMOVAL BY TENANT—PROSECUTION—DEFENSES—INDEBTEDNESS OF LANDLORD—NOTICE OF REMOVAL—STARE DECISIS.

1. Code, § 1759, provides that any tenant removing crops without the consent of the lessor, and without giving him five days' notice of such intended removal, and before satisfying all liens, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Other portions of the statute declare that the crop shall remain on the land until the landlord and tenant come to a settlement of accounts, and that, if the landlord unjustly refuses to settle, the tenant may sell a part of the crop, by giving five days' notice, and, if a settlement cannot be made, either party may apply to a court having jurisdiction to compel a settlement. Held that, on a prosecution for removing crops without having satisfied liens or having given five days' notice of such removal, it is no defense that defendant had been damaged by a failure of the landlord to comply with the contract, and that such damage amounted to more than the rents and advancements.

2. Where the Supreme Court reverses the law as laid down in a prior decision, and defendant in a criminal case may have acted on advice of counsel based on the law as declared in the first opinion, a new trial will be ordered, that the defendant may establish his defense in accordance with the former ruling, if he is entitled to do so, but the new construction put upon the statute will be applied to all future cases.

Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Ferguson, Judge.

Josiah Bell and another were convicted of removing crops made by them as tenants, in violation of Code, § 1759, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Wooten & Wooten and Land & Cowper, for appellants. The Attorney General, for the State.

CONNOR, J. The defendants were indicted for removing and selling tobacco made by them as tenants on the lands of the prosecutor, without having satisfied the liens thereon, or giving five days' notice of such removal and sale, as required by section 1759 of the Code. There was no controversy in regard to the terms of the lease. The defendants admitted the removal and sale of the tobacco. The defense is set forth in the exceptions. From a judgment based upon a verdict of guilty, they appealed.

There was evidence tending to show that before the removal of any part of the crop the prosecutor consented to the sale of several loads of tobacco to get money to save the balance. Thereafter the defendants removed and sold the balance of the crop, and retained the proceeds.

The defendants offered to show that they had sustained damage by reason of the failure of the landlord to comply with the contract; that such damage amounted to more than the rents and advancements. The court, upon objection by the state, excluded the testimony so far as it affected the rents. Defendants excepted. The counsel for defendants insist that the testimony was competent, as settled by this court in State v. Neal, 129 N. C. 692, 40 S. E. 205. In that case the defendant, being on trial for the same offense, was permitted to show that he had sustained damage by reason of the failure of the landlord to repair the house on the premises as he had contracted to do; that he contracted for the use of 25 acres, and was permitted to cultivate only 15 acres. It is not easy to distinguish the two cases. It is evident that the majority of the court were impressed with the hardship of the statute construed as contended for by the state. Mr. Justice Douglas, in a concurring opinion, speaks of "the hardship which might result to the tenant" by permitting him to be convicted, when he might be able to show that he did not owe the landlord. The statute is very explicit in prohibiting the removal of any part of the crop until the liens are satisfied, or "before satisfying all liens," unless the tenant shall give five days' notice. The language of the statute would seem to be capable of a construction prohibiting such removal, without regard to the satisfaction of the liens, unless the notice was given. This court has construed it otherwise. State v. Crowder, 97 N. C. 432, 1 S. E. 690. While we should always avoid giving to a criminal statute a construction, in case of doubt, which makes its operation harsh or oppressive, we may not disregard the plain expression of the legislative will because we may think it harsh or even unjust. We do not think that the words used are open to reasonable doubt. The tenant owes the rent or advancements. The landlord has a lien on the crops, the product of the land of one and labor of the other. The statute declares that the crop shall remain on the land, unless otherwise agreed, until the landlord and tenant come to a settlement of the accounts and dealings, and the liens are satisfied. If the landlord will unduly or unjustly refuse to come to a settlement, the tenant may, by giving the five days' notice, sell a part of the crop without subjecting himself to a criminal prosecution. This gives to the landlord a reasonable time to come to a settlement. If they cannot do so, either of them may apply to a court having jurisdiction to compel a settlement. Pending such proceeding the rights of both parties are protected by retention of the crop or a bond for the value. The evident purpose of the Legislature was to prevent litigation. Nothing is more certain to bring about litigation than the course pursued by the defendants. They had not satisfied the liens, and it is evident from the testimony that they knew the law. To satisfy a claim is to pay or discharge it, not to set up some other claim for unliquidated damages. There was not, so far as the testimony shows, any suggestion by the defendants to the landlord that they had any such claim. While we recognize the duty of the court to avoid overruling its decisions, we feel well assured that the language of the statute demands that we concur with his honor's ruling, and overrule our own decision in Neal's Case. It is very desirable that the relative rights and duties of landlords and tenants be clearly defined. The statute is plain, and, when it is understood that the court will not encourage experimenting with it, both parties will recognize and respect the rights of each other.

While we hold the law to be as stated, we are embarrassed in applying this ruling to this case. It may be that these defendants have acted upon the advice of counsel based upon the decision of this court in State v. Neal, supra. If so, to try them by the law as herein announced would be an injustice. While it is true that no man has a vested right in a decision of the court, it is equally well settled that where, in the construction of a contract or in declaring the law respecting its validity, the court thereafter reverses its decision, contractual rights as acquired by virtue of the law as declared in the first opinion will not be disturbed. We have diligently searched for authority by which courts have been governed in cases such as the one before us. We find nothing very satisfactory. In view of the peculiar conditions with which we are dealing, we have deemed it but just to the defendants, and not at variance with any authority in this court, to order a new trial, with the direction that the testimony offered in this case, in so far as it is made admissible by the ruling of this court in State v. Neal, be admitted. If the defendants shall be able to establish their defense in accordance with the ruling in Neal's Case, they are entitled to do so; but the construction now put upon the statute will be applied to all future cases. While, as we have said, we find no authority directly in point, we think this course is sustained by what is said in Wells on Stare Decisis, 566. See, also, Township v. State, 150 Ind. 168, 49 N. E. 961; 26 A. & E. Encyc. Law, 179; In re Dunham, 8 Fed. Cas. 37. There will be a new trial. Let this be certified.

New trial.

DOUGLAS, J. (dissenting). I still adhere to the principles asserted in my concurring opinion in Neal's Case, 129 N. C. 692, 40 S. E. 205, as it seems proper that all statutes should, as far as possible, be construed in accordance with natural justice. Section 1759 of the Code provides that "any lessee or cropper, or the assigns of either, or any other person, who shall remove said crop, or any part thereof, from such land without the consent of the lessor or his assigns, and without giving him or his agent five days' notice of such intended removal, and before satisfying all the liens held by the lessor or his assigns, on said crop, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." It will be noticed that the conjunction "and" is used in connecting the three acts constituting the offense, which therefore depends upon the concurrence of all three of the conditions. If consent is obtained, or notice is given, or the liens are paid, there can be no offense, as one of its essential conditions is lacking. The evident purpose of the statute is to secure the payment of all liens; and if such liens are paid its essential object is fully accomplished.

The record states that "the defendants offered to prove that they had suffered damage by reason of the prosecutor not complying with his contract in excess of the advancements and the rents. The court said he would permit the evidence to set off the advancements made by the prosecutor, but exclude its application to set off the rents." I do not clearly see the distinction between rents and advancements. In either aspect, I do not see why a defendant may not be permitted to plead a just indebtedness arising out of the same transaction of renting. This would be a valid set-off or counterclaim in a civil action, and would prevent any recovery by the landlord. Of course, the tenant would act at his own peril, and would be criminally liable if he failed to make good his defense; but it seems to me that he should have the opportunity of presenting it. Whether the landlord was in fact liable in any amount to the defendants in the case at bar is immaterial to the consideration of this question. We must assume he was, as they were refused the opportunity of proving the fact. It did the defendants no good to permit them to set off their claims against the advancements, if they were held criminally liable for the rents. Landowners are justly entitled to the equal protection of the law; but I do not feel called upon to change the conjunctive "and" in the statute into the disjunctive "or," when it results in putting a man upon the roads for neglecting to pay a debt that he did not owe and removing a crop that was his own.

(126 N. C. 489)

GREEN v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1904.)

TELEGRAM — NEGLIGENCE — PRESUMPTION — MENTAL ANGUISH—MOTION TO NON-SUIT—EFFECT.

1. The fact that a message received by a telegraph company for delivery at a certain street number was not delivered until the day following its receipt, when called for by the sendee, raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the telegraph company.

2. Where a message was received by a telegraph company for delivery at a certain street number, but the name of the sendee was incorrectly recorded by the receiving operator, the telegraph company is not excused from its negligent failure to deliver the message at the street number because the mistake was due to the similarity of sound on the telegraph keys between one of the letters of the sendee's name and one of the letters in the name as incorrectly taken from the wires.

3. Mental anguish caused by the negligence of a telegraph company in failing to deliver a message announcing the arrival of a 16 year old girl alone on a midnight train in a town where she was a stranger constitutes a basis for the recovery of damages in an action by her against the telegraph company, though the anguish consisted merely in annoyance resulting from the failure to have some one meet her at the station.

4. A demurrer to a complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action admits all the facts alleged in the complaint, construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Halifax County; Moore, Judge.

Action by Willie Hall Green, by her next friend, I. E. Green, against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

The material facts are thus briefly stated by the defendant: This is the plaintiff's appeal from a judgment sustaining the defendant's demurrer. The complaint states that the plaintiff was a girl of 16, living in Weldon, the daughter of Isaac E. Green. That the defendant telegraph company maintained offices at Weldon and Columbia, and on September 23, 1903, she left Weldon to go to Spartanburg, S. C., via Columbia, and that it was necessary for her to remain over in Columbia during the night. That the agent of the defendant company at Weldon was acquainted with the young lady and her father, and the father informed the agent that he greatly desired some one to meet his daughter in Columbia. That, immediately after the train on which the young lady was traveling left Weldon, her father, Dr. Green, delivered the following message to the defendant's agent in Weldon, directed to: "Mrs. Jno. B. Lee, 2010 Main Street, Columbia, S. C.: Willie leaves here on Coast Line train 39 to-day. Meet her. [Signed] I. E. Green." This message was taken in Columbia as addressed to "Mrs. Knobblee, 2010 Main street," and was not delivered until the next morning, when Mrs. John B. Lee inquired for it at the telegraph office at Columbia. The plaintiff, Miss Willie Green, arrived in Columbia about 12 o'clock the same night, and found no one to meet her. She was naturally disturbed and anxious. The conductor put her in charge of the colored matron at the station in Columbia, the matron secured a hack, and after some delay she was driven to the house of her friend Mrs. Lee. That, by reason of this negligence upon the part of the defendant, the plaintiff suffered mental anguish. Upon this the defendant demurred to the complaint, for that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action which, under the circumstances set forth, entitled the plaintiff to recover damages for so-called mental anguish, and that the disappointment and annoyance which the plaintiff calls "mental anguish," arising under the circumstances set out in the complaint, is not a legal ground for damages for mental anguish. His honor sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff appealed.

¶ 2. See Telegraphs and Telephones, vol. 45, Cent. Dig. § 61.

Day & Bell, Murray Allen, and W. E. Daniel, for appellant. F. H. Busbee & Son and R. C. Strong, for appellee.

DOUGLAS, J. (after stating the facts). The defendant in its brief thus states the question intended to be presented: "This case baldly presents the question, which it has been apparent would soon arise, whether the barriers are to be thrown down, and every disappointment, annoyance, or vexation which may arise from a delay or a misdirected telegram can be the subject of an action for mental anguish. In other words, whether any annoyance, disappointment, vexation, or anxiety on account of a missing friend at the station, or from other cause, can be dignified by the name of 'mental anguish,' and adjudged to rank in the same class with the poignant grief arising from a failure to reach the bedside of a dying wife in time to receive her last adieus." We are fully aware of the importance of the question thus presented, and have given it the careful consideration which it deserves. We do not desire to impose any additional burdens upon telegraph companies or require any unnecessary restrictions, but we cannot ignore the essential purposes of their creation. A telegraph company is a quasi public corporation—private in the ownership of its stock, but public in the nature of its duties. It has all the powers of a private corporation, such as a separate legal existence, perpetual succession, and freedom from individual liability, and possesses, also, in addition thereto, the extraordinary privileges which under our Constitution can be exercised only by such corporations as are organized for a public purpose, and then only when necessary for the proper fulfillment of such purpose. Among the extraordinary privileges enjoyed by such corporations is the condemnation of private property, which can never be taken for a private purpose. The acceptance of such privileges at once fixes upon the corporation the indelible impress of a public use. A telegraph company is essentially public in its duties. Without such public duties there would be neither reason for its creation, nor excuse for its continued existence. In fact, being the complement of the postal service, it is one of those great public agencies so important in its nature and far-reaching in its application that some of our wisest statesmen have deemed its continued ownership in private hands a menace to public interests. Hence it follows, both upon reason and authority, that the failure of a telegraph company to promptly and correctly transmit and deliver a message received by it is a breach of a public duty imposed by operation of law. In the words of a great English judge: "A breach of this duty is a breach of the law, and for this breach an action lies, founded on the common law, which action wants not the aid of a contract to support it." This has been expressly held by this court in Cashion v. Tel. Co., 124 N. C. 459, 32 S. E. 746, 45 L. R. A. 160; Landle v. Tel. Co., 124 N. C. 528, 32 S. E. 886; and Cogdell v. Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 431, 47 S. E. 490.

The demurrer admits all the facts alleged in the complaint, construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. It is therefore admitted that the message was received by the defendant, and not delivered until the following day, when called for by the sendee. This of itself raises the presumption of negligence. Sherrill v. Tel. Co., 116 N. C. 655, 21 S. E. 429; Hendricks v. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 304, 35 S. E. 543, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658; Laudie v. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 431, 35 S. E. 810, 78 Am. St. Rep. 668; Rosser v. Tel. Co., 130 N. C. 251, 41 S. E. 378; Hunter v. Tel. Co., 130 N. C. 602, 41 S. E. 796; Cogdell v. Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 431, 47 S. E. 490. Aside from this presumption, we think the facts alleged clearly tend to prove negligence on the part of the defendant. The telegram was addressed to Mrs. Jno. B. Lee, 2010 Main street. The name of the sendee was changed in transmission to Mrs. Knobblee. The defendant urges in excuse for such negligence the similarity between the telegraphic

"J" and "K." This is no legal excuse. Cogdell v. Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 431, 47 S. E. 490. If the defendant adopts a code intrinsically liable to such mistakes, it should exercise the greater care in preventing them. The defendant's agents could at least have inquired at the street address given in the telegram. Such inquiry would doubtless have resulted in ascertaining the identity of the sendee. Such was the result when Mrs. Lee called for the telegram on the following day. The plaintiff alleges that she suffered mental anguish, and this is also admitted by the demurrer. Aside from this, we think the circumstances in which she was placed may well have caused it. A girl 16 years of age finds herself after midnight in a strange city, riding two miles in a carriage with an unknown driver. It is true, she suffered no insult or physical injury; but the question is, what would be the natural effect upon the mind and nervous system of a child of her age? Nature offers no flower more tender or more fair than budding womanhood, and around it every protection will be thrown by the hand of the law. The defendant was informed of the full purpose of the telegram, and the importance of its immediate delivery. It therefore remains only to consider whether, under the admitted facts, the plaintiff is entitled to recover compensatory damages for the mental anguish she may have suffered as the direct result of the defendant's negligence. We see no reason why she cannot, and we find no authority in this state to the contrary.

It is said by the defendant that "it does not require to be pointed out that if the barriers are once thrown down, and any disappointment, annoyance, or unnecessary alarm occasioned by a delayed telegram shall be allowed to be the subject of damages, every barrier which the law has erected in the limitation of actions for damages will be thrown down, and the waters will be out in deluge." We do not think that any such result will follow our decision in this case, but such a possibility should not deter us from giving to the plaintiff the full measure of justice to which she is entitled. The defendant, in its brief, quotes the following extract from the decision of this court in Chappell v. Ellis, 123 N. C., on page 263, 31 S. E. 709, 68 Am. St. Rep. 822, which we may here repeat: "But it is urged that the principle of the Cashion Case, if carried to its fullest extent, would directly lead to the recovery of damages for all kinds of mental suffering. It may be, but we feel compelled to carry out a principle only to its necessary and logical results, and not to its furthest theoretical limit, in disregard of other essential principles. * * * We do not feel at liberty to adopt any one principle as the sole guide of our decisions, and to carry it out to extreme and dangerous limits, regardless of other great principles of justice and of law so firmly established by reason and precedent." As we have already said, we are now considering the question of damages resulting from the breach of a public duty by a quasi public corporation. How far this principle may in the future be extended to other corporations or to other circumstances, we cannot tell; and, in the absence of any matter before us involving its further consideration, we have neither the right nor the wish to limit or extend its application, as a pure matter of legal speculation. As the cases come up, we will decide them as best we may. In the meantime we will try to confine our opinion to the facts of this case, and others identical therewith. We may, however, say that there seems a material difference between an incidental tort by an individual or a private corporation, and the breach by a quasi public corporation of a public duty relating to the essential object of its creation. The exact nature of this difference it is difficult and at present unnecessary to determine.

It is true, no case has been called to our attention in which this court has allowed damages for mental anguish arising from the failure to deliver a telegram, except in cases relating to sickness or death. On the other hand, we are not aware of any case in which this court has drawn any such distinction either in the allowance or disallowance of damages. The nearest approach to any such limitation that the diligence of the learned counsel for the defense, aided by our own research, has been able to find, is Chappell v. Ellis, 123 N. C. 259, 31 S. E. 709, 68 Am. St. Rep. 822, in which a poor old woman, against whom a writ of possession had been issued, was thrown out upon the highway. In that case the eviction was lawful, and it was merely the unlawful taking of certain personal property, nearly all of which was soon after returned, that could be considered in the assessment of damages. It is true, this court, in distinguishing that case from Cashion's Case, says: "The opinion in Cashion's Case was hinged on the solemn fact of death, and the associations inseparable from the final severance of all earthly ties by an immortal spirit. The anguish of a mother bending over the body of her child, every lock of whose sunny hair is entwined with a heart string, and kissing the cold lips that are closed forever, cannot come within the range of comparison with any mental suffering caused by the loss of a pig." This language, correctly describing the facts in Cashion's Case, was used to more fully and forcibly distinguish it from Chappell's Case, and not as a limitation upon the general doctrine. Its purpose and application is apparent from the following language of the court in the same case: "The doctrine of mental suffering or 'mental anguish,' as we prefer to call it, as indicating a higher degree of suffering than arises from mere disappointment or annoyance, contemplates purely compensatory damages, and, as far as we are aware, has never been applied to cases like that at bar. This case would come under the rule of exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages, as they are variously denominated. Such damages, which look not only to the loss sustained by the plaintiff, but still more to the conduct of the defendant, can be allowed only where there is shown, on the part of the defendants, malice, wantonness, oppression, brutality, insult, gross negligence, or certain cases of fraud. * * * We are not insensible to the pitiable condition of the plaintiff, thrown upon the highway without shelter and with but little to eat; but we must remember that her shelterless condition, which probably caused the greater part of her distress, was the result of a lawful eviction. Charity would have dictated a different course, but that great virtue is not enforceable in a court of law." Both before and since that opinion was rendered this court has recognized the doctrine in cases merely of sickness. While one may lead to the other, there is a vast difference between sickness and death, and there seems no reason why principles recognized in the former should not apply to kindred cases of equal strength and importance. While we find no direct decision of the question in any of our cases, we think that their line of reasoning tends to recognize the legal existence of mental suffering apart from sickness and death. This is especially so in Young v. Tel. Co., 107 N. C. 370, 11 S. E. 1044, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883; Morton v. Tel. Co., 130 N. C. 299, 41 S. E. 484; Bright v. Tel. Co., 132 N. C. 317, 43 S. E. 841; and Bryan v. Tel. Co., 133 N. C. 603, 45 S. E. 938. In Cashion v. Tel. Co., 123 N. C. 267, 31 S. E. 493, this court quotes as follows from Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 605: "In case of delay or total failure of delivery of messages relating to matters not connected with business, such as personal or domestic matters, we do not think that the company in fault ought to escape with mere nominal damages, on account of the want of strict commercial value in such messages. Delay in the announcement of a death, an arrival, the straying or recovery of a child, and the like, may often be productive of an injury to the feelings which cannot be easily estimated in money, but for which a jury should be at liberty to award fair damages." This same language is quoted with approval in Young v. Tel. Co., 107 N. C., on page 373, 11 S. E. 1044, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883.

In neither Bright's nor Cashion's Case was the plaintiff the sendee of the message, nor was she deprived of the satisfaction of attending the death or burial of the deceased. In both cases she sued on account of the absence of a relative to whom she looked for consolation and assistance. The death of the deceased was the occasion, rather than the cause, of the anguish for which she recovered. In cases where great stress is laid upon the fact of sickness or death, it is with the view of fixing the defendant with notice of the importance of the message, where it has received no special information, like those cases where near relationship is relied on simply to raise the presumption of suffering. In Lynne v. Tel. Co., 123 N. C. 129, 31 S. E. 350, this court says, on page 133, 123 N. C., page 351, 31 S. E.: "The same contention [that the relation of the parties was not disclosed] was made in that case that the defendant makes in this, and the court say, among other things, 'that the rule insisted on by appellant is too restricted to be safely applied to communications sent by the electric telegraph. * * * When such communications relate to sickness and death, there accompanies them a common-sense suggestion that they are of importance, and that the persons addressed have in them a serious interest.'" In Cashion v. Tel. Co., 124 N. C. 459, 32 S. E. 746, 45 L. R. A. 160 (second appeal), this court says on page 464, 124 N. C., page 747, 32 S. E., 45 L. R. A. 160: "The telegram in question stated that Mr. Cashion had been killed while at work, and, on its face, suggested that it was of unusual importance to somebody. The defendant knew that somewhere there was a vacant chair; that some one the lonely death watch was keeping. Who or where, it mattered not to the defendant, as it had no more right to wrong one person than another."

Another significant fact is the growing tendency of judicial opinion to allow compensatory damages for mental suffering even when disconnected with any physical suffering. This is forcibly illustrated in the case of Osborne v. Leach, 135 N. O. 628, 47 S. E. 811, where this court holds that in cases of libel, where the statute forbids punitive damages, actual damages may be allowed for mental suffering alone. This court says on page 633: "This being an action upon a libel per se, the plaintiff has a right to recover compensatory damages. Newell on S. & L. 43; Hale, supra, p. 99. Compensatory damages include all other damages than punitive, thus embracing not only special damages, as direct pecuniary loss, but injury to feelings, mental anguish, and damages to character or reputation. 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. (2d Ed.) 1082 et seq.; Hale, supra, 106, 99. 'Actual damages are synonymous' with 'compensatory damages.' Newell, supra, 839; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. (2d Ed.) 1081 et seq. Damages for mental suffering are actual or compensatory. They are not special nor punitive, and are given to indemnify the plaintiff for the injury suffered. 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. (2d Ed.) 602. The law infers actual or compensatory damages for injury to the feelings and reputation of the plaintiff from a libel calculated to humiliate him or injure his reputation or character."

Of course, in cases merely of slander or libel there could be no physical pain except as the reaction of mental suffering. The mere fact that a shock to the feelings which goes directly to the mind, without ever touching the body, may produce such reaction upon the physical system as even to endanger life itself, is per se the surest proof of the existence of actual suffering, and the strongest argument for the allowance of compensatory damages. If such suffering actually results directly from the wrongful act of the defendant, it would seem to make but little difference what were the collateral circumstances.

The case at bar was ably and elaborately argued, orally and by brief, on both sides; and, in the end, we find ourselves compelled to decide the question upon the reason of the thing, rather than any weight of decided authority. Of course, we could not look for precedents where the doctrine of mental anguish is not recognized; and, even where it is, the facts of the respective cases generally fall short of direct application. With few exceptions, as in our own state, the element of death or sickness appears directly or indirectly in the case; but, as with us, we find no decision containing any such limitation of the doctrine. The cases most nearly in point are those of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Proctor, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 300, 25 S. W. 811, and same plaintiff in error v. Taylor (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 69. In the latter case, filed April 3, 1904, and reaffirmed by the denial of a rehearing on June 1, 1904, it was held (quoting the headnote) that: "Where a wife telegraphed to her husband to meet her, but, owing to the telegraph company's negligence, the message was not delivered, and she arrived at the railroad station at night, and went to a hotel, where she failed to secure lodging, owing to its crowded condition, and from which, after a delay, she voluntarily went, escorted by a stranger, who treated her with courtesy, in a search for her husband, to a second hotel, where she found him, she was not entitled to damages from the telegraph company for mental suffering accruing from the time she reached the first hotel until she found her husband." We do not very clearly understand the reasoning of this case, nor do we see the force of the apparently arbitrary distinction between the mental suffering incurred between the depot and the first hotel, and that between the first hotel and the second. The latter seems to have been based upon the belief of the appellate court that in fact there was no such suffering. The point pertinent to the case at bar is that the plaintiff was allowed to recover compensatory damages for mental suffering disconnected from any physical pain or attending circumstances of sickness or death.

In Proctor's Case the court held (quoting headnote) that: "R. eloped with plaintiff's daughter, aged 15 years, going towards the county seat to procure license and be married. Plaintiff at once telegraphed the county clerk, stating the girl's age and forbidding the issuance of license; but, through negligent delay in the delivery of the message, it did not reach the clerk until after license had been issued and the parties married. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover of the telegraph company damages for the loss of his daughter's services up to the age of 18, and also for the mental distress involved." In that case the court, on page 304, 6 Tex. Civ. App., page 813, 25 S. W., says: "We think, also, that he was entitled to recover for the mental distress involved. We cannot distinguish this case, in principle from the case of Stuart v. Telegraph Co., 66 Tex. 584, 18 S. W. 351, 59 Am. Rep. 623 (relating to sickness and death), and that line of decisions. The solicitude of a parent for the welfare of an only daughter of tender years, committed to his care both by nature and law, is certainly not less substantial than the affection of one brother for another."

Although not a telegraph case, we are much impressed with the reasoning of the court in Missouri P. Ry. Co. v. Kaiser (Tex. Sup.) 18 S. W. 305, where a girl 16 years of age, accompanied only by a girl companion, was ejected from the train at a small town where she was a stranger, and where she remained an hour before she was discovered by friends. The court therein says: "It is contended that the court erred in refusing a special charge asked by the defendant to the effect that plaintiff could not recover for mental suffering arising from any supposed or anticipated danger, because there was no aggravation attending her leaving the train, nor in the action of the conductor, and, such being the case, she could only recover for inconvenience, loss of time, labor, and expense of reaching her destination. We do not think that this charge should have been given. We do not think that the mental condition of the plaintiff can properly be considered as arising 'from a supposed or anticipated danger.' The circumstances of two inexperienced girls, unaccustomed to traveling, suddenly ejected from a train at a small railroad station, where they were entire strangers, and contrary to provisions made for their safety by their careful parents, were well calculated to arouse in their minds feelings of insecurity and danger that would not have been properly characterized by referring to them in a charge as merely 'supposed or anticipated.'" This language singularly fits the case at bar.

In the recent case of Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 70 N. E. 857, decided April 26, 1904, the Court of Appeals of New York, in an able and learned opinion, held that a passenger on a street car can recover from the company for injuries to her feelings caused by the insulting language of the conductor; and that such damages are compensatory, and not exemplary. The opinion quotes with approval the following language from Thompson on Negligence, § 3238: "Damages given on the footing of humiliation, mortification, mental suffering, etc., are compensatory, and not exemplary, damages. They are given because of the suffering to which the passenger has been wrongfully subjected by the carrier. The quantum of this suffering may not, and generally does not, depend at all upon the mental condition of the carrier's servant, whether he acted honestly or dishonestly, with or without malice." Further on in the opinion the court uses the following language: "Humiliation and indignity are elements of actual damages, and these may arise from a sense of injury and outraged rights in being ejected from a railroad train without regard to the manner in which the ejection was effected, though only done through mistake." The court also says: "The relation between a carrier and its passenger is more than a mere contract relation, as it may exist in the absence of any contract whatsoever. Any person rightfully on the cars of a railroad company is entitled to protection by the carrier, and any breach of its duty in that respect is in the nature of a tort, and recovery may be had in an action of tort as well as for a breach of the contract." We have quoted from this opinion because it unequivocally asserts the principle that a plaintiff can recover in tort compensatory damages for purely mental suffering, without any physical pain whatever, resulting from the breach of public duty by a common carrier. Telegraph and railroad companies are in their nature essentially similar, as being quasi public corporations organized for a public purpose, and fixed with a public use. For the breach of a public duty they are both liable in tort, and we see no reason why similar injuries arising from such breach of duty should not be governed by similar principles. That it is well settled in railroad cases is abundantly shown by the authorities cited in the last-named case, and we think that those authorities are applicable by analogy to the case at bar. For this reason, we have not deemed it necessary to cite the decisions allowing compensatory damages for mental suffering, without any physical pain, in such cases as seduction, breach of promise, slander and libel, malicious arrest and prosecution, false imprisonment, criminal conversation, and kissing a female against her will.

The defendant apparently relies upon the case of McAllen v. Telegraph Co., 70 Tex. 243, 7 S. W. 715, where the plaintiff sent a telegram to his father, who lived 75 miles from a railroad, to send the family carriage to take him home. The message was not delivered, and the carriage was not sent, whereupon the plaintiff took up the idea that "some dreadful calamity had befallen his father." He thereupon took passage in a "jerkey" and on a buckboard, and subsequently sued the telegraph company for mental anguish as well as physical suffering. The court held that neither the imaginary death of his father, nor the bouncing of the buckboard, was within the contemplation of the parties. That case has no application to the one at bar, coming clearly within the rule laid down in Bowers v. Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 504, 47 S. E. 597.

We are struck with the phrase so often used—notably by Joyce on Electric Law—"Telegrams as to sickness, death, or the like." The meaning of the last three words is not defined, but there is an unwelcome suggestion, upon which the mind refuses to dwell, of what might happen to a defenseless girl in the deserted streets of a city at midnight, that may well be likened to death itself.

In this connection we have endeavored to ascertain the latest decisions of the courts of the different states upon this subject. When we remember that this doctrine of mental anguish in telegraph cases is of recent origin, having theretofore been deemed contrary to the principles of the common law, and has made constant progress in opposition to the preconceived ideas of courts and jurists, it seems that it must possess much inherent strength and merit. This is especially evident from the actions of certain courts, some of them of the highest reputation, which, while denying the doctrine in telegraph cases that damages for mental suffering may be recovered in the absence of physical pain or injury, allow it in cases of a kindred nature, such, for instance, as insulting or humiliating a passenger. The following is the present status of the doctrine in the different states, as far as we have been able to ascertain:

Its history in the state of Texas, where it was first specifically announced, may be briefly stated as follows: The first case in that court is the celebrated one of So Relle v. Telegraph Company, 55 Tex. 308, 40 Am. Rep. 805. There it was held that there could be a recovery in such cases. The next cases were Railway Company v. Levy, 59 Tex. 542, 46 Am. Rep. 289, and Id., 59 Tex. 563, 46 Am. Rep. 278. These cases were construed by the profession as in some respects modifying the doctrine in the first case. The question again arose in Stuart v. Western Union Telegraph Company, 66 Tex. 580, 18 S. W. 351, 59 Am. Rep. 623, and the rule announced in So Relle's Case was followed. That case was very thoroughly considered, and the decision then made has settled the law in that state upon the main question. Its reports show some 50 cases since in which the doctrine has been followed without question.

In Tennessee the doctrine was first announced in Wadsworth v. Telegraph Company, 86 Tenn. 695, 8 S. W. 574, 6 Am. St. Rep. 884, and has been reaffirmed in Telegraph Company v. Mellon, 96 Tenn. 72, 33 S. W. 725, and Gray v. Telegraph Company, 108 Tenn.

39, 64 S. W. 1063, 56 L. R. A. 301, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706.

In Alabama the doctrine was expressly recognized in Telegraph Company v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 7 South. 419, 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, but seems to have been somewhat modified in the more recent case of Telegraph Company v. Crumpton, 138 Ala. 632, 36 South. 517, which appears to be the latest decision upon the subject.

In Kentucky the leading case in which such damages are allowed is Chapman v. Telegraph Company, 90 Ky. 265, 13 S. W. 880. The doctrine is affirmed in the later cases of Telegraph Company v. Van Cleave, 107 Ky. 464, 54 S. W. 827, 92 Am. St. Rep. 366, and Telegraph Company v. Fisher, 107 Ky. 513, 54 S. W. 830.

In Iowa damages for mental anguish unaccompanied by physical pain are allowed. The leading case is Mentzer v. Telegraph Company, 93 Iowa, 752, 62 N. W. 1, 28 L. R. A. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, a carefully considered case, which has been widely cited. This case stood as the only expression of that court upon the subject until the recent case of Cowan v. Telegraph Company, 98 N. W. 281, 64 L. R. A. 545.

In Louisiana such damages are allowed. The leading and most recent case is Graham v. Telegraph Company, 34 South. 91.

In South Carolina they are also allowed. At first the doctrine was denied in Lewis v. Telegraph Company, 57 S. C. 325, 35 S. E. 556. This case was followed by an act of the Legislature (23 St. at Large, 748; Civ. Code 1902, vol. 1, § 2223) permitting damages in such cases. This statute was held to be constitutional in Simmons v. Telegraph Company, 63 S. C. 429, 41 S. E. 521, 57 L. R. A. 607, which has subsequently been uniformly followed.

In Nevada the doctrine has been recently adopted in the case of Barnes v. Telegraph Company, 76 Pac. 931, 65 L. R. A. 666, in an able and learned opinion by Fitzgerald, J.

In Washington there does not appear to be any decision upon a telegraph case, but the principle is fully recognized in Davis v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Company, 35 Wash. 203, 77 Pac. 209, in which telegraph cases are cited with approval.

The doctrine is denied in the following states, as is shown by the most recent cases:

Florida: Telegraph Company v. Saunders, 32 Fla. 434, 14 South. 148, 21 L. R. A. 810, apparently the only case upon the subject in that state.

Georgia: Chapman v. Telegraph Company, 88 Ga. 768, 15 S. E. 901, 17 L. R. A. 430, 30 Am. St. Rep. 183; Giddens v. Telegraph Company, 111 Ga. 824, 35 S. E. 688.

Illinois: Telegraph Company v. Haltom, 71 Ill. App. 63. The question does not appear to have come before the Supreme Court of that state.

Indiana: Telegraph Company v. Ferguson,

157 Ind. 64, 60 N. E. 674, 1080, 54 L. R. A. 846.

Kansas: West v. Telegraph Company, 39 Kan. 93, 17 Pac. 807, 7 Am. St. Rep. 530, appears to be the latest telegraph case in that state involving the question; but that case has been reaffirmed in Railway Company v. Dalton, 65 Kan. 661, 70 Pac. 645.

Minnesota: Francis v. Telegraph Company, 58 Minn. 252, 59 N. W. 1078, 25 L. R. A. 406, 49 Am. St. Rep. 507, which is the only case in that state.

Mississippi: Telegraph Company v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748, 9 South. 823, 13 L. R. A. 859, 24 Am. St. Rep. 300. This case has apparently been doubted in one or two subsequent cases, which, however, are not directly in point.

Ohio: Morton v. Telegraph Company, 53 Ohio St. 431, 41 N. E. 689, 32 L. R. A. 735, 53 Am. St. Rep. 648, seems to be the only case in that state involving the question.

West Virginia: Davis v. Telegraph Company, 46 W. Va. 48, 32 S. E. 1026.

Wisconsin: Summerfield v. Telegraph Company, 87 Wis. 1, 57 N. W. 973, 41 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Virginia: Connelly v. Telegraph Company, 100 Va. 51, 40 S. E. 618, 56 L. R. A. 663, 93 Am. St. Rep. 919. In this state a statute was passed upon the subject, which apparently failed of its purpose.

In the following states there have been no decisions in telegraph cases upon the question, so far as we have been able to ascertain: Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, and Wyoming.

As the primary doctrine of mental anguish in telegraph cases has been too long and firmly settled by this court to be now called in question, if decided cases stand for aught, and as we feel impelled by both reason and authority to apply these principles to the case at bar, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the demurrer overruled.

Reversed.

CONNOR, J., concurs in the result.

(136 N. C. 506)

GREEN v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1904.)

TELEGRAMS—FAILURE TO DELIVER—MENTAL SUFFERING.

1. Plaintiff, who sent a telegram announcing that his young daughter would arrive at a certain place during the night, and requesting the addressee to meet her, is entitled to recover for mental suffering because of the negligent failure to deliver the telegram, though he would have had no such suffering but for the fact that the company informed him next morning that the telegram was not delivered, where, if it had promptly informed him of the nondelivery, he could have sent another telegram in time for the addressee to meet his daughter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Halifax County; Moore, Judge.

Action by I. E. Green against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiff for 50 cents and costs, plaintiff appeals, because the court adjudged on demurrer that the complaint did not entitle him to recover for mental anguish. Reversed.

Day & Bell, Murray Allen, and W. E. Daniel, for appellant. F. H. Busbee & Son and R. C. Strong, for appellee.

DOUGLAS, J. This case is the correlative of that of Willie H. Green against the same defendant, which we have fully discussed and decided. 49 S. E. 165. That discussion, settling the underlying principles in this case, it is unnecessary to repeat. The transaction was the same, and the negligent failure of the defendant to deliver the telegram was as much a breach of public duty towards the father as it was towards the daughter. The injury being the same, it would follow that the right of recovery would be equal, provided the mental suffering complained of was the direct and natural result of the defendant's wrong. The disturbing element in the case at bar, which we frankly confess gave us some trouble in the beginning, is the fact that the plaintiff would apparently have suffered no mental anxiety, had he not been informed by the defendant on the following day that the message had not been delivered. The defendant claims that it was its duty, under the repeated decisions of this court, to inform the plaintiff of the nondelivery of the message, and that it should not be held liable for damages resulting from the performance of a legal duty. At first blush, this seems a plausible defense, but it will not stand the test of investigation when applied to the facts of this case. The rule as laid down in Hendricks v. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 304, 311, 35 S. E. 543, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658, is as follows: "We think that it is the duty of the company, in all cases where it is practicable to do so, to promptly inform the sender of a message that it cannot be delivered. While its failure to do so may not be negligence per se, it is clearly evidence of negligence. In many instances by such a course the damage could be greatly lessened, if not entirely avoided. A better address might be given, mutual friends might be communicated with, or even a letter might reach the addressee. In any event, the sender might be relieved from great anxiety, and would know what to expect." Here the spirit as well as the letter of the rule is clearly set forth. The company must promptly notify the sender of the nondelivery of the message, in order that he may take such steps as may be within his power to avoid or mitigate the effects of the company's negligence. The contention of the defendant comes neither within the letter nor spirit of the rule. The message was sent shortly after 12 o'clock mid-day on the 23d, and the sender was not notified of its nondelivery until the next morning. The company could have found out within two hours whether the message could be delivered, if, indeed, it ever made any effort to deliver it, and could have notified the sender of its nondelivery by 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon. He could then have sent other telegrams to the same party, or to different parties, or even to his daughter on the train. But when the defendant not only failed to promptly deliver the telegram, but further negligently failed to notify the sender until the following morning, seven or eight hours after the arrival of the train in Columbia, it deprived the plaintiff of any opportunity of making any further provision for the safety and comfort of his daughter. This purely colorable compliance with the rule was of no benefit to the plaintiff, and should afford no protection to the defendant. We do not mean to say that even if the defendant had complied with the rule in good faith, by promptly notifying the sender of the nondelivery of the message, it would have been relieved from all liability. Here the cause of action was the negligent failure of the company to deliver the message, which fixed its liability. Any further action on its part would merely go in mitigation of damages. If in fact the subsequent act of the defendant prevents the occurrence of any substantial damage, it might diminish the plaintiff's legal claim to nominal damages; but the effect is the reverse in the case at bar. In any event, he would be entitled to nominal damages.

The defendant earnestly contends that the plaintiff ought not to recover, as his suffering was purely imaginative, and relies on the case of McAllen v. Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 243, 7 S. W. 715. We fail to see the pertinency of the citation. As the case before us stands on demurrer, we have no hesitation in saying, for the purposes of its present decision, that the mental suffering of the plaintiff was the direct result of the negligence of the defendant. To what degree he suffered, and whether a man of reasonable firmness should have suffered at all under such circumstances, are questions for the jury. Of course, upon the trial of the case the evidence may not sustain the plaintiff's contention; but, taking the allegations of the complaint as admitted by the demurrer, we must hold that they present facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The demurrer should have been overruled in the court below, and its judgment is therefore reversed.

CONNOR, J. (concurring). I concur in the result, but do not concur in the reasons assigned by the majority of the court. The plaintiff had a cause of action against the defendant company for negligently failing to send and deliver the message. If the facts are found upon the trial as alleged, he is entitled to punitive damages. The complaint sets out a case of gross and inexcusable negligence. I prefer not to discuss or express any opinion, in the present condition of the case, upon the other questions decided by the court. I do not think that the tender of the amount paid for the telegram defeated the cause of action. The plaintiff was entitled to go to the jury on the question of damages.

(137 N. C. 224)

GOODWIN v. CLAYTOR et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

CORPORATIONS — FOREIGN CORPORATION AS GARNISHEE—JURISDICTION — EXEMPTIONS — NONRESIDENT PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT—EXEMPTIONS FROM GARNISHMENT.

1. Exemptions relate only to the remedy, and the right to an exemption is subject to the law of the forum.

2. Where a corporation organized in New Jersey, but having no property in that state—the bulk of its property and its principal place of business being in North Carolina—was summoned in North Carolina as garnishee in an action between two residents of Virginia, the exemption laws of Virginia were not applicable.

3. Code, § 364, provides that when the officer shall serve an attachment on any person supposed to be indebted to, or have any effects of, defendant in attachment, he shall summon such person as garnishee, and that it shall be lawful to enter up judgment and award execution for plaintiff against the garnishee for all money due to defendant, and for all effects and estates of any kind belonging to him in the possession or custody of the garnishee. Held, that where service of summons was had by publication on a nonresident of the state, and a debt due the defendant was garnished, plaintiff did not lose any lien on the debt by taking a judgment against the defendant and the garnishee; the judgment against the garnishee appearing warranted by statute, and the one against defendant being void as a personal judgment entered without jurisdiction.

4. In garnishment proceedings against a nonresident defendant, service being had by publication, no jurisdiction is acquired to support a personal judgment against the defendant.

5. Code, § 364, provides that, when an attachment shall be served on any garnishee, it shall be lawful to enter up judgment against him for all sums of money due to the defendant from him, and for all estates of any kind belonging to defendant in his possession or custody, or so much as shall be sufficient to satisfy the debt, and that all goods in the hands of the garnishee shall be liable to satisfy the plaintiff's judgment. Held, that the statute clearly indicates the intention that any money due by the garnishee, or goods in his hands, belonging to the debtor, at the time of appearance and answer, shall be applied to the satisfaction of the debt, and a judgment against the garnishee was not erroneous because it included a part of the debt not due at the time the garnishee was summoned to answer.

6. A plaintiff in garnishment is, in his relation to the garnishee, substituted merely to the rights of his own debtor, and cannot enforce any greater claim against the garnishee than the debtor himself, if suing, would have been entitled to recover.

7. Code, § 194, provides that an action against a foreign corporation may be brought by a nonresident plaintiff when the cause of action shall have arisen or the subject of the action shall be situated within the state. A corporation organized in New Jersey had no property there, but the bulk of its property and its place of business were situated in North Carolina. The terms of a contract between such corporation and one of its traveling salesmen had been agreed on in North Carolina, and, while the services were performed in Virginia, all checks sent for his salary or wages were drawn at and sent from a city of North Carolina. Held, that the courts of North Carolina had jurisdiction to proceed against the corporation in garnishment proceedings in an action brought in the state against the salesman; the cause of action against it and in favor of the salesman having arisen in North Carolina, and the subject of the action being situated there.

8. Code, § 493, provides that earnings of a debtor for his personal services for the 60 days next preceding shall be exempt from execution. Held, that the exemption protects such earnings from seizure in garnishment.

9. Code, § 493, exempting certain earnings of a debtor from execution, inures to the benefit of nonresidents as well as residents.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; McNeill, Judge.

Action by G. O. Goodwin against A. B. Claytor; R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, garnishee. From a judgment of the superior court affirming a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the defendant and the garnishee appeal. Reversed.

This action was heard in the superior court of Forsyth county at spring term, 1904, by McNeill, J., upon a case agreed as follows:

The action was commenced before a justice of the peace by Goodwin, a resident of the state of Virginia, against Claytor, also a resident of the state of Virginia, for the recovery of $109.67, with interest on $96.01 from January 14, 1903, due by judgment. The indebtedness of Claytor to Goodwin is admitted. Service of summons was duly had by publication, and by garnishment of a debt due from the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company to Claytor. Claytor is an employé of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company in the capacity of traveling salesman, and the money which was attached in the hands of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company was the earnings of Claytor for his personal services; and said earnings accrued within 60 days next preceding the institution of this action, service of garnishment, filing of answer, and the order of the justice. These earnings were used for the support of a family dependent upon him. It is admitted that the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company is a corporation duly chartered and created under and by virtue of the laws of the state of New Jersey, and is engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, with its principal place of business and bulk of its property in Winston, N. C.; it having no property in New Jersey, save that such office as is required by the laws of New Jersey is located there. The said company has complied with the laws of North Carolina in reference to foreign corporations of the nature and character of this company. The contract between Claytor and the company was signed by Claytor in Virginia, and returned to Winston by mail. The preliminary arrangements, however, and the principle involved in the contract, were agreed upon at the office of the company in Winston. The salary of Claytor is usually paid him by check upon a bank in New York, which is sent to him by mail in Virginia, but occasionally a check is drawn on a bank in Winston and mailed to him in Virginia. These checks are sent from the office of the company in Winston. The contract between the company and Claytor does not fix where or how his salary shall be paid. All services performed and done under and by virtue of this contract are performed and done in the states of Virginia and West Virginia, and no part of said work is done in North Carolina. At the date of the service of the writ of garnishment on the company, it was indebted to Claytor by reason of the contract in the sum of $16.55 for salary and $17.58 expense money, and likewise, since the service of the writ of garnishment, has become indebted to Claytor up to the date of filing the answer in the sum of $86 for salary, and $—— for expense money; the expense money being advanced by Claytor, and the company reimbursing him for the same upon receiving statement thereof.

The laws of Virginia upon the question of exemptions are as follows:

Section 3630 of the Code of 1887 [Code 1904, p. 1935]; "Every householder residing in this state shall be entitled to hold exempt from levy, seizure, garnishment or sale under any execution, order or process issued on any demand for any debt or liability on contract, his personal and real estate, or either, to be selected by him, including money and debts due him, to the value of not exceeding $2,000."

Section 3652 [Code 1904, p. 1949]: "Wages owing to a laboring man being a householder, not exceeding $50 per month, shall also be exempt from distress, liability or garnishment."

Section 3656 [Code 1904, p. 1952]: "An injunction may be awarded to enjoin the sale of any property exempt under the provisions of this property, and to prevent the wages exempted by section 3652 from being garnished or otherwise collected by an execution creditor."

It is admitted that Claytor is a householder, or head of a family, within the meaning of the exemption law of the state of Virginia, and it is likewise admitted that he has never had allotted to him any exemption under and by virtue of the laws of that state.

This agreed statement of facts is made and signed without prejudice to any rights of either of the interested parties to make any motion or enter any special appearance as, in its or his judgment, may be deemed advisable.

The court, upon the case agreed, rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against both defendant and garnishee for the full amount of his debt and the costs. Defendant and the garnishee excepted and appealed.

Glenn, Manly & Hendren, for appellants.
A. H. Eller, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts). The counsel of the defendant and of the garnishee, in their able and exhaustive brief, rely on several grounds to defeat the plaintiff's recovery. For convenience, we will change somewhat the order in which they are stated in the brief. It is contended: (1) That the debt-garnished is exempt by the laws of Virginia from garnishment. (2) That, if the debt was subject to garnishment at all, any lien acquired by the service of the writ was waived and the garnishee released by taking a general and personal judgment against the defendant and the garnishee, instead of taking an order condemning the debt to the payment of the plaintiff's claim. (3) That the judgment is erroneous, as it condemned a debt due after the service of the writ. (4) That the court was without jurisdiction to proceed against the garnishee for the purpose of condemning the debt due by him, because it is necessary to the possession and rightful exercise of such jurisdiction that three things should occur: (a) The corporation who is the garnishee in this case must have such a residence and agency within the state as renders it amenable to the process of the court; (b) the principal defendant, who is the plaintiff's debtor, must himself have the right to sue the garnishee, his debtor, in this state, for the recovery of the debt; (c) it must appear that the situs of the debt is in this state. (5) And lastly, they insist that the earnings of a debtor are exempted from condemnation by the laws of this state. We will consider these contentions in the order thus presented.

The right of exemption under the laws of Virginia cannot be enforced here. It is well settled that exemption laws have no extra-territorial effect. They are not, in respect to the question now under discussion, a part of the contract, but relate only to the remedy, and the right to an exemption is therefore subject to the law of the forum. Rood on Garnishment, § 100; Railroad v. Sturn, 174 U. S. 710, 19 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144; Sexton v. Ins. Co., 132 N. C. 3, 43 S. E. 479. But there is another decisive answer to this claim of exemption. We have concluded, as will appear hereafter, that the domicile of the corporation, the Reynolds Tobacco Company, is, for the purposes of this case, in this state, and it nowhere appears that it has any domicile or even an agency in the state of Virginia. Indeed, the case shows that, while it was created a corporation in the state of New Jersey, it has no property in that state, but the bulk of its property and its principal place of business are here. For this reason, it could not be sued by the defendant Claytor in the state of Virginia for the debt garnished in this action, and Claytor therefore could not avail himself of the exemption laws of that state. It is argued that, as the plaintiff and the defendant Claytor are residents of Virginia, if Claytor is not allowed his exemption under the laws of that state the plaintiff will be enabled thereby to evade or "shove" the law of the domicile of both of them, and set it at defiance. How can this be, if the plaintiff cannot, by the process of the courts of that state, reach and lay hold of the res, which is the debt due by the tobacco company? An exemption, it would seem, can be allowed only in property actually situated in the state where the claim of exemption is asserted, and where the property in which it is claimed is subject to the jurisdiction and process of its courts. As we will presently show, the tobacco company had no domicile and could not be served with process there; and, besides, as will also appear hereafter, the situs of the debt, if any is required, was here. The argument predicated upon the exemption of the particular debt in Virginia must therefore fail, as no exemption exists.

We do not think that, if the plaintiff acquired any lien on the debt due to the defendant by the tobacco company, he lost it by taking a judgment against the defendant and the garnishee. The judgment against the garnishee seems to be expressly warranted and contemplated by the statute (Code, § 364), and that against the defendant is void as a personal judgment, as the court could acquire no jurisdiction to proceed against him, except in so far as it could by its process levy upon or seize his property; and in this respect the suit is to all intents and purposes in the nature of a proceeding in rem, and not of one in personam. Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 308, 19 L. Ed. 931; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; Winfree v. Bagley, 102 N. C. 515, 9 S. E. 198; Fisher v. Ins. Co. (at this term) 48 S. E. 667; Insurance Co. v. Stratley, 172 U. S. 602, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569. Nor do we think the judgment was erroneous in that it included a part of the debt which was not earned and due at the time the garnishee was summoned to answer, if it was due when he actually answered and the judgment was rendered. Code, § 364, provides: "When an attachment shall be served on any garnishee in manner aforesaid, it shall be lawful upon his appearance and examination to enter up judgment and award execution for the plaintiff against such garnishee for all sums of money due to the defendant from him, and for effects and estates of any kind belonging to the defendant, in his possession or custody, for the use of the plaintiff, or so much thereof as shall be sufficient to satisfy the debt and costs and all charges incident to levying the same; and all goods and effects whatsoever in the hands of the garnishee belonging to the defendant shall be liable to satisfy the plaintiff's judgment, and shall be delivered to the sheriff or other officer serving the attachment." The language thus employed clearly indicates the intention that any money due by the garnishee, or goods in his hands belonging to the debtor, at the time of appearance and answer, shall be applied in satisfaction of the debt. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (1st Ed.) pp. 1150, 1151, 1185. It does not appear in this case how or when the salary was to be paid. It is admitted, however, that an amount more than sufficient to pay the plaintiff's claim was due at the time of filing the answer, and judgment was rendered only for the amount of the defendant's indebtedness to the plaintiff.

We come now to the consideration of the defendant's fourth exception, which involves important questions not at all free from difficulty. For the purpose of determining whether any one of the defendant's contentions under the fourth exception is well founded, we may admit the general rule that a garnishment is, in effect, a suit by the principal debtor, the defendant in the action, in the name of the plaintiff, and for his use and benefit, against the garnishee, to recover the debt due to the plaintiff's debtor, and apply it to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand. It would appear to be a necessary corollary from the proposition thus stated that the plaintiff in the garnishment is, in his relation to the garnishee, substituted merely to the rights of his own debtor, and can enforce no claim against the garnishee which the debtor himself, if suing, would not be entitled to recover. Shinn, § 487; Myer v. Ins. Co., 40 Md. 595; Brauser v. Ins. Co., 21 Wis. 509. The garnishee can be placed in no worse position by reason of the garnishment than he occupied as a debtor to the defendant, nor subjected to any greater liability. This is a just and reasonable doctrine, but it does not by any means sustain the objections of the defendant. It seems to be conceded that, if the creditor of the garnishee can sue the latter in this state, then the plaintiff can proceed here against the garnishee. That the garnishee, the tobacco company, although a corporation having its domicile of origin in New Jersey, was amenable to process such as issued in this case, is too well settled to be now an open question. We are speaking now of the service of process, and not of jurisdiction. It is found as a fact that the company has complied with the laws of this state concerning foreign corporations, which means either that it had an agent in this state upon whom process could be served under the general law in all actions against it, or that it had complied with the provision of chapter 5, p. 66, Acts 1901. As the tobacco company transacted business here by the favor or comity of this state, it was subject to the state's laws, and to all of its reasonable rules and regulations regarding the service of process; and any judgment of a state court, having jurisdiction of the cause or of the subject of the action, is binding upon the company, at least in this state, the same as if it were a domestic corporation or an individual. The subject is fully discussed in Fisher v. Ins. Co. (decided at this term) 48 S. E. 667. See, also, Railroad v. James, 161 U. S. 545, 16 Sup. Ct. 621, 40 L. Ed. 802; Railroad v. Trust Co., 174 U. S. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. 817, 43 L. Ed. 1081; Shields v. Ins. Co., 119 N. C. 380, 25 S. E. 951. While the company cannot be treated as a domestic corporation or as a distinct entity in this state, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the federal courts, it may be so regarded in respect to its liability to be sued here, and the jurisdiction of our courts over it, which extends to suits not only by residents of this state, but to those by residents of other states, who are equally entitled to be admitted to our courts to prosecute actions for the protection of their rights and the recovery of their property, in the absence of any law forbidding the same. The state may, it is true, exclude nonresidents from our courts, if it sees fit to do so, without infringing the Constitution of the United States, which protects only citizens of a state against such discrimination by another state; but we do not think the principal defendant, who is the debtor of the plaintiff, has been denied the right to sue his debtor, the garnishee, in our courts, by section 194 of the Code. It having been settled that a foreign corporation exercising its franchises in this state may be subjected to the process of garnishment when it holds property or credits of the debtor for which the latter can sue in our courts, and that the plaintiff in attachment, as against the garnishee, is subrogated to the rights in that respect of the debtor, and can recover only by the same right and to the same extent as the debtor could recover if he were suing the garnishee, his debtor (Myer v. Ins. Co., supra), it must follow that the plaintiff may maintain his action, and the garnishment proceedings as ancillary to it, unless he is precluded from doing so by section 194. That section provides that an action may be brought against a foreign corporation by a plaintiff not a resident of this state when the cause of action shall have arisen or the subject of the action shall be situated within this state.

It appears in this case that the terms of the contract between Claytor and the tobacco company were agreed upon in this state, and, while the services were performed by Claytor in Virginia, all checks for his salary or wages were drawn at and sent from Winston, in this state; and it further appears that the tobacco company has no property in New Jersey, which by courtesy may be called its domicile of origin, and that the bulk of its property is in this state, which is actually its domicile by adoption. What a curious result would follow if we should hold that Claytor cannot sue the company in this state! We will force him to seek his debtor in New Jersey, but he will find no property there to satisfy his debt; and there is no good reason why he should be required to resort to the courts of any other state than New Jersey, where there may happen to be some of the property of his debtor, but where the debtor has no domicile of any kind, and where the same law may exist as we have here; nor should he be required to first obtain judgment in New Jersey, and then come here to sue upon it. A construction of our statute, with reference to the special facts of this case, which would produce such an anomaly, by requiring him to pursue any one of the courses indicated, should not be accepted as the true one unless no other is admissible. The transactions out of which the cause of action of Claytor against the company arose occurred in this state, and the debt due to him was as much payable here as it was in Virginia. For some purposes it may be important to determine precisely where a debt is payable or a contract is to be performed, but it is a well-established general rule that "all debts are payable everywhere, unless there be some special limitation or provision in respect to the payment; the rule being that debts, as such, have no locus or situs, but accompany the creditor everywhere, and authorize a demand upon the debtor everywhere." 2 Parsons, Cont. (8th Ed.) 702. The contract between Claytor and the tobacco company contained no "special limitation or provision in respect to payment," and the debt growing out of it, if not, by reason of the special circumstances of its creation, payable here (Perry v. Transfer Co. [Com. Pl.] 19 N. Y. Supp. 239), was payable generally, and could have been sued on by Claytor in this state, and therefore was attachable here. "This is the principle and effect of the best-considered cases—the inevitable effect from the nature of transitory actions and the purpose of foreign attachment laws, if we would enforce that purpose." Railroad v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 19 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144; Beale on Foreign Corp. § 284. Considering the special facts of this case, we find that the tobacco company obtained a charter in New Jersey for the avowed purpose of establishing its principal office and transacting its business in this state. It was born, it is true, in New Jersey, but it lives, moves, and has its being in this state. It is nominally a corporation of the other state, where it was originally created, but in reality has its home, its domicile, here. There is no valid or practical reason why this case should not be held to come substantially within the principle of Sexton v. Insurance Co., supra, and Boyd v. Insurance Co., 111 N. C. 372, 16 S. E. 389; and, if that is the correct view, the tobacco company cannot certainly be prejudiced in the least when it is required to pay its debts where it conducts its business and has all or the larger part of its assets. On the contrary, it will be to its advantage if it is required to pay where it has its assets, rather than at the domicile of its origin, where it has none, and where it performs none of its corporate functions. This case is clearly distinguishable from Balk v. Harris, 124 N. C. 468, 32 S. E. 799, 45 L. R. A. 257, 70 Am. St. Rep. 606, and Strause v. Ins. Co., 126 N. C. 223, 35 S. E. 471, 48 L. R. A. 452. The facts of this case and of those two cases are wholly different. It has been said that a corporation must dwell in the place of its creation, and cannot migrate to another sovereignty (Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 588, 10 L. Ed. 274); but this dictum has been held to be nothing but a rhetorical statement of the perfectly obvious principle that a corporation, wherever it goes, is subject to the law of the state where it was created, and cannot rid itself of the control of that state, nor can it disregard the restrictions of its charter, which embodies the limitations of its legal existence and its corporate powers. It may, though, acquire a domicile or a residence in another state, and be subject to its laws to the same extent as if it had been fully domesticated there. Murfee on For. Corp. §§ 8, 9.

Our conclusion on this branch of the case is that the tobacco company was amenable to the process of our courts, both mesne and final; that the cause of action against it and in favor of Olaytor arose in this state (Steele v. Com'rs, 70 N. C. 137); and that the subject of the action is situated here; that is, the debt due from the tobacco company to the defendant—the res, as it is called (Winfree v. Bagley, 102 N. C. 515, 9 S. E. 198)—which has been brought within the jurisdiction of the court by service of the garnishment.

It was necessary to decide the questions we have discussed before considering the defendant's last ground of objection, because a decision for him on any one of those questions would have settled the case entirely in his favor.

The defendant further insists that his earnings for personal services at any time within sixty days next preceding the garnishment were exempt under section 493 of the Code. He admits that this exemption is allowed by that section in supplementary proceedings, but his counsel argue that it is intended by the law that such earnings shall in no way be condemned or applied to the payment of debts. The humane and beneficent provisions of the law in regard to exemptions, being remedial in their nature and founded upon a sound public policy, should always receive a liberal construction, so as to embrace all persons coming fairly within their scope. Black, Interp. of Laws, 311. This court has uniformly held that, where property is exempted from seizure under final process, it is similarly exempt from levy or seizure under any mesne process issued for the purpose of placing it in the custody of the court, and thus preserving it until it can finally be applied to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's debt. Chemical Co. v. Sloan (at this term) 48 S. E. 577. Supplementary proceedings are in the nature of final process, when viewed either as a substitute for a creditors' bill to enforce the payment of a judgment at law, or as a proceeding having the essential qualities of an equitable fi. fa.; and, if the defendant comes within the general description of the persons designated in the act, there is no good reason for denying him the exemption under the garnishment. The homestead and personal property exemptions can be claimed only by residents of this state. But this is so by reason of the express words of our Constitution and laws. There is no such limitation in section 493, and we are unable to see why we should restrict its meaning so as to exclude the defendant from the benefit of its wise provisions, and thereby defeat the evident policy and benevolent purpose of the Legislature. We prefer to give the section a liberal construction, which will be apt to do justice, and at the same time carry out the legislative intent, and which, too, will not be contrary to the letter of the law.

The defendant should be allowed his exemption out of his earnings in accordance with the provisions of section 493, and to this extent there was error in the judgment upon the case agreed.

We have discussed the case somewhat at length, as it involves questions of great and increasing importance, and, it may be, of far-reaching consequences. It was unusually well presented on both sides by counsel in their briefs.

Error.

(136 N. C. 633)

STATE v. VAN PELT et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 18, 1904.)

CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY—SUFFICIENCY OF INDICTMENT—BILL OF PARTICULARS.

1. An indictment against five carpenters alleged that defendants conspired to injure the prosecutor in his business as dealer in lumber; that, pursuant to such conspiracy, three of defendants went to prosecutor's place of business, and notified him that he could not be considered in sympathy with organized labor unless he employed union men; that he would not be considered in sympathy with organized labor while he kept employed nonunion men, notwithstanding the fact that he had employed and contracted with nonunion men for as much as a year in advance; that, they being informed by the prosecutor that he would not discharge nonunion men, and would not agree to employ only union men, defendants published in a local newspaper that at a meeting of the carpenters and joiners to consider the attitude of the prosecutor toward organized labor he was declared unfair, and so listed, and that no union carpenter would work any material from his shop after a date specified; that the purpose of publishing said notice was to induce all persons who would otherwise have purchased lumber or materials from said prosecutor to refrain from so doing for fear of the ill will of defendants, and that they would be subject to delay and inconvenience by reason of the refusal of defendants to work the material so purchased of the prosecutor; that thereby defendants intended to prevent persons desiring to purchase lumber from purchasing the same from the prosecutor, with intent to injure and destroy his business. Held insufficient to state a criminal conspiracy.

2. The bill of particulars in a criminal prosecution is not a part of the indictment, and does not prevent quashing the indictment if the indictment in itself is insufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

An indictment for criminal conspiracy was filed against A. Van Pelt and others. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the indictment and granting a motion to quash the same, the state appeals. Affirmed.

This was an indictment against the defendants in the following words, to wit: "The jurors for the state upon their oath present that A. Van Pelt, W. T. R. Jenkins, C. A. Shuman, S. W. Henry, and S. A. Shuman, being persons of evil minds and dispositions, together with divers other evil-disposed persons, whose names are to the jurors unknown, wickedly devising and intending to injure and destroy one C. A. Rice, of the county of Rowan and state of North Carolina, in his trade and business as a dealer in lumber, on the 15th day of January, 1904, at and in the county of Rowan and state aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of this court, fraudulently, wickedly, maliciously, and unlawfully did conspire, combine, confederate, and agree together between and amongst themselves unlawfully to injure and destroy the said C. A. Rice in his trade and business which he then and there used, exercised, and carried on as aforesaid, against the peace and dignity of the state. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that the said A. Van Pelt, W. T. R. Jenkins, C. A. Shuman, S. W. Henry, and S. A. Shuman, together with other evil-disposed persons, whose names are to the jurors unknown, contriving and devising to injure and destroy the said C. A. Rice in his trade and business aforesaid, and as much as in them lay unlawfully and feloniously to ruin him in his trade and business as a dealer in lumber, which he then and there carried on, used, and exercised as aforesaid, and to prevent and hinder him from using, exercising, and carrying on the said trade and business in as full, ample, and beneficial a manner as he was used and accustomed to, on the 15th day of January, 1904, in the county and state aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of this court, unlawfully, wickedly, and maliciously did conspire, confederate, combine, and agree together with divers, fraudulent, and wicked means and devices to injure, oppress, and impoverish the said C. A. Rice, and wholly to prevent and hinder him from using, exercising, and carrying on his trade and business of a dealer in lumber as aforesaid, and caused to be published in a certain newspaper issued daily in the city of Salisbury, county and state aforesaid, a certain article in words and figures as follows, to wit: 'Action of the Carpenters and Joiners.—At a meeting of the Carpenters and Joiners, held last evening, for his attitude towards organized labor, Mr. C. A. Rice was declared unfair, and so listed, and that no union carpenter would work any material from his shop after February 15, 1904. S. A. Shuman, Sr., Pres. W. T. R. Jenkins, R. S.' And that the aforesaid publication was caused to be printed as aforesaid, in the newspaper aforesaid, on the 16th day of January, 1904, to the great damage of the said C. A. Rice, to the evil and pernicious example of all others in the like case offending, and against the peace and dignity of the state."

Defendants moved that the state be required to file a bill of particulars to the first count in the indictment. Motion allowed, whereupon the solicitor filed the following bill of particulars; to wit: "The State alleges: That the defendants, A. Van Pelt, S. A. Shuman, W. T. R. Jenkins, S. W. Henry, and C. A. Shuman, together with other evil-disposed persons, to the state unknown, contriving and devising with the intent to injure and destroy one C. A. Rice in his trade and business as a dealer in and manufacturer of lumber, and as much as in them lay unlawfully and maliciously to injure and ruin him in said trade and business as a dealer in and manufacturer of lumber, which he then and there carried on, used, and exercised in the county of Rowan and state of North Carolina, and to prevent and hinder him from using, exercising, and carrying on the said trade and business and manufacture in as full, ample, and beneficial a manner as he was used and accustomed to, on the 15th day of January, 1904, in the county and state aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of this court, unlawfully, wickedly, and maliciously did conspire, combine, and agree together to injure, oppress, and impoverish the said C. A. Rice, and, with the intent to prevent and hinder him from using and carrying on his trade and business as a dealer in and manufacturer of lumber as aforesaid, caused to be published in a certain newspaper in the city of Salisbury, county and state aforesaid, a certain article in words and figures as follows, to wit: 'Action of Carpenters and Joiners.—At a meeting of the Carpenters and Joiners, held last evening, for his attitude towards organized labor, Mr. O. A. Rice was declared unfair, and so listed, and that no union carpenter would work any material from his shop after February 15, 1904. S. A. Shuman, Sr., Pres. W. T. R. Jenkins, R. S.' And that the aforesaid publication was caused by the defendants to be printed in the newspaper, as aforesaid, on the 16th day of January, 1904, to the great damage of the said C. A. Rice, and that it was the intent and purpose of the defendants by said publication to injure, oppress, and impoverish the said C. A. Rice in his trade and business and manufacture as aforesaid, and that the defendants did combine, agree, and conspire together to publish said notice as above set forth for the unlawful and malicious purpose of injuring the said C. A. Rice in his trade and business and manufacture as aforesaid by inducing all persons who would otherwise have purchased lumber and material from the said C. A. Rice to refrain from so doing for fear of the ill will of the defendants and other evil-disposed persons so conspiring and contriving with them, whose names are to the state unknown, and for fear that if they—that is to say, all persons who would otherwise have purchased lumber and material from the said C. A. Rice—should so purchase the same; they, the said persons, would be subject to delay and inconvenience by reason of the refusal of the defendants and other evil-disposed persons, whose names are unknown to the state, to work the material so purchased from the said C. A. Rice; and that in so conspiring and combining together to injure the business of the said C. A. Rice, as aforesaid, by the publication as aforesaid, in manner and form as above set forth, the defendants intended to prevent persons desiring to purchase lumber from purchasing the same from the said C. A. Rice, and to influence and deter persons desiring lumber from procuring the same from the said C. A. Rice, with the intent to injure, destroy, and damage the trade and business and manufacture of the said C. A. Rice. And before the said 15th day of January, 1904, as hereinbefore mentioned, the said A. Van Pelt, W. T. R. Jenkins, and S. W. Henry, three of the defendants in this case, did unlawfully, wickedly, maliciously, conspire and agree together, and did go together, on or about the 13th day of January, 1904, to the place of business of the said C. A. Rice, in the city of Salisbury, in the county and state aforesaid, and then and there notified the said C. A. Rice that he, the said C. A. Rice, could not be considered in sympathy with organized labor unless he kept constantly employed only union men, and notified him further that he would not be in sympathy with organized labor if he kept in his employ any nonunion men, notwithstanding the fact that he had heretofore employed and contracted with nonunion men for as much as a year in advance, and to discharge them would be a violation of his contracts with such nonunion men; and, upon being informed by said Rice that he would not discharge any nonunion men with whom he had contracted in advance by the year to work for him, and that he would not agree to employ only union men in his business, the said A. Van Pelt, W. T. R. Jenkins, and S. W. Henry went away, and on the 15th day of January, 1904, in furtherance of their said conspiracy and combination to injure and destroy the business of the said C. A. Rice, as aforesaid, they combined and agreed among themselves and with the other defendants, and with divers evil-disposed persons, whose names are to the state unknown, to publish the aforesaid notice hereinbefore set forth, for the purpose aforesaid, and did actually cause the same to be published with the intention to injure and destroy the business and trade and manufacture of the said C. A. Rice, as above set forth. Hammer, Sol."

¶ 2. See Indictment and Information, vol. 27, Cent. Dig. § 220.

The counsel for the defendants thereupon demurred ore tenus to the bill of indictment, and moved to quash, for that the bill, together with the bill of particulars, did not charge a criminal offense. Motion and demurrer sustained, and bill quashed. The state excepted to the order of the court, and appealed to the Supreme Court.

J. H. Horah, A. H. Price, and the Attorney General, for the State. T. F. Klutz, R. Lee Wright, and Overman & Gregory, for defendants.

CONNOR, J. We do not find it necessary to consider the sufficiency of the first count in the bill. By filing the bill of particulars, the state, for the purpose of this appeal, makes sufficiently definite the charge and means by which the alleged conspiracy was to be put into execution. The demurrer ore tenus is based upon the indictment and the bill of particulars. We, however, fully approve the language of Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Hunt, 4 Metc. 111, 38 Am. Dec. 348: "From this view of the law respecting conspiracy we think it an offense which especially demands the application of that wise and humane rule of the common law that an indictment shall state with as much certainty as the nature of the case will admit the facts which constitute the crime intended to be charged. This is required to enable the defendant to meet the charge and prepare for his defense, and, in case of an acquittal or conviction, to show by the record the identity of the charge, so that he may not be indicted a second time for the same offense." It is further said that, when the criminality of the offense consists in an unlawful agreement to compass some criminal or illegal purpose, that purpose must be fully and clearly stated in the indictment. If the criminality intended to be charged consists in the agreement to compass some purpose not unlawful or criminal in itself by the use of force, fraud, falsehood, or other criminal or unlawful means, such intended means must be set forth in the indictment. Lambert v. People, 9 Cow. 578. In State v. Trammell, 24 N. C. 379, Gaston, J., says: "It is said that the gist of a criminal conspiracy is the unlawful concurrence of many in a wicked scheme, and that the crime of conspiracy is complete without any act having been done to carry it into execution. This consideration renders it but the more important that the charge of conspiracy should clearly set forth the purpose and object of the combination, as in these are to be found almost the only marks of certainty by which the parties accused may know what is the accusation they are to defend." Waite, C. J., in U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588, passing upon the sufficiency of an indictment for conspiracy, says: "The accused has, therefore, the right to have a specification of the charge against him in this respect, in order that he may decide whether he should present his defense by motion to quash, demur, or plea; and the court that it may determine whether the facts will sustain the indictment. So here the crime is made to consist in the unlawful combination with an intent to prevent the enjoyment of any right granted or secured by the Constitution, etc. All rights are not so granted or secured. Whether one is so or not is a question of law to be decided by the court; not the prosecutor. Therefore the indictment should state the particulars to inform the court as well as the accused. It must be made to appear—that is to say to appear from the indictment, without going further—that the acts charged will, if proved, support a conviction for the offense alleged." Mr. Justice Clifford, concurring in the result, says: "Descriptive allegations in criminal pleadings are required to be reasonably definite and certain, as a necessary safeguard to the accused against surprise, misconception, and error in conducting his defense, and in order that the judgment in the case may be a bar to a second accusation for the same charge. Considerations of this kind are entitled to respect; but it is obvious that, if such a description of the ingredient of the offense created and defined by an act of Congress is held to be sufficient, the indictment must become a snare to the accused." Pettibone v. U. S., 148 U. S. 197, 13 Sup. Ct. 542, 37 L. Ed. 419. In State v. Younger, 12 N. C. 357, 17 Am. Dec. 571, the offense is fully described and the means by which it was consummated set out, to wit, by making the prosecutor drunk, and falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully cheating him at a game of cards.

While it is the right of the defendant to demand, and the duty of the court to require, a bill of particulars, this is for the benefit of the defendant, and does not in any degree deprive him of the right to have the bill of indictment quashed if insufficient. Mr. Bishop well says, "The bill of particulars, not being made by the grand jury on oath, cannot supply any defect in the indictment." Crim. Prac. § 646. It would seem that, as the defendant is entitled to demand the bill of particulars, and as the state on the trial is restricted to proofs of the facts set out, it would be more in accordance with reason, good criminal pleading, and the safety of the citizen, to require the state to set out in the indictment the charge in full, together with the means by which the alleged conspiracy is to be effectuated. It is so held by many courts and required by statutes. No offense is so easily charged and so difficult to be met unless the defendants are fully informed of the facts upon which the state will rely to sustain the indictment. While technical objections to indictments are not to be sustained, substantive and substantial facts should be alleged. General and undefined charges of crime, especially those involving mental conditions and attitudes, should not be encouraged. They are not in harmony with the genius of a free people, living under a written constitution. We can see no good reason why an exception to the general rules of criminal pleading should be made in favor of this crime. Certainly there is nothing in the history of the criminal law of England or this country to recommend it to the favor of courts having regard for liberty regulated by law. Such an indictment has been appropriately termed "a drag net of vague charges" to catch innocent persons, who in times of excitement may be convicted by the suspicions and prejudices of juries. An examination of the cases cited in Wright on Criminal Conspiracy, 186, discovers a state of painful uncertainty in the rulings of courts, explained frequently by the political or other bias of temper or opinions of the judge. Certainty should never be sacrificed to the plea for simplicity. Viewed properly, there is no conflict between them. We cannot but think that an omission of the needless repetition of epithets and denunciatory terms of the defendant, and the insertion, in place thereof, in plain language, of the facts relied upon, would be conducive to that certainty and simplicity which are the real safeguards of society and the citizen. General and indefinite descriptions of alleged crimes, like general warrants, "are dangerous to liberty, and ought not to be tolerated." Const. art. 1, § 15. "Every man has right to be informed of the accusation against him." Id. § 11. These truths are of the essence of civil liberty. They are not to be explained away to meet the demand for speedy trials and swift punishment. "No man shall be put to answer any criminal charge . . . but by an indictment," etc. We find nothing here of "bills of particulars" drawn up, after indictment found, by prosecuting officers to aid defective bills, or bills in which, if the charge was set forth in a full and specific manner, could never have received the indorsement of a grand jury. "Bills of particulars" are suggestive of "informations" which became odious because of the oppressive use made of them by officers of the crown in the prosecution of persons charged with offense. When grand juries would not aid in such prosecution, "informations" were resorted to. They recall the days of "constructive treasons." Men were hung, drawn, and quartered for "imagining" the death of the King. They recall the time when Titus Oates swore away the lives of innocent men charged with being members of an imaginary "Popish plot."

The solicitor having filed a bill of particulars, the state is confined "to the items therein set down." Bish. Crim. Proc. 643. We are thus brought to a consideration of the question whether, eliminating all irrelevant matter, the facts charged and admitted by the demurrer constitute a criminal conspiracy, either by reason of the character of that which was agreed to be done or the means by which the agreement was to be effectuated. "The preamble and introductory matter in the indictment—such as 'unlawfully, deceitfully, designing and intending unjustly to extort great sums,' etc.—is mere recital, and not traversable, and therefore cannot aid an imperfect averment of facts constituting the description of the offense. The same may be said of the concluding matter which follows the averment as to the great damage," etc. Stripped of these introductory recitals and alleged injurious consequences and the qualifying epithets attached to the facts, the averment is this: That the defendants conspired to injure the prosecutor in his trade and business, and thereby impoverish him. (1) That pursuant to this agreement three of the defendants, on January 13, 1904, went together to the place of business of the prosecutor, and notified him that he could not be considered in sympathy with organized labor unless he kept constantly employed union men. (2) That he would not be considered in sympathy with organized labor if he kept in his employment nonunion men, notwithstanding the fact that he had theretofore employed and contracted with nonunion men for as much as a year in advance. (3) That upon being informed by said Rice that he would not discharge nonunion men with whom he had contracted, and would not agree to employ only union men, etc., the defendants published the notice set out in the bill of particulars. That the purpose of publishing said notice was to induce all persons who would otherwise have purchased lumber and material from the said Rice to refrain from doing so (a) for fear of the ill will of the defendants, etc., and other evil-disposed persons; (b) that they would be subject to delay and inconvenience by reason of the refusal of the defendants and other evil-disposed persons, whose names are to the state unknown, to work the material so purchased from the said C. A. Rice, etc. That by the means aforesaid the defendants intended to prevent persons desiring to purchase lumber from purchasing the same from the said C. A. Rice, and to influence and deter persons desiring lumber from purchasing the same from the said C. A. Rice with the intent to injure and destroy, etc. We omit at this time any reference to the alleged motive of the defendants.

A criminal conspiracy is defined to be an agreement of two or more persons to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Hunt, says: "Without attempting to review or reconcile all the cases, we are of the opinion that as a general description, though perhaps not a precise or accurate definition, a conspiracy must be a combination of two or more persons, by some concerted action, to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means. We use the terms 'criminal' or 'unlawful,' because it is manifest that many acts are unlawful which are not punishable by indictment or other public prosecution, and yet there is no doubt, we think, that a combination by numbers to do them would be an unlawful conspiracy, and punishable by indictment. * * * But yet it is clear that it is not every combination to do unlawful acts to the prejudice of another which is punishable as a conspiracy." Mr. Wright, in his work on Criminal Conspiracy, classifies the decisions in the different states, and places North Carolina in the class which holds that conspiracies are indictable "where neither the object nor the means are criminal, but where injury results to individuals"; and for this he cites State v. Younger, 12 N. C. 357, 17 Am. Dec. 571. With the exception of State v. Younger, we find no case in our own Reports in which an indictment is sustained which did not allege a conspiracy to commit acts, or the bill of particulars did not set out facts showing a conspiracy to commit acts, indictable either at common law or under some statute. It must be conceded that expressions are to be found in the opinions of the court to the contrary. In State v. Tom, 13 N. C. 569, the charge was a conspiracy by slaves to commit murder. It was made indictable by statute. It was equally so at common law. In State v. Trammell, 24 N. C. 379, Judge Gaston says that it is not necessary to decide whether the facts set out constitute a criminal conspiracy. The court held that in no view were the defendants guilty. In State v. Christianbury, 44 N. C. 46, the court expressly declined to pass upon the sufficiency of the bill, putting the case off on the statute of limitations. In State v. Brady, 107 N. C. 822, 12 S. E. 325, the second count charged a conspiracy to cheat and defraud by falsely and fraudulently representing that certain lands contained gold mines, whereas the defendant well knew that the said lands did not contain gold mines, etc. There was a motion to quash, which was denied. There was a general verdict of guilty. The court said that, if either count was good, it would support the verdict. This was sufficient to dispose of the appeal. The second count was undoubtedly good, and the motion to quash could not be allowed. In State v. Powell, 121 N. C. 635, 28 S. E. 525, Montgomery, J., says that the bill charged a conspiracy to commit an offense indictable at common law. In State v. Wilson, 121 N. C. 650, 28 S. E. 416, the question is not raised or discussed; a new trial was given on other grounds. In State v. Earwood, 75 N. C. 210, the only question decided was the admissibility of evidence upon which a new trial was given. In State v. Howard, 129 N. C. 585, 40 S. E. 71, there were three counts. The first charged generally a conspiracy to cheat and defraud. The second and third, setting out the facts showing a conspiracy to rob and to obtain money under false pretenses, and the means resorted to, were not pressed, but referred to as a bill of particulars. The first count was sustained by a divided court, the present chief justice, writing for the majority, saying that by the second and third counts, considered as a bill of particulars, the defendants were fully informed, etc. It will thus be seen that in all of the cases in our Reports a conspiracy to commit an indictable offense is charged in the indictment, or facts set forth in a bill of particulars charging a conspiracy to commit such an offense. In Younger's Case, supra, the charge in the indictment was that the defendants conspired to cheat and defraud the prosecutor, etc., and to accomplish that end they procured him to be intoxicated, and engaged him to play at cards, by means whereof by falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully playing at the game of cards, they cheated him, etc. It is not necessary to discuss the question whether the acts charged were indictable at common law. State v. Phifer, 65 N. C. 321. We incline to the opinion that they were. The learned chief justice writing the opinion did not seem to think so, although he says, "Playing at cards for money was in itself unlawful." The word is of such varied and uncertain import that it is unfortunate that it was ever used to define a criminal act. It is not our purpose to bring the decision of Younger's Case into question, but we cannot accept the definition given of a criminal conspiracy: "Every combination to injure individuals or to do acts which are unlawful or prejudicial to the community is indictable." It will be noted that this case was submitted by the Attorney General without argument, and the defendants were not represented by counsel. The court cites but one case to sustain the definition. King v. Journeymen Tailors of Cambridge, 8 Mad. 10 (1721). That was an indictment against certain journeymen tailors for a conspiracy to raise their wages. The court said: "A conspiracy of any kind is illegal, although the matter about which they conspired might have been lawful for them to do if they had not conspired to do it, as appears in the case of Tubwomen v. The Brewers." An examination of the report of that case shows the lengths to which counsel and court went in sparring over technicalities and losing sight of the real merits of the question. Quite a number of objections were made to the indictment which at this day would not be listened to with any degree of respect. The court announces the proposition that any conspiracy, however lawful its purpose, is indictable. The case has been treated with but scant courtesy in England, and would not at this day be cited as authority. By statute it was made indictable for journeymen tailors to enter into any contract or agreement to advance their wages. Happily this and all other such laws have been repealed in England, and were never in force in this state. Lord Campbell, in Hilton v. Eckerby, 6 E. & B. (88 E. C. L. 62) 1855, repudiated the definition given in the Tailors' Case, referring to what it said in this and other cases as "loose expressions." He says: "I cannot bring myself to believe, without authority more cogent, that if two workmen, who sincerely believe their wages to be inadequate, should meet and agree that they would not work unless their wages were raised, without designing or contemplating violence or any illegal means for gaining their object, they would be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to be punished by fine and imprisonment. The object is not illegal, and therefore, if no illegal means are used, there is no indictable conspiracy." The courts have found but little difficulty in adhering to satisfactory and consistent rulings in those cases wherein the conspiracy charged is to commit acts which are criminal and indictable either at common law or by statute. Dr. Wharton says: "The conflict begins when we reach those combinations which are assumed to be indictable, not as aimed at an indictable offense, but from the idea that the policy of the law forbids the reaching of the attempted object by a conspiracy." Crim. Law, 357. After discussing conspiracies to cheat and defraud, he says: "But to extend indictable conspiracies so as to include cases where acts not in themselves indictable are attempted by concert, involving neither false statement nor concerted force, should be resolutely opposed. A distressing uncertainty will oppress the law if the mere act of concert in doing an indifferent act be held to make such act criminal. We all know what acts are indictable, and, if we do not, the knowledge is readily obtainable. Such offenses, when not defined by statute, are limited by definitions which long processes of judicial interpretation have hardened into shapes which are distinct, solid, notorious, and permanent. It is otherwise, however, when we come to speak of acts which, though not penal when they are committed by persons acting singly, are supposed to become so when brought about by concert which involves neither fraud nor force. * * * No man may know in advance whether any enterprise in which he may engage may not in this way become subject to prosecution. It is essential to the constitution of an indictable offense * * * that it should be prohibited either by statute or common law, but conspiracies to commit by nonindictable means nonindictable offenses, if we resolve them into their elements, are neither prohibited by common law nor by statute. * * * An act of business enterprise in purchasing goods in a cheap market for the purpose of selling them in a dear market, which, in one phase of judicial sentiment, would be regarded as a meritorious impetus to commercial activity, would be, in another phase of judicial sentiment, as it once has been, treated as an indictable offense. Legislative and judicial compromises which one court may view as essential to the working of the political machines, another court may hold to be indictable as a corrupt conspiracy." In this country, in which judges are, in respect to their source of appointment and tenure, sensitive to changes of popular opinion and temper, amid the ever-increasing acuteness of the struggle between opposing social and industrial forces, the lines which separate a criminal from a noncriminal conspiracy should be clearly defined. To a timid, conservative, judicial mind trained to regard even the slightest disturbance of such forces as portending danger to the peace of the state, a combination of the most harmless character would assume "unlawful" form and force. To a different type of judicial mind, believing that the safety and highest interest of the state are promoted by the freest possible play of mind and action in trade competition, "however severe and egotistical, if unattended by circumstances of dishonesty, intimidation, molestation, or other such illegalities," the same combination would appear not only lawful, but stimulating to trade in the community. The study of the struggle between the ruling class and the laborers in England, culminating in the passage of the statute of 38 & 39 Vict., is of interest to the student and value to the lawmaker and judge. It is declared by that statute that an agreement or combination to do any act in furtherance of a trade dispute shall not render the person committing it indictable for a conspiracy if such acts committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime. "These latter words may almost be described as 'The Workmen's Charter of Liberty,' for they dispose at once and forever of the contention that a combination to do acts, not illegal in themselves, is entitled to be regarded by the law as a conspiracy." Cent. Law Reform, 253. A great English statesman said that for the first time employers and employed sat under equal laws.

As indicating the practical operation of the definition of a criminal conspiracy contended for by the state, we may recall some incidents coming under our observation. Not long since the farmers producing cotton in this and other states believed that their interests demanded combined action to protect themselves against what they considered an unreasonably high price charged by the manufacturers for jute cotton bagging. They openly and with the avowed purpose of compelling the manufacturers to sell bagging at a lower price, and, of course, reduce their profits, and to that extent injure them in their trade and business, formed combinations and adopted measures—entirely peaceful and lawful—to accomplish their purpose. They agreed themselves, urged and by various means induced others, to refrain from buying or using jute bagging. They encouraged the use of other kinds of bagging, and by and through organization maintained a peaceful but effective contest with the manufacturers. Their declared purpose was to injure, cripple, and, if necessary, destroy, the manufacturers, unless they sold their product at a lower price. Again, at a more recent date the producers of tobacco found the price of their product, as they thought, unreasonably low. They believed that a large and wealthy corporation, being the largest purchaser in the markets, was responsible for the low price of tobacco. Large numbers of the producers, with the avowed purpose of compelling the purchasers, and especially the said corporation, to pay them higher prices, combined and agreed that they would withhold their product from the market, urged and induced all other producers to do so. They declared their purpose to refuse to buy the goods of the corporation, and urged and induced merchants to refuse to buy or sell such goods. They held public meetings, made and issued addresses, and by many other lawful and peaceful means sought to injure, and, so far as possible, destroy, the offending corporation. It did not occur to any one that these men were guilty of a criminal conspiracy, nor were they. It must be noted that in neither instance was there any legal standard as to the price of cotton bagging or tobacco. They were sold in open market, and, from a legal standpoint, with fair competition. The farmers who in one case were buyers thought bagging unreasonably high, and in the other, being sellers, thought tobacco unreasonably low. They believed that, in order to protect themselves from what they regarded unfair treatment, they must organize. That their purpose was to injure the manufacturer in the one instance and the purchaser in the other in their trade and business was not denied, but openly avowed; their defense being that they were seeking fair treatment at the hands of both. We must keep in mind the fact that we are discussing the question as it is affected by the common law. The proposition is that the defendants conspired for the purpose of injuring the prosecutor in his trade and business, and that it is unlawful for them to do so. It cannot be that every conspiracy to injure one in his trade and business, without reference to the means to be employed, is criminal. A carpenter or joiner has, by his apprenticeship, study, and experience, acquired skill and knowledge in his trade. His capital consists in his physical strength and his intellect trained and directed by his skill and experience. It is the use of this which, in a sense, he offers for sale. In what respect, for the purpose of securing the best prices for his labor on the best terms, do his rights differ from the man who has cotton for sale, the product of his capital—land and labor—or the man who has money to invest in mercantile or manufacturing enterprise? Each of them enters into the field of competition. Each finds that organization with others engaged in the same field of labor or investment will secure better results and fairer treatment from those with whom he deals. There is no evil or harm in organization per se. Every copartnership, corporation, joint-stock company, and other association of labor or capital is a recognition of this truth. We find no better illustration of the correct principle upon which this right depends and the benefits which may come from its application under proper limitations than that given by Chief Justice Shaw in Com. v. Hunt, supra: "Suppose a baker in a small village had the exclusive custom of his neighborhood, and was making large profits by the sale of his bread. Supposing a number of those neighbors, believing the price of bread too high, should propose to him to reduce his prices, or, if he did not, they would introduce another baker, and on his refusal such other baker should, under their encouragement, set up a rival establishment, and sell his bread at lower prices, the effect would be to diminish the profit of the former baker, and to the same extent to impoverish him. And it might be said and proved that the purpose of the associates was to diminish his profits, and thus impoverish him, though the ultimate and laudable object of the combination was to render the price of bread to themselves and their neighbors. * * * We think, therefore, that associations may be entered into, the object of which is to adopt measures that may have a tendency to impoverish another—that is, to diminish his gains and profits—and yet, so far from being criminal or unlawful, the object may be highly meritorious and public-spirited. The legality of such an association will therefore depend upon the means to be used for its accomplishment.

If it is to be carried into effect by fair or honorable and lawful means, it is, to say the least, innocent; if by falsehood or force, it may be stamped with the character of conspiracy. It follows, as a necessary consequence, that, if criminal and indictable, it is so by reason of the criminal means intended to be employed for its accomplishment." Although decisions have been made by some of the American courts which hold otherwise, they are in every instance based upon the principle of the Journeyman Tailors or other English cases which follow that decision. Mr. Wright, after a review of the cases, says: "These authorities on the whole strongly favor the view that a combination to injure a private person [otherwise than by fraud] is not, as a general rule, criminal, unless some criminal means are to be used." Cases may be found to the contrary. Judge Holmes, in his dissenting opinion in Vegeahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 44 N. E. 1077, 35 L. R. A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, discusses the question with much force and clearness. Speaking of the right of laborers or mechanics to combine to promote their interests, he says: "If it be true that working men may combine with a view to getting the greatest possible return, it must be true that when combined they have the same liberty that combined capital has to support their interest by argument, persuasion, and the bestowal or refusal of those advantages which they otherwise lawfully control. * * * The fact that the immediate object of the act by which the benefit to themselves is to be gained is to injure their antagonist does not necessarily make it unlawful any more than when a great house lowers the price of certain goods for the purpose and with the effect of driving a smaller antagonist from the business. Indeed, the question seems to me to have been decided as long ago as 1842 by the good sense of Chief Justice Shaw in Com. v. Hunt." He further says: "There is a notion, which latterly has been insisted on a good deal, that a combination of persons to do what any one of them might lawfully do by himself will make the otherwise lawful conduct unlawful. It would be rash to say that some as yet unformulated truth may not be hidden under this proposition. But in the general form in which it has been presented and accepted by many courts, I think it plainly untrue, both on authority and on principle." See, also, his dissenting opinion in Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 504, 57 N. E. 1011, 51 L. R. A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330. Judge Caldwell, in Ames v. U. Pac. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 62 Fed. 14, says: "Organized labor is organized capital. It is capital consisting of brains and muscle. * * * If it is lawful for the stockholders and officers of a corporation to associate and confer together for the purpose of reducing the wages of its employes, or for devising other means for making their investment more profitable, it is equally lawful for organized labor to associate, consult, and confer with a view to maintain or increase wages." Thomas v. Cin., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 62 Fed. 803; People v. Radt (Gen. Sess.) 71 N. Y. Supp. 846. It is said: "One may refuse to deal with a firm because of a belief that it does not give honest compensation for labor, and may ask his friends or the public to do the same thing, and the conduct may do injury to the public without thereby becoming illegal." Id. "An agreement among the members of an association of plumbers not to deal with wholesale dealers who sell to any who are not members of the association, and the sending notices to that end, do not constitute an unlawful conspiracy, since the object of the combination and the means adopted for its accomplishment are lawful." Macauley v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 33 Atl. 1, 87 L. R. A. 455, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770. In Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 54 Minn. 223, 55 N. W. 1119, 21 L. R. A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319, it appeared that the plaintiff was a manufacturer and dealer, wholesale and retail, in lumber and other building material. The defendant was a voluntary association of retail lumber dealers. It had certain rules for its government and that of its members. The plaintiff sold two bills of lumber to contractors or consumers in places where members of the association were engaged in the retail business. The secretary of the association made a demand upon the plaintiff for 10 per cent. on the sales so made. The demand not being complied with, the secretary notified, or, as the complaint averred, threatened, that unless plaintiff immediately settled the matter, he would send to all members of the association the lists or notices provided by the by-laws, notifying them that plaintiff refused to comply with the rules, and was no longer in sympathy with it. The court, referring to the affidavits, etc., said: "Both the affidavits and brief in behalf of the plaintiff indulge in a great deal of strong, and even exasperated, assertion, and in many words and expressions of very indefinite and illusive meaning, such as 'wreck,' 'coerce,' 'conspiracy,' 'monopoly,' 'drive out of business,' and the like. This looks very formidable, but in law, as well as in mathematics, it simplifies things very much to reduce them to their lowest terms. * * * Now, when reduced to its ultimate analysis, all that the retail dealers in this case have done is to form an association to protect themselves from sales by wholesale dealers or manufacturers directly to consumers or other nondealers at points where a member of the association is engaged in retail business. The means adopted to effect this end are simply these: They agree among themselves that they will not deal with any wholesale dealer or manufacturer who sells directly to consumers not dealers at a point where a member of the association is doing business, and provide for notice being given to all their members whenever a wholesale dealer or manufacturer makes any such sale. That is the head and front of defendant's offense. * * * There was no element of fraud, coercion, or intimidation either towards plaintiff or the members of the association." The court says that the compliance with the demand was entirely optional with the plaintiff. "The mere fact that the proposed acts of the defendants would have resulted in plaintiff's loss of gains and profits does not of itself render those acts unlawful. That depends on whether the acts are in themselves unlawful. 'Injury,' in its legal sense, means damage resulting from an unlawful act. Associations may be entered into, the object of which is to adopt measures that may tend to diminish the gains and profits of another, and yet, so far from being unlawful, they may be highly meritorious."

"The complainants proceed on the theory that they are entitled to protection in the legitimate exercise of their business; that the sending of the notices to wholesale dealers not to sell supplies to plumbers not members of the association, under the penalty—expressed in some instances and implied in others—of the withdrawal of the patronage of the members of the associations in case of a failure to comply, was unlawful, because it was intended injuriously to affect the plumbers not members of the association in the conduct of their business, and must necessarily have that effect. It is doubtless true, speaking generally, that no one has a right intentionally to do an act with the intent to injure another in his business. 'Injury,' however, in its legal sense, means damage resulting from a violation of a legal right. It is this violation of a legal right which renders the act wrongful in the eye of the law, and makes it actionable. If, therefore, there is a legal excuse for the act, it is not wrongful, even though damage may result from its performance. The cause and excuse for the sending of the notices, it is evident, was a selfish desire on the part of the members of the association to rid themselves of the competition of those not members, with a view of increasing the profits of their own business. The question, then, resolves itself into this: Was the desire to free themselves from competition a sufficient excuse, in legal contemplation, for the sending of the notices? We think the question must receive an affirmative answer. Competition, it has been said, is the life of trade. Every act done by a trader for the purpose of diverting trade from a rival and attracting it to himself is an act intentionally done, and, in so far as it is successful, to the injury of the rival in his business, since to that extent it lessens his gains and profits. To hold such an act wrongful and illegal would be to stifle competition." Macauley Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 33 Atl. 1, 87 L. R. A. 455, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770.

The court refused to enjoin the defendants. It is urged by counsel that the guilt of defendants does not involve what they did, but what they conspired to do. If the defendants had pleaded to the first count in the bill without calling for a bill of particulars, they would have gone to the jury on the general issue of traverse to the bill. When, however, the state files its bill of particulars, which, for the purpose of the trial, is as if the means had been set out in the original bill of indictment, the question is presented whether, either in respect to the purpose of the conspiracy or the means by which it was to be accomplished, any crime is charged. If no crime is charged, there is nothing for the jury to pass upon. The court will either, upon motion, quash the indictment, or, as it did in Com. v. Hunt, supra, arrest the judgment. We are of the opinion that a conspiracy to injure one's business is not per se indictable. Do the means set out make it so? This brings us to consider the acts done by the defendants. Three of them, on January 13, 1904, went together to the prosecutor's place of business, and notified him that he could not be considered in sympathy with organized labor unless he kept constantly employed union men. Certainly, the number of the defendants was not so large as to intimidate him, and there is no suggestion that their manner was either offensive, violent, or even discourteous. As we have seen, organized labor, or labor organizations, are not unlawful. The prosecutor had no legal right to demand that he should be considered in sympathy with organized labor; therefore he was not to be deprived of any legal right if he preferred to employ nonunion men, and the defendants had an equal right to consider him unsympathetic with organized labor if he exercised such right. Suppose the same number of persons, being members of the anti-saloon league, should go to a merchant's store and notify him that he would not be considered in sympathy with the temperance cause if he employed clerks who did not belong to the league. If he continued to employ such clerks, he was simply considered as unsympathetic with the cause. We fail to see any difference in principle between the act of the defendants and the case supposed. They notified him that he would not be considered in sympathy with organized labor if he kept in his employment nonunion men, although he was then under contract with nonunion men for a year in advance. It is intended, we assume, in this item to charge that the defendants conspired to compel the prosecutor to break his contract with nonunion men and discharge them. It will be noted that it is nowhere charged that such was the purpose of the defendants. Not a word is said capable of that construction. Certainly nothing should be left to conjecture. To what extent a conspiracy to induce men to violate their contracts is criminal is not clear. We are not required to discuss or decide it here. There is no complaint that the conduct of the defendants was intended to injure nonunion men. This case has no such element in it, and we do not wish to be understood as expressing any opinion in regard to it. The question has been before other courts. There is a painful absence of harmony in the decisions. Suppose, however, that it be conceded that the defendants did notify the prosecutor that, unless he discharged nonunion men with whom he had contracted, etc., what was to be the result to him if he refused? He was to be considered as unsympathetic with union labor. This falls far short of intimidation or coercion. It will be noted that there is no charge that these defendants were members of any secret or other organization, or that they had the power or threatened to control the conduct of large numbers of men. It is said that they, "together with other evil-disposed persons, conspired," etc. Who "the other evil-disposed persons" are, what (if any) relation they bear to the defendants, is not stated. This alleged conspiracy is confined to the five defendants. When informed by the prosecutor that he would not discharge any nonunion men with whom he had contracted, and that he would not agree to employ only union men in his business, the defendants "went away," and "in furtherance of the said conspiracy did actually" publish and cause to be published the aforesaid notice, etc.: "Action of Carpenters and Joiners. At a meeting of the carpenters held last evening for his attitude towards organized labor, Mr. C. A. Rice was declared unfair and so listed, and that no union carpenters would work any material from his shop after February 15, 1904." The counsel for the prosecutor in their brief say: "It is perfectly true that defendants had a right to refuse to work material from Rice's shop; that they had a right to put him on their unfair list." The criminality, they say, consists in the intent or purpose with which these things are done. This, they say, is a question for the jury. It is not easy to see how it is a question for the jury when the defendants admit the purpose, etc. If that which they did is lawful—if they had a perfect legal right to do it—we are unable to perceive how the publication renders it unlawful. We are not aware of any principle of law which makes it criminal to publish that a person has done an act which he had a perfect legal right to do, or that a person intends to pursue a course of conduct which he has a legal right to pursue. Judge Holmes says: "As a general rule, even if subject to some exceptions, what you may do in a certain event you may threaten to do—that is, giving warning of your intention to do in that event—and thus allow the other person the chance of avoiding the consequences; so, as to 'compulsion,' it depends upon how you 'compel.'" Parker, O. J., in Nat. Protec. Ap. v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 315, 63 N. E. 369, 58 L. R. A. 185, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648, says: "A labor organization is endowed with precisely the same legal right as an individual to threaten to do that which it may lawfully do." "If an act be lawful—that is, one which a person has a legal right to do—the fact that he may in doing it be actuated by an improper motive does not render it unlawful." Bohn Manfg. Co. v. Hollis, supra. It being properly conceded that it was not unlawful—that is, for the purpose of this discussion, criminal—for the defendants to declare Mr. Rice "unfair," and to refuse to work his material, we can find nothing criminal in the publication made of their opinion or purpose.

Does the fact that the defendants intended to induce persons who might otherwise purchase material from Mr. Rice to refrain from doing so make their conduct unlawful? This brings us back to the original question. Persons who might wish to buy material from Mr. Rice had no legal claim on the services of the defendants. They were under no obligation to work the material purchased from him. Therefore in saying that they would not do so they deprived such persons of no legal right. They could not have maintained an action for damages against the defendants for refusing to work such material or for saying so. How, then, in a legal sense, can he be said to be injured? It is said that the purpose of the defendants in making the publication was to induce persons to refrain from purchasing material for fear of incurring the ill will of the defendants. This certainly is not unlawful. Bowen v. Matheson, 14 Allen, 499. If courts were to maintain actions upon such grounds, society would soon be converted into an array of hostile litigants. As is well said by Judge Black in Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. 308: "Malicious motives make a bad act worse, but they cannot make that wrong which in its own essence is lawful. * * * Any transaction which would be lawful and proper if the parties are friends cannot be made the foundation of an action merely because they happen to be enemies. As long as a man keeps himself within the law by doing no act which violates it, we must leave his motive to Him who searches the heart." In Heywood v. Tillson, 75 Me. 225, 46 Am. Rep. 373, it is said: "To entitle the plaintiff to recover, there must be a wrong done. No one is a wrongdoer but he who does what the law does not allow. He who does what the law allows cannot be a wrongdoer, whatever his motive." "The exercise of a legal right cannot be a legal wrong to another." Cooley on Torts, 65; Cotterell v. Jones, 73 C. L. 718. In Hunt v. Simonds, 19 Mo. 583, it is said: "The act charged upon the defendants as having been done by preconcert was an act which each and every one of the defendants had a right to do, and was no violation of any right which the plaintiff could claim under the law. He had no right to demand insurance upon his boat from any or all of the defendants, nor that they should insure a cargo upon his boat; and consequently their refusal to insure, from any motive, however improper, could give him no right to sue them. The moment it is established that the conspiracy is not a substantial ground of action, it follows that no action can be brought to recover damages for the joint act of several, unless the right itself is alleged." The case of Payne v. W. & A. R. R., 13 Lea, 507, 49 Am. Rep. 666, illustrates the principle as seen from the other viewpoint. The agent of the railroad caused to be posted by the yardmaster a notice in these words: "Any employé in this company on Chattanooga pay roll who trades with L. Payne from this date will be discharged. Notify men in your department." The plaintiff alleged that he was a merchant having a large trade with the employés and others; that the act of the defendant was malicious, etc. The defendant demurred. The court sustained the demurrer in an able opinion, holding that, as the act was not unlawful, the motive with which it was done did not give a cause of action. The judge said that any other doctrine would lead to evils innumerable. "It would be incredible that our courts of law should be perverted to the trial of the motives of men who confessedly had done no unlawful act. It is suggestive of the days of constructive treason." Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39, 23 Am. Rep. 93. In Richardson v. R. R., 126 N. C. 100, 35 S. E. 235, Clark, J., says: "But upon the plaintiff's own showing his discharge was within the right of the defendant, and not wrongful, and malice disconnected with the infringement of a legal right cannot be the subject of an action." The principle is well stated by Bowen, L. J., in Mogue Steamship Co. v. McGregor, 23 Q. B. D. 612: "We were invited by plaintiff's counsel to accept the position from which their argument started—that an action will lie if a man maliciously and wrongfully conducts himself so as to injure another in that other's trade. Obscurity resides in the language used to state this proposition. The terms 'maliciously,' 'wrongfully,' and 'injure' are words all of which have accurate meanings, well known to the law, but which also have popular and less precise signification, into which it is necessary to see that the argument does not slide. An intent to 'injure' in strictness means more than an intent to harm. It connotes an intent to do wrongful harm. 'Maliciously,' in like manner, means and implies an intention to do an act which is wrongful, to the detriment of another. The term 'wrongful' imports in its term the infringement of some right." The question, as applied to a disturbance of relations between an employer and employed, underwent a most exhaustive examination in Allen v. Flood, L. R. A. C. 1, in which the conclusion was reached that "an act lawful in itself is not converted, by a malicious or bad motive, into an unlawful act, so as to make the doer liable." In the later case of Quinn v. Leatham, L. R. A. C. (1901) the same question, with some modifying facts, was discussed. The reporter says, "Allen v. Flood explained, and its real effect stated." An interesting discussion of the question may be found in the Law Quar. Rev. January, 1904. Without undertaking to mark the limitations or exceptions to the general principle, we are of the opinion that the defendants' conduct was not unlawful; that the motive prompting them does not change or affect its legal quality. It is not to be doubted that many acts which subject a party to a civil action, without regard to the motive with which they are committed, are indictable either by the common law or by statute by reason of the motive which prompts them. To kill a man's horse is actionable; to do so maliciously is indictable. The act itself is a legal injury. The statute makes it a crime when malice is the moving cause. Many other instances readily occur to the mind. We think that it will be found that in every case where the act is criminal there is a trespass on some legal right, or a legal wrong done to the complaining person. We concur with his honor that no criminal act is charged in the indictment.

We have not overlooked the cases cited in the briefs. The courts are very far from agreement in regard to the law of conspiracy. This fact tends to show the danger of giving to the word "unlawful" a broad and all-embracing meaning in the definition of a criminal conspiracy. We are told this is a case of great importance. It is said: "We are now at the parting of the ways. It is safe to predict that there will be no more criminal conspiracies, no more demands for union shops, and no strikes, sympathetic or otherwise, in this state, if the court sustains the bill in this case." We are also told by counsel that "it rests upon the members of this court to decide whether labor and capital * * * shall dwell together in peace and unity controlled by the law," etc. It is desirable that this condition, which has always so happily prevailed in this state, shall be preserved. We are duly sensible of our duty, as judges, to so declare the law as to secure, as far as the law may, this condition. As we have endeavored to show, concerted action and association to protect common interests and promote common advantage is not peculiar to those whose capital consists in their labor. The security of the state demands that the same principles of law must apply to all sorts and conditions of men. It is well to consider how far liberty of thought and action may be restricted by a resort to the "loose expressions" and dangerously uncertain definitions of this crime affecting the liberty of the citizens. It is very doubtful whether industrial conditions, or relations between employer and employes, have been improved by prosecutions for criminal conspiracy. As we have seen, in England the subject has received the most careful attention of enlightened statesmen, resulting in the passage of wise statutes. It is asked, may not a man conduct his business in his own way? And undoubtedly he may. For any unlawful interference with this right he has a remedy, either civil or criminal, as such interference may justify. The question is asked, may not men organize to promote their common interests, and, when such interests conflict with other interests, resort to lawful and peaceful means to secure the best results? It is clear that they may. Where, then, is the line which separates conduct which is lawful from that which is unlawful? The answer comes from Chief Justice Shaw, one of the wisest and most learned of American jurists: "If it is to be carried into effect by fair or honorable or lawful means, it is, to say the least, innocent; if by falsehood or force, it may be stamped with the character of a criminal conspiracy." We would not be misunderstood. Capital, either in the form of money or other property, or in the form of skill, experience, intelligence, and strength, may combine for lawful purpose. When, in either form, or under whatever guise it seeks or conspires to effectuate its purpose, however lawful, by means of violence to person or property, or by fraud, or other criminal means, or when, by such means, it conspires to prevent any person from conducting his own business in his own way, or from employing such persons as he may prefer, or by preventing any person from being employed at such wages or upon such terms as he may prefer, the courts will be prompt to declare and firm to administer the law to punish the guilty and protect the injured. What acts will constitute such unlawful means it is impossible to define. As all other questions arising out of the struggle of political, social, or industrial forces, they must be decided as they are presented.

We have refrained from using terms having a popular, but as yet indefinite legal, meaning. The word "boycott," by reason of the circumstances under which it originated, and the extent to which the means used to accomplish the purpose of the parties engaged in it were carried, is commonly supposed to involve unlawful means. The word is defined in Black's Law Dictionary, p. 150, as follows: "In criminal law. A conspiracy formed and intended directly or indirectly to prevent the carrying on of any lawful business, or to injure the business of any one by wrongfully preventing those who would be customers from buying anything from or employing the representatives of said business by threats, intimidation, or other forcible means." In Brace v. Evans, 3 Ry. & Corp. Law J. 561, it is said: "The word in itself implies a threat in popular acceptance. It is an organized effort to exclude a person from business relations with others by persuasion, intimidation, and other acts which tend to violence, and have coerced him, through fear of his own injury, to submit to dictation in the management of his affairs." In Matthews v. Shankland (Sup.) 56 N. Y. Supp. 123, the term is held to come within the statutory definition of an "unlawful conspiracy." For history of the word and definition as adopted by many courts, see "Words and Phrases," vol. 1, page 855. We find nothing in the charge in this case which brings the purpose or conduct of the defendant within such definition. Much obscurity and uncertainty has originated in the careless use of the terms of this character.

Mutual confidence, forbearance, patience, and concession, accompanied by a free, frank interchange of thought and feeling, will do more to perpetuate the kindly relations existing among us, with our homogeneous population, than prosecutions for criminal conspiracies when no criminal or unlawful elements exist. In view of the wide divergence of judicial opinion, by reason whereof the law is oppressed with a distressing uncertainty, it would seem that the Legislature should abrogate the common law on the subject, and enact a plain, clearly expressed, and carefully guarded statute in lieu thereof. We think it also proper to say that in the discussion of this case we do not mean to suggest that Mr. Rice is unfair to his employes. We have considered the appeal in its legal aspects as presented by the record.

His honor's judgment quashing the indictment must be affirmed.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). As stated in the opinion in chief: "The sufficiency of the first count in the bill is not called in question, as filing the bill of particulars makes sufficiently definite the charge and means by which the alleged conspiracy was to be put into execution. * * * The solicitor filed a bill of particulars, and the state is confined to the items therein set down." Bishop, Cr. Pro. 643." Those items are, in substance: (1) That pursuant to a previous agreement three of the defendants at the time charged went to the prosecutor's place of business, and notified him that he could not be considered in sympathy with organized labor unless he employed none but union men; (2) nor if he retained nonunion men, notwithstanding he had already contracted with some as much as a year in advance; (3) that upon the prosecutor's refusal to discharge the nonunion men with whom he had already contracted, and whose time had not expired, and would not agree to employ only union men in his business, the defendants published in a local newspaper that at a meeting of the carpenters and joiners to consider the attitude of the prosecutor towards organized labor he was "declared unfair, and so listed, and that no union carpenter would work any material from his shop after 15 Feb. 1904."

It was charged that the defendants conspired to do this with intent to injure the prosecutor in his business by causing other persons to refrain from buying lumber and material from the prosecutor for fear of the ill will of the defendants, and also lest they might be subjected to delay and inconvenience by reason of the refusal of the defendants and others to work upon material purchased from the prosecutor.

A criminal conspiracy is defined to be "an agreement of two or more persons to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means." No act charged above, nor any of the means set out in the bill of particulars, is unlawful, and the charge of intent is immaterial unless the act or the means used were unlawful. It was not unlawful for the carpenters' union to try to induce the prosecutor to employ none but members of their union, neither illegal threats nor violence or other unlawful means being used; nor was it forbidden by any law to publish the fact of his refusal, and to ask those friendly to their organization not to patronize him. Whether such publication would reduce or increase the prosecutor's business would depend entirely upon the public, and whether a majority of those dealing with one in the prosecutor's business preferred the union or non-union system. The state was restricted to the items set forth in the bill of particulars, and, there being no unlawful act alleged therein, nor unlawful means to do a lawful act, the bill was properly quashed. This matter is fully discussed and thus held by Parker, C. J., in National Protective Ass'n v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 815, 63 N. E. 869, 58 L. R. A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648. There is no exception to the means being furnished by a bill of particulars, but it may be well to note that it is well settled that in indictments for conspiracy, barratry, assault and battery, nuisance, and some other offenses, it is sufficient if the illegal act is charged, and the means need not be charged. In Aikens v. Wisconsin, 25 Sup. Ct. 3, 49 L. Ed. —, it is said, "The very plot is an act in itself," citing Mulcahy v. Reg., L. R. 3 H. L. 317. The means are never charged in most, if not all, other offenses—for instance, in murder, burglary, rape, arson, and, indeed, nearly all crimes—yet as to conspiracy and others above named a bill of particulars as to the means may be, and usually will be, ordered by the court, to furnish information to the defendant. In State v. Brady, 107 N. C. 824, 12 S. E. 825, which was an indictment for conspiracy, it was held, citing the English cases, that, an illegal conspiracy being indictable, though no act be done in pursuance thereof, the means need not be charged. It is enough if the conspiracy is charged to do an act which act the court can see is unlawful, but the court would order a bill of particulars, if asked. The court quotes, among other cases, from Goersen v. Com., 99 Pa. 398, which was an indictment for murder: "The nature and cause of a criminal prosecution are sufficiently averred by charging the crime alleged to have been committed. This must be done. The mode or manner refers to the instrument with which it was committed, or the specific agency used to accomplish the result. It is not necessary to aver either of these in the indictment. Whenever one, before trial, needs more specific information than is contained in the indictment to enable him to make a just defense, it may be obtained on proper application to the court." This court then goes on (State v. Brady, supra) to state the practice as to applications for bills of particulars, and adds: "This practice is much favored, because no demurrer or motion to quash lies to a bill of particulars, but, if an insufficient bill is furnished, the court will order a fuller statement of particulars to be furnished." The object of the law is not to require technical refinements in indictments, that guilty men may escape punishment, but to dispense with them, that criminal cases may be tried upon the facts, and the truth of the charge ascertained. The object of the indictment is simply to give the defendant notice of the crime with which he is charged. If he needs information as to the means by which the state will seek to prove that he committed the crime, the court will order a bill of particulars, and, if the one furnished is not sufficient, will order another and another. State v. Brady has been cited and approved on this point in State v. Gates (indictment for perjury) 107 N. O. 835, 12 S. E. 819; State v. Dunn (resisting an officer) 109 N. O. 840, 13 S. E. 881; Avery, J., in State v. Bryant (destroying line trees) 111 N. O. 695, 16 S. E. 326; Avery, J., in State v. Shade (secret assault) 115 N. O. 758, 20 S. E. 537; Townsend v. Williams, 117 N. O. 337, 23 S. E. 461; Montgomery, J., in State v. Pickett (resisting officer) 118 N. O. 1233, 24 S. E. 350; and in the Gold Brick Case (State v. Howard) 129 N. O. 657, 40 S. E. 71, in which last many authorities elsewhere are cited, and our ruling reaffirmed that in indictments for conspiracy to do an unlawful act, the means, being mere matters of evidence, need not be charged in the indictment, but that a bill of particulars will be ordered for information of the defendant, if applied for. In State v. Brady this court cites with approval from Wright on Criminal Conspiracy, 180, 191, that: "If unexecuted, the means cannot be stated; if executed, the means employed are but evidence of the offense or an aggravation of it, * * * for the crime of conspiracy consists of the conspiracy, and not of the execution of it;" I. e., the agreement to do an unlawful act. In the present case the act agreed to be done—the publication aforesaid—was not an unlawful act.

The practice is uniform in all jurisdictions. In 2 McClain, Cr. Law, §§ 966, 976, 977, it is said that it is not necessary to charge anything as done. "A conspiracy to do an unlawful act is a separate and distinct offense from that of the act itself, and is to be governed in its prosecution by the provisions relating to conspiracies, and not those relating to the specific offense" (citing Com. v. McHale, 97 Pa. 397, 39 Am. Rep. 806); but that the court will order a bill of particulars to give the defendant all necessary information (citing numerous cases, among them, upon the last point, Rex v. Hamilton, 7 C. & P. 448; Reg. v. Rycroft, 6 Cox, 76; Reg. v. Esdalle, 1 F. & F. 213; Com. v. Meserve, 154 Mass. 64, 27 N. E. 997). To the same effect (in embezzlement), Rex v. Hodgson, 3 C. & P. 422, and Rex v. Bootyman, 5 C. & P. 300. The law and practice seem uniform, and are thus summed up by Dr. Wharton in his admirable work on Pleading & Practice, § 702, with abundant citation of authorities: "It is allowable to indict a man as a common barrator, or as a common seller of intoxicating liquors, or assaulting a person unknown, or as conspiring with persons unknown to cheat and defraud the prosecutor by 'divers false tokens and pretenses'; and in none of these cases is the allegation of time material, so that the defendant is obliged to meet a charge of an offense comparatively undesigned, committed at a time which is not designated at all. Hence has arisen the practice of requiring in such cases bills of particulars, and the adoption of such bills, instead of the exacting of increased particularity in indictments, is productive of several advantages. It prevents much cumbrous special pleading, and consequently failure of justice, as no demurrer lies to bills of particulars; and it gives the defendant in plain unartificial language notice of the charge he has to meet." The same statement as to the law is made in 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. § 644 (2), with the same reason that a bill of particulars "enables the defendant on the one hand fairly to defend himself, and, on the other hand, not fettering the prosecution." In 2 Bishop, New Cr. Proc. § 208, it is said as to conspiracy: "As agreed means are not essential to the offense, it would be a perversion of justice to require the prosecuting power to allege them;" and in section 209 he says that as to conspiracy, assault and battery, barratry, common scolds, and some others, "they may be charged in as few words" as possible, adding that, where further information as to the means, which are mere evidential matters, should be given the defendant, the court will order a bill of particulars. The courts all seem to adopt the same rule and for the same reason. It was held that a bill of particulars was the remedy on an indictment for adultery. People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569, 18 N. W. 362. It was recognized as the settled practice in indictments for nuisance (State v. Hill, 13 R. I. 314); in indictments for perjury (Williams v. Comm. 91 Pa. 493); in indictments for murder (Goersen v. Com. 99 Pa. 388). In short, in all cases where information as to the means is necessary to the defendant, it will be given him by a bill of particulars, but these need not be set out in the indictment, which is required only to charge the offense, which in conspiracy is the "conspiring" to do an illegal act. Hence the act must be charged, but not the means, which are merely evidential and which cannot be known, as often none are resorted to; the "conspiracy," not the perpetration of a substantive offense, being the charge. In an ancient case in Massachusetts (Com. v. Hunt, 4 Metc. 111, 38 Am. Dec. 346) Shaw, C. J., did say that in cases where the conspiracy charged was not to do an unlawful act, but to resort to unlawful means to do a lawful act, the means should be charged. But this does not conflict with the above authorities, for the unlawful act conspired to be done must be charged; and, when the unlawfulness is the unlawful acts to be done to effect a lawful purpose, of course such unlawful acts must be charged. And in a much more recent case in Massachusetts (Com. v. Meserve [1891] 154 Mass. 72, 78, 27 N. E. 997) that learned court reaffirmed the universal doctrine above laid down that the means need not be charged in an indictment for conspiracy, but that information will be given by a bill of particulars; and cites Com. v. Hunt, supra, as authority that such information should be in the indictment only when "the purpose of the conspiracy itself does not appear to be criminal or unlawful." The practice as to setting out evidential matters in bills of particulars is a wise one, observed in the English as well as the American courts, and has been held by all the authorities here as elsewhere, and has been reaffirmed by us as recently as the Gold Brick Case, 129 N. C. 657, 40 S. E. 71. The whole matter is well summed up in the Star Route Case (U. S. v. Dorsey [D. C.] 40 Fed. 752, which holds, citing U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 564, 23 L. Ed. 588, that, if an indictment for conspiracy charges that the object was to commit a crime or unlawful act, the means, being evidential, need not be set forth in the indictment, and information, if desired by the defendant, may be given him by a bill of particulars; but where the conspiracy is to use unlawful means to do a lawful act, then the means is the unlawful object to be effected by the conspiracy, and must be charged in the indictment. Indeed, the definition of criminal conspiracy, "an agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means," might be properly shortened by omitting the latter half, for, where the conspiracy is to resort to unlawful means to secure the lawful end, such unlawful means is the unlawful act which the conspiracy contemplates, and should be charged that the court may see, as a matter of law, that an offense is charged.

Bills of particulars are not peculiar to indictments for conspiracy, but are allowed as to all offenses, and in civil cases also. Code, § 259. They are for the benefit of defendants desiring information as to evidential matters which are not required to be set out in an indictment or complaint. The practice is just the opposite of "general warrants" or "informations." No good pleading ever requires matters of evidence to be set out, and this is simply a benevolent practice recognized by all courts and our statute as well, to furnish the defendants information, if applied for, to assist them in preparing the defense.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring). I concur in the admirable opinion of the court upon well-settled rules of law as well as the highest principles of public policy and natural right. I can add nothing thereto beyond what has been said in my dissenting opinion in State v. Howard, 129 N. C. 663, 40 S. E. 71. In that case I used the following language: "I do not suppose that any one will deny that the indictment of Parnell was purely for political reasons; and, if the English rule prevails in this state, what is there to prevent the indictment of the members of our usual labor organizations?" What I then foresaw has come to pass, and it needs not a prophet's vision to foresee the vast potentialities of evil that would attend the decision of this court were it other than it is.

We are assured that if we break up the labor organizations there will be no more strikes, and that peace and order will reign throughout the land. When Kosciusko fell, and Poland lay once more beneath the Cossack's heel, Sebastiani announced that, "Order reigns in Warsaw;" while Louis Napoleon, in seizing the throne of France, declared that, "The empire is peace." North Carolinians seek not the peace of despotism, but that peace alone which follows the mutual recognition of equal rights, and the impartial enforcement of just and equal laws.

(137 N. C. 1)

NORTH CAROLINA CORPORATION COMMISSION v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

CORPORATION COMMISSION — POWERS — REGULATING CONNECTIONS OF CARRIERS — LEGISLATIVE POWER — DIRECTING VERDICT — FINAL JUDGMENT ON APPEAL.

1. Under the Corporation Commission act (Acts 1899, p. 291, c. 164, § 1), providing that the Corporation Commission shall have such general control and supervision of railroad companies as is necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the act, and section 21, providing that all common carriers shall afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic and forwarding freight and passengers, and shall make as close connections as practicable for the convenience of the traveling public, the commission has power to require a railroad company to have a train arrive at a certain station on its road at a certain time, so as to connect with a train of another company.

2. The Corporation Commission act (Acts 1899, p. 304, c. 164, § 21), requiring connecting lines of common carriers to make as close connections as practicable for the convenience of the traveling public, does not mean a simple physical connection of tracks, but a connection of trains.

3. Code 1883, § 1957 (9), giving railroad companies the right to regulate the time and manner in which passengers and property shall be transported, is modified by the Railroad Commission act (Acts 1891, p. 275, c. 320), making the right of the railroad companies to fix the time of running their trains subject to the power of the commission to require connections to be made when public convenience requires it and it is reasonable and just, which provision is reenacted in the Corporation Commission act (Acts 1899, p. 291, c. 164).

4. The Corporation Commission, under the authority given by the Corporation Commission act (Acts 1899, pp. 291, 304, c. 164, §§ 1, 21) to control railroad companies so far as necessary to carry into effect the provision of the act that common carriers shall afford reasonable and proper facilities for forwarding passengers, and shall make as close connections as practicable for the convenience of the traveling public, may require a railroad company to make connection with a train of another railroad, though it costs the railroad company $15 a day to do this; its net earnings in the state being nearly $2,000,000 per year, and several thousand passengers a year being thus saved several hours and the inconvenience of traveling at night.

5. The Corporation Commission act (Acts 1899, pp. 291, 304, c. 164, §§ 1, 21), giving the commission power to require a railroad company to make reasonable and proper connection with the trains of other roads for the convenience of the traveling public, is within the power of the Legislature.

6. It is error to direct a verdict on issues of fact, there being conflicting evidence.

7. Under Code, § 957, providing that the Supreme Court may render such judgment as it shall appear to it ought to be rendered, it will, on reversal of a judgment reversing a proper order of the Corporation Commission, render final judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Brown, Judge.

Proceedings by the state, on the relation of the North Carolina Corporation Commission, against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant on appeal from an order of the commission, the commission appeals. Reversed.

It appears from the record that for some 10 years prior to 11th October, 1903, the passenger traffic from a large portion of eastern North Carolina to Raleigh and the adjacent central part of the state was made by the defendant, Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, connecting with the Southern Railway at Selma at 2:50 p. m. daily. For a year or two prior to that day the connection became very irregular, to the great inconvenience of the traveling public; passengers frequently being compelled to lie over at Selma till 11 o'clock at night, and then forced to take a mixed train, with uncomfortable accommodations, to go westward. The Southern Railway finding its time between Goldsboro and Greensboro (88 miles per hour) dangerous, on account of the condition of its track, had also lately changed its schedule to leave Goldsboro 30 minutes earlier. The matter being called to the attention of the Corporation Commission, it attempted to remedy the evil. After much correspondence with the officials of both roads, the commission on 8th December, 1903, made the following order: "Whereas, the convenience of the traveling public requires that close connection be made between the passenger trains on the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad and the Southern Railway at Selma daily in the afternoon of each day; and whereas, it appears that such close connection is practicable: It is ordered that the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad arrange its schedule so that the train will arrive at Selma at 2:25 p. m. each day, instead of 2:50 p. m., as the schedule now stands. It is further ordered that if the Atlantic Coast Line trains have passengers en route for the Southern Railway, and are delayed, notice shall be given to the Southern Railway, and that the Southern Railway shall wait 15 minutes for such delayed trains upon receipt of such notice. This order shall take effect December 20, 1903. By order of the commission. Franklin McNeill, Chairman. H. C. Brown, Clerk." This order quickened the arrival time of the Atlantic Coast Line train at Selma 25 minutes, but, as it required the Southern to wait at that point 15 minutes for delayed trains, it more than divided the time between the roads; exacting only 10 minutes' advance of time on the part of the defendant to procure this convenience to the traveling public. On 18th December, 1903, on the application of counsel for the defendant, the order was suspended, and both companies were notified to appear before the Corporation Commission at Raleigh on 12th January, 1904, that "the matter of the connection at Selma of the Atlantic Coast Line going south with that of the Southern Railway going west in the afternoon" might be heard, and asking both companies to have representatives present. The defendant appeared by its superintendent and its general counsel, and the other company was also represented. After hearing both sides, "the situation being thoroughly discussed," the commission took the matter under advisement. On 16th January, 1904, the commission rendered a full finding of the facts, concluding with this judgment: "And it is therefore ordered that the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company furnish transportation for passengers from Rocky Mount to Selma after 12:50 and by and before 2:25 p. m. each day. It is further ordered that the Southern Railway hold its train No. 135 at Selma 15 minutes if for any reason the Atlantic Coast Line train connecting at that point is delayed." It was further ordered that the order should take effect 26th January, 1904. To this judgment the Southern Railway Company did not except. The Atlantic Coast Line filed five exceptions: (1) That it was not practicable to make the connection at Selma by extending the run of either its Plymouth or its Springhope train to Selma; (2) that it would be unprofitable and a loss for it to make the connection by putting on an additional train from Rocky Mount to Selma; (3) the commission has no power to require it to put on extra trains; (4) that it is not practicable to make the connection without putting on an extra train, which the commission has no power to do; (5) that the order is unreasonable, because passengers from Rocky Mount can make connection at Goldsboro at 6:50 a. m., or at Selma by night train over the Southern, or they could go up to Weldon and go over the Seaboard Railroad. A letter in the record from the transportation department of the defendant company, dated 23d January, 1904, states that prior to the breaking of connection at Selma the defendant's 2:50 p. m. train transported on an average 12 passengers daily for the Southern at Selma, while since the average was only two. This shows 3,650 passengers annually inconvenienced by the failure to connect at that point. There is evidence elsewhere in the record that it was a very much larger number. On 2d February, 1904, the exceptions were heard by the commission upon the testimony of witnesses offered by the defendant and other evidence. Upon all the evidence, and after argument by counsel for the defendant, the commission, on 13th February, 1904, made a fuller finding of fact, in the course of which it is recited, inter alia, that, by the connection at Selma at 2:50 p. m. between the Atlantic Coast Line train No. 39 (south bound) and the Southern train No. 135 (west bound), "the greater portion of the section of the country reached by the said branch roads was for years furnished the nearest and cheapest route of travel to Raleigh and other Southern Railway points. The greater portion of the travel between the Atlantic Coast Line territory and the Southern Railway points was by this route. It is admitted in the correspondence of the Atlantic Coast Line in this matter that this was the most important connection, being the principal outlet for passengers en route from eastern Carolina territory to Raleigh and other Southern Railway points. There seems to have been no complaint about the failure of these railroad companies to keep this schedule and make this connection until about the year 1900. The Atlantic Coast Line informs the commission that 'this matter has been a frequent source of correspondence between this company and the Southern Railway Company since 1900, and that during this time frequent complaints have been made to this company by the Southern Railway Company of its failure to make schedule time at Selma.'"

The commission found (giving its reasons) that passengers ought neither to be required to go a much longer distance around by Weldon, nor to make connection at unreasonable hours at Goldsboro (6:50 a. m.), nor to take a night train (11 p. m.) connection at Selma, when a few minutes quickened time would maintain the connection which had been made at Selma, in the early afternoon, for more than 10 years. The commission also found that the defendant could make the connection, if it chose, by extending the run of its Springhope train, which, coming down 19 miles from that place, reached Rocky Mount at 12:10, where it lay over until 4 p. m. before returning to Springhope, during which four hours it could easily be run 41 miles and back, making this connection. It thus concludes its judgment: "There is within the territory served by these branch lines approximately 400,000 inhabitants. The report of the Atlantic Coast Line to this commission for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1903, shows net earnings from operation in North Carolina amounting to $1,943,116.63, and that there was a surplus of $1,293,983.54 after paying interest on its debts and 5% dividends on its stock, both common and preferred, from the net earnings of the company's entire line. On a mileage basis, this will show that there was a surplus of net earnings in North Carolina for that year of approximately $324,493. The commission is of the opinion that the facilities given heretofore by the Atlantic Coast Line to the traveling public should not be lessened; that the connection furnished passengers from the Washington Branch, the Norfolk & Carolina Branch, the Plymouth Branch, and the Nashville Branch with No. 135 Southern Railway passenger train at Selma, and also for all points between Rocky Mount and Selma for nearly 10 years, should be restored; that if this cannot be done by the Atlantic Coast Line train No. 39, as formerly, on account of this train being heavier, containing usually one or more express cars, and, in all, usually ten or more cars, and on account of increase in business between Richmond and Selma, which necessitates longer stops, then other facilities should be furnished by the Atlantic Coast Line Company; that this connection, which was the principal outlet for passengers from Eastern Carolina to Selma and other Southern Railway points for the last ten years, instead of being abandoned, should be made permanent and certain; and that this result be accomplished by carrying out the order heretofore made in this court. It is ordered, therefore, that the exceptions be, and they are hereby, overruled. Franklin McNeill, Chairman."

From this order, thus repeated the third time, and after the fullest investigation occupying several months, the defendant appealed to the superior court. In that court the following issues were submitted, the Corporation Commission excepting:

"(1) Is it practicable for train No. 39 of the Atlantic Coast Line, due to arrive at Selma at 2:50 p. m., to make connection at Selma with train No. 135, west bound, of the Southern Railway, due to leave Selma at 2:25 p. m.?

"(2) Is it practicable to make said connection by extending the run of the Plymouth train daily from Plymouth to Selma and return, and, if so, what would be the additional expense?"

"(3) Is it practicable to make said connection by the use of the Springhope train, and, if so, what would be the additional expense?"

"(4) In order to make such connection, would the defendant company have to run an additional train on its main line from Rocky Mount to Selma?"

The court directed the jury to answer the first three issues "No," and the fourth issue "Yes," and the Corporation Commission accepted.

The following issues the jury were permitted to answer, to which they responded as follows:

"(5) Is it practicable for said train to run the schedule prescribed in the plaintiff's order, having due regard to the number of trains and number of stops, on the defendant's main line from Rocky Mount to Selma? Yes.

"(6) What would be the daily cost of operating such train from Rocky Mount to Selma and return? $40.

"(7) What would be the probable daily receipts from such train? $25.

"(8) Is it reasonable and proper that, for the convenience of the traveling public, the defendant company should be required to make such connection? Yes."

Upon the verdict the Corporation Commission moved for judgment, but the court rendered judgment for the defendant, giving as a reason that Code 1883, § 1957 (9), gave to railroad companies the right to regulate "the time and manner in which property and passengers shall be transported," and that it had been unable to find where this had been repealed; that he was of opinion that the statute had not conferred any power upon the Corporation Commission to order any connection to be made between the trains on connecting railroads, and hence he refrained from passing upon the defendant's further contention that the General Assembly had no constitutional right to grant such power. The Corporation Commission appealed, assigning several grounds of error, which will appear in the opinion.

Busbee & Busbee, F. A. Woodard, Argo & Shaffer, and the Attorney General, for appellant. Junius Davis and Pou & Fuller, for appellee.

OLARK, C. J. (after stating the facts). For more than 10 years the people of a large part of the eastern portion of the state, having occasion to come to the capital or to the adjacent central section, have found their most direct and convenient route to be via Selma, at which point, by its schedule, the south-bound train No. 39 of the defendant, Atlantic Coast Line, delivered its passengers at 2:50 p. m. daily in time to connect with the Southern Railway west-bound train No. 135 from Goldsboro to Greensboro. On 3d October, 1903, the Southern notified the Corporation Commission that, owing to the condition of its track, it was dangerous to maintain its speed—38 miles per hour—on its train No. 135, and proposed to leave Goldsboro 30 minutes sooner, which would cause its arrival a few minutes earlier at Selma. This the commission found to be proper and reasonable. It was brought to the attention of the commission, by proper complaint made, that for many months the Atlantic Coast Line had failed to make this afternoon connection regularly at Selma at its schedule time, to the great inconvenience of the traveling public, and it was asked to order the afternoon connection to be resumed and observed. After much correspondence with the officials of both roads, the commission on 8th December, 1903, ordered that the afternoon connection should be made, and, to that end, directed that the defendant should quicken its schedule so as to arrive at Selma at 2:25 instead of 2:50, p. m. as before—an advance of 25 minutes; but, as the same order required the Southern train to wait 15 minutes whenever the Atlantic Coast Line was delayed for any cause, the order practically required the defendant to arrive ten minutes earlier. Objection being taken, the order was suspended, and both companies were summoned before the Corporation Commission; and, after investigation and argument, on 16th January, 1904, the order was renewed. The Southern thereupon acquiesced in the order. The defendant alone filed exceptions, upon which testimony and argument were heard, and the commission renewed its order in the same terms, 13th February, 1904. On appeal by the defendant to the Superior Court, there were sundry issues submitted, over the exception of the Corporation Commission. But as the order of the commission appealed from simply directed the connection to be made as in former years, prescribing no details of the method (which was left to the judgment of the defendant itself), save an acceleration of 25 minutes, subject to a delay of the Southern train of 15 minutes, when the defendant's train should be late, we think the matter could have been, and was, fully disposed of by an affirmative response of the jury to the eighth issue, "Is it reasonable and proper that, for convenience of the traveling public, the defendant company should be required to make such connection?" taken together with the findings upon the sixth and seventh issues, that, even if an additional train should have to be put on between Rocky Mount and Selma, the loss to the defendant would be only $15 per day, which might be overcome by the increased travel induced by certainty of connection, and the official returns made by the defendant to the commission 30th June, 1903, as required by law, and which are in the evidence, that the net earnings of the defendant from its operations in North Carolina amounted for the year ending 30th June, 1903, to $1,903,116.63, with a surplus of nearly $1,300,000 after paying interest on its debts, and 5 per cent. dividends on its stock, both common and preferred, from the net earnings of the entire line. It is surely sufficiently large, as it stands, to justify the affirmation of the order of the Corporation Commission that this great inconvenience to the public should be avoided, even at a cost to the defendant of $15 per day, when the net earnings of the defendant from all its operations in this state approximate $2,000,000 annually, and the net surplus of the defendant's whole system, after payment of interest on its debts and dividends on its stock, whether watered or not, amounts to near $1,300,000 annually. And upon such verdict, the judge below should have entered judgment affirming the order of the Corporation Commission, and we should reverse his judgment and enter such judgment here, provided (1) the Legislature has conferred such authority upon the commission; (2) and the Legislature was not restrained by any provision of the state or federal Constitution from granting such authority. Mr. Davis, the able and accomplished counsel of the defendant, states this clearly in his brief: "The defendant's contentions in brief are as follows: (1) That the Corporation Commission had no power or authority to make the order in question in this cause. (2) That the order is in violation of the Constitutions of the United States and the state of North Carolina. (3) That the order is unreasonable and unjust." His third contention is settled by the verdict and finding as above stated. As to the first proposition, we think the General Assembly clearly intended to confer and did confer the power upon the commission to order connection made by any two railroads when the public convenience required it, and the order was just and reasonable. This is not an arbitrary power, for, as in this case, such order is subject to review by a judge and jury on an appeal to the superior court, whence a further appeal lies to this court.

Section 1 of the Corporation Commission act (Acts 1899, p. 291, c. 164), in enumerating the qualifications and the duties and powers of the commission, provides that "they shall have such general control and supervision of all railroad * * * companies or corporations and of all other companies or corporations engaged in the carrying of freight or passengers * * * necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act." Section 21 of the act provides that "all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act shall according to their powers afford all reasonable, proper and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines and for the forwarding and delivering of passengers and freight to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith * * * and connecting lines' shall be required to make as close connection as practicable for the convenience of the travelling public." This provision is positive, clear, and mandatory. Common carriers are (1) to afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic and forwarding freight and passengers. This would include both the place and time of delivery and forwarding of passengers and freight. The terms of the law are general, and cannot be interpreted to mean alone the place at which passengers and freight are to be delivered. It does not mean simply facility for delivery, which might be confined to the place, but also requires facility for forwarding, which includes time as well, and prohibits such management as would produce delay in forwarding passengers. This requires close connection in point of time with connecting lines. (2) In the second place, common carriers are "to make as close connection as practicable for the convenience of the travelling public." The defendant insists that this last requirement means simply a physical connection; that is, a track connection. It is contended that the demands of the law would be met by a simple joining of the railroad iron of one railroad to that of another, regardless of the time of the delivery of passengers at the junction, and of their finding the means of "traveling" on or continuing their journey, and of the delays and inconveniences resulting from a failure to make connection of trains. The statement of this proposition, even if the acts were ambiguous, contains its own refutation. But the language is plain and unequivocal, and, as Mr. Argo, of counsel for the commission, well says, "the requirement is that 'connecting lines shall make as close connection as practicable for the convenience of the traveling public.' This means that those railroads that have or pretend to have a physical connection—a connection of tracks—shall also have as close a connection of trains as practicable, in order to secure the convenience of the 'traveling public.' It is well known that the principal inconvenience attendant upon traveling arises from delays resulting from failure of trains to connect according to time schedules. It would contribute little to the convenience of the traveler to be dumped out upon a track making a 'physical connection,' and be compelled to wait for hours, frequently without food or adequate shelter, and in the night, for a train upon which he might proceed on his way. The connection required is one of trains as well as of tracks. The public cannot travel upon a track alone, nor upon a train without a track. Both are required, to furnish facilities for traveling at all, and a close connection of both to secure the convenience of the traveling public."

It is true that section 1957 (9) of the Code of 1883, originally enacted in 1871-72, gave to railroad companies themselves the right to "regulate the time and manner in which passengers and property shall be transported"; but by the act of 1891, p. 275, c. 320, creating a railroad commission, the state made a radical change in its attitude towards railroads. It asserted its power to supervise and regulate their conduct, forbade discrimination and issuance of free passes; conferred upon the railroad commission the power to regulate and to fix their charges for freight and passengers; to prohibit rebates; to make joint through rates; to make personal visitation of all railroad offices and places of business; to examine their officers, agents, and employes under oath; to require all contracts and agreements between railroads as to their business in this state to be submitted for approval; to require annual reports from the railroads; to require the railroads to make repairs to their tracks, and additions to or changes of their stations; forbade the abandonment of any station without the permission of the commission; to require, if the commission saw fit, separate accommodations for the races at the stations and in the cars, and "that connecting lines shall be required to make as close connection as practicable for the convenience of the traveling public"; and many other matters which before that had been left to the railroads themselves. This act was passed after the fullest discussion for years before the people of the state. It expressed their deliberate conviction that the time had arrived when the state, in the public interest, should supervise and control the charges and the conduct of common carriers, including express companies, telegraphs, telephones, and steamboats. Similar legislation had preceded our act in England, in the federal Congress, and in many of our sister states. Similar legislation has now been adopted in most of the states. The act of 1891 modified the Code, § 1957 (9), certainly to the extent that the right formerly conferred on railroad companies of fixing the time of running their trains was made subject to the power of the commission to require connections to be made wherever public convenience should require this to be done, and the order was reasonable and just. That act (Laws 1891, p. 275, c. 320) had a repealing clause as to all previous legislation in conflict with it. The present act of 1899 renewed the general provisions of the railroad commission law, with some extension of its powers and changes, but re-enacting verbatim the provision requiring connections to be made, and giving the Corporation Commission "general control and supervision of all railroads," with all powers "necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

In this case the excuse of the defendant for its often missing connection at Selma since 1900 is that train 89 was a through train, and that its increase in business made it more and more difficult to get to Selma in time. It may be natural that the officers of the company, looking to profits, should prefer the through business to the neglect of the convenience of the people of North Carolina, and should be reluctant to avoid the delay caused by heavy through business by putting $15 of its profits into affording the required convenience by an additional train, if necessary. But it is precisely because just and proper regard for public convenience did not always coincide with the largest profit to the corporation that the state had to enact a statute giving to the Corporation Commission the power to regulate their rates, require suitable connections to be made, and a general supervision of their conduct. An act of the Legislature or order of the commission reducing the defendant's charges for freight and passengers many hundreds of thousands of dollars would be valid if it left enough profit, over running expenses, "with economical salaries and management (of which the court will judge), to pay interest on its bona fide debt and some profit to stockholders." Railroad v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 12 Sup. Ct. 400, 36 L. Ed. 176. It follows that this order, even if it cost the defendant $15 per day, is in the power of the commission, if it serves public convenience.

The other point, as to the constitutional power of the Legislature to so enact, is also well settled. The general power of the Legislature to provide reasonable rules and regulations, directly or through a commission, has been held by us in Express Co. v. Railroad, 111 N. C. 472, 16 S. E. 393, 18 L. R. A. 393, 32 Am. St. Rep. 805; in Corporation Com. v. Railroad, 127 N. C. 288, 37 S. E. 266, and cases there cited. Among the federal decisions, this was asserted in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77, and has been reiterated in numerous cases since, collected in 9 Rose's Notes, pp. 21-55. The doctrine is thus stated in People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 22 N. E. 670, 682, 5 L. R. A. 566, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460: "Common carriers exercise a sort of public office, and have duties to perform in which the public is interested. Navigation Co. v. Bank, 6 How. 382, 12 L. Ed. 465. Their business is therefore affected with a public interest, within the meaning of the doctrine which Lord Hale has so forcibly stated. But we need go no further. Enough has already been said to show that, when private property is devoted to a public use, it is subject to public regulation." This has been repeated over and over again in all the courts. Citation of authorities would be a work of supererogation. If the public can regulate the charges of a common carrier, so that only it is not deprived of all profit, as is held in Railroad v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 12 Sup. Ct. 400, 36 L. Ed. 176, and Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 690, 8 Sup. Ct. 1028, 31 L. Ed. 841, it can certainly require a connection, for the accommodation of thousands of our people, even if, at the utmost, it requires a loss of $15 a day out of a railroad company making $2,000,000 net earnings annually out of its operation in this state. It is not necessary that the particular service required shall be profitable, if the total earnings in this state show a profit. It is precisely because some particular service which the public comfort or convenience may require is not profitable that the company declines to render it; it prefers to work the soft spots—the best paying ore—only; and it is precisely for that reason that the commission is vested with the power to require those things to be done, if reasonable and just (not necessarily profitable), as to which there is the protection of an appeal to the superior court, and a further review here.

In Railroad v. Gill, 156 U. S. 665, 15 Sup. Ct. 491, 39 L. Ed. 567, the court, affirming the Supreme Court of Arkansas in same case (54 Ark. 112, 15 S. W. 18), says that the common carrier cannot "attack as unjust a regulation which fixes a rate at which some part would be unremunerative. * * * To the extent that the question of injustice is to be determined by the effects of the act upon the earnings of the company, the earnings of the entire line must be estimated." In Railroad v. Minn., 186 U. S. 261, 22 Sup. Ct. 902, 46 L. Ed. 1151, the court says that if, upon the whole operations in hauling coal, the road makes a profit, the requirement as to a fair profit upon investment is satisfied, notwithstanding, under the order of the commission, there would be a loss in hauling at the rate fixed in car-load lots. In Railroad v. Minn., supra, the court says: "We do not think it beyond the power of the State Commission to reduce the freight upon a particular article, provided the companies are able to earn a fair profit upon their entire business, and the burden is upon them to impeach the action of the commission in this particular." In Cantrell v. Railroad, 176 Ill. 512, 52 N. E. 292, the Supreme Court of Illinois laid down the same doctrine thus: "The sufficiency of the earnings of a railroad to justify the expense of running a separate passenger train over a certain branch-line, constituting part of the entire system, is not to be determined by considering the profits of that branch alone, but of the whole business of the various parts of the roads operated with the branch as one continual line." In Railroad & S. S. Co. v. Commission of La., 33 South. 214, the Supreme Court of that state, through Nichols, C. J., in defining the powers possessed by the Railroad Commission, says: "They extend to matters concerning public comfort and convenience, and, in the consideration of matters of comfort and convenience, the number of persons who may be concerned or interested in some particular matter at some particular point enter as important factors in determining what is to be done. The commission cannot ignore the comfort and convenience of numbers of citizens on a line of travel or conveyance, to base their action exclusively upon a consideration of the amount of dollars and cents which may be involved. * * * In the present issue it cannot be claimed that the Southern Pacific Road, either in the operation of its line as a whole or that part of it which falls within the limits of Louisiana, has not been and is not remunerative; nor can it be said that the Morgan Railroad Company is not a paying corporation. * * * We do not think the point is made that, after the business of the railroad corporation had made it fairly remunerative, the commission is without general authority to direct that a portion of the 'surplus' profits (if that expression can be used) should be applied to the promotion of the comfort and convenience of the people along the line of road. When such a point in the business of the road is reached, the rights of the 'general public' come clearly in view." In U. S. v. Trans-Mo. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 332, 17 Sup. Ct. 555, 41 L. Ed. 1007, the court says: "It must also be remembered that railways are corporations organized for public purposes, have been granted valuable franchises and privileges (and among such the right to take private property of citizens is not the least), and that they all primarily owe duties to the public of a higher nature even than that of earning large dividends for their shareholders." In Gladson v. Minn., 166 U. S. 430, 17 Sup. Ct. 628, 41 L. Ed. 1064, the court says: "The state which created the corporation may make all needful regulations of a police character for the government of the company while operating its road within the jurisdiction. It may prescribe the location and the plan of construction of the road, and the rate of speed at which the trains shall run, and the places at which they shall stop, and may make any other reasonable regulations for their management in order to secure the object of its incorporation, and the safety, good order, convenience, and comfort of its passengers and of the public." In Wisconsin v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 297, 21 Sup. Ct. 115, 45 L. Ed. 194, the court says "that railroads from the very outset have been regarded as public highways, and the right and duty of the government to regulate, in a reasonable and proper manner, the conduct and business of a railroad corporation, have been founded upon that fact. Constituting public highways of a most important character, the functions of proper regulation by the government spring from the fact that in relation to all highways the duty of regulation is governmental in its nature. At the present day there is no denial of these propositions. The companies hold a public franchise, and governmental supervision is therefore valid. They are organized for the public interests, and to subserve primarily the public good and convenience."

It is needless to multiply authorities. As the United States Supreme Court says in the last-cited case, the defendant was granted incorporation by the state "to subserve primarily the public good and convenience." If all those things required for the public convenience or comfort were profitable per se to the company, a corporation commission would not be necessary to compel the adoption and operation of such betterments. In Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 4 Sup. Ct. 48, 28 L. Ed. 173, it was held that the Legislature could regulate gas and water and other like companies, and require them to furnish their customers at prices to be fixed by the municipal authorities of the locality; and in Railroad v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 14 Sup. Ct. 437, 38 L. Ed. 269, that the Legislature could require, even as to railroads already built, the removal of grade crossings at railroad expense. Certainly, then, the police power extends to authorizing the State Corporation Commission to require two railroad companies to make connection. The Corporation Commission, after three several investigations, has found that this connection would subserve that end. The jury, after an overwhelming array of evidence, which we have not deemed it necessary to recapitulate or cite, has so found. The statute clearly gives the power, and the authorities are beyond question that the Legislature could confer it. Requiring two railroads to make connection is the exercise of a far less power than making rates or compelling the erection of union depots at such junctions.

While we must reverse the decision below, and affirm the judgment of the Corporation Commission, in view of the novelty and importance of this class of litigation, it is well to take notice of some of the exceptions taken by the commission.

It was error to direct a verdict upon the first four issues. Upon the first issue (whether it was practicable to make connection by train No. 39) and the second issue (whether it was practicable to make connection by extending the run of the Plymouth train to Selma) there was a conflict of evidence, and the issues were of fact, and, if material, should have been submitted to the jury. More especially was this true since the order of the commission was presumed to be valid, and the burden was on the defendant to show otherwise. Railroad v. Minn., 186 U. S. 264, 267, 22 Sup. Ct. 900, 46 L. Ed. 1151. On the third issue, as to the practicability of running the Springhope train to Selma in the four hours that it lies over at Rocky Mount, the evidence was uncontradicted that this could be done; and there was even evidence from two reputable witnesses which proved, if believed by the jury, that the cost of the extra run would be only $10, showing a profit of $15 daily. The excuse that the engine was used for shifting at Rocky Mount, or that, being a wood burner, a small stand for wood would need to be built at Selma (the other engines being coal burners), did not deserve to be considered, against the inconvenience to thousands of the public caused by failure to make this connection. It follows that it was error to instruct the jury, in response to the fourth issue, to find that the connection could only be made by an additional train from Rocky Mount to Selma.

The first seven issues were irrelevant and immaterial. The motion of the plaintiff for judgment upon the verdict should have been granted. The eighth issue, "Is it reasonable and proper that, for the convenience of the traveling public, the defendant company should be required to make such connection?" was answered "Yes." This was the only material issue, and upon that finding alone the judgment should be entered here. This view is strengthened by the "inspection of the whole record," which shows that the findings upon the sixth and seventh issues are that, if the connection were made by the most expensive of the four methods named, the loss was only $15 per day, and the report of the defendant to the Corporation Commission, which is in the record, that its annual net earnings in this state were nearly $2,000,000. This shows the correctness of the finding upon the eighth issue, as to the reasonableness of the order, even in the most adverse view.

The court has the power to enter final judgment here, and on proper occasions has done so. Code, § 957; Alspaugh v. Winstead, 79 N. C. 526; Griffin v. Light Co., 111 N. C. 438, 16 S. E. 623; Cook v. Bank, 130 N. C. 184, 41 S. E. 67. Final judgment has been entered here not infrequently by order and without opinion, as a matter of course. In Bernhardt v. Brown, 118 N. C. 710, 24 S. E. 527, 715, 716, 36 L. R. A. 402, it is said: "If this court reverses or affirms the judgment below, it may, in its discretion, enter a final judgment here, or direct it to be so entered below. By preference, and as a matter of convenience, the latter course is, unless in very exceptional cases, the course pursued, especially since the act of 1887 (chapter 192)." In Wilson v. Caldwell, 121 N. C. 473, 28 S. E. 554, which resembles this case in being a matter of public interest, and not a judgment for money, it was held, "The judgment must therefore be affirmed, but, in view of the public interests involved, we deem it proper not to remand the case, but to enter final judgment in this court," which was done—ousting the defendant from office and seating the relator. Among many other cases in which final judgments were entered here is White v. Auditor, 126 N. C. 584, 36 S. E. 132, and similar cases, in none of which the dissents were upon the power of this court to enter final judgment here. Code, § 957, provides as to this court: "In every case the court may render such sentence, judgment and decree as on inspection of the whole record it shall appear to them ought in law to be rendered thereon." Rule 49 of this court provides for "a judgment docket of this court," with references to entries as to different causes of action in which recovery is adjudged; and rules 50 and 51, for the issuance of executions from this court on its judgments.

In this matter there has already been a year's delay. The inconvenience to the public continues each day. The act of the Legislature for that reason expedites the hearing of these causes by giving them precedence of all other civil cases. Judgment will therefore be entered here reversing the judgment of the Superior Court, and affirming in all respects and declaring valid the order of the Corporation Commission made in this case 13th February, 1904. That order simply directed the defendant to make the connection daily at Selma at the time mentioned therein, without specifying whether this should be done by quickening the speed of train No. 39, or by extending the run of the Springhope or the Plymouth train, or by putting on an extra train from Rocky Mount to Selma, and our judgment leaves to the defendant the same liberty of choice as to the mode in which it shall put into effect the order of the commission. Owing to the possible necessity of making preparations to comply with this judgment, there will be a cessat executio till 10th February, 1905, entered on the judgment docket of this court, and until that date no mandate shall issue to the defendant upon this judgment.

The judgment of the superior court is reversed. Reversed.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring). I fully concur in the opinion of the court, but there is a question omitted therefrom which, though perhaps not essential to the present decision of the court, may become of the greatest importance in view of the federal question raised, or attempted to be raised, by the defendant.

I think there was error in excluding, upon the objection of the defendant, answers to the following questions asked by the plaintiff, to wit: "Q. Mr. Borden, what is the stock of the Atlantic Coast Line worth today?" "Q. What was the stock of the Wilmington & Weldon Railroad Company worth 20 years ago?" "Q. Is not the present value of the original stock of the Wilmington & Weldon Railroad Company, which constituted the basis of the present stock of the Atlantic Coast Line, to-day worth $1,900 or $2,000 in the market?" "Q. What dividends are now being received by the holders of the original stock of the Wilmington & Weldon Railroad Company?" The questions sufficiently disclose the scope of the proposed inquiry, but would doubtless have been followed by other questions eliciting in greater detail the desired information. In its second exception to the order of the commission, the defendant claims the protection of the Constitution of the United States, in the following words: "The company therefore excepts to the order of the commission in so far as it is construed as requiring it to run an additional train from Rocky Mount to Selma between the hours above named, because to do so would be requiring the company to perform services without compensation to it for the same, and thereby taking its property without due process of law, and in violation of the Constitution of this state, and in violation of the Constitution of the United States." In its brief the defendant also says: "Neither the commission nor the Legislature has the power to require the defendant to run an additional train at a loss. The jury finds that to operate this train will impose a daily loss of $15 upon the defendant, and to compel the defendant to operate this train at a loss would be taking its property without compensation, and in violation of the Constitution of this state and of the Constitution of the United States." In this view of the case, the excluded testimony might become of the utmost importance. We cannot presume that the Corporation Commission intends "to take the property of the defendant without due process of law," or to require unnecessary services without compensation in some form or another; but we cannot admit that the defendant can ignore the just demands of the public by creating for its own profit and convenience a condition of affairs that makes one train unprofitable by throwing all the remunerative business on trains that do not make connection. The order of the commission does not require the defendant to run an additional train, but simply to make connection. It does not necessarily require any additional, unusual, or special services, but simply the performance of its essential duties in such a manner as will meet the reasonable convenience of the public. This the defendant can do by making a through train arrive at Selma a few minutes earlier; but, if it prefers to ignore the rights of those living along its line, whose lands it has taken through the exercise of the right of eminent domain, in order to cater to its through travel, it cannot justly complain if its public duties require the running of an extra train. The mere fact that through passengers from the North to Florida have the choice of three or more through routes, varying but little in time and comfort, is no excuse for an unjust discrimination against that part of the traveling public who are dependent upon local lines. This idea was evidently in the mind of this court when, speaking by Rodman, J., in Branch v. Railroad, 77 N. C. 347, upon the necessity for the imposition of penalties, it says on page 350: "The Legislature considered the common-law liability as insufficient to compel the performance of the public duty. It must have thought that the interest of local shippers, for whose interest principally the road was built, and against whom the company had a complete monopoly, were being sacrificed by wanton delays of carriage in order that the company might obtain the carriage from points where there were competing lines by land or water, as from Wilmington to Augusta." The fact that the defendant in that case was the parent of the present defendant may lend additional significance to the words of the court. In this view the profits of the road, both for the present and the immediate past, would become material. Suppose the witness had answered that no dividend had been paid for years, and that the company was unable to earn anything beyond bare expenses, whereby the stock was almost unmarketable; would it not have been competent as tending to prove the defendant's contention that it is unreasonable to demand of it any additional service? On the contrary, suppose the witness had testified as follows: That on one share, of the par value of $100, in the Wilmington & Weldon Railroad Company, the following stock dividends or bonuses had been issued, in addition to large annual dividends: That in 1887 the said railroad company had issued upon this one share of stock, as a bonus, a certificate of indebtedness in the sum of $100, bearing 7 per cent. interest; that in 1900 there were issued, in lieu of this one share of stock, two shares, of $100 each, of preferred stock in the Atlantic Coast Line Company, and two shares, of $100 each, of common stock in the Atlantic Coast Line Company; that in 1897 there was also issued to the holder of the one original share of stock four shares of the Atlantic Coast Line Company of Connecticut, of $100 each; and in 1900 a certificate of indebtedness of the Atlantic Coast Line Company of Connecticut for $400. That all of said stock and certificates of indebtedness were much above par in value, and receiving handsome dividends. That recently a dividend of 25 per cent. had been declared, and that the one original share in the Wilmington & Weldon Railroad Company had thus developed into thirteen shares of stock and certificates of indebtedness, of the par value of $1,800, but of the real value of about $2,500. Suppose it had been further shown that a little over 30 years ago the state's half interest in the Wilmington & Weldon Railroad Company had been bought for $35 a share. Suppose, further, that it was shown that a large part of the alleged indebtedness of the company were certificates of indebtedness issued to the stockholders without any consideration whatever, other than the mere capitalization of profits. Would not this evidence have been competent to prove that the order of the Corporation Commission, requiring the defendant to quicken its regular train 25 minutes in order to make connection at Selma, was not unreasonable, and not "taking its property without due process of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States?" Would not such evidence also tend to prove that it would not be unreasonable to require the defendant to make such connection, even if it did require an extra train, at a loss of $15 per day, if other trains running on the same line of road and by the same places more than made up the difference?

There are hypothetical answers on both sides. Where the truth may be was peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant, upon whose objection it was excluded. It cannot be contended that such an investigation would be an impertinent inquisition into private affairs, as property taken for a public purpose under the power of eminent domain is indelibly impressed with a public use. This has been too often decided by the Supreme Court of the United States to be any longer an open question. Two cases will be sufficient for my purpose. In Chicago, etc., Railroad Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 12 Sup. Ct. 400, 36 L. Ed. 176, the court says on page 345, 143 U. S., page 402, 12 Sup. Ct., 36 L. Ed. 176: "A single suggestion in this direction: It is agreed that the defendant's operating expenses for 1888 were $2,404,516.54. Of what do these operating expenses consist? Are they made up partially of extravagant salaries—fifty to one hundred thousand dollars to the president, and in like proportion to subordinate officers? Surely, before the courts are called upon to adjudge an act of the Legislature fixing the maximum passenger rates for railroad companies to be unconstitutional, on the ground that its enforcement would prevent the stockholders from receiving any dividends on their investments, or the bondholders any interest on their loans, they should be fully advised as to what is done with the receipts and earnings of the company, for, if so advised, it might clearly appear that a prudent and honest management would, within the rates prescribed, secure to the bondholders their interest, and to the stockholders reasonable dividends. While the protection of vested rights of property is a supreme duty of the courts, it has not come to this—that the legislative power rests subservient to the discretion of any railroad corporation which may, by exorbitant and unreasonable salaries, or in some other improper way, transfer its earnings into what it is pleased to call 'operating expenses.'"

The Corporation Commission act (chapter 164, p. 291, Laws 1899), in section 2, provides as follows: "Provided, that in fixing any maximum rate or charge or tariff of rates or charges for any common carrier, person or corporation subject to the provisions of this act, the said commission shall take into consideration if proved or may require proof of the fair value of the property of such carrier, persons or corporation used for the public in the consideration of such rate or charge or the fair value of the service rendered as in determining the fair value of the property so being used for the convenience of the public. It shall furthermore consider the original cost of the construction thereof and the amount expended in permanent improvements thereon and the present compared with the original cost of construction of all its property within the state of North Carolina; the probable earning capacity of such property under the particular rates proposed and the sum required to meet the operating expenses of such carrier, person or corporation and all other facts that will enable them to determine what are reasonable and just rates, charges, and tariffs."

The case of Cotting v. Stockyards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92, is cited by the defendant, but does not seem to sustain its contentions. In the opinion in that case appears the following clear distinction between those corporations which, like railroad and telegraph companies, are created for a public purpose, and endowed with certain governmental powers, such as that of eminent domain, and those corporations which are only incidentally devoted to public use, receiving no governmental powers, and not impressed with any permanent public purpose. The court says on page 93, 183 U. S., page 86, 22 Sup. Ct., 46 L. Ed. 92: "Now, in the light of these decisions and facts, it is insisted that the same rule as to the limit of judicial interference must apply in cases in which a public service is distinctly intended and rendered, and in those in which, without any intent of public service, the owners have placed their property in such a position that the public has an interest in its use. Obviously there is a difference in the conditions of these cases. In the one, the owner has intentionally devoted his property to the discharge of a public service; in the other he has placed his property in such a position that, willingly or unwillingly, the public has acquired an interest in its use. In the one, he deliberately undertakes to do that which is a proper work for the state; in the other, in pursuit of merely a private gain, he has placed his property in such a position that the public has become interested in its use. In the one, it may be said that he voluntarily accepts all the conditions of public service which attach to like service performed by the state itself; in the other, that he submits to only those necessary interferences and regulations which the public interests require. In the one, he expresses his willingness to do the work of the state, aware that the state, in the discharge of its public duties, is not guided solely by a question of profit. It may rightfully determine that the particular service is of such importance to the public that it may be conducted at a pecuniary loss, having in view a larger general interest. At any rate, it does not perform its services with the single idea of profit. Its thought is the general public welfare. If in such a case an individual is willing to undertake the work of the state, may it not be urged that he, in a measure, subjects himself to the same rules of action, and, if the body which expresses the judgment of the state believes that the particular services should be rendered without profit, he is not at liberty to complain? While we have said again and again that one volunteering to do such services cannot be compelled to expose his property to confiscation; that he cannot be compelled to submit its use to such rates as do not pay the expenses of the work, and therefore create a constantly increasing debt, which ultimately works its appropriation—still is there not force in the suggestion that, as the state may do the work without profit, if he voluntarily undertakes to act for the state he must submit to a like determination as to the paramount interests of the public? Again, wherever a purely public use is contemplated, the state may, and generally does, bestow upon the party intending such use some of its governmental powers. It grants the right of eminent domain, by which property can be taken, and taken not at the price fixed by the owner, but at the market value. It thus enables him to exercise the powers of the state; and, exercising those powers and doing the work of the state, is it wholly unfair to rule that he must submit to the same conditions which the state may place upon its own exercise of the same powers and the doing of the same work? It is unnecessary in this case to determine this question. We simply notice the arguments which are claimed to justify a difference in the rule as to property devoted to public uses from that in respect to property used solely for purposes of private gain, and which only by virtue of the conditions of its use becomes such as the public have an interest in. In reference to this latter class of cases, which is alone the subject of the present inquiry, it must be noticed that the individual is not doing the work of the state. He is not using his property in the discharge of a purely public service. He acquires from the state none of its governmental powers. His business in all matters of purchase and sale is subject to the ordinary conditions of the market and the freedom of contract."

(187 N. C. 186)

CITY OF HICKORY v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1904.)

EMINENT DOMAIN—RAILROAD RIGHT OF WAY—PRESUMPTION OF TITLE—FAILURE TO PRODUCE GRANT—DEEDS—TRUSTS—INCAPACITY OF TRUSTEE—ULTRA VIRES.

1. Laws 1854-55, p. 264, c. 228, § 27, gave a railroad power to purchase lands necessary for its purposes. Section 29 provided that on failure to agree for a purchase it should have power to condemn land, and to hold in fee simple lands belonging to the state over which the road should pass to an extent not exceeding 100 feet, and that, in the absence of any contract as to lands, it should be presumed that the land over which the road was constructed, together with 100 feet on each side thereof, had been granted to the railroad, unless the owner should apply for an assessment of the value of the land within two years after the location of the road. Held, that the statute did not give to the railroad any land not belonging to the state, and did not prescribe any fixed width for the right of way, which might vary in different localities, but it contemplated that land in excess of 100 feet on either side of the road belonging to the state, and all land belonging to private owners not freely given, should be paid for in full.

2. Laws 1854-55, p. 264, c. 228, § 29, gave a railroad the same powers to condemn lands, in the event that necessary lands could not be purchased from the owner, as were granted to a former railroad by its act of incorporation, and empowered it to condemn such lands in the same manner and to the same extent, and under the like rules, restrictions, and conditions, as were prescribed by the charter of that railroad. Laws 1836-37, p. 247, c. 47, chartering the railroad referred to, provided in section 9 (page 258) that the railroad should have a right to enter upon the land condemned and construct its road, after payment of the full amount of the assessed damages. Held, that an effort to purchase the land should be made before condemnation.

3. Under Laws 1854-55, p. 264, c. 228, § 29, providing that in the absence of contract in relation to land through which a certain railroad may pass it shall be presumed that the land has been granted by the owner to the company, unless the owner shall apply for an assessment of the value of the land within two years next after the road has been "located," the location of the railroad is its physical location by the laying of its track.

4. Under Laws 1854-55, p. 264, c. 228, § 29, raising a presumption of title to its right of way in a railroad unless the owner should apply for an assessment of the value of the lands within two years after the location of the road, the burden of showing when the road was located and built was upon the railroad claiming title to the lands by virtue of the statute.

5. Laws 1854-55, p. 264, c. 228, § 29, providing that in the absence of any contract in relation to lands through which a railroad may pass it shall be presumed that the land has been granted by the owner to the company, unless the owner shall apply for an assessment of the value of the lands within two years next after the location of the road, has no application where a deed is executed by the owner of the land to the railroad within two years after the building of the road, and a claim under the deed is inconsistent with a claim under the statute.

6. A recital in a deed that it is executed and accepted as a duplicate of a former deed constitutes an admission of the execution of the former deed.

7. In the absence of specific provisions in its charter to the contrary, the power of making and receiving contracts as to the right of way belongs to the president of a railroad.

8. The act of a railroad in taking title to land-in trust for the purpose of a public square around the depot, for the common use of both the railroad and the town, is not ultra vires.

9. The fact that a railroad's act in taking title to land in trust for a public square is ultra vires is immaterial on an issue as to the beneficial ownership of the land, and the rights of the railroad therein, as the trust would not be permitted to fail for want of a trustee.

10. Where a railroad acquired land by virtue of a deed, and so held it for over 45 years, it could not repudiate the deed, and rely on the presumption of a grant created by Laws 1854-55, p. 264, c. 228, § 29, in case a railroad failed to acquire a deed to land over which its track was laid, and the owner brought no proceedings for an assessment of damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Catawba County; Neal, Judge.

Suit for an injunction by the city of Hickory against the Southern Railway Company. There was a judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed. Reversed.

The suit was brought to enjoin defendant from enlarging its depot buildings on a square of ground to which defendant held title by virtue of a deed which recited that the conveyance was "for the purpose of a public square around the depot for the free and common use of both railroad and the town of Hickory; not to be built up or exclusively occupied by any one to the exclusion of the public as a free common. To have and to hold the aforesaid tract or lot of land, and all privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging, to the said Western N. C. R. R. Co., in trust as aforesaid, for the public uses and purposes aforesaid." The Western North Carolina Railroad Company, through which the defendant claims by succession, was originally chartered by chapter 228, p. 264, of the Laws of 1854-55, of which sections 27 and 29 are essential in the consideration of this case. They are as follows:

"Sec. 27. Be it further enacted, that the said company may purchase, have and hold in fee, or for a term of years, any lands, tenements and hereditaments, which may be necessary for the said road, or the appurtenances thereof, or for the erection of depots, storehouses, houses for the officers, servants, or agents of the company, or for workshops, or foundries to be used for the said company, or for procuring stone or other materials, necessary for said company, in the construction or repair of the road, or for effecting transportation thereon, and for no other purpose."

"Sec. 29. Be it further enacted, that when any lands for right of way may be required by said company for the purpose of constructing their road, or for any of the uses described in section 27 of this act, and for the want of agreement as to the value thereof, or from any other cause, the same cannot be purchased from the owner or owners, the said company shall have the same powers to condemn all such lands belonging to individuals or corporations as may be needed for the aforesaid purposes, as were granted in and conferred upon the North Carolina Railroad Company by their act of incorporation, and shall proceed to condemn such lands in the same manner and to the same extent under the like rules, restrictions and conditions as are prescribed in the charter aforesaid, for the government of the said company, and the said company shall be entitled to hold in fee simple all lands belonging to the state, over and through which the said road may pass to an extent not exceeding one hundred feet on either side of said road; and in the absence of any contract or contracts in relation to lands through which said road may pass, it shall be presumed that the land over which said road may be constructed, together with one hundred feet on each side thereof, has been granted by the owner or owners to the company, and the said company shall have good right and title thereto, and shall have, hold and enjoy the same so long as it shall be used for the purposes of said road and no longer, unless the owner or owners shall apply for an assessment of the value of said lands as heretofore directed, within two years next after that part of said road has been located; and in case the owner or owners shall not apply within two years from the time aforesaid, he, she or they shall be forever barred from recovering the same or having an assessment or compensation therefor: provided, that nothing herein contained shall affect the rights of infants, feme coverts, persons non compos, or beyond seas, until two years after the removal of their respective disabilities, and the same and all the estate aforesaid, shall be exempt from taxation until the dividends of profits of said company shall exceed six per centum per annum."

The North Carolina Railroad Company, referred to in the above sections, was chartered under the name of the "North Carolina Central Railroad Company" by chapter 47, p. 247, of the Laws of 1836-37, reprinted in the Revised Statutes at page 405. Section 9 (page 253) of said act is alone essential in the consideration of this case. It is as follows:

"Sec. 9. Be it further enacted, that if the president and directors cannot agree with the owner of land through which it may be necessary to make the said railroad, as to the terms upon which the said railroad shall be opened through the same, then it shall be lawful for the said president and directors to file their petition in the court of pleas and quarter sessions of the county wherein the land lies, under the same rules and regulations as are now prescribed by law in laying off public roads; and upon the filing of said petition, the same proceedings shall be had as in cases of public roads; and when the jury shall have assessed the damages to be paid to the owners of the land through which the same shall be laid off, then it shall be lawful for the said president and directors, upon payment to the owner or owners of said land, his, her or their guardian, as the case may be, or into the office of the clerk of the court of pleas and quarter sessions of the county wherein the land lies, the sum or sums so assessed, to enter upon the land laid off, and construct the road thereon; to make all necessary excavations and embankments, and all other structures necessary to the construction and preservation of said road; and to hold the said land to their use and benefit during their corporate existence; and in all things to have the same power and authority over said land so laid off, during their existence as a corporation, as though they owned the fee-simple therein: provided: that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to give power to said company to lay off said road through the yard, garden or burial ground attached, or appurtenant to the dwelling house on any plantation through which it may be deemed necessary to lay off said road, without the consent of the owner thereof."

Section 11 gives the company the right to purchase lands not exceeding 10 acres in any one tract. Section 27 confers the right to condemn "such quantity of ground, not exceeding one acre at any one place, as may be necessary for a toll house," etc., prescribing much the same method of condemnation as section 9. These are evidently the sections referred to in the charter of the Western North Carolina Railroad Company, and must be taken as an essential part thereof.

E. B. Cline, T. M. Hufham, and Self & Whitener, for appellant. S. J. Ervin and A. B. Andrews, Jr., for appellee.

DOUGLAS, J. (after stating the case). It is important that we should in the beginning ascertain the relief sought in this action. It is thus stated in the prayer of the complaint: "That the defendant, its agents, officers, employees, servants, representatives, and any person or persons acting by or under any contract or agreement with it, be perpetually enjoined from erecting and building a platform and any other structure whatsoever on any part thereof within that boundary of land in the city of Hickory, Catawba county, North Carolina, referred to and described in Exhibit A, which is a part of this complaint." No other specific relief is demanded beyond the costs of the action. In our opinion, the plaintiff was entitled thereto, irrespective of any question of nuisance, upon which we do not care to intimate an opinion. If that question is to be decided by this court, it can be more clearly presented free from any complications as to title to land.

The vital defect in the defendant's case is the assumption that its charter gives it a right of way including 100 feet of land on each side of its track. The charter does not and could not give any land whatever except such as belongs to the state. All that it does, or pretends to do, is to give to the company the right to acquire by purchase or condemnation such lands as may be necessary for its essential purposes. It does not prescribe any fixed width for its right of way, for the evident reasons that the company might need more land at one place than another; and that, where the land was valuable, the company would not care to pay for more than it actually needed. The charter gives to the company "in fee simple all lands belonging to the state over and through which the road may pass to an extent not exceeding one hundred feet on either side of said road." Beyond this it is evident that its charter contemplates that all lands taken, but not freely given, shall be paid for in full, and that an effort to purchase shall be made before condemnation. It expressly provides in section 29 that, when the necessary lands "cannot be purchased from the owner or owners, the said company shall have the same powers to condemn all such lands belonging to individuals or corporations as may be needed for the aforementioned purposes as were granted to and conferred upon the North Carolina Railroad Company by their act of incorporation, and shall proceed to condemn such lands in the same manner and to the same extent under the like rules, restrictions, and conditions as are prescribed in the charter aforesaid." The charter of the North Carolina Railroad Company gives it right of entry upon the lands so condemned only after payment to the owner of the land or into the office of the clerk of the court of the full amount of the assessed damages.

It is true, the charter of the Western North Carolina Railroad Company provides that: "In the absence of any contract or contracts in relation to lands through which said road may pass, it shall be presumed that the land over which said road may be constructed, together with one hundred feet on each side thereof, has been granted by the owner or owners to the company, and the said company shall have good right and title thereto, and shall have, hold and enjoy the same so long as it shall be used for the purposes of said road and no longer, unless the owner or owners shall apply for an assessment of the value of said lands as hereintofore directed, within two years next after that part of said road has been located," etc. This creates the presumption of a grant, founded upon the idea that the continued failure of the owner for two years after the building of the road to bring an action for damages would indicate that he had sold or voluntarily donated the land to the company. We think his honor properly construed the word "location" as meaning the physical location of the road—that is, the laying of its track—and this construction does not seem to be doubted by counsel. Any other would lead to the most absurd results. We know that many roads are surveyed and located that are never built, or built long years thereafter. To say that a railroad company can, by a mere abstract location of its route, without building its road, come 25 or 30 years thereafter and take private property, without the pretense of compensation, under an irrebuttable presumption resting merely on a row of rotten stakes, would be too great a strain upon judicial construction. However, this is not contended for by the defendant. It is admitted that the original deed was dated May 28, 1859, and that the said line of railway was constructed and said depot erected during the same year, but during what month does not appear. If this were material, the burden of showing when the road was built would rest upon the defendant, as the fact would necessarily be within its peculiar knowledge. But it is not material, as it is evident that the deed was, in any event, executed within two years after the building of the road, which prevents the presumption from ever arising under the express terms of the statute. The word "unless," used in the act, is thus defined by Webster: "Unless. Upon any less condition than (the fact or thing stated in the sentence or clause which follows); if not; supposing that not; if it be not; were it not that." The Century Dictionary defines the same word as follows, omitting some secondary meanings: "If it be not that; if it be not the case that," etc. These definitions clearly indicate a negative condition precedent, as much so as the condition in a mortgage that, "unless" the money is paid, or "if it be not" paid by a certain day, the land may be sold. If the money is paid on or before the day limited, the mortgagor is in no default whatever, and the power of sale never arises. The defendant has placed itself in the peculiar position of claiming both under the deed and under the presumption. We have seen that, if there is a deed, there can be no presumption. These are not inconsistent defenses, but are inconsistent claims of right, under which it seeks to maintain its easement. It is admitted that the fee to the land was in Robinson, and, if it did not pass out of him by virtue of the deed, it must still remain in him or his heirs. It appears that the original deed was lost, and that the deed of March 10, 1880, was executed and accepted as a "duplicate" thereof. This is expressly stated in the duplicate deed which was accepted by the defendant and filed for registration on April 17, 1880. This is, of course, an admission of the execution of the original deed.

The defendant contends that (quoting from defendant's brief) "it was not in the power of the president of the road to part with the title which the road had acquired to the land under the first deed." It does not appear that he did so. The first deed is not in the record. On the contrary, it was admitted by the grantee to have been lost or destroyed, and a duplicate deed accepted in lieu thereof. Both the defendant and the original grantee were corporations—artificial persons, who were utterly incapable of any action whatever except through agents. The law evidently contemplates that a railroad company shall have an agent to make and receive contracts as to the right of way, and, in the absence of specific provisions to the contrary, it seems to us that those powers would come peculiarly within the duties of the president, the official head and general representative of the company.

The defendant also contends that the original grantee acted ultra vires in consenting to act as trustee. We do not think so, as it took the legal title in trust for itself as well as the public. It was not a naked trust, but one coupled with a beneficial interest that was in furtherance of its essential purposes. But, if it were otherwise, it would not help the defendant, as no trust is permitted to fall merely for want of a trustee. This is common learning.

The record states that "the defendant in open court agreed that it did not claim any part of the land described in the deed and the plats except the main track and 100 feet on each side from the center of the track, and that it stood ready to have it so decreed by the order of the court." It is difficult to discover what this means, unless it is an attempt to repudiate the deed under which the land was acquired, and, after thus holding it for over 45 years, create nunc pro tunc a presumption of a grant which by the express provisions of the statute can never arise in the face of a contract. This cannot be permitted.

We have cited no authorities, because the decision of the case depends upon the plain wording of the statute and of the deed. The defendant has nothing more than belonged to the original company, which, acquiring the land under a deed the mere existence of which prevented the presumption, holds in accordance with the terms of the deed, which is its only muniment of title. Consequently, there was error in the intimation of the court below. As the facts are now presented to us, a permanent injunction should have been granted in accordance with the prayer of the plaintiff.

Error.

(137 N. C. 302)

SATTERTHWAITE v. GOODYEAR et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

BROKERS—CONTRACTS—LIMITATIONS—TIME—ACTIONS—SEPARATE CAUSES—APPEAL
—NEW TRIAL—COSTS.

1. Where a vendor of land empowered a broker to sell the same at a certain price, provided the matter was closed up within 30 days, the time so limited began to run from the date of mailing the letter containing such authority, and not from the date it was received by the broker.

2. The jury being required to respond to issues, and not being entitled to render a general verdict, requests to charge, concluding with the words "plaintiff cannot recover," were defective.

3. Where an action was brought by a broker to recover charges for collecting rents, and also for commissions on the sale of property, and there was no exception to the verdict in plaintiff's favor on the rent issue, a new trial after reversal on appeal would be confined to plaintiff's right to recover commissions.

4. Where a verdict in favor of plaintiff on two causes of action was contested on appeal as to one only, and judgment was reversed, the costs on a partial new trial would be in the discretion of the court, as provided by Code, § 527 (2).

Appeal from Superior Court, Haywood County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by S. C. Satterthwaite against Charles Goodyear and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

H. R. Ferguson, for appellants. Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. On March 20, 1901, the plaintiff, a real estate agent in Waynesville, N. C., who had been collecting rents on the realty of the Goodyear estate in and near that town, and had sold some of it, wrote to Walter Goodyear, in New York City, one of the defendants, and in the course of his letter he said: "I am trying to negotiate a deal for farm and Richland Park, including cottage. I made an offer of $19,000 for the entire property, $6,000 cash, balance in one and two years at 6%, or farm $9,000 and the other $10,000 same terms. * * * Kindly let me know if I can make a concession of $500 on each property, if it is necessary to make the deal." To this Charles Goodyear, the other defendant, replied March 26, 1901: "Replying to yours of 20th would say we would be willing to accept the price mentioned for the farm and the Richland Park property, provided the matter could be closed up within 30 days, as I have good use now for just about this amount of money. I understand your proposition to be $8,500 for the farm and $9,500 for the Richland Park property, $6,000 cash, and balance in equal payments at one and two years at 6%." Charles Goodyear was sole executor of his father, by whose will Richland Park was devised to the widow. While the plaintiff was collector of rents from and manager of the property, the above letter of 20th March shows that he did not have authority to sell this property for less than $10,000, for the letter was either an offer or an application for authority to sell the realty named at prices therein stated, the Richland Park property being put at $9,500. The reply of 26th March, whether it be an acceptance of an offer or a power of attorney, was restricted to prices therein named, and was limited to 30 days. The plaintiff did not report the name of the person with whom he was negotiating, and he made no sale at any price. On April 22, 1901, Charles Goodyear telegraphed to the plaintiff, "Can you carry out your proposition of 20th March?" to which the plaintiff replied, "Prospective purchaser now in New York; am trying for $10,000." On April 28, 1901, Charles Goodyear, as executor, or as agent for his mother, or both (it is immaterial), sold the Richland Park for $8,000 to Jones, who was the party with whom the plaintiff had been negotiating. The plaintiff brings this action against Walter Goodyear, Charles Goodyear individually, and Charles Goodyear, executor, in part to recover $400, being 5 per cent. commissions on the sale of the Richland Park, made by Charles Goodyear. The contract is set out in the letters of 20th March offering to sell Richland Park at $9,500, and the reply accepting that offer "provided the matter was closed up within 30 days." The plaintiff contends that the 30 days should be counted from the receipt by him of the letter on 28th March. But, whether Charles Goodyear's reply was an acceptance or a power of attorney, it bound him from the date of mailing the same (9 Cyc. 295; Adams v. Lindsay, 1 B. & Ald. 68; Benjamin on Sales, § 44), and necessarily bound him only for the 30 days he therein specified. Had he refused altogether, and a prior authority to sell had been shown, of course a revocation of such authority would not deprive the agent of his commissions on a sale made before a valid revocation reached him. But this is not that case.

It was error to refuse the defendant's seventh prayer—that, as the plaintiff allowed 30 days to elapse without making any sale, the jury should answer the first issue "Nothing." The court should also have given the eighth prayer—that there was no evidence that either of the defendants conspired with the purchaser to defeat the plaintiff of his commissions. The other six prayers were defective in that each concludes "plaintiff cannot recover," which this court has so often held to be properly refused under the present system, under which there is no general verdict "that the plaintiff recover," but the jury respond to issues. Witsell v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 557, 27 S. E. 125.

There is no exception as to the verdict upon the second issue as to charges for collecting rents, and hence the new trial will be restricted to the first issue. Benton v. Collins, 125 N. C. 83, 34 S. E. 242, 47 L. R. A. 33, and cases cited. But as this issue alone was contested on appeal, and the costs on a partial new trial are in the discretion of the court (Code, § 527 (2)), the costs of the appeal will be taxed against the appellee.

Error.

(137 N. C. 299)

COWARD v. JACKSON COUNTY COM'RS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

COUNTIES—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—WITNESSES—FEES—EXTENT OF LIABILITY—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—TENDER—COSTS.

1. Code, § 739, provides that, if a nolle prosequi be entered or judgment be arrested in a criminal prosecution, the county shall pay witnesses one-half their lawful fees, except in capital felonies, and in prosecutions for forgery, perjury, and conspiracy, when they shall receive full fees. Held, that where a nolle prosequi was entered on an indictment for homicide, as to murder in the first degree, the trial thereby became one for murder in the second degree only, and hence the state's witnesses subsequently subpoenaed for the trial of that offense were not entitled to full fees.

2. Code, § 3756, fixing the per diem and mileage of witnesses, provides that witnesses attending out of their own county shall receive five cents mileage, and those attending within the county a rate to be fixed by the county commissioners, not to exceed five cents a mile; and section 739 declares that if there be no prosecutor in a criminal action, and the defendant shall be acquitted or convicted, and unable to pay costs, or a nolle prosequi be entered, or judgment be arrested, the county shall pay witnesses one-half of their lawful fees, except in capital felonies and in certain other prosecutions. Held, that where a nolle prosequi was entered in a prosecution for homicide, as to murder in the first degree, the fact that a state's witness attended the subsequent prosecution for murder in the second degree from without the county did not entitle him to recover full fees.

3. Though a state's witness in a criminal case was only entitled to recover half fees from the county, as provided by Code, § 739, he was entitled to repayment in full of the amount paid to the clerk for proving his ticket.

4. Where, in a proceeding to recover witnesses' fees from a county, defendant made tender on demand, and paid into court the full amount of one-half of the witness tickets held by plaintiff, which was the amount plaintiff was entitled to recover, defendant was not liable for costs.

Appeal from Superior Court, Jackson County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by O. B. Coward against the commissioners of Jackson county. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Coleman C. Cowan, for appellants. Walter E. Moore, for appellee.

CLARK, O. J. The question presented is the liability of the county of Jackson for costs of state's witnesses in State v. Long, who was indicted in that county for murder, but whose cause was removed to the superior court of Macon county. After the removal to the latter court, a nolle prosequi was entered as to murder in the first degree, and the witnesses were subpoenaed to the next term, at which the prisoner was tried for murder in the second degree, and convicted of manslaughter. The witnesses for the state were entitled to their mileage and fees in full so long as attending court as witnesses upon the capital charge, including the term at which the nolle pros. was entered.

This was not contested, and those costs have been paid in full.

The plaintiff is assignee of the state's witnesses Fowler and Fengate as to their witness tickets for that part of their attendance which was at the terms subsequent to that at which the nolle pros. as to the capital charge was entered, and he claims full fees. But the attendance at those terms was to prove a noncapital charge, and by section 739 of the Code it is provided that "if there be no prosecutor in a criminal action, and the defendant shall be acquitted or convicted and unable to pay the costs or a nolle prosequi be entered or judgment arrested, the county shall pay the clerks, sheriffs, constables, justices and witnesses one half their lawful fees, except in capital felonies and in prosecutions for forgery, perjury and conspiracy, when they shall receive full fees." In State v. Hunt, 128 N. C. 584, 38 S. E. 473, it is held that the solicitor may enter a nolle pros. as to the charge of murder in the first degree, and that thereafter it is only a trial for murder in the second degree, entitling the prisoner only to four peremptory challenges. And it is added (page 586, 128 N. C., page 474, 38 S. E.) that thereafter the county will be saved the higher expense attendant upon attendance of witnesses for the trial of the higher offense.

The plaintiff contends that at all events he is entitled to recover full pay for witness Fengate, because he attended court out of his county. Code, § 3756, fixing the per diem and mileage of witnesses, makes this discrimination between witnesses: That those attending out of their own county shall receive 5 cents mileage, and those attending within the county "a rate to be fixed by the county commissioners, not to exceed 5 cents per mile." But payment of both alike, and all other costs, must be made by the county in the manner provided by section 739, above set out, in cases in which the costs shall fall upon the county, as therein specified. The true construction of Code, § 3756 (regulating fees of witnesses), section 3759 (regulating fees of clerks), and section 3752 (regulating fees of sheriffs), is had by reading as a proviso at the end of each of them section 739. It may be noted that the court failed to find that the defendant Long was convicted and unable to pay the costs, which finding was probably necessary, under section 739, to recover against the county at all. But there is no exception on this point, and we presume that such finding was in fact made.

The second exception, that the court allowed repayment in full of 10 cents paid by the witness to the clerk for proving his ticket, cannot be sustained. This was no part of the costs of the case proper, but a necessary disbursement of the witness to procure proof of his attendance, and he or his assignee is entitled to have it back in full. If the county paid back only half of that sum, it would be keeping half the money the witness himself has paid.

The defendant, having made tender upon demand, and paid into court the full amount of one-half the witness tickets held by the plaintiff, should not have been taxed with the costs. Pollock v. Warwick, 104 N. C. 638, 10 S. E. 699; Smith v. B. & L. Ass'n, 119 N. C. 256, 26 S. E. 41.

Error.

(127 N. C. 278)

GENERAL FIRE EXTINGUISHER CO. v. CAROLINA & N. W. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

CARRIERS OF GOODS—NEGLIGENCE—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. Though a carrier of goods was negligent in failing to forward goods shipped, it is not liable for the loss of the goods by fire, where it was not negligent with respect to the fire, in the absence of evidence that the negligence in failure to forward the goods was the proximate cause of the loss.

Appeal from Superior Court, McKinley County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by the General Fire Extinguisher Company against the Carolina & Northwestern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Plaintiff on March 12, 1902, delivered to the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company at Charlotte a car load of iron piping to be delivered to the Rhods Manufacturing Company at Granite Falls, N. C. The Seaboard Air Line Railway Company issued therefor its bill of lading, "Released," contracting to deliver it to the consignee or to its connecting line at Lincolnton, N. C., to be carried to its destination. The jury, in response to an issue submitted, found that the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company delivered the piping to the defendant company at Lincolnton, being the connecting line between said point and Granite Falls, on March 15th, being Saturday. About one half of the piping was carried to its destination by defendant. The remaining half, while in the defendant's possession awaiting shipment, was destroyed by fire communicated to the car by the defendant's warehouse, which was burned on the morning of March 18th. The delay in forwarding the whole of the piping on the day of its delivery, or Monday following, was caused by the failure of defendant to have sufficient cars for that purpose. The defendant was at that time a narrow-gauge road. The car containing the piping was on the track of the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company near the warehouse of defendant. It was in evidence that the warehouse was burned about 1 o'clock on the morning of the 18th of March. There was no evidence as to how the fire originated. It was in evidence that, when the fire was discovered, the warehouse was enveloped in flames. No night watchman was kept at the depot. The defendant kept tubs and barrels filled with water at the depot. The people of Lincolnton had no provision for "fighting fire"—depended on buckets of water. The jury, having found that the piping was delivered to defendant company, responded affirmatively to the second issue: "Was the destruction of that part of the shipment of pipe by fire caused by the negligence of the defendant as alleged in the complaint?" The defendant in apt time requested the court, in writing, to instruct the jury: "That if the jury find as a fact, from the evidence, that part of the pipe was destroyed by fire without any fault on the part of the defendant, and that it provided such appliances and equipments for protecting the property in its control and possession from fire as were ordinarily in common use in the town of Lincolnton, and exercised such care over the same as an ordinarily prudent person would have done under similar circumstances, then the jury should answer the second issue 'No.'" The court declined to give the instruction. Defendant excepted. The court, in response to plaintiff's request, instructed the jury on the second issue: "That it is the duty of a common carrier to carry and deliver with reasonable promptness under all circumstances, and if, after defendant had received said shipment or car of pipe from the Seaboard Air Line Railway, it could with reasonable promptness [have] carried the shipment of pipe from Lincolnton to its destination before the fire occurred, it was defendant's duty to do so, and such failure would be negligence, and if this negligence [was the] cause of injury, the second issue should be answered 'Yes.'" "The law imposes upon common carriers the obligation to have and to furnish sufficient facilities for reasonably prompt transportation of goods tendered for carriage, and would be liable for failure to transport promptly, whether the failure is due to a want of facilities or to a capitious refusal to carry; and, if the jury shall find that the failure of defendant to carry and deliver the said car or shipment of pipe to its destination before the said fire occurred was due to the want of sufficient cars to carry the usual and ordinary amount of freight over its road, then defendant was negligent, and this was the cause of the injury, the second issue should be answered 'Yes.'" The defendant excepted. From a judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant excepted.

Osborne, Maxwell & Keerans and J. H. Marion, for appellant. W. F. Harding, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). In the view which we take of the case, it becomes unnecessary to pass upon the defendant's exceptions to his honor's charge upon the first issue. Assuming that, as found by the jury, the piping had been delivered to the defendant company, and that the defendant was in default in not having, as was its duty, a sufficient number of cars to send it within a reasonable time to Granite Falls, we are of the opinion that the defendant was entitled to the instruction asked, and his honor should not have given the instruction asked by the plaintiff. The defendant, by its failure to ship within a reasonable time, became liable for such damages as naturally and proximately resulted from such breach of contract or duty. Lindley v. R. R. Co., 88 N. C. 549. Pearson, J., in Ashe v. De Rossette, 50 N. C. 299, 72 Am. Dec. 552, says: "When one violates his contract, he is liable only for such damages as are caused by the breach, or such as, being incidental to the act of omission or commission, as a natural consequence thereof, may reasonably be presumed to have been in contemplation of the parties when the contract was made. This rule of law is well settled, but the difficulty arises in making its application." In that case a quantity of rice was sent to the mill of defendant's intestate pursuant to a contract that it was to be worked in its "turn." The rice was not worked in its turn. The mill with its contents was thereafter burned. In an action on the contract for failure to have the rice beaten in its turn, the plaintiff claimed the value of the rice as the measure of the damage to which he was entitled. This court held that, in the absence of any evidence of negligence in respect to the burning of the mill, he was not entitled to recover the value of the rice. The court said: "There is nothing to show that the contingency that the rice might be burned, if left in the mill, was in the contemplation of the parties. On the contrary, its being burnt was an accident unlooked for and unforeseen, and can in no sense be considered as having been caused by the fact that it was not beat in the turn promised by the defendant's intestate. Consequently the damages were too remote." Wells v. Wilmington & W. R. R., 51 N. C. 49, 72 Am. Dec. 556, in which the principle was applied to a contract of carriage. Upon the second trial of Ashe v. De Rossette, supra (53 N. C. 240), the court below submitted the question to the jury to say whether the promise was made in contemplation of the imminent risk from fire, etc., and they so found. This court held that there was no evidence to sustain the finding, saying: "So, notwithstanding the opinion of the jury, as it is a mere matter of opinion, and there is no evidence in regard to it, we are disposed to adhere to the opinion previously expressed by us." In Whitford v. Foy, 65 N. C. 265, the case is approved, and the distinction pointed out wherein a bailee misuses the property, or by conduct converts it to his own use, in which case, if the property is lost or destroyed, he is liable for its value without regard to the cause of such loss, in an action of trover under the former system, or for a conversion now. The court says: "But such a rule has never been applied to other contracts, still less to a mere neglect by a trustee, when no fraud is imputed." In Sledge v. Reid, 73 N. C. 440, the principle was applied to the case of a wrongful taking by a sheriff of a mule, the court refusing to give damages for loss of plaintiff's crop. The court cite Ashe v. De Rossette, supra, and Hadly v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, the leading case on the subject; Edmondson v. Fort, 75 N. C. 404; Foard v. R. R. Co., 53 N. C. 235, 78 Am. Dec. 277.

¶ 1. See Carriers, vol. 9, Cent. Dig. §§ 541, 542.

The principle has been frequently applied in other courts to cases against carriers negligently delaying the shipment of freight. In Morrison v. Davis, 20 Pa. 171, 57 Am. Dec. 695, the defendants, common carriers by water, received the plaintiff's goods for shipment by way of canal. They used a lame horse, and thereby the boat was delayed. When the boat reached the Juniata Division of the canal, it struck an unprecedented flood, and the plaintiff's property was injured. In an action for the negligent delay it was sought to recover the value of the property. The court said that the proximate cause of the disaster was the flood; the fault of having a lame horse was a remote one, which, by concurring with the extraordinary flood, caused the injury. "In any other than a carrier's case, the question would present no difficulty. The general rule is that a man is answerable for the consequences of a fault only so far as the same are natural and proximate, and as may on this account be foreseen by ordinary forecast, and not those which arise from a conjunction of his fault with other circumstances of an extraordinary nature." After discussing the question at some length, the court say: "Now, there is nothing in the policy of the law relating to common carriers that calls for any different rule, as to consequential damages, to be applied to them. They are answerable for the ordinary and proximate consequences of their negligence, and not for those that are remote and extraordinary; and this liability includes all those consequences which may have arisen from the neglect to make provision for those damages which ordinary skill and foresight is bound to anticipate." Daniels v. Ballantine, 23 Ohio St. 532, 13 Am. Rep. 264; Denny v. N. Y. C. R. R., 13 Gray, 481, 74 Am. Dec. 645. The court cites with approval Morrison v. Davis, supra, saying: "The defendants failed to exercise due care and diligence, in not being possessed of a sufficient number of efficient working engines to transport the plaintiff's wool with the usual ordinary and reasonable speed. The consequence of this failure on their part was that the wool was detained six days at Syracuse. This was the full and entire effect of their negligence, and for this they are clearly responsible." The property was burned in defendant's warehouse after its arrival at the point of destination. It was held that the defendant was not liable. Mich. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6; Hoadley v. N. Trans. Co., 115 Mass. 305, 15 Am. Rep. 106; R. R. Co. v. Reeves, 77 U. S. 176, 19 L. Ed. 909.

The contract with the plaintiff, by which the defendant carried the freight "released," relieved it of its common-law liability as insurer, but not against injury resulting from its own negligence. Smith v. R. R., 64 N. C. 235; 6 Cyc. 393. As his honor properly told the jury, the burden was therefore on the plaintiff to show that the piping was destroyed by the negligence of the defendant. Of course, in view of the law, as we have seen, such negligence, if any, referred to the burning of the warehouse—either in respect to the origin of the fire, or the facilities for controlling it. His honor told the jury that the measure of duty in this respect was ordinary care, or the care of the prudent man. There is no suggestion as to the origin of the fire. It may, so far as it appears, have been caused by rats, matches, incendiary, or any other of the unaccountable causes from which human experience teaches it is next to impossible to provide. In regard to keeping a watchman at the depot we are not prepared, in the absence of any evidence that it is usual to do so, to say that it was the duty of defendant to do so. It would seem that, if the defendant used the same precautions used by citizens of Lincolnton, it would discharge its duty. While it is true that this court has, following the Supreme Court of the United States, and probably a majority of the state Supreme Courts, held that, except in very rare and exceptional cases, negligence is a question of fact, and the measure of duty is the conduct of the prudent man, we think that it is still the duty of the judge to explain to the jury the law in the light of the testimony. Russell v. R. R., 118 N. C. 1098, 24 S. E. 512; Hinshaw v. R. R., 118 N. C. 1047, 24 S. E. 428. We have no purpose to question or shake the doctrines as laid down in those and later cases. In the application of the rule the most careful and anxious attention and desire to keep true to the line cannot always secure results satisfactory to minds approaching cases from opposite points of view, and often pre-conceived mental bias. In this case there was no conflicting evidence. The jury had a full and intelligent description of the conditions, a judge of marked ability and clearness of judgment heard the testimony, and, if there had been no evidence of the way in which owners of property in the same town protected their houses from fire, the jury would have had nothing, save their own experiences and their individual opinions as to what a prudent man would have done in respect to property situated as was the defendant's to protect it from fire, other than the damage incident to the passing of engines. What may have been the duty of the court in instructing the jury in such condition of the evidence is not presented in this case. We are of the opinion that the defendant was entitled to have the jury told that the measure of duty was the care taken by prudent citizens of Lincolnton in that respect of their property. Defendant's exception in that respect must be sustained. His honor should have told the jury that there was no evidence showing that the delay in shipping was the proximate cause of the destruction of the property. The inquiry would thus have been narrowed to the question of negligence in respect to the means provided for "fighting fire." What would have been the liability of the defendant if the freight had been delayed beyond the number of days fixed by the statute it is unnecessary to suggest. We have not considered the exceptions directed to the first issue.

There must be a new trial.

(127 N. C. 305)

STALCUP v. STALCUP et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—CONVEYANCES—CHARACTER OF ESTATE—ENTIRETY—TENANTS IN COMMON.

1. A conveyance to husband and wife, if nothing else appears, vests in the grantees an estate in entirety, whether the consideration was furnished partly by both, or all by one of them.

2. Where the grantor of certain land agreed to make the conveyance so that one-half of the land should be conveyed to the purchaser and the other half to his wife, each having furnished one-half of the consideration, the purchaser and his wife took as tenants in common, and not as tenants by the entirety, though the deed by mistake conveyed the land to the husband and wife as tenants by the entirety.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Long, Judge.

Action by J. T. Stalcup against W. R. Stalcup and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. B. Norvell and Ben Posey, for appellant. J. F. Ray, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. The plaintiff, who is the only child and heir at law of his deceased mother, claims a one-half interest in the tract of land described in the complaint. It is alleged in the complaint that in 1893, whilst the plaintiff's mother and P. S. Stalcup were husband and wife, P. S. Stalcup bought, with money of his own and his wife's, the land, and took a bond for title in his own name; that the bond for title ought to have been so executed as that one half of the land should be conveyed to the plaintiff's mother and the other half to P. S. Stalcup, but that, when the bond was drawn and executed, neither the plaintiff's mother nor P. S. Stalcup being present, by mistake, oversight, and ignorance on the part of the draftsman, and also on the part of the bargainor and the bargainee, it was drawn and executed so as to make it appear that P. S. Stalcup was to receive a deed as the sole bargainee, when the real intention of the makers of the bond for title, as well as P. S. Stalcup's, was that the bond and deed should show that P. S. Stalcup was to be the owner and bargainee of only one half of the land, and the mother of the plaintiff the other half. It is also alleged that the purchase price was paid for the land, the one-half of which with the money of the mother of the plaintiff, and for one-half of the land; that P. S. Stalcup died, and afterwards the bargainor, through mistake and oversight, executed a deed to the defendants, W. R. Stalcup, Burgess Jacobs, and Nancy Stalcup, the devisees under the will of P. S. Stalcup.

¶ 1. See Husband and Wife, vol. 26, Cent. Dig. §§ 73-75.

On the trial, Lovingood, the bargainor, a witness for the plaintiff, testified that, when P. S. Stalcup approached him to buy the land, he said he wanted it for himself and his wife; that he wanted the bond to show that he was entitled to one-half, and that his wife was entitled to one-half, as one-half of the money they were paying for the land was his and one-half hers; that witness said further that when the bond was executed neither Stalcup nor his wife was present, and that Stalcup "wanted it to show up that he and his wife were equal in the land—he in one-half and she in one-half." He said further: "I delivered this paper to P. S. Stalcup, and he was not satisfied because it did not show that his wife was to have a half of it, and I persuaded him to let it alone till the deed was made, and I would make it tell in the deed as he had directed. It was to show that they were 'halves'; that each paid half and had half."

Upon the defendants' motion to the demurrer to the evidence, the plaintiff was nonsuited. There was error in the judgment of nonsuit. If a deed be made for land to husband and wife (and it is immaterial if the purchase money be furnished one part by the husband and another part by the wife, or all by one of them), if nothing else appears, they take an estate in entirety; that is, they hold the land under the old common-law expression, "Per tout et non per my." That was so because of the relation between the parties, they being in law but one person and each having the whole estate as but one person. Bruce v. Nicholson, 109 N. C. 202, 13 S. E. 790, 28 Am. St. Rep. 562; Ray v. Long, 132 N. C. 891, 44 S. E. 652. But in the case before us the plaintiff has shown by competent evidence that the bond for title should have been drawn and executed so as that, when the deed should be made, on the payment of the purchase price, the bargainor should have conveyed to the wife, Mrs. Stalcup, one half of the land, and to the husband the other half. The deed was not to be made to the husband and wife, simply acknowledging the purchase money, but was by express agreement to be made so as to declare that one half of the purchase money had been paid by the husband and the other half by the wife, and that for that consideration one half interest in the land was to be conveyed to the wife and the other half interest to the husband. Such a deed would have created the husband and wife tenants in common. This rule of law does not conflict at all with Ray v. Long, supra, but is in conformity to that decision. In 15 A. & E. Enc. of Law, 848, it is said: "But it has been held that, in consequence of the theoretic unity of husband and wife, lands granted to husband and wife jointly during coverture cannot be held by them as tenants in common or as joint tenants, notwithstanding the terms of the grant. The prevailing doctrine in modern times, however, is that when lands are granted to husband and wife, and it appears from words of the grant that the intention was to create a joint tenancy, or a tenancy in common, they will take and hold as joint tenants or tenants in common, and not as tenants of the entirety," and many cases from several states are cited to support the text.

Error.

(137 N. C. 249)

LANCE v. TAINTER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

DEED—ACKNOWLEDGMENT—RECORD—CANCELLATION.

1. A deed of trust acknowledged before the grantee named therein as notary public is void.
2. Where the acknowledgment of a deed is void, the registration thereof is also void.
3. Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67a (80 Stat. 564 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3449]), provides that "claims which for want of record or for other reasons would not have been valid liens as against the creditors of the bankrupt, shall not be liens against his estate," and section 70e (80 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3452]) provides that "the trustee may avoid any transfer by the bankrupt of his property which any creditor of such bankrupt might have avoided." Held, that a trustee in bankruptcy may maintain an action to cancel, as a cloud on title, a deed made by the bankrupt, which was void for defective acknowledgment, probate, and registration.

Connor, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madison County; Long, Judge.

Action by N. J. Lance, trustee in bankruptcy, against A. C. Tainter and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. T. Crawford, for appellants. Gudger & McElroy, for appellee.

¶ 1. See Acknowledgment, vol. 1, Cent. Dig. §§ 104, 106, 107.

OLARK, C. J. This is an action by the plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of two bankrupts, to have canceled a deed in trust executed by them jointly, because it was acknowledged by both grantors, and privy examination of their wives was taken, before the trustee named in said deed, who was a notary public. The trustee in the deed being an interested person, the acknowledgment and privy examination before him were absolutely void. Long v. Crews, 113 N. C. 256, 18 S. E. 499, and cases cited; 1 Devlin, Deeds, §§ 476, 477; 1 Cyc. 553, and notes.

The acknowledgment being a nullity, so was the probate by the clerk based thereon, and the registration. Long v. Crews, supra; Barrett v. Barrett, 120 N. C. 129, 26 S. E. 601, 36 L. R. A. 226; Todd v. Outlaw, 79 N. C. 235; Robinson v. Willoughby, 70 N. C. 358; 1 Devlin, supra, § 478.

Code, § 1254, provides that "no deed of trust or mortgage for real or personal estate shall be valid at law to pass any property as against creditors or purchasers for a valuable consideration from the donor, bargainor or mortgagor, but from the registration of such deed of trust or mortgage in the county where the land lieth." The bankrupt law of 1898, section 67a (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 564 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8449]), provides that "claims which for want of record or for other reasons would not have been valid liens as against the creditors of the bankrupt, shall not be liens against his estate," and section 70e (30 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8452]) provides that "the trustee may avoid any transfer by the bankrupt of his property which any creditor of such bankrupt might have avoided, and may recover the property so transferred." It follows, therefore, that this instrument, not having been legally acknowledged, probated, nor registered, is invalid against the creditors of the bankrupt, and should be canceled as a cloud upon the title which might injuriously affect the administration of the estate in the plaintiff's hands. The demurrer that the complaint did not state a cause of action was properly overruled.

No error.

CONNOR, J., dissents.

(127 N. C. 247)

GRIFFIN v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

1. Where, in an action for injuries to a passenger in alighting from a train, there was no evidence that plaintiff was commanded or invited by the porter to alight while the train was in motion, it was error to charge that if plaintiff attempted to jump from the train as it was moving into a station, and was injured, he could not recover, unless he "was commanded or invited by the porter to alight from the train while it was in motion."

2. Where defendant's train was standing still when defendant's porter requested plaintiff to alight, an instruction that if the porter invited or commanded plaintiff to get off when the train was moving, and plaintiff, in obedience to such invitation, attempted to alight, and was injured, he was entitled to recover, was error.

On petition for rehearing. Dismissed.

For former opinion, see 46 S. E. 7.

MONTGOMERY, J. This case is before us again on a petition to rehear. The petition must be dismissed, whatever might be the opinion of the court upon the matter discussed therein, for the reason that there was a serious error in the trial below, and one which we were not inadvertent to when the case was originally heard in this court. 46 S. E. 7. It is this: The defendant, amongst other things, asked the court to instruct the jury that "ordinarily it is negligence to jump from a moving train, and if the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff attempted to jump from the defendant's train as it was moving into the station at Palmyra, and was injured in so attempting to jump off, then you will answer the first issue 'No.'" His honor repeated this instruction to the jury, but added the words, "unless the plaintiff was commanded or invited by the porter to alight from the train while it was in motion." The instruction as it was asked ought to have been given, without the modifying or qualifying language which followed. There were witnesses who testified that they saw the plaintiff jump off the car while it was going three or four miles an hour, and before it reached the station. The qualification which his honor added had no evidence to support it. There was an allegation in the complaint that the porter invited or told the plaintiff to get off when the train had nearly stopped, and was moving very slowly, but the plaintiff, in his evidence, testified over and over again that, when the porter spoke to him to get off, the car had stopped.

The same error was repeated by his honor in his charge in chief, when he told the jury: "If you find from the evidence, the burden of proof being upon the plaintiff, that the plaintiff purchased a ticket from Kelford to Palmyra from the defendant's agent at Kelford; that he entered the defendant's train at Kelford as a passenger, and as such rode upon the defendant's train to Palmyra; that, shortly before the train reached the station at Palmyra, the porter announced the station; that the plaintiff then left his seat and walked to the door of the car, and stood in the door until the car he was on passed the station; that, as the car the plaintiff was on passed the station, the porter invited or commanded the plaintiff to get off; that the train was then moving; and that the plaintiff, in obedience to the command or invitation of the porter, attempted to alight from the train, and was thrown to the ground and injured—you should answer the first issue 'Yes.' The train was not in motion. It was standing still. It could not have been negligence, therefore, on the part of the defendant, if the porter had asked the plaintiff to alight when the car was standing still. But under the instruction of his honor the jury were left to consider the defendant's negligence on the theory that the porter had asked the plaintiff to alight when the train was in motion.

Petition dismissed.

(157 N. C. 308)

CURTIS v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

APPEAL—MOTION TO DISMISS—FAILURE TO DOCKET APPEAL.

1. Though an appeal was not docketed seven days before the beginning of the call of a district to which it belongs, as required by court rule 5 (24 S. E. iv), if it be docketed at the first term after trial below, and before motion to dismiss, it will not be dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Swain County.

Action by W. A. Curtis against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Heard on motion to dismiss. Denied.

A. J. Franklin, for appellant. Moore & Rollins and A. B. Andrews, Jr. for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is a motion to dismiss this appeal (1) because not docketed seven days before beginning the call of the district to which it belongs, as required by rule 5 (24 S. E. iv); (2) because the record was not printed in the time required by rule 34 (43 S. E. v); (3) because the appellant has not printed and filed a brief in time required by rules 28 and 34 (28 S. E. v; 43 S. E. v). It is only necessary to quote what was said upon an identical motion in Benedict v. Jones, 131 N. C. 474, 42 S. E. 909: "The uniform ruling of this court * * * may be thus summed up: An appeal must be docketed not later than the termination of the next term of this court beginning after the trial below [with the exceptions specified in the proviso to rule 5, 128 N. C. 634, 24 S. E. iv]. If not docketed at such term by the time required for hearing at such term, the appellee may docket a certificate under rule 17 (28 S. E. v) then, and at any time during the term, if before the appellant docket the transcript, and have the appeal dismissed. But if the appellee is dilatory, and the appellant docket the transcript at that term, before the appellee moves to dismiss, though too late to secure a hearing, then the appeal will not be dismissed. Packing Co. v. Williams, 122 N. C. 406, 29 S. E. 366; Smith v. Montague, 121 N. C. 92, 28 S. E. 137." And citing other cases.

Here the appeal was not docketed at the required time, but it was docketed at this term—the first term beginning since the trial below—and, being docketed before the appellee moved to dismiss, the latter's motion came too late. As the case consequently goes over to the next term for hearing, the record and brief are only required to be printed at next term at the specified time before the call of the district to which the appeal belongs.

Motion denied.

(137 N. C. 269)

FRANCIS v. REEVES et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

DEED OF TRUST—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—DEBTS OF DECEASED PERSON—HUSBAND AND WIFE—AGENCY OF HUSBAND—PRESUMPTIONS—EVIDENCE.

1. Where a deed of trust was made by a devisee more than two years after the grant of letters on his testator's estate, to secure a loan made by the lender on the faith of the devisee's title to the land, the lender was a purchaser for value, and acquired a title good "even as against creditors" of the testator, under the express provisions of Code, § 1442, unless she had notice of an alleged outstanding debt.

2. No presumption arises from the relationship of husband and wife that the husband is the agent of his wife.

3. An agent negotiating a loan from a married woman told her that he would look up the title and incumbrances on the property offered as security, after which the woman's husband was to verify the agent's examination as to records, which the husband subsequently did, before the trust deed securing the loan was executed. Held insufficient to show that the wife appointed her husband as her agent in making the loan, so as to bind her by his knowledge of facts affecting the grantor's title to the land covered by the deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Haywood County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by T. L. Francis against W. T. Reeves, administrator, and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This action is prosecuted by the plaintiff against the defendants W. T. Reeves, administrator of K. Reeves, deceased, V. S. Lusk and wife, and others, for the purpose of subjecting certain lands, or the proceeds thereof in the hands of Mrs. Lusk, to the payment of a judgment recovered against the defendant administrator of K. Reeves. The record shows that during the year 1886 A. J. Reeves executed his note to the plaintiff, with Kindred Reeves as surety, for $650. Plaintiff indorsed the note to one Herren, who indorsed it to Garrett. The surety, K. Reeves, died in 1886, devising his property, including the real estate described in the complaint, to his three sons, W. T., A. J., and R. C. Reeves. Failing to name an executor, W. T. Reeves was appointed administrator c. t. a., and qualified in 1888. He did not advertise for claims. In 1898 Garrett sued the principal, W. T. Reeves, administrator, and the plaintiff on his indorsement, and recovered judgment. The other parties being insolvent, the plaintiff paid the judgment and took an assignment thereof. He afterwards recovered judgment against W. T. Reeves, administrator, on said judgment. George H. Smathers testified as follows: "That some time in 1890 A. J. Reeves applied to him to secure a loan, and at the time he had a number of claims and judgments against the said Reeves for collection, and was anxious to secure a loan. Reeves was to pay him $25 as a fee to secure the loan. That he went to Asheville, and saw Col. and Mrs. Lusk. Went first to Col. Lusk, and he said the money belonged to his wife, and that I would have to see her. That he did see her, and she said that she had had trouble about loaning money, and wanted to know if the loan was absolutely secure, and I told her that there would be no trouble about it, and she consented if the title should prove all right, and that there was no incumbrance on the land. That he told Col. and Mrs. Lusk that he would come back and look up the title and incumbrances, and Col. Lusk was to come out afterwards and verify his examinations as to records, which he did before the trust deed was executed. That he had heard of the note testified to by Reeves, and told A. J. Reeves that the matter would have to be settled, or rather, Reeves told him about the note at the time he applied for the loan. That Reeves told him that his father owed nothing at the time of his death, but was surety on this note, but that the note had been adjusted; that it had been transferred from Francis to Herren, and from Herren to Garrett, and that Garrett had given it to W. T. Reeves' wife as an advancement; and that he told W. T. Reeves that it was not necessary to advertise if his father owed no debts, but told him the safer plan was to follow the law, and that he was sure that Reeves said there was no debts. That A. J. Reeves made the statement before the loan was made that the Francis note had been adjusted, or had been given by Garrett to Reeves' wife. That his recollection is that the matter was discussed in the presence of Col. Lusk. That he stated to Col. Lusk that there was no debts against the estate, but that K. Reeves had signed a note as surety, but that Garrett, the party holding the note, had given it his daughter, wife of W. T. Reeves, and that after this conversation he and Col. Lusk got down the Code, and read section 1442, and afterwards Col. Lusk considered the loan safe, and the loan was made, and I was named as trustee. Think that the loan was made about this time, but don't know whether the deed was drawn that day. That he said to Col. Lusk, 'I suppose your wife wants you made trustee,' and he said, 'There was nothing said about it, and, as you will be here, I guess you had better be trustee,' and said that he would come out when I had prepared an abstract. That he thinks that he went to Asheville to deliver the notes and assure them that the loan was all right, and that he turned notes over to one or the other of them. That note was not paid at maturity, and some time thereafter Mrs. Lusk instructed him to sell. Then Col. Lusk told me to scare the interest out of him; that they did not want to sell the property. That Reeves made some payments in checks and some in money, and that he sent it in, but most of the payments were made directly to Col. Lusk. That after he received the notice to sell, it was two or three years before the sale was made. Col. Lusk bid off the land for Mrs. Lusk, and the deed was made to her. That Col. Lusk told him that he was bidding it for her, and that he knew that it was Mrs. Lusk's money, but, after the land was sold and bought for Mrs. Lusk, he went to Asheville and had a talk with Mrs. Lusk, and she said, 'You and Col. have got me in trouble again,' and that he told her that he thought that the land was worth more than she gave." It was admitted that the deed was made to Smathers more than two years after the issuing of letters to W. T. Reeves on the estate of K. Reeves. At the conclusion of the testimony his honor, upon the defendants' motion, directed judgment of nonsuit. Plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Crawford & Hannah, for appellant. G. A. Shuford, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. The excellent brief filed by counsel for appellant states that there are only two questions presented by the appeal: (1) Is there more than a scintilla of evidence that V. S. Lusk had knowledge of the note signed by K. Reeves, or information which put him upon inquiry as to the note at the time the deed of trust was executed and the loan made? (2) Is there more than a scintilla of evidence that V. S. Lusk was the agent of Mrs. Lusk in making the loan?

We concur with his honor upon both questions. The deed of trust was made more than two years after the grant of letters, and Mrs. Lusk made a loan upon the faith of the security. She is a purchaser for value, and her title is therefore good, "even as against creditors," unless she had notice of the outstanding debt. Code, § 1442. There is no suggestion that she had personal knowledge of any fact sufficient to put her upon inquiry. Reversing the order of the questions as they are put in the brief, we inquire whether there is any evidence that Mr. Lusk was her agent in the transaction. The answer to this question depends upon the construction to be placed on the testimony of Mr. Smathers. It is clear that there was no express contract between Col. Lusk and his wife by which she made him her agent. It is conceded that by her conduct, if unequivocal and understood by the parties—that is, the wife and the other contracting party—that she recognized him as her agent, she must be bound by his acts. It would seem, however, that no presumption arises by the reason of the relationship that he is the agent of his wife. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. 958. The agency must be proven. Rhinhard on Agency, 51. "The husband may act as agent of his wife, but, in order to bind her, he must previously be authorized to do so, or his act must, with full knowledge, be notified." McLaren v. Hall, 26 Iowa, 297. "The wife may constitute the husband her agent, but, to establish this, the evidence must be clear and satisfactory, and sufficiently strong to explain and remove the equivocal character in which she is placed by reason of her relation of wife." Rowell v. Klein, 44 Ind. 290, 15 Am. Rep. 235. We do not find any evidence that Mrs. Lusk appointed her husband agent to examine the title to the land. Mr. Smathers said to her that he would go back to Waynesville and look up the title and incumbrances, and Col. Lusk was to come out afterwards and verify his examination as to records, which he did before the trust deed was executed. This appears to have been Mr. Smathers' suggestion. The testimony falls short of evidence proving an agency.

Affirmed.

(70 S. C. 183)

SENTELL v. SOUTHERN RY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 28, 1904.)

WITNESS—IMPEACHMENT—RAILROADS—PERSON ON TRACK—QUESTION FOR JURY—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. An agent of a party may be contradicted, after foundation laid, by showing that at another time he made statements as to the matters in issue in contradiction of his testimony, though such statements were no part of the res gestæ.

2. Plaintiff's decedent was killed while sitting on the end of a cross-tie, with his head in his hands, and his feet in a path along the track, which had been used as a path for many years without objection by the railroad company. He could have been seen by the engineer for some distance before he was struck. Held proper to submit to the jury the question whether the deceased was a licensee, so that the engineer was bound to keep a lookout as to him.

3. A charge of a court, based upon a hypothetical statement of facts, is not a violation of the constitutional provision against a charge on the facts.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit of Edgefield County; Joseph A. McCullough, Special Judge.

Action by Rena A. Sentell, administratrix of James C. Sentell, against the Southern Railway. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. M. Thomson and J. W. DeVore, for appellant. J. W. Thurmond, Wm. P. Calhoun, and Croft & Tillman, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. James C. Sentell, by occupation a carpenter, aged about 64 years, while sitting upon a cross-tie of the Southern Railway Company, on the 28th day of May, 1900, in the county of Aiken, S. C., was struck by a railway train, to wit, a passenger train of defendant's railway, on its way from Augusta, state of Georgia, through the city of Columbia, S. C., on its way to the north, and instantly killed. After the plaintiff was appointed the administratrix of the estate of the said James C. Sentell, deceased, her deceased husband, she brought her action against the defendant to recover for herself and her three children the sum of $1,999 as damages, because she alleged that her said husband's death had been caused by the negligence of defendant. The action was once before this court on the question of the right of the court of common pleas to amend the summons and complaint by striking out the word "the" from the summons and complaint; this court holding that such amendment was legitimately allowed. 67 S. C. 229, 45 S. E. 155. After its return to the circuit court, and after the amendments were made and the defendant had filed its amended answer, the action came on for trial on its merits before Special Judge Joseph A. McCullough and a jury. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the plaintiff in her representative capacity for $1,999. When judgment was entered thereupon, the defendant appealed to this court on the following grounds, to wit:

"(1) Excepts because the presiding judge erred in allowing plaintiff's attorney, over the defendant's objection, to ask J. T. McPherson, the engineer, and a witness for defendant, the following question: 'Did you not say to, or in the presence of, Barton, on Broad street, in the city of Augusta, December after the killing, in substance the following: "I saw the man on the track when I first turned the curve. When I passed the dip, was looking for him to get up;"' and in allowing the witness to answer the same; and further erred in allowing the plaintiff to put up Barton, a witness for plaintiff, to contradict the said J. T. McPherson—whereas, the said testimony was incompetent and irrelevant, being no part of the res gestæ, and not being within the scope of the said engineer's agency, and was further incompetent for the purpose of contradiction.

"(2) Excepts because the presiding judge erred in overruling the defendant's motion for a nonsuit, which was made upon the following grounds: (1) There is no testimony tending to show such negligence on the part of the defendant as would make it liable for killing the deceased; nor is there any testimony tending to show any negligence of the defendant in the operation of its locomotive and train; no evidence that the engineer saw deceased was in such a position that he was unable to take care of himself in time for the engineer to have stopped the train. (2) And, further, that all the evidence for the plaintiff is capable of but one inference—but one inference can be drawn from all the testimony—and that is that the deceased came to his death by reason of his own negligence in going upon defendant's track under the circumstances as detailed by plaintiff's witnesses.

"(3) Excepts because the presiding judge erred in charging the jury as follows: 'So, then, you will ascertain, first, what relation did the intestate sustain towards this railroad company, because, in order to determine whether or not the railroad company owed the intestate any duty, and whether or not that duty was breached, depends upon the relation the intestate stood towards the railroad company. Now, what was that? You are to ask yourselves that question, and answer in the light of the testimony, was it that of a trespasser?' The error consisting in leaving it to the jury to determine what relation the deceased, Sentell, sustained towards the defendant company; it being submitted that it was the duty of the court itself to determine and charge the jury what such relation was, especially in this case, where the facts were undisputed that the deceased was sitting upon the end of a cross-tie on defendant's track, where he had no legal right to be, and was therefore a trespasser.

"(4) Excepts because the presiding judge erred in charging the jury as follows: 'There is another relationship, what I call "licensee," and I do that in order that you may draw the distinction. I charge you that the definition of licensee, as I shall endeavor to give you, is this: where one goes upon the track, not as a trespasser, but upon some warrant or authority by knowledge, acquiescence of the railroad, and by permission of the railroad, either expressed or implied. Now, if the railroad company, or the owner of the premises, knew—can't you see, knew—that people were accustomed to go upon these premises, and acquiesced in that custom, why, then, a greater degree of care would be due such person than a naked trespasser. The law says, whenever people are accustomed to going upon my premises, I shall take care not to expose them to extraordinary hazardous risk. If they are licensees, they take my premises as they find them. I am not required to enter into elaborate preparation, but if there are hazards there that they don't know I should warn them.' The error being: (1) Such charge was inapplicable, and to defendant's prejudice, because under the undisputed evidence the deceased was a trespasser, and only the law with reference to the duty of the defendant towards a trespasser should have been declared. (2) Under the undisputed evidence that the deceased was sitting upon the end of a cross-tie on the defendant's railway track it was error to charge that he could acquire any legal right by license to occupy such place. Such right cannot be legally acquired. (3)

The deceased could not have been a licensee, because there was no evidence showing knowledge, acquiescence, or permission on the part of the railroad company, which would entitle him to sit upon the end of a cross-tie on defendant's track.

"(5) Excepts because the presiding judge erred in charging the jury as follows: 'You have heard a great deal about "lookout." What does that mean—the duty of the railroad to keep a lookout? That means this: Take all the facts and circumstances under consideration, would a man of ordinary prudence and reason be expected to keep a lookout under those circumstances; in other words, take into consideration the character of the country, take into consideration the surrounding circumstances, and ask yourself the question, would ordinary care and foresight and prudence require a reasonable lookout to be kept under those circumstances? Suppose a reasonable lookout had been kept, was it negligence in not seeing this particular man; would an engineer of ordinary foresight, ordinary reason and prudence, if he had been keeping a reasonable lookout, have discovered the presence of this man, if he was upon the track, in time to have stopped the train, and thereby avoid the injury? In determining that take into consideration the surrounding circumstances; take a man of ordinary firmness and reason, a man who has other duties to perform, and say whether or not such a man, by the exercise of ordinary firmness and reason, would have discovered this man upon the track, if he was there, in time to have stopped his train and thereby avoid collision?' The error being: The undisputed evidence showing the deceased to be a trespasser, the defendant was not required to keep a lookout for him; no duty arose until his presence and danger were known and appreciated, and then it was not to wantonly or willfully injure him. The charge exacted more than the law required.

"(6) Excepts because the presiding judge erred in charging the jury plaintiff's second request, which was as follows: 'If the jury find from the evidence that the deceased, James Sentell, was killed by a train on defendant's railroad, and at such time he was in apparently helpless condition; and if they further find that at the place of such killing, the public, by the permission of the railway company, had been accustomed without objection from the defendant to travel for more than twenty years—then it would not excuse the defendant simply to show that their agent in charge of said train did not see the deceased in time to avoid the killing, for under such circumstances it may be the duty of the defendant to keep a reasonable outlook at such places to discover any apparently helpless person who may be upon the track.' The errors being the same as specified under exception 4; and, further, it was a charge upon the facts, in violation of article 5, § 26, of the Constitution of this state.

"(7) Excepts because the presiding judge erred in charging the jury plaintiff's fourth request, which was as follows: 'If persons have long been accustomed to use the track of a company for a passageway at certain localities, the company is charged with notice of such usage, and is under obligation to exercise reasonable care in keeping lookout at such places, among other things, for apparently helpless persons.' The errors being the same as specified under exception 4."

1. We think the presiding judge did not fall in the discharge of his duty, as here pointed out. The witness J. T. McPherson was defendant's witness. He had been examined with great care by its counsel. His testimony was important to the defendant. On cross-examination he was subjected to this test, namely, had he ever made an admission of a state of facts in contradiction of his testimony. The effect was, not to give testimony as to the res gestæ of the killing of James C. Sentell, but it was to discredit his testimony by showing that J. T. McPherson had made a statement at variance with his sworn statement. In the case of Mason v. Southern Railway, 58 S. C. 75, 36 S. E. 440, 53 L. R. A. 913, 79 Am. St. Rep. 826: "When the witness Pettus was on the stand, he was asked if he did not say to Mason, the father of the child, when the train backed to the place where the collision took place, at the time Mason climbed up in the cab, that he thought it was a dog or a chicken on the track, and that he did not have time to stop then. He answered, 'No.' The foundation was properly laid for contradicting the witness, and the testimony was at least admissible for that purpose." It must be borne in mind that the integrity of the witness alone is in the balance. It is always important that the witness should speak the same words, so far as his meaning on the accuracy of the statement are concerned, in regard to occurrences which he details. If he has made a statement at another time inconsistent with his testimony on the trial, it is perfectly competent on cross-examination to ask him if he did not at a certain time and place make to Mr. Blank a different statement, carefully stating what the statement was. The contradiction was necessarily made by producing Mr. Barton, the gentleman to whom Mr. McPherson made his statement, in Augusta, Ga. It is not contended that such contradictory statement is worth anything except to impeach McPherson's character for truthfulness. This exception is overruled.

2. This exception relates to the refusal of the acting circuit judge to grant the motion for nonsuit as made by defendant. We have examined the testimony as affected by the first subdivision of this exception. We find that there was some material testimony introduced by the plaintiff tending to show negligence by the defendant. Whether the engineer saw, or was bound to see, James C. Sentell in his position alongside of defendant's track, had some support, even if Sentell was a naked trespasser.

3. It makes no difference if the trend of the testimony was that Sentell was a naked trespasser, the defendant owed him a duty, viz., that he should not be treated by defendant without some regard to the dictates of humanity. There was positive testimony that the engineer could have seen Mr. Sentell in plenty of time to have stopped the train before reaching him, and thus have saved his life. All in all, there was testimony tending to show negligence. Therefore the special judge ought to have refused the motion for nonsuit.

4. The circuit judge properly left the attitude of James C. Sentell to the defendant to the jury. Granted that the deceased was sitting on the end of a cross-tie of defendant's track, it was in testimony that for more than 20 years the defendant had allowed passers to walk alongside its track. The people had been treated with great courtesy by the railroad, but, having treated them with this kindness for more than 20 years, the railroad company must treat them with care. Not that these foot travelers could claim a right to occupy the track as against the railroad's use of this property. This court, in the case of Jones v. R. R. Co., 61 S. C. 556, 39 S. E. 758, made these remarks in discussing a nonsuit, and, while we have already passed upon the nonsuit in this appeal, yet the language of Mr. Justice Jones in the case we have just cited is well worth a repetition here: "The fourth exception alleges error in the refusal of the motion for nonsuit, which motion was based on the ground that the evidence showed that the plaintiff's intestate was a trespasser when injured, and there was no evidence of gross or willful misconduct of the defendant in the management of its train. The general rule undoubtedly is that a railroad company owes no duty to a bald trespasser on its track, except not to do him any wanton or willful injury. Smalley v. Southern Ry. Co., 57 S. C. 243, 35 S. E. 489, and authorities therein cited. Ordinarily, the mere failure to keep a lookout for adult trespassers that may be on the track is not evidence of negligence to the trespasser, because negligence involves a breach of duty to the injured person, and the railroad company owes no such duty to the adult trespasser. It is the trespasser's duty to look out for himself, and to give the railroad company a clear track by getting out of the way. If, however, the servants of the railroad company should discover a trespasser upon the track, and should then fail to observe or use ordinary care, under the circumstances, to avoid running him down, this would be evidence from which a jury might infer that the injury was the result not of mere inad-vertence, but of a conscious failure to observe due care, or of wantonness or willfulness." (Italics ours.) "In this case, however, the complaint alleged that the track where the injury occurred 'traversed a populous part of the city of Anderson, and is much frequented by people passing to and fro along said railroad, which fact was well known to the defendant and its agents and servants and employes,' and there was some evidence tending to establish such allegations which made it proper to submit the case to the jury." (These latter allegations were in the complaint in the case at bar, and there was some testimony tending to establish such allegations, which made it proper to submit the case to the jury.) "If such allegations be true, then the circumstances were such as to call for a higher degree of care to avoid injury than if the plaintiff's intestate was a bald trespasser. Even though the use of the track by the public as a walkway was not for such length of time nor of such character as to give a legal right to so use the track, and even though the evidence fell short of showing any positive consent of such use by the company, yet, if there was evidence tending to show knowledge of an acquiescence in such use without protest, such evidence would tend to show that the railroad company had much reason to expect the presence of persons on the track, who were there not as bald trespassers, but using it with the knowledge and acquiescence of the (railroad) company. Under such circumstances it would be the duty of the railroad company to keep a reasonable lookout, or to give warning of the approach of the train, or generally to observe ordinary care, under the circumstances, to avoid injury." We have reproduced so much of the case of Jones v. Railroad, supra, in order to show that the circuit judge in the case at bar has followed the principles recognized and approved in the Jones Case, supra, and hence there was no failure on his part when he did not assume to decide the question of trespasser, but properly submitted it to the jury. This exception is overruled.

5. We think, under the authority of Jones v. Railroad, supra, the presiding judge was correct in charging the jury as to a licensee. The trend of the testimony was to show that for more than 20 years the railroad company had acquiesced in the use of the walk alongside of its track, and certainly had not forbidden its use by pedestrians; also the feet of the intestate were on the path of that walkway when he was stricken by the train of defendant, though it is true he was seated on a cross-tie of the track. When the intestate, Mrs. Jones, was killed, in Jones v. R. R. Co., supra, she was walking on the trestle, and yet the charge of the circuit judge called the attention of the jury to the fact that under the consent, either express or implied, she was there as a licensee. This exception is overruled.

6. We do not think the presiding judge erred in speaking of a lookout by telling the jury what it meant, and under what circumstances a defendant should exercise this duty. Did not ordinary care require this duty of defendant in its acquiescence in the use of its track by pedestrians? Again, we refer to the extracts we have made from the case of Jones v. R. R. Co., supra. This exception is overruled.

7. This exception in large measure has been passed upon in our views touching the third and fourth exceptions. No harm—legal harm—resulted to defendant from the charge of the judge, based upon a hypothetical statement. There was no violation of the mandate of the Constitution forbidding judges charging upon the facts. See Jenkins v. Railway Co., 58 S. C. 373, 36 S. E. 703.

8. We do not think there was any error in the presiding judge in charging plaintiff's fourth request. We have already passed upon these matters, especially in disposing of appellant's fourth ground of appeal. It is overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

WOODS, J. (concurring). In concurring in the opinion of the Chief Justice, I do not understand it is held to be the duty of a railroad company to stop its train because the engineer sees a man sitting on a cross-tie in front of the train, even at a place where the public are accustomed to travel with the knowledge and implied consent of the railroad company. Ordinarily, the engineer may well assume that such person is in possession of his senses, and will get out of the way of the train. But in this case there was some evidence that the deceased was sitting bent over, with his face in his hands, in an attitude indicative of a helpless physical condition, and that by proper watchfulness the engineer would have observed the significant posture, and been put on notice of the helplessness of the man he was approaching in time to stop the train. Whether this helpless condition of the deceased was due to drunkenness, which would warrant a finding of contributory negligence, or to a sudden attack of illness, was, under the evidence, a question of fact for the jury.

(70 S. C. 125)

HARKEY et al. v. NEVILLE et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 11, 1904.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATE CONVEYED.

1. Where testator devised certain land to his wife for her life, and at her death to his daughter-in-law for and during her life, and, in case of her death without issue, then to certain named heirs, it is not a conveyance of a fee conditional to such daughter-in-law by implication, under Civ. Code 1902, § 2464, providing that when, in any will, an estate is limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs of the body, such words shall not mean an indefinite failure of issue, but a failure at the death of such person; such daughter-in-law then having a son alive, who has since died.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Oconee County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by Wm. C. Harkey, Thos. R. Colston, Miles Oswald Colston, and Harry Edgar Colston against Louisa M. Neville and J. D. McMahon. From the circuit decree, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed. —

Jaynes & Shelor, for appellants. S. P. Dendy, for respondents.

POPE, C. J. Louisa M. Neville, claiming to be the owner in fee simple of a tract of land containing 226 acres, situate in the county of Oconee, in the state of South Carolina, contracted with and sold to her co-defendant, J. D. McMahon, all the pine timber trees standing on said tract of land, for 20 cents a cord, for her own use, benefit, and behalf, and that the said defendant J. D. McMahon has proceeded with a force of hands to fell some 30 or 40 cords of said pine timber trees standing on said lands, under the contract with said codefendant, Louisa M. Neville. The plaintiffs deny that Mrs. Louisa M. Neville is the owner in fee simple of said 226 acres of land, but allege that she is only a life tenant of the said tract of land. Both the plaintiffs and defendants claim through the last will of one Robert Stribling, who departed this life on the — day of May, 1877. A preliminary injunction was granted by his honor Judge Dantzler, whereby the defendants were restrained from cutting any pine or other timber on said 226 acres of land. The action was brought on for trial before Judge Dantzler, who decreed that the said defendant Louisa M. Neville was the owner in fee simple of said 226 acres of land, and therefore had the right to make her contract with her codefendant, J. D. McMahon. The plaintiffs' complaint was dismissed. The plaintiffs have appealed from said decree on the grounds:

"(1) Because his honor erred in finding as matters of fact as follows: 'After the death of the testator, his widow, Ruthy P. Stribling, died, and his daughter-in-law Louisa M. Stribling intermarried with one William J. Neville, and one child was born of that marriage. During the lifetime of such child the said Louisa M. Neville, née Stribling, alienated the real property described in said will, and afterwards acquired title thereto, and now claims to own the same in fee absolutely in her own right.' Whereas the testator died in 1877, and the widow in 1902. That subsequently to the death of the testator, but more than eighteen years before the death of the widow, Louisa M. Stribling intermarried with William J. Neville. Of this marriage, on June 2, 1884, a son was born, who died on June 6, 1886. On June 14, 1884, Louisa M.

Neville executed a deed to William J. Neville, as trustee, conveying her estate for the benefit of herself and her heirs. That William J. Neville died in June, 1899. That, by reason of the trust deed aforesaid, Louisa M. Neville now claims to own in fee the tract of land described in said will absolutely, in her own right. And his honor erred in not so finding.

"(2) Because his honor erred in his construction of the will of Robert Stribling, deceased, dated April 28, 1877, whereby he construed item 4 as giving to Louisa M. Neville a fee conditional estate in the tract of land therein described, whereas he should have held that she took only an estate for life under said will.

"(3) Because the well-settled rule of law in the construction of wills is that the intention of the testator is to be obtained from his own words, and not from words implied or supplied dehors the instrument; and his honor erred in holding that Louisa M. Neville took a fee conditional estate by implication.

"(4) Because the express estates given by the will are, first, life estate to the widow; second, life estate to the daughter-in-law; and, third, remainder in fee to niece and nephew upon the death of the daughter-in-law without issue living at the time of her death; and his honor erred in not so holding.

"(5) Because it is manifest from the language of the will the intention of the testator was that, after the termination of the life estate given to the widow and daughter-in-law, the remainder in fee should be vested in the niece and nephew in case of the death of the daughter-in-law without issue living at the time of her death; and his honor erred in not so holding.

"(6) Because a fee conditional occurs where an estate of freehold is limited to a person, and the same instrument contains a limitation by way of remainder of the same legal or equitable character to the heirs of his body or his issue, to whom upon his death the estate is to descend per formam doni, from generation to generation, until the line of descent becomes extinct; and his honor erred in not so holding.

"(7) Because, in order to create a fee conditional, there must be either words of inheritance and procreation, or words indicating an intention that the estate should pass indefinitely, on the general or special line of the first taker, to one and the heirs of his body, in the proper and apt form of language to create such an estate; and his honor erred in implying or supplying these words in the will of testator.

"(8) Because, after the act approved December 24, 1883 (Laws 1883, p. 430), no estate in remainder, whether vested or contingent, could be defeated by a deed of feoffment with livery of seisin, and his honor erred in not so holding.

"(9) Because the deed purporting to have been made by Louisa M. Neville on the 14th day of June, 1884, to William J. Neville, trustee, could not operate to defeat the estate in remainder of the niece and nephew in said premises, the act then declaring that no estate in remainder, whether vested or contingent, could be defeated in this manner; and his honor erred in not so holding.

"(10) Because the deed purporting to have been made by Louisa M. Neville to William J. Neville, trustee, was not such an alienation as at common law could operate to defeat an estate in remainder; the widow being in possession of the land, and remaining in possession thereof as life tenant until her death, in 1902, about seventeen years thereafter, William J. Neville never having possession of said premises; whereas, there must be both a deed and a corporal transfer of the soil from one to another, taking effect in present, or not at all; and his honor erred in not so holding.

"(11) Because the deed being made to W. J. Neville, as trustee, for the benefit of Louisa M. Neville, and her heirs—the trustee having nothing to do, and not passing, as feoffee, into the actual enjoyment of the fee—it was as if Louisa M. Neville, the life tenant, had made a deed to herself, and of her estate in the premises; and his honor erred in not holding the same ineffectual to destroy the contingent remainder of the niece and nephew.

"(12) Because said deed on its face shows that Louisa M. Neville conveyed only the right, title, interest, and estate which he took under the will of testator, after the termination of the life estate of the widow, Ruthy P. Stribling, of, in and to said premises; it was a conveyance to take effect in future, the interest thereby conveyed being the life estate of the grantor, after the termination of the life estate of the widow, Ruthy P. Stribling, which did not transpire until the widow's death, in 1902, four years after the death of the trustee, who never exercised any acts of ownership or dominion over said premises; and the execution of said deed does not constitute such alienation of a fee conditional estate as at common law operates to defeat the estate in remainder."

We will now address ourselves to these exceptions, and, in doing so, will first take up the second to the seventh, inclusive. Before entering into the discussion of the exceptions, it may be well to give some facts not disputed:

The testator, Robert W. Stribling, died in May, 1877, leaving a will. His family, at the time of his death, and for years before his death, were his wife, Mrs. Ruthy Stribling, his widowed daughter-in-law, Louisa M. Stribling, his nephew, William C. Harkey, and his niece, Susan E. Harkey. He had no children of his own. His wife was made by him his sole executrix. His will was as follows:

"1st. I desire my body to be decently interred in the earth from whence it came.

"2d. I desire all my just debts and funeral expenses to be paid as soon as practicable after my death.

"3d. It is my will and desire that my nephew, William C. Harkey, now living with me, provided he shall remain with me as in the past, if I shall so long live, or in case of my decease, with my wife, Ruthy P. Stribling, until he attains to the age of twenty-one years; then it is my will and desire that he, my nephew, the said William C. Harkey, shall have one good horse, bridle and saddle, and the sum of fifty dollars in money.

"4th. The tract of land whereon I now live, situate, lying and being in the county of Oconee and State aforesaid, on Conneross Creek, waters of Seneca River, and adjoining lands of E. S. Foster, W. T. Jaynes, L. D. Stribling, A. G. Sligh and others, containing two hundred and twenty-six acres, more or less, and also all other real estate that I may be seized and possessed of at my decease, together with all the residue of my personal estate, after the payment of my just debts, funeral expenses and legacy as above directed, I will, bequeath and devise to my beloved wife, Ruthy P. Stribling, for and during the period of her natural life, for the joint use of herself and my daughter-in-law, Louisa M. Stribling, giving unto my said wife full power to sell and dispose of such parts of my personal property as may be required for her comfortable support and maintenance during her life, and from, upon and immediately after her death, I will, bequeath and devise all my said estate, both real and personal, unto my affectionate daughter-in-law, Louisa M. Stribling, widow of my son, Robert B. Stribling, deceased, for and during her natural life, and, in case of her death without issue, then one-third of my estate in fee unto my nephew, the said William C. Harkey, and his heirs forever, and the remaining two-thirds thereof in fee to my niece, Susan E. Harkey, and her heirs forever.

"5th. I do hereby nominate, constitute and appoint Ruthy P. Stribling sole executrix of this, my last will and testament.

"Witness my hand and seal, this 28th day of April, A. D. 1877. Robert Stribling. [L. S.]"

Testator's widow, Mrs. Ruthy P. Stribling, caused the will to be admitted to probate, qualified as sole executrix thereof, and possessed herself of the testator's lands and personal property. The daughter-in-law, Mrs. Louisa M. Stribling, lived with her mother-in-law until she married one William J. Neville. On the 2d June, 1884, she gave birth to a son. On the 14th day of June, 1884, she executed a deed of said lands (226 acres) to William J. Neville, as trustee. The following is a copy of said deed, to wit:

"The State of South Carolina: Know all men by these presents: That I, Louisa M.

Neville, of the county of Oconee and State aforesaid, for and in consideration of the natural love and affection which I have and bear to my husband, William J. Neville, and my son, Robert D. Neville, and for the further consideration of five dollars to be paid by the said William J. Neville, of said county and State, have granted, bargained, sold and released, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell and release, unto the said William J. Neville, all my right, title, interest and estate which I have by virtue of the will of Robert Stribling, late of the county and State aforesaid, after the determination of the life estate to Ruthy P. Stribling, the widow of the said testator, of and to the following real estate, that is to say, in all that piece, parcel or tract of land, situate, lying and being in the county of Oconee and State aforesaid, on Conneross Creek, waters of Seneca River, adjoining lands of E. S. Foster, W. T. Jaynes, L. D. Stribling, A. G. Sligh and others, containing two hundred acres, more or less, being the real estate mentioned and described in the will of said Robert Stribling, deceased. Together with all and singular the rights, members, hereditaments and appurtenances to the said premises belonging or in any wise incident or appertaining.

"To have and to hold all and singular the premises hereinbefore mentioned unto the said William J. Neville, his heirs and assigns forever; in trust, nevertheless, for the use, benefit and behoof of myself and my heirs forever. And I hereby bind myself, my heirs, executors and administrators, to warrant and forever defend all and singular the said premises unto the said William J. Neville, his heirs and assigns, against me and my heirs, and all and every other person or persons whomsoever lawfully claiming or to claim the same or any part thereof."

On the ——— day of June, 1886, the son of Mrs. Louisa J. Neville died. She has never borne any other child or children, and is now 63 years of age. Mrs. Ruthy P. Stribling died in the year 1902, and thereupon Mrs. Louisa M. Neville occupied the said plantation. This suit was begun in 1903. Testator's niece, Miss Susan E. Harkey, intermarried with one Thomas R. Colston. Of this marriage, Miles Oswald Colston and Henry Edgar Colston were born, and Mrs. Susan E. Colston, née Harkey, died, leaving her husband and two sons, her heirs at law. William J. Neville died in 1899. The contest here involves the construction of the fourth clause of Robert Stribling's will. By said clause a life estate is first carved out for the widow, Mrs. Ruthy P. Stribling. This life estate ended in 1902, on the death of the first life tenant. Next, a life estate for Mrs. Louisa M. Neville, which life tenant is still alive and in possession.

Did the birth of the issue to Mrs. Louisa M. Neville in 1884 clothe her with a fee conditional in said lands, so as to enable her to convey said lands on 14th June, 1884, to a trustee for herself and her heirs, and thereby invest her with the fee-simple estate in said lands? It is very clear that the testator did not directly convey any estate in said lands to the son of Mrs. Louisa M. Neville. Did the testator by implication create a fee conditional? We know that there has been some confusion in the law of the state touching a fee conditional by implication. See the cases of Bulst v. Dawes, 4 Rich. Eq. 423, and Addison v. Addison, 9 Rich. Eq. 58. In one of those cases the Court of Errors held that a fee conditional "is such an estate as is to descend indefinitely in the line of the first taker." Such is the idea of law writers, but what is meant by a "fee conditional by implication" is such a disposition by a testator when his intention of a devise to the issue is necessary in order to make sense. As an example, in the case of Addison v. Addison, supra, when the language of the testator, Allen B. Addison, was, "I give in trust to George A. Addison and Dr. Edward J. Mims, for the sole benefit of my son, Joseph A. Addison, during his natural life, the following property, that is: my mill place, on Shaw's Creek," etc. "But if my said son, Joseph A. Addison, should die without leaving any child or children, or representatives of child or children, in that case my will is, that the above property be equally divided between my son, George A. Addison, and my daughter, Emeline C. Mims, or their children. * * *" J. A. Addison had a son born after the death of testator, which son survived said J. A. Addison. It was held by the court "that J. A. took an estate in fee conditional in the realty by implication, which descended to his son. * * *" In order to do this, it was necessary to hold that the language of testator implied a greater estate in J. A. Addison than the actual devise, which was for life, and that, although there was no direct devise to the issue of J. A., yet that was what was meant by the testator, as fixed by the language used. It must be remembered in this connection that the testator, Allen B. Addison, died in May, 1850, which was three years before the General Assembly of this state enacted the following statute, to wit, section 2464 of the Civil Code of South Carolina of 1902: "Whenever in any deed or other instrument in writing, not testamentary, hereafter executed, or in any will of a testator hereafter dying, an estate, either in real or personal property, shall be limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs of the body, or issue, or issue of the body, or other equivalent words, such words shall not be construed to mean an indefinite failure of issue, but a failure at the time of the death of such person." Thus, in the fourth clause of the will of Robert P. Stribling, the act of 1853, just quoted, will be read after the life estate of Mrs. Ruthy P. Stribling, as follows: "For and during her natural life, and in case of her death without issue living at the time of her death, then one-third of my estate in fee unto my nephew, William C. Harkey, and his heirs forever, and the remaining two-thirds thereof in fee to my niece, Susan E. Harkey, and her heirs forever."

We feel that the testator was obliged, under the law, to mean in his will a life estate to Louisa M. Neville, unless her issue should be living at her death, in which event the issue of her body then living would receive the estate, and the nephew and niece, William and Susan, would not take any part of the estate, for, as the law would by implication supply "issue" to the life tenant, it would be such issue as would survive the life tenant, Lucy M. Neville, whose only child or issue died in the year 1886, and she is now too old and infirm to bear other issue.

But suppose effect could be given to the deed the said Lucy M. Neville granted in 1884 to her husband, William J. Neville, of said tract of land. It must be plain that such effort on the part of the said Lucy M. Neville to change her relation to the estate in said lands was utterly futile, not because W. J. Neville was her husband, but because she could not change her relation to that land by making a deed to herself. It is true, she used the name of a trustee in her deed, but she placed the performance of no duties upon such trustee. He was merely to hold such property for Lucy M. Neville and her heirs. It was well said by the late Chief Justice McIver in Faber v. Police, 10 S. C., at page 389, in discussing the same question: "The rule undoubtedly is that when there is a conveyance to one for the use of another, and the trustee is charged with no duty which renders it necessary that the legal estate should remain in him to enable him properly to perform such duty, the statute of uses executes the use and carries the legal title to the cestui que use. Ramsey v. Marsh, 2 McCord, 252, 13 Am. Dec. 717; Jenney v. Laurens, 1 Speers, 356; McNish v. Guerard, 4 Strob. Eq. 66." Whatever estate Louisa M. Neville conveyed to W. J. Neville in trust for her was her legal estate. By the law, the trustee having no duty to perform, the legal estate eo instante was carried back to the said Louisa M. Neville. Such being the case, there was an entire failure on her part to effect the title. It might be said that Lucy M. Neville so considers her effort to convey the title as futile, for she now treats the same land as under no trust.

It follows, therefore, that the decree of the circuit court must be reversed, for if Lucy M. Neville has only a life estate in the tract of land, she has no right to allow her codefendant to fell the timber in said 226 acres of land, and that after her death the said 226 acres of land will revert to the plaintiffs.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be, and the same is hereby, reversed, and the action is remanded to the circuit court to carry this judgment into effect.

JONES and WOODS, JJ., concur in the result.

GARY, A. J. (concurring). The will must be construed as if the testator had inserted in it the provisions of the act of 1853 set out in the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice POPE. The limitation over after the life estate of Mrs. Louisa M. Neville should read as follows: "and in case of her death without issue living at the time of her death, then," etc. If this controversy had arisen under a will which became effective prior to the act of 1853, the case of Addison v. Addison, 9 Rich. Eq. 58, shows that the language of the will would have been sufficient to create an estate in fee conditional by implication. But the court in the case just cited recognized the principle that words equivalent to those mentioned in the statute would prevent the life estate from being enlarged into a fee conditional by implication. In that case the court says: "It follows that if, in this litigation, we must construe the words of the will describing the event on which the estate was to go over as equivalent to dying without issue living at the death of Joseph, his life estate cannot be enlarged by implication." The words of the will which would have been sufficient to create a fee conditional by implication are restricted by the words "living at the time of her death," which prevent the vesting of such an estate in the life tenant, as they show that it was not the intention of the testator that the issue should take in indefinite succession, which is a prerequisite for the implication of a fee conditional. Since the act of 1853, we do not see how a life estate can be enlarged into a fee conditional by implication.

In his opinion, Mr. Chief Justice POPE says: "We feel that the testator was obliged, under the law, to mean in his will a life estate to Louisa M. Neville, unless her issue should be living at her death, in which event the issue of her body then living would receive the estate, and the nephew and niece, William and Susan, would not take." Italics ours. We cannot concur in this proposition, as the principle is stated by numerous authorities in this state, that issue cannot take as purchasers by implication.

For these reasons, we concur in the conclusion announced in the leading opinion, that the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed.

(70 S. C. 178)

STACY v. CHEROKEE FOUNDRY & MACHINE WORKS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 18, 1904.)

CORPORATIONS—COMPENSATION OF TREASURER—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. Where a director of a corporation is elected treasurer for one year, and at the expiration of his term notifies the directors that he cannot again serve for the same compensation, and is re-elected without any settlement as to his salary, and continues in the employ of the corporation for the ensuing year, he can recover what his services are worth.

2. Findings of fact by circuit court on appeal from a magistrate's court cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Cherokee County; Townsend, Judge.

Action by F. G. Stacy against the Cherokee Foundry & Machine Works. From circuit order reversing magistrate's judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Otts, for appellant. J. C. Jeffries, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. This appeal involves the right of the plaintiff to recover from the defendant the sum of $88, as compensation for his services as treasurer of the defendant company from 25th February, 1902, to last days of January, 1903, a period of 11 months. The suit was commenced and tried before a magistrate, whose judgment was against the plaintiff, who appealed therefrom, and secured the verdict of the magistrate reversed, and a judgment in his (plaintiff's) favor for the sum of $88. The defendant now appeals, and we will consider these grounds of appeal in their order, up to the sixth:

"(1) Because the circuit judge erred, as a matter of law, in holding (in his honor's opinion) that the plaintiff was entitled to recover because he was led to believe before the services were rendered that he would be paid; and it is respectfully submitted that, under the law, where a director performs services clearly outside of his duty as a director, that his salary must be agreed upon by the directors, or the properly constituted authorities, before the services are rendered, and that it is not sufficient, where the trustee relation exists, as in case of a director, for him to be led to believe that he will be paid for his services." It is made to appear from the record that the office of treasurer of the defendant was expressly provided for in the by-laws of the defendant corporation, and that another person had held that office before the 25th February, 1901, receiving a salary, but that the board of directors of the defendant company elected the plaintiff treasurer on the date last mentioned, and in the year 1902 a salary of $75 was paid the plaintiff for his services. In February, 1902, the plaintiff was again elected to this office, but no definite sum was provided as salary.

The plaintiff did tell them he would not serve for less than $100. At the trial the plaintiff sought to show that by the minutes his salary was fixed at the rate of $100 per annum. In lieu of this position, he endeavored to show by testimony that his services were worth the said sum of $88 for 11 months' service as treasurer. This being a law case, the conclusions of the circuit judge on questions of fact are not reviewable by us. If, however, it should be insisted that the conclusion of law of the circuit judge is unsound, we remark that our own case of Bowen v. R. Co., 34 S. C. 217, 18 S. E. 421, abundantly sustains the circuit judge. This exception is overruled.

"(2) Because the circuit judge should have found from the testimony that no salary was agreed upon by directors before the services were rendered, or even after the services were performed, and, if such agreement was made at the end of the first year's services, it could not apply or be construed as warranting a payment for services already rendered, but could only apply to services to be rendered subsequently to time of such agreement, if made." We do not think the circuit judge committed any error as here complained of. It was a question of fact. We are not allowed to consider any questions of fact.

"(3) That if any attempt was made to fix a salary for the plaintiff, and even if such salary was agreed upon at the end of first year, it was illegal for the services to be rendered for the last year, because, under the testimony of the plaintiff, there was not a quorum of the board of directors, exclusive of the claimant, present when such salary was discussed; and he should have held, as a matter of law, that such agreement, even if made, was illegal, because a majority of the board of directors, exclusive of the plaintiff, were not present at the time, as testified by the plaintiff." The record fails to disclose that this question was considered by the circuit judge. His judgment was based upon the testimony, and he found that the plaintiff was fully entitled to be paid $88. A quorum of the board of directors was there. The plaintiff was elected treasurer by a full board. His predecessor in office received a salary in excess of that paid plaintiff, as to which he was entitled to be paid. This exception is overruled.

"(4) Because the circuit judge should have found from the testimony that the services of the plaintiff were not performed under such circumstances as would show that it was well understood not only by the plaintiff, but by the proper corporate authorities, that his services were to be paid for, and that, as a matter of law, unless such was well understood by both parties, he could not recover." We think the circumstances of this case show conclusively that plaintiff was entitled to the compensation claimed by him. This exception is overruled.

We will next consider the fifth exception:

"(5) Because the circuit judge should have found from the testimony that the service performed the first year by the plaintiff was without any claim for or expectation of salary, in that the plaintiff testified that no salary was mentioned by any one until after he had served a year; and, if such was a fact, under the law, he could not recover." We do not understand that the plaintiff is now suing for his first year's salary. That has been paid. So that the question whether his services as treasurer were not to be paid for during or on account of his first year's salary is a matter with which we are not now concerned. This exception is overruled.

We will now pass upon exception 6, through exception 13, inclusive:

"(6) Because the circuit judge erred in not finding from the testimony and law governing this case that the $75 paid himself as treasurer was for his services the second year, and that he had no legal right to apply such payment for services done and performed before anything was said about salary or compensation.

"(7) Because the circuit judge erred in not holding that, where no salary is fixed, none can be collected by an officer of a corporation who is also a director, because of the trust relation existing on his part.

"(8) In not holding that an officer of a corporation who is also a director cannot claim compensation legally on an implied contract, nor can he recover upon a quantum meruit.

"(9) Because the circuit judge erred in not finding from the testimony that there was no agreement to pay plaintiff any salary before his services were rendered.

"(10) Because the circuit judge erred in not holding that if plaintiff was entitled to a salary, under the testimony, for the second year, or eleven months of the second year, that he was not entitled to recover because of the payment to himself of the $75 paid himself by check on February 27, 1902, which, under plaintiff's testimony, should have been applied to his salary for the last year's services, because, under plaintiff's testimony, nothing was said about salary or compensation until the beginning of the second year's services, and there could be no legal claim for services prior to claim for salary for work admitted to have been performed prior to any agreement or claim of salary.

"(11) Because the circuit court erred in passing upon the reasonableness of the salary claimed, when that was not an issue under the plaintiff's exceptions on appeal from the magistrate's findings and rulings.

"(12) Because the circuit judge's judgment is not based upon the exceptions to the magistrate's judgment, to wit: He did not hold that plaintiff is entitled to recover under an implied contract, as contended in his second exception; he did not hold that he was entitled to salary, although a director, as contended in the third exception; he did not hold that he was entitled to recover, because that the $75 paid himself on February 27, 1902, was for salary for the previous fiscal year; and he did not base his findings that the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon a quantum meruit.

"(13) Because the circuit judge erred in not sustaining the magistrate's findings on the facts, and in reversing the magistrate, unless the preponderance of the testimony was against the findings of the magistrate."

The sixth exception cannot be sustained by us. We cannot deal with the testimony.

We have this to say in regard to the position that a salary cannot be collected by a director, when elected to an office in the corporation, if the salary is not first fixed: that such a doctrine would be far-reaching.

As to the position in the eighth exception, it is met by the case of Bowen v. R. Co., supra.

The balance of the exceptions relate to weight of testimony. This being a law case, we cannot pass upon them.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

(70 S. C. 102)

LASSITER et al. v. OKEETEE CLUB et al.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 10, 1904.)

NONSUIT—EJECTMENT—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—PLEADING.

1. Where, in an action to recover land, there was evidence of possession by plaintiffs and their grantors under color of title for more than 20 years, it was not error to refuse a nonsuit.

2. In an action to recover possession of land, it is not prejudicial to defendant to instruct that any verdict would not affect the rights of persons not parties.

3. In an action to recover land, a complaint alleging that defendant had from time to time, while in possession, cut and sold from it large numbers of trees, and appropriated the proceeds to its own use, and demanding damages, sufficiently pleads damages for withholding possession.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Beaufort County.

Action by J. R. Lassiter and others against the Okeetee Club and J. B. Bostick. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. N. Heyward and A. McIver Bostick, for appellants. B. A. Hagood and W. A. Holman, for respondents.

POPE, C. J. This action was begun on — day of October, 1901. Its object was the recovery by the plaintiffs of the defendant Okeetee Club the 1,500 acres of land described in the complaint as the tract of land known as the "New River Rice Plantation" or the "Guerard Plantation." The defendant J. B. Bostick, it was alleged, was the agent of the Okeetee Club in charge of that plantation. The complaint described the land as being embraced in a plat thereof made by John Norton, deputy surveyor, bearing date the 30th of April, 1837, and lying in Beaufort county, in this state.

The action came on for trial before Judge Aldrich and a jury. After the testimony offered by plaintiffs was closed, the defendants moved for a nonsuit. The circuit judge held that there was some testimony, and refused the nonsuit. The defendants excepted, and then offered their testimony. The verdict of the jury was for the plaintiffs for the land sued for and $250 damages. After entry of judgment the defendants appealed on the following grounds:

"(1) That the presiding judge erred in refusing the motion for a nonsuit, and in holding and deciding that color of title in plaintiffs was supported by some testimony as to possession, whereas he should have held that plaintiffs had failed to show chain of title back to the state, or for twenty years, to presume a grant, and that there was no evidence of possession sufficient to presume title or any right of possession in plaintiffs from any source whatsoever, but, on the contrary, that the evidence negatived the possession of the disputed lands by plaintiffs, by showing affirmatively that defendants were in possession of the disputed lands held by them for more than twenty years, sufficient to presume title in them.

"(2) That his honor also erred in not granting the nonsuit on the further ground that the evidence failed to show any limits or definite location as to the portions of disputed lands held by defendants; it clearly appearing from plaintiffs' testimony that considerable portions of the disputed lands were in possession of others, not parties to the action, and were not possessed or claimed by the defendants.

"(3) That his honor erred in charging the jury that others, not parties defendant in this action, would not be prejudiced by any verdict in this action, thus implying that a verdict might be found against the defendants for lands not in their possession nor claimed by them, which instruction tended to mislead the jury to the prejudice of defendants.

"(4) That his honor erred in admitting testimony as to damage from cutting timber; there being no allegation as to any amount of damage in plaintiffs' complaint, and therefore no cause of action stated for such damage.

"(5) That his honor erred in submitting to the jury the matter of damage for cutting, selling, and appropriating proceeds of timber, in the absence not only of such issue raised by the pleadings, but also of any evidence upon which a verdict for damages could be based.

"(6) That his honor erred in submitting to the jury the question of damage for detention of lands, and in charging them that, should they find that plaintiffs were entitled to recover the lands described in the complaint, or any part thereof, they might also find damages for the detention of said lands, such as annual rentals, use, etc., in the total absence of any such issue in the pleadings, and of any evidence whatsoever to support such a verdict.

"(7) That the verdict of the jury and the judgment thereon was erroneous and unsupported by testimony, in that the contradicted testimony of both plaintiffs and defendants showed that a very considerable portion of the lands recovered in said judgment was never in possession of defendants, nor claimed by them, and, further, in that there was nothing either in the pleadings or the evidence to support a judgment for damages of any kind from any source whatsoever."

We will first pass upon the first and second grounds of appeal, relating as they do to motion for nonsuit. The language of counsel in making their motion for nonsuit was as follows: "Mr. Bostick: We ask for a nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiffs have not made out title, and have not shown any facts from which title can be presumed. Further, they have not defined our possession, and that is material. They have to show that we are in possession of and withholding their land." After argument, the judge held as follows: "The Court: The question is whether the color of title is supported by any testimony as to possession, and I think it is. I will have to overrule the motion." It must always be kept in mind that in a law case, as contradistinguished from a case in chancery, the Supreme Court is not allowed to pass upon disputed questions of fact. We cannot for a moment entertain a discussion of the weight of testimony. All this court is allowed to do on questions of nonsuit is to search the record to see if any material testimony exists. Now, in the case at bar it appears in the testimony that one John Bell Guerard held in his possession this tract of land in controversy (the whole of said Guerard's New River rice plantation contained 600 or more acres of land), and that one John Norton, deputy surveyor, made a plat of these lands in the year 1837, and that this identical plat of this land was in the possession of John Bell Guerard in 1837, and that of his son, George Henry Guerard, in 1855, in which year he died intestate, survived by his widow, Mrs. Guerard, and his five children, Sophie Guerard, Alice Guerard, William C. Guerard, George Henry Guerard, and Mrs. Louisa C. Heyward. Of these, the widow, Mrs. Guerard, died intestate in 1858, and the daughter, Sophie Guerard, during the war between the states (1861-65), unmarried, intestate, so that in the year 1865 the surviving children held title to this land. In 1881 these lands were purchased by H. M. Comer & Co.; they receiving deed from all the surviving children of George Henry Guerard, who died in the year 1855, and also receiving the plat made by John Norton, deputy surveyor, in 1837. Henry M. Comer & Co. held the land until 1899, when they conveyed the same by deed to the plaintiffs, and turned over to the plaintiffs their deeds and the plat of this "New River Rice Plantation" or "Guerard Plantation," made by John Norton, as deputy surveyor, in the year 1837. All the records of Beaufort county were destroyed by the Union forces prior to 16th February, 1865. It was also testified that the defendants ousted the agent and servants of plaintiffs from some of the land in dispute. It was also testified that the defendants cut some six or seven pine trees on the lands of plaintiffs. Such being the testimony, although the defendants offered testimony to disprove the same, the circuit judge did not err when he refused to grant the nonsuit, because the Guerards held this land from 1855 to 1881—26 years—and they were the grantors to H. M. Comer & Co., and H. M. Comer & Co., after holding the lands from 1881 to the year 1899, a period of 18 years, conveyed by deed to the plaintiffs, who now hold, as alleged owners, said lands, all covered by the plat made by John Norton, deputy surveyor, in 1837. We must therefore overrule both of these grounds of appeal.

3. We will now consider the third ground of appeal, relating as it does to the charge. We do not think the charge of the circuit judge is justly liable to any criticism, as here contended. It is always the duty of a trial judge to keep the minds of the jury free from any possible bias arising from the absence of parties whose rights it was barely possible the jury might feel were endangered while not parties to the action. This was what the circuit judge tried to guard against, and we do not see how the defendants were injured thereby. This ground of appeal is dismissed.

4 and 5. It seems that the plaintiffs, in their complaint, alleged as follows: "Fifth. That the defendant the Okeetee Club had from time to time since the 21st day of November, 1899, and while in possession of said land, cut and sold from same large numbers of trees, and appropriated the proceeds from the sale thereof to their own use and benefit. Wherefore, the plaintiffs demand judgment against the defendants (1) for the possession of said premises; (2) for $1,500, the plaintiffs' damages by withholding of the same, together with the costs." In the body of their complaint, the plaintiffs have alleged that the defendant cut and sold from same a number of large trees, and appropriated the proceeds from the sale thereof to their own use and profit. In the case of Balle v. Moseley, 13 S. C. 439, this court has held that the omission of a prayer for relief in the complaint does not make it demurrable. In the case just cited it is held that "demand for relief is not part of the cause of action. Pom. on Rem. § 580." If such be the law, then objection cannot be sustained as here made. These exceptions are overruled.

6. The complaint sets out the wrongs which the plaintiffs demand should be redressed by the defendants. Testimony was received on the issues set out in the complaint. The circuit judge stated the law controlling the same. No reversible error is involved. This ground of appeal is overruled.

7. The objections here presented relate to the sufficiency of the testimony. In a law case we are powerless to consider them. This ground of appeal is overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

JONES and WOODS, JJ., concur in the result.

(70 S. C. 160)

FARMERS' & MECHANICS' MERCANTILE & MFG. CO. v. SMITH.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 17, 1904.)

JUDGMENT—VACATING — PLEADING—VERIFICATION.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 195, authorizing a circuit judge to vacate a judgment when defendant shows an excusable neglect for failure to answer, there is no error of law in an order setting aside a judgment by default, where, before default, a second summons and complaint were served personally, and defendant's family was so sick at the time the answer should have been served that defendant was unable to leave home to consult his attorney.

2. Where a complaint is not sworn to on a proceeding to set aside a judgment on default under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 195, it is unnecessary that defendant swear to the proposed answer.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lexington County.

Action by the Farmers' & Mechanics' Mercantile & Manufacturing Company against S. R. Smith. From order granting defendant leave to file answer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McFaddin & Jennings, for appellant. W. H. Sharpe and G. T. Graham, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. This appeal involves the right of a circuit judge to vacate a judgment when the defendant shows an excusable neglect for failure to answer, under section 195 of our Code of Civil Procedure of 1902. The record here discloses, among others, the following facts: The summons and complaint were served by the sheriff of Lexington county, in this state, on the 1st day of October, 1902. The defendant called to see plaintiff's attorneys on the 20th day of October, 1902, on which day the plaintiff's attorneys caused the defendant to be served with another summons and complaint while in their office. After such service the de-defendant showed a copy of the summons and complaint served upon him on 1st October, 1902. The defendant on that day received notice that his son was quite ill in Lexington county, in this state, and he went at once to his son's bedside. This son was very ill, and during his son's illness two other members of defendant's family were ill from typhoid fever. The defendant in this way failed to reach his attorney, W. H. Sharpe, Esq. This attorney afterwards sought the right to answer, which was declined by plaintiff's attorneys. On the 24th day of February, 1903, judgment by default was taken before Judge Klugh. On the 20th April, 1903, notice was given by W. H. Sharpe, Esq., as defendant's attorney, to set aside default judgment. On the 8th day of June, 1903, this motion was made upon affidavits tending to show the illness in defendant's family before the time to answer had expired; that defendant was one of the best citizens of Lexington county; that defendant's attorney was in attendance upon the session of the Legislature as State Senator from about 9th January, 1903, till its close, some time in the latter part of February, 1903; that the family physician knew that defendant's wife and their two children had typhoid fever, and were quite ill; therefore that defendant's attorney, by letter written on November 15, 1902, asked leave to answer, which was declined; that there was a correspondence between the parties litigant, or rather the attorneys for plaintiff and defendant; that some conversations were had, during which the genuineness of the note was in question. After a hearing, Judge Townsend passed the following order, omitting titles, as follows:

¶ 2. See Pleading, vol. 29, Cent. Dig. § 861.

"This is a motion to set aside a judgment taken by default against the defendant in the above-entitled action on the ground of excusable neglect. The main facts are as follows, as near as I can recollect, which was admitted at hearing, and which I get from the papers used at the hearing: The defendant, S. R. Smith, was served with the summons, and probably the complaint, on the 2d day of October, 1902. There was some sickness in the family, and he had not answered on the 20th of October. On the last-mentioned day—that is, 20th October—there being then two days more before the expiration of the time to answer, the defendant passed through Columbia on his way to Newberry, and was in the office of plaintiff's counsel. On the 20th October, three days after the expiration of the time to answer (which was on the 22d October), the defendant passed back through Columbia on his way home from Newberry. Whilst in Columbia plaintiff's counsel talked with him, and served him with another copy of the summons, as of the same date as the first copy, and the defendant said that he would see the plaintiff company about the case before he left the city. But before he did see the company, or had an opportunity to see it or its representative, he received a message from his home that his son was very sick, and he hastened home at once, and failed to see the plaintiff. Up to this point I do not think that defendant's neglect was excusable, because he was in Columbia, as already stated, on the 20th October, two days before the expiration of the time for answering. Why he did not answer at that time does not appear. The service of another copy of the summons on him, however, on the 25th October, and the unexpected sickness in his family, already mentioned, and the letter of plaintiff's counsel to defendant, dated 27th October, in which they told him that 'we [they] would hold the papers ten days from that date,' was calculated to confuse the defendant. For, in the first place, this fresh copy of the summons, which was served on the defendant on the 20th October, no doubt contained the provision that he must answer the complaint twenty days from its service, and two days afterwards, to wit, on 27th October, the plaintiff's counsel wrote him that they would hold the papers ten days from that date. These two papers, viz., the new copy of the summons and the said letter, were well calculated to convey to the defendant the idea that he had another ten days or twenty days to answer. Then, when we consider the severe illness of his family, as shown by the affidavits, which rendered it next to impossible for him to leave them during other ten or twenty days, I think the default of the defendant was reasonable and natural, and that his neglect to answer was excusable. The service of the second summons was well calculated to convey the idea that the failure to answer the first summons had been condoned. The letter of 27th October was calculated to convince the defendant that he had at least ten days to answer. It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said judgment by default obtained in this action against the defendant, S. R. Smith, be, and is hereby, set aside and vacated, and that the defendant have twenty days from the filing of this order to answer the complaint herein, if he be so advised."

The plaintiff now appeals from this order. Its first ground of appeal is as follows: "(1) Because his honor erred in holding, 'The new copy of the summons and the said letter were well calculated to convey to the defendant the idea that he had other ten days or twenty days to answer,' when, it is respectfully submitted, plaintiff's attorneys did not know at the time of such second service that defendant had ever been served with the summons and complaint in said case, and told defendant they would not rely upon the second service after they ascertained that service had already been made, and when the express language of the letter of plaintiff's attorneys to defendant of date October 27, 1902, was advice that he had made default in answering the complaint."

Before proceeding to discuss the exceptions, we would say that an inspection of the case shows that the circuit judge has confused his dates, as shown by his decretal order. The summons and complaint were served on the 1st day of October, 1902, and not on the 2d day of said month. The 20th day of October, 1902, when the defendant went to plaintiff's attorney's office, was two days before the time to answer, and not three days after such expiration of time to answer. The service of second summons and complaint was on the 20th day of October, 1902. These are clerical errors, and would make the decretal order inconsistent if not corrected.

Now let us examine the first exception. We do not think the circuit judge was in error in holding that the service of a second summons and complaint, together with the plaintiff's attorney's letter of date 27th October, 1902, in which letter such attorney spoke of holding up the papers for 10 days after the latter date, were calculated to confuse the mind of the defendant, who is a layman. Hence we will have to decide against this exception.

We will next notice the second exception, which is as follows: "(2) Because his honor erred in holding, 'I think the default of the defendant was reasonable and natural, and that his neglect to answer was excusable,' when, it is respectfully submitted, the defendant had made default by failing to answer on or before the 22d day of October, 1902, and when his honor had distinctly held that 'up to this point [referring to the 25th day of October, 1902] I do not think defendant's neglect was excusable'; the assignment of error being that his honor had no right to grant such order on the ground of excusable neglect occurring after the expiration of the twenty days allowed for service of the defendant's answer." We have already shown that Judge Townsend up to this point did not hold that on the 25th October, 1902, defendant's neglect was excusable, but only up to the 20th October, 1902. Hence the point of defendant here made is untenable. This exception is overruled.

We will now pass upon the third exception, which is: "(3) Because his honor erred in holding, 'The service of the second summons was well calculated to convey the idea that the failure to answer the first summons had been condoned, and the letter of 27th October was calculated to convince the defendant that he had at least ten days to answer,' when, it is respectfully submitted, plaintiff's attorneys did not know at the time of such service that the defendant had ever been served, and afterwards told defendant they would not rely upon the second service after they had ascertained that service had already been made; and it is respectfully submitted plaintiff's attorneys could not condone the failure to answer the first summons when they did not know that the same had been served." We have before held that Judge Townsend made no mistake. The second summons and complaint were calculated to affect a layman's (such was defendant) mind. This exception is therefore overruled.

We will next consider the fourth exception, which is as follows: "(4) Because his honor erred in refusing to dismiss defendant's motion upon the ground that the showing made by defendant as to his having a valid defense to plaintiff's cause of action was insufficient, in that (a) his proposed answer was not verified; (b) nor was there in the affidavit of defendant, nor in that of anybody else in the showing made, a verified statement by him that the matters and things stated in defendant's proposed answer were true; (c) nor was there any statement under oath as to what defendant's proposed defense was." The plaintiff's complaint was not verified; hence the defendant did not verify his answer. But he submitted his affidavit that his defense was meritorious. The circuit judge no doubt considered this matter. There is evidence in the "case" that this particular point of objection was brought to the attention of the circuit judge, but still nothing in section 195 requires the proposed answer to be sworn to. This exception is overruled.

We will now dispose of the fifth exception: "(5) Because his honor erred in holding the defendant's neglect was excusable, and in setting aside the judgment in this cause and granting leave to defendant to answer plaintiff's complaint." Section 195 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902 provides: "The court * * * may in its discretion, and upon such terms as may be just, at any time within one year after notice thereof, relieve a party from a judgment, order or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect." These matters are by law submitted to the discretion of the circuit judge. Of course, any mistake in law by the circuit judge may be corrected by this court on appeal, but we find no error of law involved in this appeal. This exception is overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of his honor Judge Townsend herein is affirmed.

(70 S. C. 145)

RAMSEUR v. WHELCHER.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 13, 1904.)

ACTION—WHO MAY BRING.

1. Each holder of a claim is its owner, and must take care of his own rights, and another party cannot sue thereon without purchase or assignment.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Cherokee County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by D. S. Ramseur against J. V. Wheelchel in magistrate court. From order of circuit court affirming magistrate's judgment, defendant appeals. Modified.

Butler & Osborne, for appellant. N. W. Hardin, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. The plaintiff brought his action in the magistrate's court of Cherokee county, in this state, to recover $91.15 and costs. The claim embraced the following items: "(1) For $50 for surgical operation by D. S. Ramseur on Alexander Craig (col.), amputation of both legs and attention to head. (2) For $25 favor Dr. J. T. Darwin for assisting in above operation. (3) For medicine furnished for Alexander Craig by Cole and Turner, $2.15. (4) For lodging for said Craig furnished by Grace Jolly, $8. (5) For burial expenses of said Craig favor Henry Cherry, $50. (6) For nursing said Craig one night by Dave Alexander, $1." The testimony showed that each claimant had sued for himself before the county commissioners, and each lost, as claims against Cherokee county. Therefore plaintiff sued without having paid or having the claims assigned to him. The magistrate rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff. An appeal was taken by defendant, which came on to be heard by Judge Townsend, who overruled all grounds of appeal and affirmed the magistrate's judgment. The defendant now appeals to this court on the following grounds, to wit: "It is respectfully submitted that his honor the presiding judge erred in the following particulars: (1) In not sustaining defendant's first ground of appeal, as follows: 'Because the magistrate erred in not sustaining the defendant's motion for a nonsuit, it appearing from plaintiff's evidence that there was no liability upon defendant's individuality in this action, and the contract, if any, was with him as an official, and the magistrate should have so held.' It being respectfully submitted that the magistrate erred in said ruling, and the circuit judge should have sustained said ground of appeal. (2) Error in not sustaining defendant's second ground of appeal, as follows: 'Second. Because said magistrate erred in holding, against the preponderance of the testimony, that the defendant was indebted to plaintiff in any amount whatever; it being respectfully submitted that plaintiff's testimony showed that plaintiff's contract, if any, was with the defendant as an official, and not as an individual, and therefore defendant was not liable to plaintiff in any amount,'—and his honor erred in not so holding. (3) Error in finding and rendering judgment for the plaintiff for the full amount sued for, when it appeared, according to plaintiff's own testimony, that all of said claim, except the sum of $50, belonged to other parties and not to plaintiff."

1, 2. We are satisfied from the testimony submitted that the circuit judge committed no error as by these grounds complained of, and they are therefore overruled.

3. We are satisfied that the circuit judge was in error in giving plaintiff judgment against the defendant for any claims except his own. Each holder of a claim is its owner, and must take care of his own rights, if any. The plaintiff is not their guardian.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial granted, unless the plaintiff shall remit all but $50 on the judgment in 10 days after the remittitur reaches the circuit court; and, if the remittitur is so entered, then the judgment for $50 is affirmed.

(70 S. C. 137)

BRYANT v. CITY COUNCIL OF ORANGEBURG et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 12, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—INJURIES TO PEDESTRIAN—BICYCLE ON SIDEWALK.

1. The city of Orangeburg is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian by being run over by a bicycle ridden rapidly along the sidewalk, under a charter providing that for willful violation and neglect of duty the mayor and aldermen shall be liable criminally, besides being liable for damages.

2. Civ. Code 1902, § 2023, providing that any person injured through defects in any streets, or by defects of anything under control of a city, may recover in an action therefor, a city is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian on a sidewalk by being run over by a bicycle, though there was no ordinance prohibiting the use of sidewalks by bicycle riders.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Orangeburg County; Aldrich, Judge.

Action by Marguerite Bryant, by her guardian ad litem, against the city council of Orangeburg and the city of Orangeburg. Demurrer sustained and complaint dismissed, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the circuit decree:

"The plaintiff is a little girl seven years old, and resides with her father on Russell street, in the city of Orangeburg, S. C. On November 4, 1902, she was a pupil in the graded school of said city, and while returning from said school to the home of her parents, walking on the eastern side of the sidewalk on Railroad street or avenue, one John Siders, who was riding a bicycle at a high rate of speed longitudinally upon and along said sidewalk, ran against, struck, knocked upon the ground, and severely injured the plaintiff. Her right leg was broken above the ankle, and she received other severe bodily injuries, in consequence of which she was made sick and caused to suffer great bodily pain, and has since remained lame and disabled. The plaintiff, by her guardian ad litem, instituted this action against the defendants, whereof she seeks to recover of the defendants, as damage for the injuries sustained by her as above stated, $5,000.

"There are two causes of action alleged in the complaint, each for $5,000. The first is based upon the negligence, and the second upon the willful negligence, of the defendants. Each cause of action alleges, in substance, that the sidewalks are under the management and control of defendants; that it is the duty of defendants to keep the same in good order, free from obstructions and dangers, and in a safe and secure condition at all times for the use and benefit of the travelling public; that the defendants, not regarding their duty in the premises, and of their neglect of duty, mismanagement, carelessness, and negligence, did permit persons to use the sidewalks as a bicycle track, and to ride bicycles on and upon all portions of said sidewalks, regardless of the rights, security, and convenience of pedestrians who are accustomed or compelled to use said sidewalks, and who have a lawful right so to do. Both of the causes of action are stated in apt and correct language, and the only questions before the court are raised by the demurrer of the defendants. The complaint should be read as a part of this decree.

"The defendants demur to the first cause of action upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action: '(1) Because, under the laws and statutes of South Carolina, municipal corporations are not liable for damages under circumstances such as are set forth in the said first cause of action. (2) Because there are no statutes improvising a liability for damages upon municipal corporations under the facts set forth in said alleged first cause of action of the plaintiff's complaint, and, in the absence of an enabling statute, the defendants, being a municipal corporation, are not liable. (3) Because it is not alleged that plaintiff's injury was caused by reason of a defect in any of the streets, causeways, or bridges of the defendants, and that such defect was occasioned by the neglect or mismanagement of the defendant, or by reason of defect or mismanagement of anything under the control of the defendant corporation in making repairs of its streets.' Defendants demur to the second cause of action upon the ground just stated, and I need not repeat the same. Defendants further demur to both causes of action upon the ground that the facts and circumstances set forth in both of said causes are the same, and that the plaintiff had improperly united the said alleged two causes of action in the same complaint, and also upon the ground that it does not appear that the defendants are responsible in damages, because there is no legislative enactment making municipal corporations generally, or the defendants in particular, liable under such facts as are stated in either or both of the said causes of action in plaintiff's complaint, and, in the absence of such legislative enactment, the defendant, being a municipal corporation, is not liable.

"I think that it is well settled law in this state that a municipal corporation is not liable to an action for damages predicated upon the nonfeasance or misfeasance of the officers in regard to their public duties, unless expressly made liable by statute. In the well-considered case of Gibbes v. Town Council of Beaufort, 20 S. C. 218, it is held: 'We regard it settled in this state that a municipal corporation instituted for the purpose of assisting the state in the conduct of local civil government is not liable to be sued in an action of tort for nonfeasance or misfeasance of its officers in regard to their public duties, unless expressly made so liable by statute.' White v. City Council of Charleston, 2 Hill, 572; Coleman v. Chester, 14 S. C. 290; Black v. City of Columbia, 19 S. C. 412, 45 Am. Rep. 785; Young v. City Council of Charleston, 20 S. C. 116, 47 Am. Rep. 827; Dunn v. Barnwell, 43 S. C. 398, 21 S. E. 315, 49 Am. St. Rep. 843; Bramlett v. City of Laurens, 58 S. C. 60, 36 S. E. 444.

"The learned counsel for plaintiff contends that the city of Orangeburg is liable in the case at bar under the provision of the twenty-fifth section of its charter, and also under section 2023 of the Civil Code of 1902. The charter of the city of Orangeburg is an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the city of Orangeburg' (18 St. at Large, p. 525); and the twenty-fifth section of said act, upon which the plaintiff relies, is found on page 530 of said volume, and reads: 'That for the willful violation or neglect of duty, malfeasance, abuse or oppression, the said mayor and aldermen, jointly and severally, shall be liable to indictment in the court of general sessions, and upon conviction shall be fined in a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, or being imprisoned not exceeding twelve months, besides being liable for damages to any person injured.' There is no doubt but that this section makes the mayor and aldermen liable for indictment for the willful violation or neglect of duty, malfeasance, abuse, or oppression, but the words 'besides being liable for damages to any person injured' neither refer to nor include the city of Orangeburg. This section makes the mayor and aldermen not only liable to a criminal prosecution for the offense therein stated, but also liable in damages, in a civil action, to any person injured by the willful violation or neglect of duty, malfeasance, abuse, or oppression of the said mayor and aldermen, jointly and severally. The charter of the town of Barnwell contains a section similar to the twenty-fifth section of the charter of Orangeburg. Mr. Chief Justice McIver, than whom a more learned, careful, or painstaking justice never adorned the courts of this state, wrote the opinion in Dunn v. Barnwell, 43 S. C. 398, 21 S. E. 315, 49 Am. St. Rep. 843. He had before him the charter of the town of Barnwell, and doubtlessly read said section, and the inference is that he did not give it the construction now urged by counsel of plaintiff.

"Again, section 1991 of volume 1, Code of Law of South Carolina of 1902, provides: 'For any wilful violation or neglect of duty, malpractice, abuse or oppression, the mayor or aldermen so offending shall be liable to punishment by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, besides being liable for damages to any person injured by such neglect, malpractice, abuse or oppression.' The section just cited was enacted in 1896, and appears as section 20 of 'An act to provide for the incorporation of towns of not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand inhabitants.' 22 St. at Large, p. 74. We find the same section appearing as section 21 of 'An act to provide for the incorporation of cities of more than five thousand inhabitants,' approved February 19, 1901 (23 St. at Large, p. 657). Section 1991 appears in article 4 of chapter 49 of the Civil Code of 1902, entitled 'Municipal Corporations.' The caption of article 4 is provisioned common to towns and cities containing over one thousand inhabitants. So that ever since 1896 we have had general laws practically the same as the twenty-fifth section of the charter of the city of Orangeburg, and yet we have a number of recent decisions which sustain and affirm the 'well-settled law,' as above stated. See Bramlett v. Laurens, 58 S. C. 63, 36 S. E. 444, decided in 1900, and Hutchison v. Summerville, 66 S. C. 442, 45 S. E. 8. I am of the opinion and conclude, as a matter of law, that said section 25 of the charter of Orangeburg does not authorize or sustain this action.

"The plaintiff also relies upon section 2023 of the Civil Code of South Carolina of 1902, which reads: 'Any person who shall receive bodily injury or damage in his person or property, through a defect in any street, causeway, bridge or public way, or by reason of defect or mismanagement of anything under control of the corporation within the limits of any town or city, may recover in an action against the same the amount of actual damages sustained by him by reason thereof. If any such defect in a street, causeway or bridge existed before such injury or damage occurred, such damage shall not be recovered by the person so injured, if his loss exceed the ordinary weight: provided, the said corporation shall not be liable unless such defect was occasioned by the neglect or mismanagement: provided, further, such person has not in any way brought about any such injury or damage by his or her own negligent act or negligently contributed thereto.' Said section 2023 is taken from the act of 1901, p. 657, where it appears as section 22 of 'An act to provide for the incorporation of cities of more than five thousand inhabitants.' 23 St. at Large, p. 648. It also appeared as section 1582 of the Revised Statutes of 1893, being the act approved in December, 1892, entitled 'An act providing for a right of action against a municipal corporation for damages sustained by reason of defects in the repair of streets, sidewalks and bridges within the limits of such municipal corporations.' 21 St. at Large, p. 91. I don't think that said section 2023 sustains the plaintiff's cause. In the very recent case of Hutchison v. Summerville, 66 S. C. 448, 45 S. E. 10, the court says, 'The statute received judicial construction in Dunn v. Barnwell, 43 S. C. 398, 21 S. E. 315, 49 Am. St. Rep. 843;' and in Barksdale v. City of Laurens, 58 S. C. 413, 36 S. E. 661. In the last-mentioned case the court says, 'The title of said act of 1892 is, "An act providing for a right of action against a municipal corporation for damages sustained by reason of defects in the repair of streets, sidewalks and bridges within the limits of such municipal corporation." This act was construed in the case of Dunn v. Barnwell, 43 S. C. 401, 21 S. E. 315, 49 Am. St. Rep. 843, wherein the court held, by the term "mismanagement," as used in the clause, "or by reason of defect or mismanagement of anything under control of the corporation," meant mismanagement in making repairs on the streets, so that the corporation should be held liable not only for neglect in making repairs on the streets, but also for mismanagement of anything under the control of the corporation in making such repairs.' The municipality is liable not only for its neglect in failing to make repairs on the streets, but likewise for its negligence in making such repairs. In other words, it is liable for its negligent nonaction as well as for its negligent action in making repairs. 'It would practically destroy the effect of the statute to sustain the proposition for which the appellant contends.' There are a number of cases which discuss the subject under consideration, but I will only refer to Acker v. Anderson, 20 S. C. 495; Brown v. Laurens County, 38 S. C. 282, 17 S. E. 21; Mason v. Spartanburg County, 40 S. C. 393, 19 S. E. 15, 42 Am. St. Rep. 887; Parks v. Greenville, 44 S. C. 172, 21 S. E. 540; and cases cited in the first part of this decree.

"I am of the opinion and conclude, as matter of law, that said section 2023 does not give to the plaintiff a right of action for damages under the facts alleged in the complaint. The question now before this court has been decided in several of the states. In the case of Jones v. City of Williamsburg, 34 S. E. 883, 97 Va. 722, it was held by the Supreme Court of Appeals that 'a city is not liable to a person for injuries resulting from being struck by a bicycle ridden on the sidewalk, or the failure to pass an ordinance prohibiting such use of the sidewalks.' This case is also reported in 47 L. R. A., at page 294. The Supreme Court of Georgia, in the case of Tarbutton v. Town of Tennille, 110 Ga. 90, 35 S. E. 282, held: "There is no obligation upon the authorities of a municipal corporation, towards any one of its citizens, to exercise the legislative discretion with which they are invested to enact ordinances prohibiting any specific act concerning the streets and sidewalks of the town. Such matters are left to their discretion, and a right of action does not accrue to one who was injured by a person riding a bicycle on the sidewalk because the authorities had failed to prohibit such riding." I think that the demurrer of defendants, as stated in the first, second, third, and last grounds of demurrer to both causes of action, as alleged in the complaint, is well taken, and should be sustained. Wherefore it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the demurrer of the defendants to both causes of action alleged in the complaint herein be, and hereby are, sustained, and that the said complaint be, and hereby is, dismissed, with costs."

James F. Izlar and Raysor & Summers, for appellant. Wm. L. Glaze, for respondents.

WOODS, J. All the questions made by this appeal have been fully discussed by the decree of the circuit court. We adopt that decree, for the reason that any further discussion could be only a repetition or elaboration of the views therein expressed.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(70 S. C. 108)

WELBORN v. DIXON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 10, 1904.)

PLEADING—MOTION TO ELECT—PAROL EVIDENCE—DEED—MORTGAGE—FAILURE TO RECONVEY—DAMAGES—EQUITY.

1. Where the allegations of a complaint are appropriate to more than one cause of action, the remedy is by motion to elect.

2. Parol evidence is admissible to make certain the description in an agreement to "deed back to J. said piece of land, containing twenty-seven acres."

3. That a deed was intended as a mortgage may be shown by parol.

4. On payment of a debt secured by a deed, the grantor is entitled to reconveyance.

5. Where land is conveyed to secure a debt, with an agreement for reconveyance, and on payment of the debt the grantee fraudulently refuses to reconvey, he may be made to respond in punitive as well as compensatory damages.

6. Plaintiff conveyed certain land to secure a debt under a contract with the grantee to reconvey on payment thereof. The grantee thereafter sold the land. Held that, on tender of debt and refusal to reconvey, the grantor may sue in equity for the proceeds, but cannot recover punitive damages.

Woods, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Anderson County; Aldrich, Judge.

Action by J. Welborn against J. W. Dixon. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The complaint contains two causes of action, the first of which is thus alleged:

"(1) That prior to the ——— day of March, 1902, plaintiff was the sole owner in fee simple of a tract of land in county and state aforesaid, containing twenty-seven acres, more or less, just outside the town of Pelzer, conveyed to him by Sarah M. Allen by deed of September 10, 1897, recorded in the office of R. M. C. for said state and county, in Book QQQ, at page twenty, which is here referred to for full description of said land.

"(2) That on March 15, 1902, the plaintiff, having borrowed money of defendant, and purposing to secure the payment of the debt, executed to him a deed to said land, and both together executed at the time of the execution of the said deed a written contract, a copy of which is as follows: 'State of South Carolina, County of Anderson. Articles of agreement entered into this 15th day of March, 1902, between J. W. Dixon and J. W. Welborn, witnesseth: That provided J. W. Welborn shall pay to J. W. Dixon on or before November 1st, 1902, the sum of three hundred and eighty-five dollars, the said J. W. Dixon agrees to deed back to J. W. Welborn said piece of land, containing 27 acres, more or less, and to pay him ten per cent. interest on said amounts, and all costs. [Signed] J. W. Dixon. [L. S.] J. W. Welborn. [L. S.] Witnesses: [Signed] A. G. Pinckney, L. B. Roberts.' Said deed was an ordinary fee-simple warranty title, like in all respects to the usual form of such titles.

"(3) That the amount of the plaintiff's debt to defendant, together with principal, interest, and all charges, never exceeded the sum of three hundred and eighty-five and $\frac{00}{100}$ dollars (\$385.00), and the purpose and understanding of the parties to the agreement was that the papers hereinabove referred to should constitute a mortgage upon said land to secure the payment of said debt.

"(4) That some months before November 1, 1902, defendant, in utter disregard of his contract to reconvey to plaintiff, in willful fraud of his said agreement, and in flagrant, deliberate, and wanton violation of plaintiff's rights in the premises, sold and transferred and conveyed said land to a third party; thus putting it out of his power to carry out his contract aforesaid.

"(5) That a few days prior to November 1, 1902, plaintiff, by his attorney, made defendant a legal tender of the sum of three hundred and eighty-five and $\frac{00}{100}$ dollars (\$385.00) to secure a reconveyance from him of said land, but defendant, as plaintiff is in formed and believes, refused said tender, stated that he had sold said land to Mr. J. W. Williams, and that he could not and would not reconvey it to plaintiff, and declared, as he had done repeatedly, that he would spend a thousand dollars on the matter rather than let defendant have anything out of it. And he has subsequently refused and still refuses to carry out said contract, in violation both of the spirit and letter thereof. All to plaintiff's damage two thousand dollars."

The second cause of action contains substantially the same allegations as the first, except the following, instead of paragraphs 4 and 5 of the first cause of action, to wit:

"(9) On information and belief, plaintiff says as follows: Some months prior to November 1, 1902, defendant, in willful fraud of the rights of plaintiff, and with the deliberate, wanton, and willful purpose of defrauding him, of violating the trust that arose under the facts of the case, and of fraudulently converting to his own use the whole proceeds of his sale of said land, in fraud of plaintiff's rights therein, did sell, transfer, and convey said land to Mr. J. W. Williams for the sum of six hundred dollars, in cash and chattels, and did collect and appropriate to his own use all of said cash and chattels, refusing to account to plaintiff for any part thereof, and declaring that he would spend one thousand dollars in this matter before defendant should have one cent. Plaintiff was prepared before November 1, 1902, to pay to defendant the said sum of three hundred and eighty-five dollars ($385), and a few days before that time he got the money, and made, through his attorney, a lawful tender of the full amount due defendant, but he refused, has since refused, and still refuses to accept the same and account to plaintiff for the proceeds of his unauthorized dealing with said land, or any part thereof, all to plaintiff's damage two thousand dollars. Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against the defendant for two thousand dollars and the costs of this action."

The grounds of demurrer to the first cause of action are as follows:

"(1) Because the contract set out in paragraph 11, the refusal of performance of which is made the basis for the first cause of action, is void under the statute of frauds, in that it appears on the face thereof that said agreement for the sale of the land is too indefinite, in that the agreement set out does not so describe the property as to be identified by the court, and it is submitted that an action for damages does not arise from the breach of a void agreement.

"(2) Because it appears upon the face of said complaint that said cause of action alleged therein is not founded upon a tort, where some right of person or property is invaded maliciously, violently, wantonly, or with reckless disregard of social or civil obligations; that whatever rights plaintiff has in the premises arise solely ex contractu, by a breach, rescission, or refusal of defendant to perform the alleged executory civil agreement for the sale of land, and no facts are alleged and no damages are shown, as arising from the natural results of a breach of said agreement, and defendant submits that an action for exemplary damages does not lie for the breach of an executory agreement for the sale of land.

"(3) Because it appears upon the face of the complaint that the defendant has rescinded or refused to perform the alleged agreement for the sale of land set out in paragraph 11 of said complaint; and since such refusal or rescission is not a tort, in law, sounding in punitive damages, and no facts appearing in the complaint that plaintiff has been damaged from the natural results of the alleged refusal to perform said agreement, it is submitted that plaintiff cannot maintain said cause of action."

The grounds of demurrer to the second cause of action are substantially the same as the foregoing.

Tribble & Prince and Quattlebaum & Cotleran, for appellant. B. F. Martin and G. B. Green, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. (after stating the foregoing facts). We do not deem it necessary to consider the assignments of error in detail, but will state the principles that will dispose of all the exceptions.

We will first consider whether there was error in overruling the demurrer to the first cause of action. A complaint is not subject to demurrer if its allegations show that the plaintiff is entitled to any relief whatever, even though it may be different from that to which the plaintiff supposes he is entitled. Ladson v. Mostowitz, 45 S. C. 388, 23 S. E. 49; Strong v. Wier, 47 S. C. 307, 25 S. E. 157; Conner v. Ashley, 49 S. C. 478, 27 S. E. 473. When the allegations of the complaint are appropriate to more than one cause of action, the remedy is not by demurrer, if any of the allegations are sufficient to constitute a cause of action, but is thus stated in Cartin v. Ry. Co., 43 S. C. 221, 20 S. E. 979, 49 Am. St. Rep. 829: "If two causes of action were set forth in the complaint without being separately stated, the defendant, it is true, had the right to make a motion that the complaint be made more definite and certain, or, if allegations were made which were unnecessary to sustain the cause of action stated in the complaint, to make a motion to strike out such allegations as irrelevant and as surplusage. Pom. R. & R. R. §§ 447, 451. If the defendant waived said objections by failing to make such motions, then the plaintiff had the right to the relief to which all the allegations showed he was entitled. The plaintiff, where the allegations of the complaint are appropriate to either of the two causes of action, may be required, upon motion of the defendant, to make his election as to the cause of action upon which he will proceed to trial." Citing Westlake v. Farrow, 34 S. C. 270, 13 S. E. 469; Hammond v. R. R., 15 S. C. 10; and Hellams v. Switzer, 24 S. C. 39. Under such circumstances, this court will not undertake to say what particular cause of action the plaintiff has attempted to set forth, and to which he should be confined in determining the sufficiency of the complaint. This would be an election of remedy by the court instead of the plaintiff. The case of Cartin v. R. R., supra, has been affirmed in a number of subsequent cases, the most recent of which is Marion v. Charleston, 68 S. C. 257, 47 S. E. 140.

The words in the agreement, "deed back," show that it had reference to the land which had been conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant; and, as the description of the land could be made certain by referring to that conveyance, the agreement was not subject to the objection set forth in the ground of demurrer numbered 1. That must be regarded as certain which can be made certain.

We do not, however, regard this question of vital importance, for, even if said agreement was too indefinite, the complaint would not be demurrable on that ground, as the land which the complaint alleges was conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant by way of mortgage to secure the payment of a loan is particularly described in the first paragraph of the complaint. Even if there was no written agreement for a reconveyance, the plaintiff would be entitled to a reconveyance upon showing that the deed was intended as a mortgage, and that he had complied with his part of the contract. These facts could be shown by parol testimony. Brownlee v. Martin, 21 S. C. 392.

We will next consider the nature of the complaint. There are allegations of the complaint that the defendant committed a breach of the contract. The appellant, however, contends that this is not sufficient to constitute a cause of action, by reason of the fact that the complaint does not allege damages arising from the breach of the contract. We do not take appellant's view of the fact that the complaint doesn't allege damages arising ex contractu. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff sustained damages to the amount of $2,000. This allegation has reference to all the wrongful acts of the defendant set forth in the complaint, including the alleged breach of contract. Furthermore it is at least questionable whether it was necessary to allege specifically such damages as were the direct and natural result of the alleged wrongful act, when they are claimed in the demand for relief. Levi v. Legg, 23 S. C. 282; Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. C. 488, 25 S. E. 797. In an ordinary action for damages arising ex contractu, the plaintiff only entitled to recover such as are the direct, natural, and proximate result of the breach of the contract. Sitton v. MacDonald, 25 S. C. 68, 60 Am. Rep. 484. The allegations of the complaint that the plaintiff and the defendant entered into the contract therein set forth, and that the defendant committed a breach thereof, from which the plaintiff suffered damage, were in themselves sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

There are allegations also not only appropriate to an ordinary action for damages arising ex contractu, but showing that the breach of contract was accompanied by a fraudulent act. In the case of Lee v. Lee, 11 Rich. Eq. 574, the court quotes with approval the following language from Russell v. Southard, 12 How. 139, 13 L. Ed. 927: "To insist on what was really a mortgage as a sale is, in equity, a fraud, which cannot be successfully practiced under the shelter of any written papers, however precise and complete they may appear to be." Under the allegations of the complaint, it was a fraudulent act on the part of the defendant when he intentionally disposed of the land as the owner thereof, knowing that it was conveyed to him by way of mortgage, and that it belonged to the plaintiff, but, of course, subject to the mortgage.

The question, then, is presented whether, in an action arising out of a breach of contract, attended with a fraudulent act, the defendant is liable for exemplary damages. There is no doubt as to the general principle that in an action for breach of contract the motives of the wrongdoer are not to be considered in estimating the amount of damages, and that he is only liable for such damages as are the natural and proximate result of the wrongful act. When, however, the breach of the contract is accompanied with a fraudulent act, the rule is well settled, certainly in this state, that the defendant may be made to respond in punitive as well as compensatory damages. In a note on page 214 of Sedgwick on Damages (3d Ed.), the author recognizes that punitive damages are recoverable in this state. He says: "In South Carolina the question has been discussed at large, and the ground distinctly taken that, even in cases of assumpsit, damages will be given on the ground of fraud." He then comments on the case of Rose & Rodgers v. Beatie, 2 Nott & McC. 538. Commenting on the text, which states a different rule from that prevailing in this state, that author, in a note on page 217, says: "I am far from desiring to express any opinion in favor of the doctrine of the text. On the contrary, if the plaintiff in an Anglo-Saxon court of justice shall ever be permitted to state his complaint according to the actual facts, and not be compelled to use an unmeaning formula, I can see no reason, greatly as legal relief would be thus extended, why exemplary damages should not be given for a fraudulent or malicious breach of contract, as well as for any other willful wrong.

Damages are given by the civil law in many cases of this kind. So they are in Louisiana, the jurisprudence of which state is very much fashioned on the great Roman original." Since the distinction in forms of action has been abolished, there is stronger reason for allowing exemplary damages in actions for breach of contract, attended with fraudulent act, than when the case of Rose & Rodgers v. Beatie, 2 Nott & McC. 538, was decided. In Rose & Rodgers v. Beatie, 2 Nott & McC. 538, an action of assumpsit was brought to recover damages upon the sale of cotton alleged to have been fraudulently and falsely packed by wetting the cotton in the center of the bales. It was sent to Liverpool and sold as sound cotton at the then current price. After the sale the fraud was discovered, and the cotton returned and resold as damaged, at a considerable loss. The defendants contended that, if liable at all, the plaintiffs could only recover the price paid at Charleston, with interest. The court said: "Assumpsit is nomen generalissimum, under which a great variety of special cases are embraced. It includes every case by simple contract, whether in the nature of a warranty, a promise to pay money, or an undertaking to do or perform any act, from whence a promise, either express or implied, can arise. The damages to be recovered must always depend upon the nature of the action and the circumstances of the case. The difference of opinion which seems to exist on the subject, I apprehend, has arisen from confounding the distinctions between the different forms of assumpsit. In an action for money had and received, the actual amount of money received (with interest in some cases) should be the measure of damages. In an action for goods or any specific chattel sold and delivered, the value of the thing sold; and so on in all other cases which furnish a standard by which the jury can be governed. But in cases of fraud, and other cases merely sounding in damages, the jury may give a verdict to the whole amount of the injury sustained or imaginary damages. * * * In Bacon it is said: 'If there are any circumstances of hardship, fraud, or deceit, the jury may consider of them, and proportion and mitigate the damages as they please.' 2 Bacon, tit 'Damages.' And Lord Mansfield says 'that fraud alone may be ground for an assumpsit where there is no express undertaking, as where a person sells property as sound, knowing it to be otherwise.' Stewart v. Wilkins, Doug. 18." After commenting on certain cases, the court uses this language: "I apprehend that, after all these cases, it can no longer be considered (as has been somewhat confidently asserted in this case), that (even) vindictive damages may not be given in an action of assumpsit, and surely it will not be denied that the plaintiff may recover the amount of the loss which he has actually sustained." See, also, Garrett v. Stuart, 1 McCord, 514.

In D'Orval v. Hunt, Dud. 180, it was held that for the breach of an executory contract, without fraud or imposition, the jury can only give such damages as fairly and naturally result from it, and which can be measured by a pecuniary standard; thus showing that the measure of damages is different when there is fraud.

The allegations of the complaint are also appropriate to an action of tort committed with a fraudulent and malicious intent. The following definition of a tort is set forth in 28 Enc. of Law, 72 (1st Ed.): "The word 'tort' means nearly the same thing as the expression 'civil wrong.' It denotes an injury inflicted otherwise than by mere breach of contract, or, to be more nicely accurate, a tort is one's disturbance of another in rights which the law has created, either in the absence of contract, or in consequence of a relation which a contract had established between the parties." Italics ours. The complaint alleged a tort when it stated that the defendant sold the land which he held as a security for the repayment of the loan in consequence of the relation which the contract had established between the parties. The further allegation that the tort was committed with a malicious and fraudulent purpose made the defendant liable for exemplary damages as well as actual damages. Chiles v. Ry., 69 S. C. 332, 48 S. E. 252.

The next question for consideration is whether the second cause of action set forth in the complaint was subject to demurrer. The only question that has not been disposed of in considering the first cause of action is whether the defendant became liable, under the allegations of the complaint, for the proceeds of the land. The allegations of the complaint show that the defendant occupied a fiduciary relation in regard to the land, and that the sale thereof was in violation of his trust. The plaintiff therefore had the right either to follow the land or the proceeds of the sale, just as in other cases when the trustee sells the trust estate in violation of the trust. In order, however, that the proceeds arising from the sale of the land may be declared to be impressed with a trust, it will be necessary to invoke the aid of the court in the exercise of its chancery powers, as the legal title to the land was in the defendant. In such case punitive damages cannot be awarded on the equity side of the court. Bird v. R. R., 8 Rich. Eq. 46, 64 Am. Dec. 739; Busby v. Mitchell, 29 S. C. 447, 7 S. E. 618.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

WOODS, J. (dissenting). By reference to the complaint it will be seen that the plaintiff sets up two separate causes of action. The defendant demurred to the complaint as to each cause of action separately, on the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The circuit court overruled the demurrer, and the defendant appeals.

In the first cause of action the plaintiff alleges his conveyance of a tract of land to defendant as security for a loan of $385; the written agreement of the defendant to reconvey on payment of the debt by November 1, 1902; the understanding that the two papers should constitute a mortgage; the defendant's conveyance of the land to another before November 1, 1902, in willful and fraudulent breach of his contract and violation of plaintiff's rights; tender of plaintiff's debt before maturity; defendant's refusal to reconvey, accompanied by a declaration that he would spend a thousand dollars rather than let plaintiff have anything out of the transaction. On these facts the plaintiff alleges and claims $2,000 damages. In his second cause of action the plaintiff sets out the same facts as in the first, and alleges in addition that the defendant, under the contract, became a trustee of the property; that his sale to another was for the consideration of $600, which he converted to his own use, refusing to account to the plaintiff for any part of it; and that this sale was made with the deliberate and willful purpose of defrauding the plaintiff, to his damage $2,000.

It will be observed the essential difference between the two causes of action is that in the second a breach of trust is alleged, and the amount realized for the land is mentioned, while in the first the fraudulent breach of contract to reconvey is set up, without mention of a trust, and without any intimation of the value of the land. Manifestly, therefore, the plaintiff, in stating his two causes of action, meant in the first to complain of the fraudulent breach of contract to reconvey the land, disregarding the breach of trust, and leaving that for the gravamen of his second cause of action. It is also clear that the first cause of action is intended to be for punitive as distinguished from compensatory damages, because no value is set on the land which the defendant had agreed to reconvey to the plaintiff, nor is it alleged to be of value greater than the debt for which it was pledged, and without such excess of value there could be no actual damage. The first cause of action should therefore be regarded, as the pleader clearly intended it, distinctly for punitive damages based on a fraudulent breach of contract. Even if there were doubt as to whether the plaintiff meant to sue for the tort or for breach of the contract, every intendment is in favor of regarding the action ex contractu. 4 Ency. P. & P. 915.

I consider first the question raised by the demurrer to the first cause of action—whether punitive damages are recoverable for a fraudulent breach of contract. This question was answered in the negative by this court in McClendon v. Wells, 20 S. C. 520, and the views there expressed are in accord with those of other courts and of text-writers. Wood's Mayne on Damages, §§ 45, 46; note to Spellman v. R. Co., 28 Am. St. Rep. 874; 12 A. & E. Ency. Law, 20; 3 Parsons on Contracts, 179; 2 Sutherland on Damages (3d Ed.) 390; 13 Cyc. 113; Hurxthal v. Boom Co. (W. Va.) 44 S. E. 520, 97 Am. St. Rep. 968. Citation of the numerous cases referred to in these authorities is omitted. The only generally recognized exception to the rule is an action for breach of a marriage contract.

In accordance with this view, where one who has contracted to convey land fraudulently refuses to convey, or by his own act fraudulently puts it out of his power to convey, the measure of damages is the value of the land at the time the contract should have been performed, less the contract price. Smith v. Bolles, 182 U. S. 125, 10 Sup. Ct. 39, 33 L. Ed. 279; Todd v. Gamble, 52 L. R. A. 242, note; Foley v. McKeegan, 66 Am. Dec. 107, and note. Though the precise question here under discussion was not involved, the difference in damages arising from tort and breach of contract is recognized in Devereux v. Champion Cotton Press Co., 17 S. C. 73, and Colvin v. Oil Co., 66 S. C. 66, 44 S. E. 380.

In Sedgwick on Damages the statement is made that South Carolina is out of line with other jurisdictions on this subject, and Rose v. Beatie, 2 Nott & McC. 538, is cited as establishing the doctrine in this state that punitive damages may be recovered for fraudulent breach of contract. In this the learned author has fallen into error. Rose v. Beatie was an action of assumpsit to recover damages upon a sale of water-packed cotton made by defendant to plaintiffs in Charleston. The plaintiffs shipped the cotton to Liverpool and sold it, and upon discovery of the fraud it was returned to their Liverpool correspondent, and resold at public auction as damaged cotton, at considerable loss. "The presiding judge instructed the jury that the defendant was liable, and that they might give a verdict for the whole amount of damage that the plaintiffs had sustained, which was the difference between the two sales in Liverpool, with interest." As to the damages, the sole question involved in the appeal was whether the defendant was liable for the price paid to him in Charleston, or for the difference between the two sales made in Liverpool. The court sustained the circuit judge in adopting the difference between the two sales in Liverpool as the only just and true measure of damages. The court says: "It cannot be seriously contended that the seller should merely refund the money which he had received, and leave the purchaser to pay the costs of transportation across the Atlantic and all the incidental expenses. The expenses of exportation and original purchase money ought not to be the rule, because a depression of price in the foreign market might reduce the actual loss, by reason of the fraud, below those expenses, and the seller ought not to be answerable for a loss to which he had not contributed. Upon the principle of reciprocity, as well as of good faith, the parties ought to be placed upon the same footing they would have been if there had been no deception, and that is the effect of this verdict." It will be borne in mind that when this case was decided practically all cotton was shipped out of the state, and the seller would be regarded as having in view the export cost of transportation and resale to be incurred by the buyer when he made the sale. The damages allowed were therefore well within the rule of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341. The court undertook to do nothing more than place the plaintiffs in the same financial condition they would have occupied if the fraud had not been committed. Punitive damages were not claimed or allowed, and the case, therefore, could not involve the question here under discussion. It is true, Judge Nott, in the course of his decree, does intimate an opinion that vindictive damages, or, as he curiously calls them in one place, "imaginary damages," may be allowed in an action of assumpsit; but no such question was involved in the case, or in Farrand v. Bouchell, Harp. 83, where the same judge again refers to the subject. These dicta are entitled to great consideration as the views of an eminent judge, but they are not binding, and should not be allowed to overthrow a doctrine so long established by the overwhelming weight of authority and reason.

In giving compensation for breaches of contract, the utmost that the law undertakes is to place the parties in the financial condition they would have been in if the breach had not occurred. It is true, fraud always merits punishment, but the courts regard it unwise and impracticable to attempt to punish a fraudulent breach of contract by requiring the defaulter to pay to the other party more than he has lost by the breach. The advantage of punishing the fraud would be more than counterbalanced by the disastrous uncertainty in the administration of the law of contracts which would surely result. If the plaintiff in this case is allowed to recover punitive damages for the defendant's willful and fraudulent failure and refusal to keep his promise to reconvey, then the defendant would have been entitled to punitive damages if the plaintiff had willfully and fraudulently refused to repay the money borrowed, and this would hardly be contended for. I think the demurrer to the first cause of action should be sustained.

As we have seen, the second cause of action stands on different ground. Here the gravamen is violation of the trust relation which grew out of the contract, in that the defendant sold the land conveyed to him as a security. The allegations here present an action for tort founded upon contract.

We now consider whether punitive damages may be recovered under this cause of action. "The damages in actions of tort founded upon contract must be estimated in the same way as they are estimated in breach of contract, for a man cannot, by merely changing the form of his action, put himself in a better position." Moak's Underhill on Torts, 102; Wood's Mayne on Damages, 70, note. This rule has no application to common carriers of passengers, and some others charged with public duties, but we are not now concerned with this exception.

Even in actions on the case for deceit, based on false representations as to existing facts inducing one to enter into a business contract to his prejudice, the measure of damages is usually the resulting pecuniary loss, when such loss can be readily ascertained. To allow more than this as vindictive damages, as said by the Supreme Court of Michigan, would be "to abandon a certain rule which would do complete justice for an uncertain one that can hardly fail to do injustice." Warren v. Cole, 15 Mich. 273. Parker v. Walker, 12 Rich. Law, 138, was an action for deceit; the deceit consisting in selling to plaintiff a tract of land, when the defendant knew he had no title to 56 acres of the 120 which he undertook to sell. The plaintiff, subsequent to the sale, and before the action was commenced, perfected his title to all but 10 acres by obtaining a grant from the state at a cost of $10. Under the instruction of the court, the jury found a verdict for the pro rata value of all the land to which defendant had no title. Judge O'Neill, delivering the opinion of the Court of Appeals, held that the allegation of deceit was sustained by the proof, and, in the absence of any other measure of plaintiff's loss, the pro rata value of the 56 acres to which defendant had no title would have been the true measure of damages; but, inasmuch as the plaintiff had perfected his title to all but 10 acres at an expense of $10, he could only recover that sum and the pro rata value of the 10 acres actually lost. The same doctrine is stated with force in Durfee v. Newkirk (Mich.) 47 N. W. 351.

It is important to observe, therefore, that whether we have regard to the first cause of action, for the breach of contract, or to the second cause of action, for the tort growing out of the breach of contract, in this case the damages are capable of actual, definite ascertainment. They depend entirely on the value of the land. The loss of the land is the sole element of damage, and the value of the land, less the debt, is the obvious and only damage which plaintiff has suffered.

In this state punitive damages are regarded as made up of two elements—punishment of wrong, and vindication of private right, by requiring payment for outrage, oppression, or indignity, which it is felt should be atoned for by compensation, but which cannot be expressed by computation. This court has recently held in a number of cases that such damages are founded on the right of the party injured, and not on the discretion of the jury. Beaudrot v. Ry., 69 S. C. 160, 48 S. E. 106. Under the facts alleged here, if punitive damages are allowed, the court would award them to the plaintiff altogether as punishment of the defendant, for the injury to plaintiff is entirely pecuniary, and actual damages would fully vindicate his rights. The plaintiff has no right to punishment of the defendant, when he may be fully compensated for the wrong done to himself without such punishment.

I have endeavored to show that punitive damages are not recoverable, under the facts alleged here, either for the breach of contract, which is the gravamen of the first cause of action, or for the violation of the trust relation which grew out of the contract, which is the gravamen of the second cause of action. In the second cause of action, however, plaintiff alleges the defendant sold for $600 the land pledged to him for a debt of $385, and refused to pay over or account to him for the purchase money. This fact, coupled with the others alleged, is manifestly a sufficient statement of actual damage, and for this reason the demurrer to the second cause of action cannot be sustained. This cause of action being ex delicto, it may be that, though no punitive damages could be recovered, yet, as they are claimed, actual damages could be recovered under the act of 1898 without any allegation of actual damage. As actual damages are alleged, however, this question under the act of 1898 does not arise.

The defendant's objection, that the agreement to reconvey set out in the complaint is void under the statute of frauds, because it does not identify the property, cannot be sustained. The agreement was to "deed back to J. W. Welborn said piece of land, containing twenty-seven acres, more or less." This was equivalent to saying that the contract related to the same tract of 27 acres of land conveyed by the plaintiff to defendant, and the complaint alleges that the land is fully described in the deed.

In my opinion, the demurrer to the first cause of action should be sustained, with leave to the plaintiff to move to amend as he may be advised, and the demurrer to the second cause of action should be overruled.

(56 W. Va. 348)

TOWN OF PHILLIPI v. KITTLE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1904.)

SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS—JURISDICTION IN CRIMINAL CASES.

1. This court is without jurisdiction to entertain a writ of error from the judgment of the circuit court discharging a prisoner from prosecution under a municipal ordinance for public drunkenness and disorderly conduct, even though the validity of such ordinance may be involved.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Barbour County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

V. Wirt Kittle was convicted of violating an ordinance of the town of Phillipi. On appeal the conviction was reversed, and the town brings error. Dismissed.

Samuel V. Woods and J. Hop. Woods, for plaintiff in error. W. T. George, for defendant in error.

DENT, J. V. Wirt Kittle was, by the mayor of the town of Phillipi, on the 12th day of May, 1903, found guilty of public drunkenness, contrary to sections 3 and 59, ordinance 4, of the town, and fined $10 and costs. Kittle appealed to the circuit court, which, on hearing, held such ordinance invalid, reversed the judgment, and discharged the prisoner. The town obtained a writ of error to this court. Kittle moves a dismissal thereof for want of jurisdiction.

It has been held that such proceedings are criminal in their nature, and that the town is the representative of the state in the prosecution thereof. City of Charleston v. Beller, 45 W. Va. 44, 30 S. E. 152. In defining the jurisdiction of this court in criminal matters, section 3, art. 8, of the Constitution, provides that: "It shall have appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases where there has been a conviction for felony or misdemeanor in a circuit court, and where a conviction has been had in any inferior court and been affirmed in a circuit court, and in cases relating to the public revenue the right of appeal shall belong to the state as well as the defendant, and such other appellate jurisdiction in both civil and criminal cases, as may be prescribed by law." Section 230, c. 50, Code 1899, allows an appeal to any person convicted of an offense against a municipal ordinance. Charleston v. Beller, 45 W. Va. 47, 30 S. E. 152. But neither this nor any other section or statute allows an appeal or writ of error in such case to the town or state. Hence this court is wholly without jurisdiction to entertain this writ, and it must be dismissed, as improvidently awarded. No costs allowed.

(56 W. Va. 336)

LE COMTE v. CARSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1904.)

EQUITY—JURISDICTION—ESTOPPEL—LEASE—REFORMATION—BOUNDARY—ESTABLISHMENT—ORAL AGREEMENT.

1. Though equity will not entertain a suit only to settle boundary and title to land, yet, when there is an independent ground giving equity jurisdiction, it will entertain the suit and pass on the title or boundary, as incidental to other relief.

2. When one takes a position in a judicial proceeding, and a decree is made conformable thereto, and another party relies upon it, and acquires property under the decree, he that takes such position is estopped from afterwards claiming contrary to such position to the prejudice of the other party.

¶ 1. See Boundaries, vol. 3, Cent. Dig. § 139.

3. Where a decree directs the lease of a tract of land for oil and gas, and the lease under it contains a line or boundary different from that authorized by the decree, omitting a part of the tract, either from fraud or mistake—the lessee being ignorant of the physical effect of the line, as a fact—equity will reform the lease.

4. To make valid an oral agreement to fix a line between two contiguous tracts of land, there must be doubt and uncertainty as to the true place of the line; else the agreement is void. Where there is, in fact, under the facts, such doubt and uncertainty, such oral agreement, if at once carried into execution by actual possession, is valid, without other consideration than the settlement of disputed boundary.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hancock County; H. C. Hervey, Judge.

Bill by A. C. Le Comte against Martin L. Carson and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John R. Donehoo and E. E. Erskine, for appellants. Erskine & Allison, for appellee.

BRANNON, J. Martin L. Carson and Samuel H. Carson were owners of a tract of 140 acres, 1 rood, and 27 poles of land in Hancock county, which they acquired by two deeds from the devisees of Wilcoxon. It is called the "Wilcoxon Tract." Samuel H. Carson, died leaving a widow, Amanda I. Carson, and infant children, of whom Amanda became guardian. The two Carson brothers made an oil lease to Murray for 40 acres of the tract. A. C. Le Comte, after this lease, and after the death of Samuel H. Carson, negotiated with Martin L. Carson and Amanda Carson, guardian of the children of Samuel H. Carson, for an oil lease for the unleased residue of the Wilcoxon tract. To secure good title for the interest of the infants, it was agreed that a petition should be filed in the circuit court of Hancock county by said guardian against said infants to secure a decree enabling the guardian to sell or lease the oil and gas interests of the infants; and such petition was filed, and such decree was obtained. The petition stated that Martin L. and Samuel H. Carson had derived title to the tract from said Wilcoxon devisees, and stated said former lease to Murray of part of the tract, and prayed a decree to give her authority to lease and sell the oil and gas in "the said unleased 100-acre tract." The petition stated that Martin L. Carson owned one-half, and averred that, to accomplish a lease, it would be necessary that he join in it; and the decree asked by the petition was one giving authority to the guardian to join in a lease with Martin L. Carson. The decree, in terms, provided for such joint lease. The petition distinctly alleged that he consented to join in such proposed lease. He was made a party, and filed an answer distinctly admitting the facts stated in the petition as true, and stating that the averments of the petition that he would join in any lease or sale the guardian might make were true, and he agreed in the answer to so join. The decree allowed the leasing of "the tract and premises described in the bill." Under the decree the guardian and Martin L. Carson executed to Le Comte a lease of oil and gas. This lease, in its description of the land, does not give the boundary by magnetic calls, as in the deeds by which the Wilcoxon devisees conveyed the tract to the Carsons, but bounded it by adjoining tracts, saying that on the south it was bounded "by the county road leading from Fairview to Frankfort." The boundary shown by the deeds from the Wilcoxens to the Carsons does not bound on or call for this road, but crosses it, and leaves a strip or parcel south of and on the other side of the road from the body of the land, of 4 acres, 2 roods, and 2 poles. In other words, this call cuts off that strip from the body of the land, and thus excludes it from the lease. James Carson, father of Martin L. and Samuel H. Carson, owned a tract of 182 acres adjoining the Wilcoxon tract on its south, and thus adjoining said strip, which 182-acre tract is called the "Carson Home Farm." James Carson willed this 182-acre tract to five of his sons; one of them being said Martin Luther Carson, and Samuel H. Carson being another. Some days before the lease from the guardian and Martin L. Carson to Le Comte, Martin L. Carson and E. A. Freshwater took from the James Carson devisees and Amanda I. Carson, as guardian of the infant children of Samuel H. Carson, an oil lease for 35 acres of the James Carson 182-acre home farm, giving its northern boundary as the Fairview and Frankfort Road; thus including the said strip in the 35-acre lease. This strip of 4 and a fraction acres is the bone of controversy in this case between Le Comte, on the one side, and Martin L. Carson and Freshwater, on the other. This lease to Carson and Freshwater was on record before the lease to Le Comte was made. James Carson had a son called "Mack." He got no part of the home farm under his father's will, but his father gave him leave to occupy a house on that farm under an oral lease, and confirmed it in his will till a legacy to that son should fall due. This lease or license included a few acres of land around the house, part of said home farm. It is claimed, and some evidence goes to show, that James Carson told Mack that he might make use of the controverted strip, and that Mack fenced in with his other land about one-third of this strip, and cultivated it and planted fruit trees on it. The balance of the strip was left in woods, without any fence separating it from said road, but a fence cut it off from the home farm. The defendants in this present case set up that, at the time of the guardian's proceeding in the circuit court to lease the land, said disputed strip was not a part of the Wilcoxon tract, but had been eliminated from it. They say that in 1880 there was a dispute as to the lines between the Wilcoxon tract and the James Carson home tract, and that in that year James Carson and his two sons, owners of the two tracts, orally agreed that the Fairview and Frankfort Road should be thereafter the boundary, and that this oral agreement had been ever since acquiesced in, and operated to give the disputed strip to the 182-acre tract. Under the lease of the 35 acres to Martin L. Carson and Freshwater, an oil well was bored within 2 feet and 3 inches of the south line of the Wilcoxon farm, and thus within that distance of said disputed strip—a part of the derrick of the well resting on the strip—and they began work for boring another well on the strip. Le Comte then filed a bill in equity, claiming that the insertion of the call for the Fairview and Frankfort Road in the lease to him was a fraud upon him, chiefly worked by Martin L. Carson in giving the draftsman of the lease that road as part of the boundary, and causing its insertion in the lease, he (Le Comte) not knowing that a part of the tract was thus excluded from the lease; that at any rate the lease misrepresented the decree authorizing the lease, and did not give him the rights he bargained for before the decree, and which the decree intended to confer. The bill asked that Carson and Freshwater be enjoined from further drilling the well which was on, or the derrick of which encroached on, said strip of 4 acres, 2 rods, and 2 poles, of the Wilcoxon tract; that the lease to Carson and Freshwater be held void so far as it covered said strip, and that they be enjoined from interfering with Le Comte's use of said strip; and that the lease to Le Comte be reformed, and a new lease executed, including all the Wilcoxon tract not leased to Murray. A decree was pronounced enjoining Carson and Freshwater perpetually from drilling or operating for oil or gas on said strip, and from interfering with Le Comte in his drilling and operating on said strip. Carson and Freshwater appeal.

Counsel for the appellants contest the jurisdiction of equity to entertain the case, because it is only a suit involving adverse titles or boundary, of which equity will not take jurisdiction, on principles stated in Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 43 S. E. 164, 59 L. R. A. 556, 94 Am. St. Rep. 895. The ready answer to this objection is found in that and many other cases—that the rule that equity will not hold a case to try adverse titles to land is that it applies only “when the plaintiff has no equity against the party claiming adversely to him.” When there is another ground for jurisdiction, independent of a trial of the hostile titles—one which alone gives jurisdiction—equity takes it, and tries the whole case. Here the bill alleged fraud in the execution of an erroneous lease, or a mistake in its drafting, and failure to execute intent of the parties and to conform to the decree, and prayed a reformation of the lease; these being proper grounds for equity jurisdiction, to undo a fraud, correct a mistake, reform a deed.

On the merits: We can safely say that Le Comte, who came just then from Ohio, and was a stranger in Hancock county, did not know the location of the lines, the physical boundary of the land, so far as to know that the call for the Fairview and Frankfort Road inserted in the lease would leave out a part of the Wilcoxon tract. He did know that such call was being inserted in the lease, but that did not tell him that it would lose him the strip in controversy. Suppose he had the deeds to the Carsons before him, giving the magnetic calls S., 55 E., and S., 75½ E.; how could he say whether or no the road conformed to those calls? But Amanda Carson and Martin L. Carson well knew that that road call did not conform to the calls of the deed. Amanda says, as a witness, that she well knew it, but was not allowed to say so, and admits under oath Le Comte's right to the disputed territory. Martin L. Carson directed this road call to be put in the lease, and does not pretend ignorance of its departure from the calls of the deed, or of its leaving out the disputed strip. He intentionally omitted it. Le Comte knew nothing, practically, of the boundary. Martin L. and Amanda knew all about it. He relied on them to give true bounds, and had right to do so. He had in the preliminary contract bargained with them that for his large bonus of $5,000 he would get all the Wilcoxon tract, except that before leased to Murray. He dreamed not that any part of the tract, as owned by the lessors, would be cut out. Why did not Martin L. Carson tell him that the boundary did not cover the strip? Carson must have known that Le Comte relied on getting all except the part under Murray's lease. Consider the record of the proceeding to lease the land. The guardian's petition asked that the tract, except that leased to Murray, be leased, and described the land as that conveyed to the Carsons by two certain deeds, and filed them; and they give boundaries not calling for the said road, but crossing it, and including in the tract this disputed parcel, as even Martin L. Carson does not deny, and as the petition for appeal confesses. That was the land which the petition asked for leave to lease. Those very deeds, and those very calls in them, are parts of the petition descriptive of the land. By his answer, Martin L. Carson agreed to the leasing of all the land covered by the calls of those deeds, save the Murray lease. He said that the petition properly described the land. He made no exception in his answer of that strip. If he had any claim to it as part of the other tract, why did not his answer set it up and exclude it from the contemplated lease? I should regard this answer as an estoppel forbidding him from harming Le Comte. He neither in nor out of court warned Le Comte of the exception of this strip. N. & W. R. Co. v. Perdue, 40 W. Va. 442, 21 S. E. 755. "An admission in a judicial proceeding, whether direct, or by inference from the position assumed, the belief sought, or defense set up, will estop the one who makes it from subsequently asserting any claim inconsistent therewith." 4 Am. & Eng. Dec. in Eq. 304 and 193. "Where a party assumes a certain position in a legal proceeding, and succeeds in maintaining it, he cannot thereafter, simply because his interests have changed, assume a contrary position, especially if it be to the prejudice of a party who has acquiesced in the position formerly taken by him." Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 689, 15 Sup. Ct. 555, 39 L. Ed. 578. To same effect, Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, 26 L. Ed. 187; 11 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 446; opinion in Weston v. Ralston, 48 W. Va. 186, 36 S. E. 446. Martin's interest now is to keep the strip in his own lease. He agreed to the prayer of the bill, asked it, got his prayer, and cannot now retract. He asked that the land be leased by the description in those deeds.

To what is Le Comte entitled, tested by the decree? It adjudged that it would promote the infants' interests to lease "the tract and premises described in the bill." We have seen what that was. It decreed that Carson join in such lease, because he consented to do so. It is true that the guardian, in her report of the lease, filed it, and the decree of confirmation confirmed that particular lease, and, as it bounded the lease on the road, it is limited by it; but the decree did not authorize a lease of only a part, and, besides, the report told the court that the lease was "in all respects in accord with said decree," and the decree of confirmation proceeded upon that idea. Le Comte relied upon it and accepted the lease on the faith of it, and neither he nor the court knew the physical fact that the road call departed from the deed call, and left out the disputed piece of land. It would take a survey to tell it. We can say that the court intended and Le Comte intended to lease and acquire all the land which the decree authorized to be leased. It thus seems that the omission from this lease of the land in controversy was a wrong on the part of the lessors—in law, a fraud on Le Comte. Is Le Comte entitled to relief on the theory of mistake, in that the lease does not carry out intent? In such case the mistake must be mutual, and it may be said that, as the lease bounds by the road, Martin L. Carson did not intend to lease by the lines of the deed, though Le Comte did. Were that all, there would be doubt; but the record of the guardian's proceeding, and Carson's answer assenting to the lease proposed, make a contract between the lessors and the lessee, and the lease does not execute it, and Le Comte has right to have it executed by the reformation of it to conform to the decree of lease, to which both the guardian and Carson assented. And if he deem it essential, he can yet ask a new lease, as the court has not in terms decreed such reformation.

Next as to the defense that the land in dispute had ceased to be part of the Wilcoxen tract, and become part of the home farm, by an agreement between Carson and his two sons, This cannot avail Martin Luther Carson, because of the estoppel above stated. But how as to Freshwater? How as to Carson, if he were not so estopped? One answer to this defense is that the oral agreement is of no force, for want of consideration. True, where there is uncertainty as to location of a boundary line between coterminous owners, and a dispute based on colorable uncertainty, there may be a valid agreement resting on that uncertainty to fix a line, and no other consideration is needed. It is then held not a sale or conveyance by word, prohibited by the statute that requires a writing or deed for the sale or conveyance of land, as it merely defines or locates the line. But where there is no such uncertainty, no dispute based on uncertainty, but the true line is known or readily ascertainable, it is nothing but a transfer without that consideration, and, unless written, is void. As an agreement, it has no consideration to call for enforcement, and the statute requires a writing because it is a transfer of land—simply a transfer. 4 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 860, 861. "In order to the validity of a parol agreement establishing a boundary, it is necessary, however, that there be doubt and uncertainty as to its true location." 5 Cyc. 932; Pasley v. English, 5 Grat. 141. The evidence in this case shows no uncertainty. If James Carson ever made any claim to this strip, there is not the least show of how he claimed. Indeed, there is no showing of controversy, save a mere declaration by one or two witnesses. There is no uncertainty as to the boundary of the Wilcoxen tract or the home farm apparent. There is clearly no basis for any agreement which, of its own force as an agreement, can operate to take from the Wilcoxen farm this strip.

Further, even if there had been such uncertainty of boundary, the evidence does not show that the agreement was executed by actual possession, for our law is stated thus in Teass v. City, 38 W. Va. 1, 17 S. E. 400, 19 L. R. A. 802: "Disputed boundaries between two adjoining lands may be settled by express oral agreement, executed immediately and accompanied by possession according thereto." No possession was taken immediately, nothing done to execute the agreement. It is true, Mack Carson, in an indefinite way, says he heard this agreement, and "they" told him to clear out the strip; but it is not clear, on the whole evidence, that what he did was to execute the agreement. What did he do? He cleared a part of the strip and fenced it—one-third of it—and left the balance out in common, not fenced. There being no color of title, possession of part would not be possession of the entire strip. At most, it would only extend to the part fenced in.

But in any view, there ought to be clear, convincing evidence to prove an agreement to take away land; and the competent evidence is not clear, is wholly unsatisfactory, unconvincing. So the circuit judge held, and we do not see that he is wrong. There is a witness who says Samuel H. Carson admitted the agreement. There is another who says he claimed the strip. Two papers go to repel the existence of such agreement. The will of James Carson describes the home farm as 182 acres conveyed to him by a certain deed. It does not cover the strip. An unrecorded deed from Samuel H. Carson to Martin L. and James A. Carson for Samuel's interest in this land, in describing the land, follows the call of the deeds by which Martin and Samuel acquired the land, and declares that those calls make a line running with the James Carson home farm. This is a declaration and admission by Samuel and Martin L. Carson in October, 1887, seven years after the pretended oral agreement, that the strip was a part of the Wilcoxen tract. I have used the words "pretended agreement," for it does seem to one reading the voluminous case that this agreement is hatched out lately to answer the necessity of this case.

The statute of limitation does not seem to enter into the case. It could only arise as to the little piece cultivated by Mack Carson, but it is not clear that it was held with the intent to claim title—a necessary element of the statute.

We are told that the possession of the fraction of this strip was notice to Le Comte of adverse claim, as possession is notice. It would go no further than the fraction. There was no possession of the balance. Possession is notice of a claim, but it does not create title, or make no title a good one. It is notice only of such right as the party has. If the oral agreement were clear and valid, it would be notice of it, but it is not clear and good.

The fact that the lease of the defendants was prior in time and recorded before Le Comte's lease is immaterial. If the defendants' lease passed no title, what does its priority of date amount to? A record of a deed that passes no title does not operate as notice to affect an adverse claimant of the true title. It has no application to an adversary owner of another right, but only between prior and later purchasers or creditors of the same title.

Decree affirmed.

(56 W. Va. 227)

W. & T. ALLEN & CO. v. MAXWELL et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 16, 1904.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—FINDINGS OF COMMISSIONER—NOTE—CONSTRUCTION.

1. Syllabus, point 3, Reger v. O'Neal, 10 S. E. 375, 33 W. Va. 159, 6 L. R. A. 427, syllabus, point 3, Fry v. Feamater, 15 S. E. 253, 36 W. Va. 454, and point 1 of syllabus, Woods v. Ward, 37 S. E. 520, 48 W. Va. 652, reaffirmed and applied.

2. M. was indorser for the firm of S., B. & Co., of which firm L. was a member. Said firm, as well as L. individually became insolvent; and M. being required, as such indorser, to pay near $2,000, and not being able to raise all the money for the purpose himself, L. loaned him $305, for which M. executed to L. the following writing: "$305. Due W. H. Lipscomb eight hundred and five dollars, borrowed money, to be repaid when collected off of Stone, Bowman & Co. out of drafts which I have had to pay for them. This March 9th, 1888. Witness my hand and seal. W. B. Maxwell. [Seal.]" M. recovered a decree against S., B. & Co., August 2, 1890, for $956.06, interest and costs. Held, M. could only be liable to L. or his assignee upon said note to the extent of his actual collections from said S., B. & Co.

3. Where a party takes an appeal from specified parts of a decree, giving notice to all parties to the suit that he will only have such parts of the record copied into the transcript as will present to the appellate court such matters so specified as he desires to have reviewed, and that it is not his purpose or intention to appeal from any other part of the decree, the appellate court will not consider an assignment of error by one of the appellees, long after the submission of the cause, concerning another part of the final decree, and having no relation to the parts of the decree appealed from.

4. When an appeal is taken from specified parts of a decree set out in a written notice which states that no other part of the decree will be appealed from by the appellant, and such specified parts are independent and involve only the rights of the appellees named in such specified parts of the decree, such appeal does not bring up for adjudication the whole decree.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Tucker County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bill by W. & T. Allen & Co. against W. B. Maxwell and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed in part.

C. O. Strieby, for appellants. W. G. Conley, W. T. Ice, Jr., and D. H. Hill Arnold, for appellees.

McWHORTER, J. W. & T. Allen & Co. at the May rules, 1899, filed their bill in the circuit court of Tucker county against W. B. Maxwell, C. O. Strieby, trustee, John J. Adams, and others, creditors of W. B. Maxwell, alleging that for many years they had been engaged in the wholesale clothing business in Philadelphia, and had sold goods to one W. H. Lipscomb, who was engaged in the mercantile business at St. George, Tucker county; that said Lipscomb became largely indebted to plaintiffs and numerous other creditors; that in April, 1888, he made an assignment of his property to the defendant Maxwell, as trustee, for the benefit of all his creditors; that Maxwell proceeded to act under said deed of assignment, and collected from the property so coming into his hands and possession sums of money largely in excess of the amount necessary to pay the entire indebtedness of said Lipscomb; that a suit was instituted in said Tucker county circuit court by the W. H. Smith Hardware Company against said Lipscomb and others for the purpose of settling the accounts of said Maxwell as such trustee; that orders of reference were had and executed therein, and, among other things, it was ascertained and decreed that there was due plaintiffs the sum of $361.41, with interest from the 23d day of November, 1897, until paid, which said Maxwell was directed therein to pay, and which he had failed to pay, and plaintiffs were advised the same was a lien on the said Maxwell's estate from the date of the decree, and making said cause of the W. H. Smith Hardware Company against Lipscomb and others part of their said suit; that Maxwell never gave bond as trustee, and therefore plaintiffs were compelled to look to him personally for the payment of the claim; that Maxwell was largely indebted to other creditors, who were made parties to the suit as far as known; that on the — day of April, 1899, said Maxwell made a general assignment of all his property, both real and personal, to one C. O. Strieby, trustee, requiring in said deed said trustee to give bond in the penalty of $10,000 before taking possession of the said property; and praying that the cause be referred to a commissioner of the court to ascertain the property, real and personal, owned by said Maxwell, and liens against the same, to whom owing, the amount and priorities thereof, and to settle the accounts of C. O. Strieby, trustee, and for the appointment of a special receiver to take charge of said property, and that the court direct him to proceed with the said property in such manner as would best subserve the interests of all persons concerned therein; and asking that the creditors named, and all other persons interested in the estate of Maxwell who would come in and contribute to the costs of the suit, be made parties, and for general relief; exhibiting with their bill the deed of trust made by Maxwell to Strieby, trustee. The defendant Maxwell and Strieby, C. H. Maxwell, and W. H. Lipscomb filed their several answers, to which general replications were entered.

On the 16th of June, 1899, the cause was heard upon the bill and answers and replications thereto, when the court decreed that the trust estate should be disposed of as speedily as possible, and, by consent of parties, authorized and directed C. O. Strieby to dispose of the property with the least possible delay, in pursuance of and under the deed of trust of April 3, 1899, and hold the funds arising therefrom subject to the further order of the court, and referred the cause to Jeff Lipscomb, one of the commissioners of the court, who was directed to ascertain and report the estate theretofore owned by W. B. Maxwell, and conveyed to Trustee Strieby, the character and nature of the title thereto, the liens thereon, their character, amounts, priorities, and to whom owing, and to state the accounts of the said Strieby, trustee, so far as they had progressed at the time of the completion of said report, etc. The commissioner filed his report, dated the 10th day of November, 1899, to which report the defendant W. B. Maxwell filed 17 exceptions, and the defendant C. O. Strieby filed 3 exceptions thereto, the third of which exceptions adopted each and every exception made by W. B. Maxwell. On the 21st day of June, 1900, the cause was heard upon the papers, proceedings, and decrees theretofore filed, had, and entered, and upon the report and exceptions thereto, when the court overruled all the exceptions, except the fifteenth exception of the defendant Maxwell, and as to one item mentioned in the seventh exception of said Maxwell, which were sustained, and the commissioner's report confirmed in all other respects, except "as to the item of $833.10 reported as due G. F. Phillips, next friend of Ann E. Phillips, all questions relating thereto being reserved for the future order of the court therein, and as are also reserved all questions pertaining to the lands purchased by the said W. B. Maxwell and C. W. Minear jointly at tax sales, and for which no settlement has yet been made, and which were not at the time of filing of the report of Commissioner Lipscomb in a condition to settle"; and the court, proceeding to ascertain the rights of parties, decreed, among other things, that there was "due C. W. Minear $317.30; C. H. Maxwell, $2,728.42, subject to the credit of a note by C. H. Maxwell, executed to W. B. Maxwell, dated the 15th day of December, 1891, for the sum of $52.50; Mary O. Cameron's heirs, $128.02; A. J. Lipscomb, $563.11." These are the only claims contested here in this cause by the appellant Strieby, trustee.

The fifth exception taken by defendant W. B. Maxwell and the trustee, Strieby, to the report of the commissioner, is the allowance of the claim of $317.30, and claimed to be erroneously carried into the decree in favor of C. W. Minear without a settlement therewith of the amount overpaid to said Minear; the said $317.30 being only Minear's side of the account. On the 16th of October, 1899, W. B. Maxwell and C. W. Minear had a partial settlement, and made a statement thereof in writing, signed by both of them, wherein they say: "Balance due C. W. Minear, $317.30, which is to be allowed by Jeff Lipscomb, com'r in the case of W. & T. Allen & Co. vs. W. B. Maxwell. In this settlement we did not include the W. H. Lipscomb matter in controversy, or the matters in difference relative to land bought for taxes, mentioned in the 8th and 9th items of the answer of said Maxwell filed before the commissioner in said case, and said matters are left open for settlement." Item 8 referred to the amount overpaid by mistake in the case of W. H. Smith Hardware Company against W. H. Lipscomb, June 26, 1895, about $600; and the ninth item, to one-third profits made on delinquent land purchased in 1895, about $300. The overpayment to Minear is recognized in the decree entered on the 23d of November, 1897, in the case of W. H. Smith Hardware Company against W. H. Lipscomb, and the right reserved therein to the said Maxwell to recover back from Minear any amount so improperly paid to him. Commissioner Lipscomb, in making up his report, leaves wholly unsettled between said Maxwell and Minear the matters of difference in the eighth and ninth items mentioned. The answer of Maxwell alleged the partnership of Minear, Hamilton, and himself for the purchase of delinquent lands, and as such partners they did invest a considerable amount of money in the purchase of lands at tax sales, and that Minear afterwards purchased the interest of Hamilton, thereby giving him two-thirds and Maxwell one-third, and that Minear held the funds of the copartnership, and from which Maxwell had never received anything; and the answer of Maxwell on this matter was not traversed, and Maxwell's testimony supports this answer. In his testimony, W. B. Maxwell makes the following statement: "C. W. Minear debt, claiming the sum of $555.02. On yesterday Mr. Minear and myself, by the consent of C. O. Strieby, trustee, took up all the matters of account between us, except the eighth and ninth items of my account of offsets; the eighth item being for $600 charged as amount overpaid to said Minear in the case of W. H. Smith Hardware Company against W. H. Lipscomb, etc., and the ninth item being a charge for $300 for one-third the profits on delinquent land purchased in 1895. Mr. Minear and myself did not attempt to settle these two items. He was not willing to settle the eighth item, and, upon looking over matters between us relative to the ninth item, I concluded it was not proper for me to settle same. I found that Mr. Minear had in his hands somewhere about $400 of the proceeds of sales of lands acquired at the tax purchase, of which one-third is due to myself, and the remainder to Mr. Minear and Mr. John Hamilton. I also found that there are a number of the parcels of land purchased by us which were not redeemed, and which I think, roughly estimating the value of the same, are worth somewhere from $600 to $1,000, and I left the whole matter to be settled by the trustee. One-third of this land which has not been disposed of is mine. Mr. Minear said to me that he had received sufficient money to satisfy all partnership liability, so that the money in his hands and notes and lands yet on hand are practically subject to a division among the parties, except that there are some unpaid taxes against the land. Mr. Minear and myself made a note in writing, and signed it, showing that, as to the matters settled, there is a balance due him as of yesterday of $317.30. Included in the matters settled is a note of J. W. Minear of $50, and a note of his own of $55, which are in the hands of Mr. Strieby, trustee, and are to be given up and canceled. I now file the memorandum made by Mr. Minear and myself on yesterday, marked 'Exhibit C. W. M.' As I stated, we did not attempt to settle the eighth item of my account, and I now refer to the final decree entered in the case of W. H. Smith Hardware Company against W. H. Lipscomb, etc., as showing my claim in this matter, and request the commissioner to procure and file a copy of that decree as part of his report." The overpayment by Maxwell to Minear is clearly shown from the commissioner's confirmed reports in the case of W. H. Smith Hardware Company against Lipscomb, made a part of the record here, from which it appears that the total amount which passed into the hands of Maxwell, trustee, was $5,745.24; his disbursements, $3,531.73, which includes the $1,722.94 paid to Minear, and without which the disbursements amount to $1,808.79. A supplemental report made June 24, 1897, and which was unexcepted to, and confirmed by the decree of November 23, 1897, in case of W. H. Smith Hardware Company against Lipscomb, shows further disbursements by said Maxwell, trustee, to the amount of $688.56, and also reports further claims against said fund to amount of $2,111.44; making a total of $4,608.79, which deducted from the receipts, $5,745.24, leaves the sum of $1,136.45, the true amount which should have been paid to Minear on the Lipscomb order to pay Minear any surplus after paying the creditors of Lipscomb; being an overpayment of $586.49. Why this overpayment was not carried into the account between Maxwell and Minear by the commissioner, and also into the decree, does not appear; but the right was reserved to Trustee Maxwell, in the case of W. H. Smith Hardware Company against Lipscomb, to recover back from Minear any amount improperly paid to him. This overpayment of $586.49, with interest from June 27, 1895, the date of its payment, would have canceled the claim of $317.30 decreed to Minear, and left the difference which should have been decreed against Minear for the benefit of the creditors of Maxwell in this suit. Maxwell testifies that no part of said overpayment had ever been repaid to him by Minear. The decree in favor of C. W. Minear for the sum of $317.30 is reversed, set aside, and annulled, and this court, proceeding to enter such decree in that behalf as the circuit court should have rendered, do adjudge, order, and decree that C. W. Minear do pay to the trustee of W. B. Maxwell, for the purposes of said trust, the sum of $586.49, the amount overpaid him as assignee of W. H. Lipscomb by W. B. Maxwell, with interest thereon from June 25, 1895, until paid, subject to credit of $317.30 as of November 19, 1899. The questions pertaining to the lands purchased by W. B. Maxwell and Minear jointly at tax sales, and for which no settlement had been made, were reserved by the circuit court. The sixth exception to the commissioner's report is that "the unsettled matters between said Maxwell and said Minear relative to lands purchased for taxes are neither settled by the commissioner nor reserved so that the same can be settled in the future." The decree of June 21, 1900, complained of, after mentioning certain questions and matters reserved, says: "As are also reserved all questions pertaining to the lands purchased by said W. B. Maxwell and C. W. Minear jointly at tax sales, and for which no settlement has yet been made, and which were not, at the time of filing of the report of Commissioner Lipscomb, in a condition to settle." So that it appears the question was reserved by the decree of June 21, 1900, for the future action of the court. As to the assignment of error in decreeing the sum of $2,728.42 in favor of C. H. Maxwell because if the matters in difference had been properly settled, a very much less amount would have been due him. The seventh exception to the commissioner's report in writing is that the commissioner failed to allow a credit to W. B. Maxwell of $150 for part of the funeral expenses of their mother, S. J. Maxwell, and also the item of $300 for counsel fees in the case of Williams against Maxwell, and also for the loss of 70 acres of land conveyed by C. H. Maxwell to W. B. Maxwell in Randolph county, and the taxes paid by W. B. Maxwell in redemption of the other tracts conveyed by C. H. Maxwell to W. B. Maxwell in December, 1893; claiming that the commissioner does not allow exceptant as much as was paid in redemption of the lands. As to the item of $150 on account of the funeral expenses of their mother, C. H. Maxwell did make a writing authorizing the commissioner to allow as an offset the $150, but, in his testimony afterwards given before the commissioner, states that the same is incorrect, and that he should not assume to pay the same, for the reason that his mother, S. J. Maxwell, left abundance of property, both real and personal, to pay all the expenses of her funeral, and that W. B. Maxwell could collect the same from the estate at any time, if he had not already done so; while W. B. Maxwell, in his testimony concerning the same, says, "The next item of $150 is a little more than one-half my mother's funeral expenses, all of which were paid by me; and, if my brother voluntarily assumes this part of it, I have no objections." This language clearly indicates that W. B. Maxwell felt that he had no legal or just claim against C. H. Maxwell on the account of the funeral expenses, presumably for the reason stated by

C. H. Maxwell—that their mother left ample property to pay such expenses, and he could collect, or possibly had collected, same from her estate. It must be remembered that C. H. Maxwell was living in California, and W. B. Maxwell in West Virginia.

As to the item of $700 for the loss of 70 acres of land, it appears that J. F. Harding bought the 70 acres on the 30th of November, 1898, for the delinquent taxes of 1891. In his letter, dated November 21, 1893, accepting the proposition of C. H. Maxwell to sell him his land for $9,000, made on the 23d of October, W. B. Maxwell says: "I have concluded to accept that offer, viz.: $2,200 'payable at any reasonable time,' and accordingly enclose you my note for that amount, payable on demand. As the matter is going your taxes in Randolph are in arrears, and the first thing we know that land will be lost. When the amounts are all ascertained, I will pay up all taxes now due on all the lands since you bought; you can credit this on my note." W. B. Maxwell was fully aware of the facts in regard to the arrearages of taxes, and had a year from the time of the purchase of the 70 acres by J. F. Harding in which to redeem the land; and the loss by the running of the time which enabled Harding to procure deed for the same was occasioned by the negligence of W. B. Maxwell, who had assumed the duty of its redemption; he being on the ground, while his brother was on the other side of the continent, and resting on the contract of W. B. Maxwell to pay the taxes, and to have credit for same on his $2,200 note therefor. The excess of the taxes in the way of costs and expenses for the redemption of the other tracts of land was doubtless incurred by the same negligence. The commissioner, in his account, allowed the taxes which were in arrears at the time of the purchase of the land from W. B. Maxwell by his brother. The note of $52.50 mentioned in the exception to the commissioner's report is allowed by the court in the decree complained of. The item of $300 for counsel fees in the Williams Case was properly disallowed, the defendant C. H. Maxwell having no interests involved in the said cause in the Supreme Court. He says in his testimony: "The circuit court released me from all liability in the Williams Case, and my interests are not involved whatever in the Supreme Court, as I understand it. Besides, I engaged an attorney (A. J. Valentine) to observe and protect my interests, if any, before the Supreme Court. W. B. Maxwell advised me to do this. I do not, therefore, think this is a just charge against me." And it does not appear from the report of the Williams Case, 45 W. Va. 297, 31 S. E. 909, that it was a case in which C. H. Maxwell should be required to pay attorney's fees with W. B. Maxwell. The commissioner having passed upon the facts referred to him, "his findings will be given great weight, though not as conclusive as the verdict of a jury, and should be sustained unless plainly not warranted by the evidence. This rule operates with peculiar force in an appellate court when the findings of a commissioner have been approved by the court below." Reger v. O'Neal, 33 W. Va. 159, 10 S. E. 375, 6 L. R. A. 427; Fry v. Feamster, 36 W. Va. 454, 15 S. E. 253; Woods v. Ward, 48 W. Va. 652, 37 S. E. 520. As to the claim of C. H. Maxwell, there is no error in the decree.

As to the claim of Mary C. Cameron's heirs, the error assigned is merely technical—that no such parties were before the court having a claim in their capacity as the heirs of Mary C. Cameron. The claim is a just one, for money collected by Maxwell as attorney for the heirs of Mary C. Cameron, and not paid over by him. One error assigned is that such of the parties to the cause who are in fact the heirs of Mary C. Cameron are in fact indebted to said Maxwell in a sum largely in excess of the amounts claimed by them in their individual rights. It is shown by the testimony of Attorney L. Hansford that "on or about the 20th day of December, 1891, I first visited Mr. A. B. Parsons at his office, who was the commissioner who had sold the Cameron land; and Mr. Parsons showed me a receipt for the money due the Cameron heirs, amounting, as I now remember it, to $742.70, bearing date September 7, 1889. I immediately left Mr. Parsons' office and went to Mr. Maxwell's office, asked him for the money, and showed him my authority for acting as counsel for them. His reply to me was that he had never received the money from Mr. Parsons and Mr. Scott, the commissioners, when I had seen, not more than 20 minutes before, his receipt to Parsons for the money. I became thoroughly convinced of the infamous fraud that he had practiced upon his clients. Within a week from that day that I was in his office I received a check from Mr. Maxwell for W. H. Williams' amount, with the statement that he would pay the balance as soon as Mr. Parsons paid him, and I knew at that time he had received the money from Parsons something over a year previous to that time. I even showed him the letters that I had received from two of the heirs to whom the money was due; J. A. Hanson being the party representing all the balance outside of George C. Williams. Myself and Mr. Dayton represents the parties, and he has never paid or offered to pay any part of said debt." W. B. Maxwell also testifies before the commissioners, and files his offsets, which are allowed by the commissioners to the amount of $425.99, which, deducted from the aggregate of several sums amounting to $554.01, leaves the amount of $128.02, amount found by the commissioners against Maxwell, and confirmed by the court. The commissioners left open the claim of Maxwell for $300 counsel fees paid by him in prosecuting the appeal of Williams against himself in the Supreme Court; and the court properly refused or omitted to allow it as a just offset, as the costs taxed in said cause, amounting to $343.54, and which included a counsel fee of $30, were allowed as an offset by the commissioners, and so decreed. The commissioners having passed upon the evidence, and the court having sustained the commissioners' finding, the appellate court will not disturb the decree, unless plainly warranted by the evidence. Reger v. O'Neal, Fry v. Feamster, and Woods v. Ward, supra.

It is claimed that "the court erred in decreeing to A. J. Lipscomb, as assignee of W. H. Lipscomb, any sum whatever, and especially in decreeing to him the sum of $563.11, the alleged balance due upon a note of $805 dated the 9th day of March, 1888," because said note was barred by the statute of limitations, and that the decree for $956.06 rendered by the circuit court of Preston county in favor of Maxwell against said Lipscomb and others on the 2d day of August, 1890, was a valid set-off against any balance due upon said note of $805, and that the sum of $107.80 found due from W. H. Lipscomb to Maxwell on the 8th day of July, 1896, upon a settlement of the accounts between them as cosureties of Miller, a late sheriff of Tucker county, was a valid offset against said $805 note; that W. B. Maxwell, W. H. Lipscomb, and A. J. Lipscomb all being before the court, it should have taken up and adjusted all matters in controversy among them which were before the court, and rendered a decree over against said W. H. Lipscomb for the balance justly due from him to said W. B. Maxwell; that it is certain that A. J. Lipscomb is indebted to said Maxwell on account of the purchase money on the property of the Parsons Boom & Lumber Company, and said Lipscomb, Maxwell, W. E. Cupp, special receiver, the First National Bank of Grafton, and C. W. Minear, the parties interested in the settlement of this matter, all being before the court, it was the plain duty of the court, to fully adjust and settle this matter among the parties before entering any decree in favor of said A. J. Lipscomb. From the examination of the evidence taken before the commissioner in the matter, it appears that this position of the appellant is well taken. The commissioner has based his statement by which he arrives at the sum of $563.11 in favor of A. J. Lipscomb solely upon the note dated March 9, 1888, for $805, subject to a credit of $400 paid July 1, 1893; showing a balance due of the principal at that date of $405, and interest to November 19, 1898, $155.11. This note of $805 given by Maxwell to W. H. Lipscomb grew out of transactions with Stone, Bowman & Co., of which firm W. H. Lipscomb was a member. Maxwell, as indorser for said firm, on its failure and the failure of its members had become liable for near $2,000; and, being unable to raise all of the money to pay off the same, W. H. Lipscomb loaned him $805, for which Maxwell gave Lipscomb the note as follows: "Due W. H. Lipscomb eight hundred and five dollars, borrowed money, to be repaid when collected off of Stone, Bowman & Co. out of drafts which I have had to pay for them. This March 9, 1888. Witness my hand and seal. W. B. Maxwell. [Seal.]" It appears from the depositions of Maxwell, and also from the depositions of A. J. Lipscomb, that he and A. J. Lipscomb had purchased together in equal shares on February 1, 1896, the property of the Parsons Boom & Lumber Company at a sale thereof made by W. E. Cupp, special receiver, at the price of $950, and executed their three several notes therefor; that they renewed the notes from time to time, and about the 11th of October, 1897, they borrowed from the First National Bank of Grafton $500 to pay upon the amount that they owed upon the property; that the special receiver filed in this cause a judgment against him (Maxwell) for $305.71, and the said Grafton Bank had filed its debt against him for over $500, which represented the unpaid purchase money of the said property purchased by them together. Maxwell claims that A. J. Lipscomb still owed a balance on his part of said purchase money, while Lipscomb says he paid in full his one-half, and that Maxwell alone is liable for the whole of the unpaid residue; and in his testimony A. J. Lipscomb undertakes to show how he paid the one-half due from him, but only shows three payments directly upon said claim, viz., $88 paid October 6, 1896, $50 paid October 17, 1897, and $149.76 paid March 10, 1899, and states that the last said payment represented his part on the balance due on the property. He mentions a few other small items paid, not on that debt, but supposedly as charges or offsets against any claim Maxwell would have against him. He says: "On December 1, 1897, I paid taxes, $25.37; expense of sending circular letters, $6; and expense paid from printing letters, $5; and taxes paid, $22.64." The three items which applied directly upon the purchase made on the property amounted to $287.76, if paid as stated. Lipscomb filed no vouchers showing any of the said items of payment or charges. Maxwell filed a claim or bill of offsets against A. J. Lipscomb, amounting in the aggregate to $306.47, of which $242 is "one-half amount paid W. E. Cupp, special receiver for Parsons Boom & Lumber Company, $484—$242. The commissioner has entirely ignored, in making up his accounts, all transactions between W. B. Maxwell and A. J. Lipscomb, except the note of $805, and the credit of $400 indorsed thereon, and, to arrive at his conclusion showing the indebtedness of Maxwell to Lipscomb, states the following:

"I further report that W. B. Maxwell has filed before me in this cause a judgment rendered by the circuit court of Preston county on the 2d day of August, 1890, a judgment against Stone, Bowman & Co. [of which W. H. Lipscomb was a member] for the principal sum of $956.06; that on or about October 1, 1896, said Maxwell recovered by compromise from Addison Child the sum of $425, which should be placed as a credit on the above-stated judgment as of that date, October 1, 1896.

"Relative to this matter I report as follows, to wit:

"Date of note, March 9, 1888; amount, $805; credit July 1, 1893, $400.

Balance due as of that date, the principal sum of.....	$405 00
Interest thereon from that date to Nov. 19, 1899.....	135 11

Total	$560 11"
-------------	-----------

So there remain several items of account between A. J. Lipscomb and W. B. Maxwell which were not passed upon by the commissioner, which should have been settled and reported by him. The note for $805, the balance of which is reported in favor of A. J. Lipscomb as assignee of Wm. H. Lipscomb, was given, as stated on its face, for money loaned by Wm. H. Lipscomb to Maxwell to enable him (Maxwell) to pay off the debts of the firm of Stone, Bowman & Co., as their indorser, and loaned with the distinct understanding that it was not to be paid back to Lipscomb unless collected from the assets of the said firm of Stone, Bowman & Co., of which firm W. H. Lipscomb was a member, and secondarily liable for all the debts of the firm, so that, in effect, it amounted to a loan by said Lipscomb for the purpose of paying a debt for which he was not only liable, but was in fact his own indebtedness. Hence the provision that the money was not to be returned to him unless it should be collected from the funds of the said firm. The only definite amount that is shown to have been collected from said funds is the judgment against Childs in favor of Maxwell, who applied the net proceeds of said judgment, $400, upon the said debt, and this is the only credit ever given upon said note. Any amount collected from the assets of the said firm of Stone, Bowman & Co. would create a liability for such amount upon said W. B. Maxwell, to be applied as payment on the $805 note. It would neither be equitable nor right to require Maxwell to pay the note from his individual funds. On examination by his own counsel, the question is asked W. H. Lipscomb: "There has been filed before the commissioner in this cause a paper writing in the nature of a note or duebill dated March 9, 1888, signed by W. B. Maxwell, and made payable to you, for the sum of $805. Upon the back of said note is a credit indorsed as of July 1, 1893. Under the provisions of said paper writing, said amount is to be repaid when collected off of Stone, Bowman & Co. Now, please state who indorsed the credit on the back of said note, and whether or not the balance of said note remains due and unpaid?" And he answered: "W. B. Maxwell indorsed the credit, and there has never been a cent paid on the remainder of the note." He further states that his understanding was that Maxwell had collected from Stone, Bowman & Co. the money out of which this money was to be paid, in accordance with agreement in said note or writing. Maxwell testifies (referring to the judgment against Addison Child): "The net amount received by me upon this judgment should be credited upon my Stone, Bowman & Co. debt, and these are all the payments I ever received upon those judgments." The note so containing a condition precedent to its payment, it would be inequitable to hold Maxwell liable therefor beyond the amount collected by him from Stone, Bowman & Co., and A. J. Lipscomb stands in no better condition than his assignor, W. H. Lipscomb. He took the note of $805 subject to all the equities existing between Maxwell and W. H. Lipscomb.

The decree in favor of A. J. Lipscomb is erroneous, and should be reversed, and the cause recommitted to the commissioner for a full settlement of differences between the said A. J. Lipscomb, W. H. Lipscomb, and W. B. Maxwell, upon the principles herein laid down.

In November, 1904, after submission of this cause, and just after the cause was taken up for consideration, counsel for appellee W. B. Maxwell tendered a brief in the cause, assigning error in said decree in a matter foreign to the purpose of the appeal taken in this cause, and raising a question which was in no wise raised by the appeal, and insisting that it should be passed upon by this court. The deed of assignment made by W. B. Maxwell contains the following provision: "If for any cause said trustee does not realize a sufficient amount from the whole of said property to pay all the debts of said grantor, the amount so realized and received by the creditors who participate in any manner in the proceeds of sale shall stand satisfied and the grantor forever discharged from all liability to them and released therefrom but nothing in this clause shall apply to creditors who refuse or fail to participate in the proceeds of said property;" and further that it was an absolute assignment of "all the property of every kind and description owned and claimed by him, both real estate and personal property wherever situated"; claiming that the following provision in the decree of June 21, 1900, is erroneous, to wit: "And it is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that said parties to whom debts have heretofore been decreed shall be entitled to their portion of the money so decreed to them, and may accept the same without in any wise binding themselves by so accepting the same to accept the amounts so received by them in full satisfaction and discharge of their debts as provided in the deed of trust from W. B. Maxwell to C. O. Strieby, trustee, dated April 3, 1899; but the amount so received by them shall only be a credit upon the debts so reported and decreed to them, and shall not be a satisfaction of the same unless they specifically agree to accept the same in full discharge of the same." Citing in support thereof Clarke v. Figgins, 27 W. Va. 663 (Syl., point 3); Hurst v. Leckie, 97 Va. 550, 34 S. E. 464, 75 Am. St. Rep. 798; Skipwith's Ex'r v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh, 271, 31 Am. Dec. 642; Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 400; Gordon v. Cannon, 18 Grat. 387; Phippen v. Durham, 8 Grat. 457; Kevan v. Branch, 1 Grat. 274; Quarles v. Kerr, 14 Grat. 48; Talley v. Curtain, 54 Fed. 49, 4 C. C. A. 177. The filing of the brief in this cause by the said W. B. Maxwell at this time is not only contrary to the rules of this court, and could not properly be considered, but the assignment of error is without the purview of the appeal taken in this cause. Before taking the appeal, C. O. Strieby, trustee, appellant, gave notice to the plaintiffs and defendants, including the defendant W. B. Maxwell, that the appeal proposed to be taken from the decree of June 21, 1900, was only "so far as said decree adjudicated the rights of said W. H. Lipscomb, A. J. Lipscomb, C. W. Minear, J. W. James & Co., C. H. Maxwell, George C. Williams, Mortimer G. Williams, Sallie L. Reynolds, T. S. Reynolds, W. H. Williams, Horace D. Williams, Lucy V. Hanson, and John A. Hanson, and will not appeal from any of the other matters adjudicated in said cause, and that, for the purpose of presenting the matter appealed from, I will not have a full transcript of said cause made"—then mentions the portions of the record that he had directed the clerk to include in the transcript, and closes his notice by saying: "And it is not my purpose or intention to appeal from any other part of said final decree, except as aforesaid, and any party to said cause desiring to have any other part of said cause reviewed should take such action as is proper to secure the part of the record pertaining thereto copied as provided by the statute in such cases made and provided." In 2 Cyc. 969, under the title "Appeal and Error," it is said: "Where only a part of a judgment or decree is appealed from, the remainder is unaffected, and may be enforced; and if the appeal from a particular order or judgment does not bring the entire cause into the appellate court, but only sufficient of the record to present the question as to the propriety of the particular order, further proceedings in the conduct of the cause are properly had in the lower court. An appeal from an order upon a motion brings up the motion only, as well as copies of papers on which it is passed, and does not bring up the action." And authorities there cited. And under the same title. 3 Cyc. 220: "In case of an appeal from a part of a judgment or decree, the appellate court will not review the whole judgment or decree." In Pac. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 224, 39 Pac. 758, it is held: "A party cannot assign as error a particular part of a judgment as to which he has not appealed." And in Scutt's Appeal, 46 Conn. 38, where it is held that an appeal to the superior court from the disallowance by the commissioners of an insolvent estate of one of two claims does not carry up for review the allowance of the other. In Ikerd v. Postlewhaite, 34 La. Ann. 1235: "The appellate court will not review the whole of a judgment when the appeal is from a part only." And in Robertson v. Bullions, 11 N. Y. 243, it is held: "The Court of Appeals cannot review any part of a decree not appealed from." See, also, Moerchen v. Stoll, 48 Wis. 307, 4 N. W. 352; Stanton v. Gohler (Sup.) 16 Misc. Rep. 383, 38 N. Y. Supp. 64. Where several coplaintiffs or defendants stand upon distinct and unconnected grounds, when their rights are separate and not equally affected by the same decree, the appeal of one does not bring up for adjudication the rights or claims of the others. Walker's Ex'r v. Page, 21 Grat. 636. And it is there further held that, where the parties not appealing stand upon the same ground as those appealing, the Supreme Court will consider the whole case, and settle the rights of all parties. And see Rorer's Heirs v. Roanoke Nat. Bank, 33 Va. 589, 4 S. E. 820; Bowlby v. De Witt, 47 W. Va. 323, 34 S. E. 919.

The decree complained of is reversed as to the claim of C. W. Minear, and a decree entered against Minear as hereinbefore stated, and the decree in favor of A. J. Lipscomb is reversed, set aside, and annulled, and the cause remanded for further proceedings as herein indicated, with costs to the appellant, and the decree is affirmed as to the appellees C. H. Maxwell and Mary C. Cameron's heirs, and in all other respects, with costs and damages to said appellees.

(56 W. Va. 333)

STATE v. SCHMULBACH BREWING CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—LICENSE—BREWERIES.

1. A brewery which has paid the license tax required by sections 54, 55, c. 32, of the Code of 1890, must have a license under section 62 of said chapter, to entitle it to sell its product at wholesale.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Wood County; L. N. Tavenner, Judge.

The Schmulbach Brewing Company was convicted of selling beer without a license, and brings error. Affirmed.

John A. Howard, for plaintiff in error.
The Attorney General and H. H. Moss, Jr., for defendant in error.

McWHORTER, J. The Schmulbach Brewing Company, a corporation doing business in the city of Wheeling, Ohio county, having paid a manufacturer's license as a brewer, under sections 54 and 55 of chapter 32 of the Code of 1890, was indicted in the criminal court of Wood county for selling without a license therefor. When the case was called for trial the facts were agreed as follows: "The defendant, the Schmulbach Brewing Company is a corporation duly organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the state of West Virginia, and is engaged in carrying on the business of a brewer of beer. Its brewery is situated in the city of Wheeling, in the county of Ohio, state of West Virginia, and that it sells the beer it manufactures generally throughout the state of West Virginia and elsewhere, and that it pays the license required by sections 54 and 55 of chapter 32 of the Code of 1890, and had such license during the period covered by the indictment in this case. It is further agreed that on the date charged in the indictment the defendant, in the county of Wood, state of West Virginia, sold beer in wholesale quantities to L. L. Moore and J. W. Hoffman, partners under the firm name and style of Hoffman & Moore, in the saloon business, and that at the time it made such sale it had no other license than that hereinbefore mentioned; that is to say, it (the defendant) did not have the license of a wholesale dealer nor of a retail dealer in intoxicating liquors at the time of the sales charged in the indictment, in the county of Wood and state of West Virginia, but did have the license of a manufacturer of beer in the county of Ohio, state of West Virginia, where its brewery is situated, and where the beer sold in the county of Wood to the said L. L. Moore and J. W. Hoffman was manufactured. It is agreed by the defendant, the Schmulbach Brewing Company, and by the state, that the above is a full and true statement of facts in this case, and the defendant waives its right to a trial by jury, and submits this case to the court in lieu of a jury." On the 30th of January, 1902, the case being submitted upon the agreed facts, the court was of opinion that the defendant was guilty as charged in the indictment, assessed its fine at $20, and entered judgment therefor. The circuit court refused a writ of error. There is no brief filed by the prosecuting attorney of the county nor by the Attorney General on behalf of the state. It is insisted by counsel for the defendant that the defendant's license to manufacture carries with it the right to sell its manufactured products, and that the real question involved is the construction or interpretation of chapter 40, p. 140, Acts 1890, which act amended section 54 of chapter 32 of the Code by inserting therein the words "shall be coextensive with the state," which made the section read, as amended, "A license to carry on a distillery for the manufacture of whisky or brandy, or a brewery for the manufacture of beer or ale, shall be coextensive with the state, and shall be regulated, and the amount fixed by the following classification," assuming that the license to manufacture necessarily carried with it the license to sell at wholesale the product of the brewery, and the case is argued by counsel for the defendant company upon that theory alone. In my view of the case, that question whether a license to brew is coextensive with the state is not here involved at all. The sole question for decision is whether a brewing company paying a license tax as a manufacturer can sell its manufactured beer at wholesale without having a wholesale license therefor. Section 62 of the same chapter provides there shall be paid "on every license to sell spirituous liquors, wine, porter, ale, beer and drinks of like nature at wholesale, $350 in addition to all other taxes." There is no exception made in favor of any class of sellers by the statute, and all who deal in such liquors, whether they sell by wholesale or retail, are required to obtain a license and pay the tax imposed. Section 62 provides that the $350 wholesale tax is "in addition to all other taxes." The tax is charged and paid for the privilege of selling, and from the section quoted it seems clear that no person shall be permitted to sell without first having obtained a license therefor; but, if a shadow of doubt should remain on this point, section 65 of the same chapter dispels it, and makes clear the intention of the law makers. This section provides that "apple and peach brandy distilled within any of the counties of this state from fruit grown in the state, may be sold by the distiller thereof in quantities not less than five gallons at a time, to be carried away and not drank on the premises where sold, by paying a license tax of one hundred dollars." This shows beyond all question that the Legislature intended distillers and brewers to pay a tax for selling. The statute requiring manufacturer's license is without exception. It applies to all brewers and distillers alike. Section 65 favors distillers of fruit by requiring a less license tax to sell, perhaps because of the limited quantity of material to be used in that way, as well as the limited season for operating. If brewers, who, by paying a manufacturer's license only, are permitted to sell under such license at wholesale, by what rule can they be prevented from selling at retail their manufactured products under the same license? It may be answered that under section 65 only one class of distillers is required to have a license to sell at wholesale the product of their distilleries; all others being free to sell at wholesale under their manufacturer's license. This is not a reasonable construction of the law. Without section 65 all distillers would have to pay the wholesale license required by section 62. Clearly, the intention was to relieve the smaller distillers of apple and peach brandy to the extent of the difference between the license required under section 62 and that required under section 65, and not to discriminate against them. Black on Intoxicating Liquors, § 23, is cited by counsel for defendant to show what constitutes a wholesale liquor dealer, and also Taylor v. Vincent, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 282, 47 Am. Rep. 338, where it is held, "A manufacturer of liquors, selling in unbroken packages at his place of business, is not a wholesale liquor dealer liable to taxation as other merchants." However, on the other hand, I find in Webb v. State, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 662, it is held: "Manufacturers of whisky and brandy, out of products of farms and orchards in the state, who sell by wholesale, are liable for the privilege tax imposed upon wholesale dealers." But why continue the examination of authorities when the statute itself is too plain to be misunderstood? The wholesale license is a tax for the privilege of selling, and what the purpose of the Legislature may have been in amending section 54 by providing that the license therein mentioned should "be coextensive with the state" has nothing to do with the question in this case, as it applies only to the manufacture, and not to the selling.

The judgment is affirmed.

(56 W. Va. 306)

ROBINSON et al. v. LOWE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1904.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. An erroneous or irrelevant instruction on a material point is presumed to be to the prejudice of the party appealing, against whom it is given, and will cause reversal, unless it clearly appears from the record that it was harmless. Ward v. Ward, 35 S. E. 873, 47 W. Va. 766.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Circuit Court, Wetzel County; M. H. Willis, Judge.

Action by S. I. Robinson and others against John M. Lowe. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

E. B. Snodgrass, T. P. Jacobs, E. L. Robinson, and E. A. Brannon, for plaintiffs in error.
E. O. Keifer, for defendant in error.

MILLER, J. This case was here once before on writ of error awarded to defendant, Lowe. The then judgment in favor of the plaintiffs was reversed, and the case remanded. See Robinson v. Lowe, 50 W. Va. 75. It is now here on writ of error to a judgment therein in favor of Lowe for the lands hereinafter referred to. Plaintiffs claim title to a tract of 136 acres, described by metes and bounds in their declaration;

but the lands really in controversy, as shown by the record, are two alleged interlocks, one called the "Island Interlock," and the other the "Gas Well Interlock," the first containing about 10, and the second about 20, acres. Counsel for plaintiffs in error concede that the defendant has shown himself entitled to hold, by adversary possession, the island interlock. This concession eliminates it from further consideration, and narrows the controversy to the gas well interlock, which is held by the Philadelphia Gas Company under lease from plaintiff S. I. Robinson. There was a trial to a jury, a verdict in favor of defendant, a motion to have the same set aside, which was overruled, judgment rendered thereon, and exceptions taken and saved on the record by plaintiffs.

Upon the trial, to maintain the issue on their part, the plaintiffs introduced the following documentary evidence: (1) A patent of the commonwealth of Virginia, bearing date on the 1st day of October, 1859, which grants to the plaintiff S. I. Robinson, by metes and bounds, the tract of 136 acres described in the declaration; and (2) a deed executed by Jared Morris, as attorney in fact for T. M. Ewart, to the plaintiff S. M. Robinson, in and by the name of Sarah M. Robinson, bearing date on the 16th day of October, 1877, for 126 acres. The beginning corner, and most of the other corners and lines, called for in the patent and deed, are the same. It thus appears that the 126 acres are included within the calls of the 136 acres. The record states that the blue prints, and the map from which they are taken, were given in evidence; but no such papers are printed in the record, and none such appear in the former record, to which our attention is called by the brief of counsel for plaintiffs. There is also evidence tending to prove actual, open, and continuous possession of the land by plaintiffs under their said title papers, and of valuable and permanent improvements made thereon by their tenants.

The defendant introduced as evidence the following papers: (1) A patent of the commonwealth of Virginia, bearing date on the 26th day of October, 1819, which grants to Achilles Morgan, by metes and bounds, a tract of land containing 300 acres; (2) a deed by Morgan and wife, bearing date on the 14th day of June, 1820, to James Lowe, for the same land; (3) a deed from James Lowe and wife, bearing date on the 28th day of July, 1848, to Levi M. Lowe, for said land, the first call in the last-mentioned deed being "144," instead of "142," poles, as stated in the preceding deed and also in the patent; (4) another patent from the commonwealth of Virginia, bearing date on the 31st day of July, 1843, which grants to said Levi M. Lowe, by the name of Levy Lowe, 50 acres; (5) a deed from Levi M. Lowe and wife, bearing date on the 5th day of June, 1882, to defendant, John M. Lowe, for a tract of 130 acres, described therein by metes and bounds; and (6) a copy of a survey of 100 acres, made on the 10th day of November, 1848, for William King. The defendant also gave in evidence acts by himself and tenants under his said deed, tending to prove his adversary possession of the land in dispute. The patent to plaintiff for the 136 acres begins "at a beech, corner to Levi M. Lowe; and its first line runs thence with two of his [Lowe's] lines, S., 74 E., 54 poles, to a hickory; thence N., 25 E., 100 poles, to a chestnut oak in William King's line." We find in the 50-acre patent those objects, and substantially the said two calls. Plaintiff S. I. Robinson, who testifies as to the location of those lines and corners, does not claim that his patent or his wife's deed interlaps the 50-acre patent. We therefore conclude that there is no interlock of the 136 and 50 acre patents, so far as the gas well interlock, now in controversy, is concerned. The alleged interlock, if any there be, is occasioned by the deed from Levi M. Lowe to defendant for the 130-acre tract. Upon this assumption plaintiffs' action is based. If any part of the 50-acre tract be included within the gas well interlock, and be also covered by and included in the said deed to defendant, which must be determined by the evidence, then it follows that, whatever claim or title Levi M. Lowe had to such parcel of said 50-acre tract on the 5th day of June, 1882, passed to and became vested in the defendant by virtue of the deed to him, of the date last aforesaid.

There is a great mass of evidence—about 275 pages of printed matter—the most of which relates to the location of the corners and lines mentioned in the alleged title papers, given in evidence by the parties respectively. There is much testimony tending to prove that, if correctly surveyed and laid down, the gas well interlock will not fall within the plaintiffs' true boundaries. It is urged by defendant that plaintiffs have not identified the exterior boundaries of the land claimed by them. The evidence relating to the identification and location of their alleged corners and lines is neither certain nor conclusive. Before the plaintiff can recover in an action of ejectment, he must identify the land claimed, so far as the exterior boundaries thereof are concerned. Miller v. Holt, 47 W. Va. 7, 34 S. E. 956; Coal Co. v. Howell, 36 W. Va. 490, 15 S. E. 214; Jeffrey v. Lemon, decided at the present term.¹

The court, at the instance of defendant, and over the objection of plaintiffs, gave to the jury 16 several instructions, some of which, as plaintiffs contend, are mere abstractions, and others erroneous, inapplicable, and misleading. It is not deemed necessary here to refer specifically to more than one of them, which is in the following words: "The court instructs the jury that in the trial of an action of ejectment it is not necessary for the defendant to show that he has any title to the land in controversy, but can defeat the plaintiff's claim by showing a title to the land in controversy in some other person than the plaintiff." It is the right of any party to an action or suit to have the ruling of the court, hypothetically, by way of instructions to the jury, upon the facts to be found by them from the evidence. "Instructions may be shortly defined as directions in regard to the law of the case. * * * The third and most important function of instructions is to declare what rules of law will apply to any state of facts which may be found in the case, and to assist the jury in correctly applying those rules to the facts." 1 Blashfield on Instr. 1, 3; State v. Dodds, 54 W. Va. 289, 46 S. E. 228; Hyde's Digest (W. Va.) vol. 2, 2826 et seq. The plaintiffs contend that defendant introduced the 50-acre patent to prove an outstanding title to the land in controversy in a stranger, and that, no evidence having been offered by defendant to show that it was then a subsisting, operative, legal title, on which the owner could have recovered had he been asserting it in an action, the instruction was for that reason erroneous, irrelevant, and misleading. Wilson v. Braden, 43 W. Va. 196, 36 S. E. 367; Parkersburg Industrial Co. v. Schultz et al., 43 W. Va. 471, 27 S. E. 255; Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347; Greenleaf v. Birth, 6 Pet. 302, 9 L. Ed. 132; Newell on Eject. 652. The instruction was and is erroneous. The defendant asserts that the 50-acre patent was offered not to show outstanding title, but to establish the boundary of plaintiffs' patent; to prove that no interlock existed; and to connect defendant's title with the commonwealth. His contention seems to be the more reasonable and consistent with the other facts in the case. In this maze of uncertainty we are left in doubt and confusion. Nevertheless, we are asked to reverse the action of the circuit court, and set aside the verdict as being contrary to the law and the evidence, and because of the instructions given as aforesaid. The jury may have found as they did because they believed from the evidence that plaintiffs had not sufficiently identified the exterior boundaries of the land claimed by them; that plaintiffs' land did not cover said alleged interlock; that defendant had good and sufficient title to the controverted parcel; or that the title thereto was outstanding in a stranger. It has been repeatedly held that, where a case has been fairly submitted to a jury, and a verdict fairly rendered, it ought not to be interfered with by the court, unless manifest wrong and injustice has been done, or unless the verdict is plainly not warranted by the evidence or facts proved. Mil- ler v. Ina Co., 12 W. Va. 116, 29 Am. Rep. 452; Grayson's Case, 6 Grat. 712; Thompson's Case, 21 W. Va. 741; State v. Yates, 21 W. Va. 761. It is the province of the jury to weigh the testimony, and the appellate court will not disturb their finding, sustained by the lower court, unless it be plainly contrary to the preponderance of the evidence. Scott v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 43 W. Va. 484, 27 S. E. 211. We cannot, therefore, disturb the verdict on the question of preponderance of the evidence. But we are not unmindful of the rule that an instruction should not be given unless relevant, and it is not relevant unless there be evidence tending to prove the facts on which the instruction is based. Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 663, 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668; Coffman v. Hedrick, 32 W. Va. 119, 9 S. E. 65; Carrico v. W. Va. Cent. & P. R. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 86, 19 S. E. 571, 24 L. R. A. 50. In Ward v. Ward, 47 W. Va. 766, 35 S. E. 873, it is held that an erroneous instruction on a material point is presumed to be to the prejudice of the party appealing, against whom it is given, and will cause reversal, unless it clearly appears from the record that it was harmless. Stevenson v. Wallace, 27 Grat. 77; Osborne v. Francis, 38 W. Va. 312, 18 S. E. 591, 45 Am. St. Rep. 859. We are asked to eliminate and disregard the above instruction as harmless error. The defendant evidently believed that the 50-acre patent tended to show outstanding title, and would thereby materially aid him in his defense; otherwise he would not have asked an instruction thereon. It is held in McVey v. St. Clair Co., 49 W. Va. 412, 38 S. E. 648, that, if improper instructions be given, or proper ones refused, on the trial, the judgment will be reversed, unless the evidence be so plainly and decidedly in favor of the finding of the jury that the giving or refusal of such instructions amounts to merely harmless error. Bank of Huntington v. Napier, 41 W. Va. 481, 23 S. E. 900. The evidence is conflicting and contradictory upon the material points involved. The instruction being erroneous and irrelevant, we cannot say what effect it had upon the jury. It is presumed to have been prejudicial to the plaintiffs.

¹Rehearing pending.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, a new trial granted, and the case remanded.

(56 W. Va. 345)

FIRST NAT. BANK OF JEFFERSON v. HARRIS et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1904.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—WHAT SUFFICIENT PROOF OF INDEBTEDNESS—COMMISSIONER'S REPORT—EXCEPTIONS.

1. The claim of a married woman against her husband, unless impeached for fraud, is subject to the same rules of proof as any other debt against him; and she is not bound to show affirmatively, in absence of any allegation to the contrary, that such debt is free from fraud.

2. An exception to a commissioner's report on the ground that the evidence of an insolvent husband is insufficient to sustain his wife's claim against his estate, in the absence of any allegation impeaching such claim for fraud, is an exception to the competency of the husband as a witness in behalf of his wife, and should be overruled. Section 22, c. 130, Code 1899.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County; E. Boyd Faulkner, Judge.

Bill by the First National Bank of Jefferson against George Harris and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph Trapnell and T. O. Greene, for appellant. B. D. Gibson, for appellees.

DENT, J. Appeal of the First National Bank of Jefferson, etc., from a decree of the circuit court of Jefferson county in favor of Mary E. Davis. The First National Bank of Jefferson filed its bill in the circuit court of Jefferson county, attacking a deed of trust executed by Albert F. Davis, insolvent, conveying all his property in trust to secure his wife, Mary E. Davis, to the amount of $3,500, evidenced by notes, as giving an unlawful preference to the various preferred creditors named, and praying that such trust be held for the benefit of all the creditors of the grantor, and that the proceeds thereof be prorated among all the creditors of the grantor. No answers were filed, the bill was taken for confessed, and the court referred the case to a commissioner to ascertain and report the indebtedness of the insolvent, and the property liable to the payment of the same. On the filing of the report, the following exception was endorsed thereon: "The auditing of the claim or debt in favor of Mary E. Davis in class No. 2 of this report, for $3,500, and $931 interest, is excepted to, because said claim is not sustained by the evidence; and said claim is excepted to, and claim should not be allowed, as the testimony of a husband in behalf of claim of his wife against the husband, an insolvent. B. D. Gibson, T. O. Green, Attorneys for Creditor." On the hearing of such exception, the following decree was entered: "The court, not now passing upon the said exception, but being of the opinion that an opportunity should be afforded the said creditor, Mary E. Davis, to submit further testimony in support of her claim, if any she have, doth adjudge, order, and decree that this cause be recommitted to Commissioner Cleon Moore, with instructions to inquire further into said matters of the demand of Mary E. Davis, and to certify such evidence as may be produced before him, and make report to the next term of the court." Further depositions were taken, and on final hearing the court overruled the exception, and allowed the claim of Mary E. Davis as a just debt, entitled to participation under the deed of trust.

The appellants here insist that the court erred in allowing further time to Mary E. Davis to sustain her claim by proof. The bill does not attack the claim of Mrs. Davis as in any wise fraudulent, nor in any manner invalid, nor is there any petition or other pleading in the cause doing so. Hence the commissioner had the right to report the debt as admitted, without other proof than the note and the deed of trust, which, in the absence of all allegations to the contrary, are certainly sufficient to establish the justness thereof. The first time and the only manner in which the claim of Mrs. Davis is attacked is by the exception to the commissioner's report, and, after such attack was made, if necessary, Mrs. Davis was entitled to have an opportunity to meet and repel it, and, if not necessary, the exceptors have no grounds of complaint.

The exception, however, does not attack Mrs. Davis' claim as fraudulent as to creditors, but only asserts that the claim should not be allowed on the testimony of her insolvent husband. If the claim had in any proper proceeding been impeached for fraud, such exception might have weight. A husband, by statute, is made a competent witness in behalf of his wife. Section 22, c. 130, Code 1899. And in the absence of any allegations of fraud, his admissions on oath are sufficient to establish the justice of her claim against his property. A husband may confess a judgment in favor of his wife which will be valid to bind his estate, unless successfully impeached for fraud. Bennett v. Bennett, 37 W. Va. 396, 16 S. E. 638, 38 Am. St. Rep. 47. The appellants were both plaintiffs in this suit—one by bill, and the other by petition—and neither in the bill nor petition is Mrs. Davis' claim attempted to be impeached as fraudulent, and hence both bill and petition must be taken to admit the validity of the same. It is a well-established rule that fraud must be alleged, and, in the absence of such allegation, the court will not examine the evidence to ascertain whether it discloses a fraudulent transaction, as is said by Judge Brannon in the case of Bank v. Atkinson, 32 W. Va. 209, 9 S. E. 178. "The rule of pleading is that the allegata et probata must both exist and correspond, and the probata can perform no function unless preceded by allegata. Matters not charged in the bill or averred in the answer cannot be considered on the hearing." Hunter's Executor v. Hunter, 10 W. Va. 321.

The exception filed is in no sense sufficient to raise the invalidity of Mrs. Davis' claim but only goes to the weight or measure of the evidence necessary to sustain such claim in the absence of any allegations impeaching the same. For this purpose the evidence is amply sufficient, and the exception was properly overruled.

In each of the cases relied upon by appellants, there was direct impeachment of the wife's claim as being fraudulent as to the husband's creditors. Miller v. Cox, 38 W. Va. 747, 18 S. E. 960; Bank v. Atkinson, 32 W. Va. 203, 9 S. E. 175; Zinn v. Law, 32 W. Va. 447, 9 S. E. 871.

Unless the wife's claim is impeached as fraudulent, she is not bound to prove affirmatively freedom from fraud. Until such impeachment is made, she stands on the same footing as any other creditor, and the debtor's admission or testimony is sufficient to establish a debt in her favor.

For these reasons, the decree is affirmed.

(56 W. Va. 314)

SCOTT v. ISAACSEN et al.

CURTIN & CO. v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1904.)

MORTGAGE—LIEN—PROPERTY HELD IN TRUST—NOTICE.

1. H. negotiated the purchase of 200 acres of land for I., but with the understanding and agreement between them at the time that I. was to pay the purchase money therefor, which he did, and was to have 100 acres of the land, with all of the oak and poplar timber on the whole tract. For his services in making the purchase, H. was to have 100 acres of the land, to be taken from the end thereof which he might select. The title bond for the land was taken in the name of I. One hundred acres of the land was surveyed and platted to H. with the acquiescence of I. Afterwards I. executed to C. & Co. a mortgage on the 200 acres, and still later took from the vendors a deed for the land in his own name; but C. & Co. had no knowledge or notice of the claim to or interest of H. in the land at the time of the execution and delivery of the mortgage to them.

Held, that I. took the legal title to the land, and holds the same as trustee for H., to the extent of the right and interest of H. in the land, but that the mortgage of C. & Co. binds the 100 acres selected by and laid off to H. as aforesaid for the balance of the mortgage debt, after applying thereon the proceeds of the sale of the residue of the mortgaged property.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bills by Marshall Scott against Leon Isaacson and others, and by Curtin & Co. against the same defendants. From the decrees, defendant A. P. Hart appeals. Reversed.

C. H. Scott, for appellant. Harding & Harding and W. B. Maxwell, for appellees.

MILLER, J. This is an appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Randolph county, made in the two causes above styled, heard together. They were here once before. Curtin et al. v. Isaacson et al., 36 W. Va. 391, 15 S. E. 171. But the question now before the court was not then adjudicated. The sole controversy now is between appellant, Alexander P. Hart, and appellees, Curtin & Co., as to the ownership of and right to a parcel of 100 acres of land, part of a 200-acre tract situate on Roaring creek, in said county.

Defendant Leon Isaacson conveyed the 200-acre tract to Curtin & Co. by his deed, which was and is a mortgage, bearing date on the 22d day of April, 1889, and which was duly admitted to record on the following day. It recites a consideration of $8,935.25 theretofore advanced by the grantees to the grantor, then due and payable. Isaacson did not then have the legal title to the land. On the 1st day of April, 1888, and prior thereto, the tract of land was owned by M. W. Harrison and Thomas A. Edwards, who lived at Weston, in Lewis county. Isaacson desired to buy the land. It adjoined the land on which Hart lived. Hart was well acquainted with the land and the timber thereon. In his answer, Hart says that, on or about the date last aforesaid, Isaacson agreed with him that, if he would go to Weston and buy the land at a price not to exceed $4 per acre, he (Isaacson) would pay for it, and take all the oak and poplar timber thereon, and 100 acres thereof, and that Hart should have the other 100 acres, with the right to choose which end of the tract he would take; that thereupon Hart went to Weston, agreed with the owners upon terms of purchase, returned to Grafton and received Isaacson's check for $800, went back with it to Weston, delivered it to Harrison and Edwards as payment for the land, and took from them a title bond or contract in writing showing that Isaacson had become the purchaser of the land. Why the deed was not then executed by the vendors does not appear. The deal was thus consummated on the 12th day of April, 1888. Hart further alleges that in pursuance of the said contract of purchase, and by reason thereof, Isaacson procured one Milton Hart, a surveyor, to survey said tract of land, to make a plat thereof, and to divide the same between himself and the respondent, which was done about April 8, 1889, after Isaacson had taken the poplar and part of the oak timber from the 100 acres which was selected by respondent as his share of the land, and which was so laid off to him by said Milton Hart; that respondent has had actual possession of his part of said tract of land, claiming to own the same under his contract with Isaacson, from that time to the present, and that his ownership thereof is good, notwithstanding the fact that Isaacson has declined to give him a title bond or contract in writing showing his ownership as aforesaid. Respondent then prays that, before any decree be rendered in the cause for the sale of the 200 acres of land, the said 100 acres thereof so laid off to him by Milton Hart be exempted and relieved from the operation of the said deed of April 22, 1889, and that the allotment of said tract of land so made by Milton Hart, and of which he made a plat, be confirmed. On the 12th day of May, 1899, M. W. Harrison, S. E. Harrison, and Mary O. Edwards filed their answer, accompanied by a deed of said last-named respondents to Isaacson for the 200 acres of land. This deed bears date on the 18th day of July, 1894; is executed by M. W. Harrison, Sarah E. Harrison, his wife, and Mary O. Edwards, as widow and devisee of Thomas A. Edwards, deceased; recites the payment of $800 theretofore paid to said M. W. Harrison and Thomas A. Edwards as a consideration for the land; and describes it by metes and bounds. To the answer of Alexander P. Hart, Curtin & Co. filed a special reply in writing, denying specifically all the material allegations therein. At the January term, 1901, the circuit court further heard the causes on the sole matter in controversy, and decreed that Curtin & Co., without further conveyance thereof, were and should be the owners in fee of the whole of said 200 acres of land, including the 100 acres, part thereof, claimed by appellant, Hart.

From this decree Hart was granted an appeal, and says that the circuit court erred to his prejudice, because it found against him, and refused to compel a conveyance of said 100 acres of land to him, and because the whole of said 200 acres, including the 100 acres thereof claimed by petitioner, was decreed to Curtin & Co. There are other assignments of error, but the decision of the questions above stated will determine the controversy.

Appellant claims the right to specific performance of his alleged contract with Isaacsen, and to have a conveyance of the 100 acres of land from Isaacsen or his vendees, Curtin & Co. This involves an examination and consideration of the evidence.

The testimony clearly and conclusively proves the truth of the allegations in the answer of appellant, A. P. Hart, as to the purchase of the 200 acres, and also that Isaacsen employed Milton Hart, a surveyor, to survey the parcel of 100 acres of land in controversy; that on or about the 3d day of April, 1889, Milton Hart surveyed and laid off 100 acres of the land as claimed by A. P. Hart, and made and delivered to him a plat thereof, which is made a part of the record; and that afterwards the surveyor communicated to Isaacsen what he had done, and received from Isaacsen his pay therefor. The sale of the land by Harrison and Edwards to Isaacsen, through Hart, was consummated on the 12th day of April, 1888. On the 22d day of April, 1889, before he had obtained the legal title thereto, Isaacsen, by his deed, and another written contract of that date, conveyed the said 200 acres to Curtin & Co., but this deed and written agreement were treated together by Curtin & Co. as a mortgage, and so held by this court supra. Before that date, A. P. Hart, having fully performed his agreement with Isaacsen as to the purchase thereof, was the equitable owner of 100 of the 200 acres of land, and was then entitled to the legal title to the same from Isaacsen. "Where two or more persons purchase or acquire lands under a specific agreement between themselves, and pursuant to such agreement the legal title to the lands is taken in the name of one of them, the holder of said title is a trustee for the others to the extent of the interest of such others in said lands." Despard v. Despard, 53 W. Va. 443, 44 S. E. 448. See, also, cases cited in Hyde's W. Va. Dig. vol. 3, col. 4594, "Resulting and Implied Trusts;" 1 Perry on Trusts, § 126 et seq.; Underhill on Trusts & Trustees, 160. But there is no allegation by Hart in his answer that Curtin & Co. had any notice or knowledge of his interest in or claim to the land at the time the conveyance of the 22d day of April, 1889, was executed by Isaacsen and accepted by Curtin & Co. The testimony on this point does not sufficiently prove either actual or constructive notice to them. Hart's evidence as to his possession of the land—it being the only evidence introduced on that question—is as follows: "Q. What has been the character of your possession of said 100 acres of land from the time of your said purchase from Harrison and Edwards up to the present time? A. My possession is, that it joins the land I reside on, and I have a little cleared on the 100 acres, and have the cleared part under fence. Q. When did you make said improvements on said 100 acres of land? A. In May, I think it was, last spring." It appears from the record, and admission by counsel in court, that the land which Hart says he resided upon was then owned by his wife, who also lived with him thereon. "The actual possession proper of the husband of a part or all of his wife's lands does not, in and of itself, give him constructive actual possession of his own contiguous tract." Coal Co. v. Howell, 36 W. Va. 513, 15 S. E. 222. The above testimony was given by Hart on the 27th day of December, 1889. According to it, the improvement on the land was made by him after the execution of the deed by Isaacsen to Curtin & Co. No notice to them being shown, Curtin & Co. must be treated as purchasers of the land from Isaacsen for a valuable consideration, without notice of Hart's claim to or interest in the land, and therefore are not, as to their demand, affected by his claim. The deed to Curtin & Co. conveys the land to them as security for their debt due from Isaacsen. It is a mortgage, and tantamount to a deed of trust made for the same purpose. In Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Grat. 157, the court says: "A pre-existing debt is of itself a valuable consideration for a deed of trust executed for its security, which deed, if it be legally recorded, and was not executed with a fraudulent intent known to the trustee or the beneficiaries therein, will be valid against all prior secret liens and equities and all subsequent alienations and incumbrances." See, also, Fidelity Co. v. Railroad Co., 32 W. Va. 244, 9 S. E. 180; Duncan v. Custard, 24 W. Va.

730; Wickham v. Martin, 13 Grat. 427; Douglass Mdse. Co. v. Laird, 37 W. Va. 687, 17 S. E. 188. When Isaacsen afterwards acquired the legal title to the land from Harrison and Edwards, he thereby became the holder of said title as trustee for Hart to the extent of the interest of Hart in the land. But Hart's interest therein was and is subject to Curtin & Co.'s mortgage, to the extent of the balance due to them from Isaacsen on the mortgage debt, after the proceeds of the sale of Isaacsen's interest in the land, and other property of which he was the owner, and which was conveyed to them by the mortgage, has been applied to the debt. Hart is entitled to a specific enforcement of his contract with Isaacsen for the purchase of said land against both Isaacsen and Curtin & Co. Having fully complied with the said contract on his part, he was, before and at the date of the decree appealed from, entitled to a deed for the 100 acres of land laid off to him by Milton Hart, surveyor, a plat and description of which is filed in the papers of the cause; but such deed, and the land thereby conveyed, had the deed been then executed, would have been subject to the mortgage of Curtin & Co. to the extent hereinbefore stated. Hart was and is entitled to have Isaacsen's 100 acres of the land and the other mortgaged property sold, and the proceeds of the sale applied to the mortgage debt, in order to relieve his 100 acres of the land.

The court therefore erred in decreeing that Curtin & Co., without further conveyance thereof, were and should be the owners in fee of said 200 acres of land, including the 100 acres, part thereof, claimed by Hart. The decree appealed from, being erroneous and prejudicial to Hart, must be reversed and set aside, and the cause remanded to the circuit court, wherein a decree must be entered in the cause requiring said Leon Isaacsen and Curtin & Co. to convey said 100 acres of land, as described in the plat thereof, made by said Milton Hart, and filed as aforesaid, to appellant, A. P. Hart, by an apt and proper deed, with covenants of special warranty, but subject to the balance which may be due on the mortgage debt from Isaacsen to Curtin & Co. after applying on the debt the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property, not including Hart's 100 acres thereof; and upon failure of Isaacsen and Curtin & Co., or either of them, to execute such deed within a reasonable time to be given to them for the purpose, a special commissioner, to be appointed, will do so for them. The circuit court is also directed to make and enter a decree in the cause, if any person in interest so desire, for the foreclosure of said mortgage on, and a sale of, the remaining 100 acres of land, giving a day to Isaacsen, the mortgagor, for the redemption thereof, but reserving in such decree the right to Curtin & Co. to proceed further against the Hart 100 acres if it should thereafter become necessary to do so.

(12 Ga. 334)

YOUNG v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

HOMICIDE—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

1. The evidence relied upon for conviction was entirely circumstantial, and was not sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused. The verdict was therefore contrary to law.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Albert Young was convicted of murder, and brings error. Reversed.

John R. Cooper and Hines & Vinson, for plaintiff in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and Joseph E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Albert Young was convicted of the offense of murder. The evidence relied upon to sustain the conviction was entirely circumstantial. It was shown that Young and a woman named Lily Anderson had, some three years before the homicide, sustained criminally intimate relations with each other, when the woman became tired of him, and "took up with" one Gus King, with whom she sustained similar relations. Young appeared dissatisfied with this conduct on the part of the woman, and on several occasions followed her about with a gun. On two occasions he was heard to make quasi threats against King. One of these was that, if he went to kill King, he was going to kill him, and not play with him. The other was that, if King had gone off, he "had better have stayed off." These threats were made a few days before the homicide. King was killed in a public road, by shot evidently fired from a shotgun. Tracks were found on a private road which branched off from the road in which King was killed. According to one of the witnesses, these tracks resembled Young's tracks. There was no evidence to show when the tracks were made. They were discovered the morning after the killing. The private road was regularly used by a number of people in the neighborhood, among them the accused. There was a clump of bushes near the side of the public road, behind which a man could have hidden, and within gunshot of the place where King's body was found. The tracks alleged to have been Young's were not, however, shown to have led to these bushes. A piece of paper was found near the body of the deceased in the road, but the evidence does not disclose whether or not it appeared to have been discharged from a gun or to have been used as a gun wad. It also appeared that one barrel of Young's gun had been recently discharged, and that one of the witnesses pulled a wad from the other barrel. These are all the material facts appearing in the record to sustain the conviction. The motive claimed to have been proved was Young's jealousy and anger that the deceased had "taken up with" the woman in the case, who had three years before the homicide been intimate with the accused. The accused, the deceased, and the woman appear to have lived in the same neighborhood—as far as appears, upon the same plantation. The woman had left Young three years before, and in the meantime there had been abundant opportunity for Young to have killed King, if this was the motive which actuated the crime. The tracks were not shown to have been recently made. There had been no rain just before the homicide, and the tracks may have been made before the death of King. Whether they were Young's tracks at all was merely the opinion of one of the witnesses. The tracks had not been measured or compared with the shoes worn by Young at the time. The opinion of a witness as to the tracks of any particular individual adds little to a case unless there is something more. So many men wear the same sort of shoes and walk in the same manner that it is hardly possible to identify tracks positively. In the present case the witness swore to the tracks because of peculiarities in Young's shoe and in his way of walking, but others may have had the same peculiarities. Conceding, however, that these were Young's tracks, the evidence did not show that the tracks led to the public road and to the point where the body of the deceased was found. The Solicitor General argued in his brief that the tracks led to the clump of bushes near the dead body, there stopped, and then returned. This does not appear in the record. The only witness who testified as to the tracks testified that he saw Young's tracks where he had passed along the private road, going toward the public road, and had returned. It also appeared that this private road was generally used by Young in going to or from his house. The Solicitor General also argued that the paper found near the dead man was the wad of the gun with which deceased had been killed, and was similar to the wad drawn from the undischarged barrel of Young's gun. The record does not bear out this contention. The coroner, who was introduced as a witness, testified: "There was a paper handed me by some one near the body in the road, and I pulled a wad out of the other barrel of the gun, and have it here." There was no other evidence as to the wadding. There was no evidence that the wad taken from Young's gun was of paper, or that, if so, it resembled in any way the paper found in the road. We cannot tell either that the wad taken from the gun was of paper, or that the paper found in the road appeared to have been used as a gun wad. Neither the paper nor the wad appears to have been put in evidence. The truth is the evidence does not indicate whether the paper found in the road had ever been in a gun at all, but merely shows that a piece of paper was handed to the coroner by some one near the body of the deceased. There was no evidence, either, as to the size or character of the shot in the gun of the accused or of the shot with which deceased had been killed.

For the reasons above indicated, we think the conviction of the accused ought not to stand. The evidence was clearly insufficient to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 337)

BUCKINE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

LARCENY—EVIDENCE.

1. Upon the trial of one accused of the larceny of a $100 bill, evidence that shortly after the commission of the alleged crime the wife of the accused was in possession of a bill of the same denomination and description as the one alleged to have been stolen, and that she sent the bill to a bank, to be changed by another person, was admissible as a circumstance, the probative value of which was for the jury.

2. The evidence was largely circumstantial, and was conflicting, but that for the state was sufficient to warrant the conviction of the accused. The trial judge having expressed his approval of the verdict by his refusal to grant a new trial, this court will not interfere.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Waycross; J. C. Reynolds, Judge.

Zeke Buckine was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Affirmed.

Leon A. Wilson, for plaintiff in error. J. Walter Bennett, for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was convicted upon an accusation charging him with simple larceny. He excepts to the overruling of his motion for a new trial, which was upon the general grounds that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence, and upon the further ground that the court erred in the admission of certain evidence, which will be mentioned hereafter. The evidence for the state was to the effect that the accused came to the home of the prosecutor at an early hour in the morning, and solicited a loan of money, offering a watch as security for the loan; that, after some discussion, the prosecutor agreed to lend the accused $10 on the watch; that thereupon the prosecutor took from a satchel a roll of bills, took off the bill on the outside of the roll, and, without looking at it, handed it to the accused in exchange for the watch. Subsequently he discovered that the bill which he had given the accused was for $100, instead of $10, as he had supposed. Upon being arrested, the accused insisted that the bill he received from the prosecutor was for $10. There was evidence that a few days after the occurrence above related the wife of the accused was in possession of a $100 bill of the same description as the one which the prosecutor claimed to have given the accused, and that she sent it to a bank to be changed. There was no direct evidence that it was the same bill, or that the accused had at any time given his wife a $100 bill; but, on the other hand, there was no evidence to negative either theory. In his statement the accused admitted having received a bill from the prosecutor, but declared that he "took it to be a ten-dollar bill." He further stated that after leaving the house of the prosecutor he went to the railroad station, preparatory to going out on his "run" in the discharge of his duties as a locomotive fireman; that he tried, without success, to have the bill changed as a $10 bill at the ticket office; that he accosted a stranger at the station, whom he had never seen before, and whom he took to be a traveler about to go out on the train, and that this stranger gave him in exchange for the bill a $5 bill and five silver dollars; and that he sent a part of this money home to his wife by a messenger, and proceeded to go out on his run. In many essential particulars his statement was corroborated by the sworn evidence. It was also in evidence that the wife of the accused was a school-teacher, making a good salary, and that she had been in possession of a $100 bill for a considerable time prior to the time of the commission of the alleged crime.

¶ 2. See Criminal Law, vol. 15, Cent. Dig. §§ 3076, 3076, 3080.

Upon its facts the case is exceedingly close; but it is for the jury, and not the Supreme Court, to settle close questions of fact. The evidence is undisputed, other than by the statement of the accused, that the accused received from the prosecutor a bill of the denomination of $100, and not $10. The issue upon which the case turned is whether the accused subsequently discovered that fact, and converted the balance of $90 to his own use, or whether, as he contends in his statement, he was the innocent victim of a fraud perpetrated upon him by the stranger at the railroad station—a fraud the commission of which was made possible by the prosecutor's own negligence. There was circumstantial evidence to support either theory, direct evidence to support neither. The jury resolved the conflict adversely to the accused, as it was their right to do, and, the trial judge having expressed his approval of the verdict by his refusal to grant a new trial, this court will not interfere.

The evidence to which objection was made on the trial in the lower court and the admission of which is assigned as error in the motion for a new trial was that which showed the possession by the wife of the accused of a $100 bill shortly after the transaction under investigation, and her having the bill changed at the bank. Owing to the very close relationship of husband and wife, we think this evidence was admissible solely as a circumstance to be considered by the jury along with all the other facts and circumstances in the case as throwing light on the transaction under investigation. We do not hesitate to say that such evidence would not justify a charge upon the subject of recent possession of stolen goods, but as a circumstance to be weighed by the jury for what it was worth.

We do not overlook the contention of counsel for the accused that the state failed to carry the burden of proving that the money was taken animo furandi, and that the evidence shows that the appropriation, if any, was made subsequently to the reception of the money by the accused. In view of the fact that the state showed that when the accused was arrested he asserted that he looked at the money when it was handed to him, and that it was a $10 bill, the jury were authorized to find that the money was taken by him with knowledge that it was a larger amount than he was entitled to receive. This contention is therefore without merit.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 340)

CHELSEY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

INDICTMENT—ATTEMPT—COMPLETED ACT—INTENT—HOMICIDE—PLEA IN ABATEMENT—CHALLENGE TO ARRAY—EVIDENCE.

1. Where there is not a completed act, but only an attempt, and the crime consists of the intent with which the attempted act was done, it is necessary that the indictment should charge and the evidence prove the existence of such criminal intent.

2. But where there has been a completed act—as, for example, a killing—the law supposes that the person intends the natural consequences of his act, and in such cases "the evil intention will be presumed, and need not be alleged, or, if alleged, it is a mere formal averment, which need not be proved. The intent is nothing more than the law draws from the act, and requires no proof beyond that which the act itself supplies."

3. If therefore A. puts poison in flour with intent that it shall be cooked into bread and eaten by B., but the same is taken by C., and death results from the use thereof, A. will be guilty of murdering C., even though he had no malice against him.

4. The indictment was not subject to the demurrer presented; nor was there error in charging and refusing to charge on the subject of intent.

5. The pleas in abatement were properly overruled, it appearing that the indictment was actually returned into open court, though no entry was made on the minutes at the time.

6. The court properly disallowed the challenge to the array, it appearing that the two panels of jurors had been properly drawn, and that the jurors who were excused constituted a part of those drawn in excess of those needed to make the full panels.

7. There was no allegation or proof that jurors regularly drawn, and which the defendant had a right to insist should be put upon him in the panel, had been excused; nor that a deficiency improperly occasioned had then been supplied by talesmen.

8. The evidence warranted the verdict, and there was no error of law committed, and the court properly refused to grant a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Troup County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Young Chelsey was convicted of homicide, and brings error. Affirmed.

The indictment against Young Chelsey charged that he unlawfully, willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought did make an assault upon Arthur McKamie by putting "Rough on Rats," an arsenic poison, in sufficient quantities to produce death, into a sack of flour, with the intention and for the purpose of having the same cooked into bread, presented to and eaten by said Arthur; that the same was so cooked and presented and eaten by said Arthur, and from its effects he died. The defendant demurred on the ground that the indictment did not allege facts constituting the crime of murder, but only the crime of assault, and failed to allege any intent to kill. The demurrer was overruled. There was a plea in abatement on the ground that the minutes failed to show that the indictment had been returned into open court. On the hearing of this plea it appeared from the testimony of the officer that the indictment had in fact been returned by the qualified bailiff of the grand jury, and received from him by the clerk in open court, during the May term, 1904, though it had not been entered on the minutes at the time of the hearing, May 10, 1904. The court refused to sustain the plea. There was a challenge to the array because the minutes failed to show that the two panels of traverse jurors had been drawn as jurors for the present term, and because the names of seven jurors regularly drawn for the present week were not on the list of jurors furnished the defendant; and that, if these seven had been excused, they were not legally excused. From the evidence on this plea it appeared that thirty-six jurors were drawn and summoned; that their names were on the minutes, but the page containing the same had not been signed by the judge at the time of trial; that the two panels of twenty-four put upon the defendant contained only the names of jurors who had been regularly served. It appeared also that some of the seven referred to in the motion had been excused from service. On the trial on the merits it appeared that the defendant had, in what he claimed was a spirit of play, fired into a window of a house occupied by Lou McKamie, a woman with whom he was living, and who was an aunt of deceased; that the shooting was not at any one in the building; that the woman was provoked, and something was said about defendant being arrested. The contention of the state was that this talk aggravated him, and defendant at once purchased a package of "Rough on Rats"; that afterwards he had access to a pantry, in which was contained a sack of flour; that it was eaten by Arthur McKamie, one of the inmates of the house; that he was immediately made extremely ill; that when the defendant learned of this fact he attempted to conceal the flour; that McKamie died the same day; that his stomach, with the uneaten bread and parts of the flour in the sack, were each analyzed, and found to contain arsenic, and in quantities sufficient to have occasioned death. There was also testimony that "Rough on Rats" did contain arsenic, and was a deadly poison, though the witness had not analyzed packages of "Rough on Rats" recently, and, of course, had not analyzed the contents of the package purchased by the defendant, it being impossible to find any of the contents other than what was contained in the sack of flour and the bread. The defendant was found guilty. A motion for a new trial was made because the court charged, in effect, that, if the defendant did the acts complained of with intent to poison Lou McKamie, he would be guilty, even though Arthur McKamie ate the bread intended for her, and whether he had any malice against Arthur or not; because the court refused to charge that, "if the poison was put into the flour with the intent that it should be eaten by Lou McKamie, and not the deceased, then the defendant would not be guilty as charged in the indictment, and you should acquit him." The defendant excepts to the judgment overruling his motion for a new trial.

Hatton Lovejoy, for plaintiff in error.
John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and H. A. Hall, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). There are many decisions construing indictments for murder as defined by modern statutes, in which it is held essential to charge an intent to kill. But this grows out of the fact that under these statutes murder in the first degree is limited to cases where the killing is with deliberate and premeditated malice. But these rulings do not apply to indictments under Pen. Code 1895, § 60, and at common law, where the killing is murder if the malice aforethought is implied, as well as to cases where the malice is express. The allegation that the act was done unlawfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought is sufficient to characterize the killing as murder. Compare Cox v. People, 80 N. Y. 502; People v. Giblin, 115 N. Y. 196, 21 N. E. 1062, 4 L. R. A. 757; Schaffer v. State, 22 Neb. 560, 35 N. W. 384, 3 Am. St. Rep. 274. Besides, Pen. Code 1895, § 929, was intended to obviate the necessity for that strictness of pleading formerly required. As construed in Newman v. State, 63 Ga. 534, this indictment was good against the demurrer, for it was there held that "the rule as to the sufficiency of an indictment is this: If all the facts which the indictment charges can be admitted, and still the accused be innocent, the indictment is bad. But if, taking the facts alleged as premises, the guilt of the accused follows as a legal conclusion, the indictment is good." In his charge the court used the illustration of one recklessly shooting into a crowd, or throwing a heavy timber on a sidewalk where people are passing, as given in Cook v. State, 93 Ga. 201, 18 S. E. 823, and charging, as there, that in cases like these it is not "required that there should exist any ill will or express malice. The law implies malice from the act, and declares the killing to be murder." We find no error in this instruction. It was applicable to the theory of the case arising from the evidence offered by the state. The defendant attacks the charge, in view of his theory, on the ground that there was no intent to kill Arthur, but, if anything, an intent to kill Lou McKamle. He contends that the court erred in failing to instruct the jury that, if the evidence showed that the defendant intended to kill her, and not the deceased, they should acquit. But the act includes the intent. A person is in law supposed to intend the natural consequences of his act, and, if he maliciously and unlawfully puts poison into a sack of flour, with the expectation that it is to be cooked into bread and eaten, he is conclusively presumed to have intended the death of any one who ate the bread and died from the effects thereof. In placing the poison where it could be eaten, and with the intent that it should be eaten by the woman, the defendant committed a felony. The law, as well as reason, prevents him from taking advantage of his own wrong, or excusing himself when the unlawful act strikes down an unintended victim. The original malice is transferred from the one against whom it was entertained to him who actually suffered the consequences of the felonious act. Compare Johnson v. State, 92 Ga. 39, 17 S. E. 974 (5), where it was said, in a case much like the present, that putting poison into coffee "betrayed a reckless disregard of his life, equivalent to an actual intention deliberately to kill him. This meets in terms the definition of express malice as given in the statute." See, also, Commonwealth v. Hersey, 2 Allen, 173, 180, where the court draws the distinction between attempts with a specific intent, in which the intent must be alleged and proved, and those completed acts which are rendered penal. In the last class of cases "the evil intention will be presumed, and need not be alleged, or, if alleged, it is a mere formal averment, which need not be proved. In such case the intent is nothing more than the result which the law draws from the act, and requires no proof beyond that which the act itself supplies." Gallery v. State, 92 Ga. 463, 17 S. E. 863; Stovall v. State, 106 Ga. 447, 32 S. E. 586.

The other grounds of the motion need not be specifically considered. The plea in abatement was properly overruled. The evidence showed that the indictment as a fact had been duly returned. The failure to make an entry on the minutes was an irregularity, which was cured by the testimony of the bailiff and the clerk. The same was true as to the entry of the list of jurors on the minutes, though they had not been signed. Cribb v. State, 118 Ga. 316, 45 S. E. 396. Nor was there good challenge to the array. The panels put upon the defendant had been regularly drawn in the method prescribed by law. There were more jurors drawn than were required to fill the panel. The fact that some of the number in excess were excused afforded no reason for challenging the array of those left. The evidence was amply sufficient to warrant the verdict. Even if the chemist had not recently made an analysis of a package containing "Rough on Rats," such analysis as he had made, coupled with the analysis of the flour, bread, and contents of the stomach, was sufficient to support the allegations in the indictment.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 337)

SIMS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. The motion for a new trial was upon the general grounds only. The evidence for the state made a clear case of murder. The accused introduced no evidence. His statement tended to show that the killing was in self-defense. The jury have resolved the conflict in favor of the state. The trial judge has approved the verdict and refused a new trial, and no reason appears why his discretion in so doing should be interfered with.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Dooly County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Spear Sims was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. H. Darris and Watts Powell, for plaintiff in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

¶ 1. See Homicide, vol. 26, Cent. Dig. § 701.

(121 Ga. 334)

BLAKEMAN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

NEW TRIAL—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—FILING.

1. This case is controlled by the decision of this court announced in Baker v. Johnson, 27 S. E. 706, 99 Ga. 374, and followed in the later cases of Mize v. Americus Mfg. Co., 32 S. E. 22, 106 Ga. 140, Holloman v. Small, 35 S. E. 665, 111 Ga. 812, Brooks v. Proctor, 36 S. E. 99, 111 Ga. 835, and Hyatt v. Cowan, 41 S. E. 985, 115 Ga. 608.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; W. M. Henry, Judge.

James Blakeman was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Henry Walker, for plaintiff in error.
Moses Wright, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 378)

RUSK et al. v. HILL, Ordinary.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

APPEAL—REMAND—PROCEDURE BELOW—TAXATION OF COSTS—AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY.

1. Where the judgment of a trial court has been affirmed by the Supreme Court, with direction to amend such judgment in a designated way, and that the costs incident to the writ of error be taxed against the prevailing party in the court below, an order formally making the judgment of the Supreme Court the judgment of the trial court is not an indispensable prerequisite to the amendment by the latter court of its judgment in accordance with the direction in the judgment of affirmance. Knox v. State, 39 S. E. 330, 113 Ga. 929, Brown v. Wilson, 59 Ga. 604, 606.

2. The amended judgment of the trial court was not the place in which to tax the costs of the writ of error in accordance with the direction of the Supreme Court.

3. There was no error in dismissing the affidavit of illegality.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Geo. F. Gober, Judge.

Action by W. D. Hill, for the use of, etc., against T. J. Rusk and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants bring error. Affirmed.

J. P. Brooke and H. B. Moss, for plaintiffs in error. J. Z. Foster, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 379)

RUSK v. HILL, Ordinary.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

EXECUTION—LEVY—PROPERTY SUBJECT.

1. The reversion in lands which have been assigned as dower is subject to levy and sale at the instance of creditors of the husband's estate.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Geo. F. Gober, Judge.

Action by W. D. Hill, ordinary, for use, etc., against Margaret Rusk. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. P. Brooke and H. B. Moss, for plaintiff in error. J. Z. Foster, for defendant in error.

OOBB, J. The only question involved in this case is whether the reversionary interest of the estate of a decedent in land which has been assigned to his widow as dower can be seized on execution issued in favor of a creditor of the estate. There is in this state no general statute prescribing definitely what property of a debtor is subject to levy and sale; our statute providing simply that executions may be levied on "all the estate, real and personal, of the defendant, subject to levy and sale." Civ. Code 1895, § 5413. Authority in this state to levy upon "lands and tenements" is derived from the statute 5 Geo. II, which became incorporated into our law by our adopting statute of 1784. Pitts v. McWhorter, 3 Ga. 10, 11. Hence common-law executions in this state usually order the levying officer to seize enough of the "goods and chattels, lands and tenements," of the debtor to make the sum due. A vested remainder, subject to be divested upon the happening of a given contingency, can be seized on execution against the remainderman before the death of the life tenant. Lufburrow v. Koch, 75 Ga. 448; Shipp v. Gibbs, 88 Ga. 184, 14 S. E. 196. In Wilkinson v. Chew, 54 Ga. 602, 604, it was said that: "Upon principle as well as authority subjection to levy and sale should rest on two questions only: Is there a vested interest, and is it so definite as to be susceptible of description in terms of legal certainty?" Accordingly, it was held in that case that the interest of an heir in the reversion of land devised to a tenant for life, as well as a vested interest in remainder, was subject to levy and sale. And in Pitts v. Hendrix, 6 Ga. 454, it was said that "every legal interest in real and personal property" can be seized on execution. It is therefore settled in this state that neither possession nor the right to immediate possession is necessary to render the interest of a debtor in land subject to levy and sale. "Dower is the right of a wife to an estate for life in one-third of the lands" of her deceased husband. Civ. Code 1895, § 4687. The estate in dower is therefore simply a life estate, and subject to be dealt with as any other life estate. The interest of the life tenant or doweress is subject to levy and sale at the instance of her creditors. Pitts v. Hendrix, 6 Ga. 452. There is no statute in this state expressly providing that the reversion in dower lands is subject to levy and sale, though laws have been passed recognizing that it was as an asset in the hands of a legal representative for the payment of debts. See Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3513, 3514. Nor has the question ever been directly decided by this court. The nearest approach to it was in Farler v. Johnson, 81 Ga.

254, 7 S. E. 317, where it was held: "Though the right of a widow to her dower in land seized as the property of her deceased husband be not reserved in the levy, it may be reserved in the sale and in the sheriff's deed, and the conveyance will be effective as to the reversion." If the whole land may be seized, and a deed made which will be "effective as to the reversion," the same result can be accomplished by seizing simply the reversion in the first instance. Clearly, on principle and authority, this can be done. In Massachusetts it has been expressly decided that it can. Peabody v. Minot, 24 Pick. 329. The reversion in lands out of which dower has been assigned does not differ in nature from any other reversion, and the same reasons which would authorize a sale of the reversion in lands devised to another for life would also authorize the seizure and sale of the reversion in lands set apart as dower. It is true that in Jolly v. Lofton, 61 Ga. 154, and cases which followed it, it was held that the reversion in lands set apart as a homestead was not subject to levy and sale during the existence of the homestead estate. Those decisions were based upon the language of the homestead law, providing that no execution or judgment should ever be enforced against the homestead property; and this language was held to be broad enough to include the reversionary interest. Clearly, therefore, these decisions are not controlling here. There was no error in directing a verdict for the plaintiff in execution.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(131 Ga. 475)

BRANTLEY v. TAYLOR.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—WAIVER OF ERRORS—NEW TRIAL.

1. Assignments of error not referred to in the brief of the plaintiff in error will be considered as abandoned.

2. The Supreme Court will not disturb the first grant of a new trial upon certiorari from a city court, when the verdict was not demanded by the evidence. Walker v. Hughes, 48 S. E. 387, 120 Ga. 1079.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action between C. W. Brantley and W. I. Taylor. From the judgment, Brantley brings error. Affirmed.

F. G. Corker and Akerman & Akerman, for plaintiff in error. Griner & Baldwin and Peyton L. Wade, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

§ 1. See Appeal and Error, vol. 3, Cent. Dig. § 4254.

(121 Ga. 412)

STANDARD OIL CO. v. SWANSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

HAWKERS AND PEDDLERS—LICENSES—WHEN REQUIRED—OIL IN BULK.

1. Paragraph 8 of section 2 of the general tax act of 1902 (Acts 1902, p. 21), imposing a special tax upon traveling vendors "of patent or proprietary medicines, special nostrums, jewelry, paper, soap, or other merchandise," does not embrace vendors of merchandise not ejusdem generis with the articles expressly enumerated.

2. Oil handled in bulk and sold in quantity is not ejusdem generis with the articles expressly enumerated in the above-mentioned statute, and that statute does not embrace traveling vendors of such oil.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Gordon County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by the Standard Oil Company against S. E. Swanson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

King, Spalding & Little, for plaintiff in error. Sam. P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Suit was brought by the Standard Oil Company against S. E. Swanson for the recovery of about $50 alleged to have been illegally collected by him as tax collector of Gordon county. From the pleadings and the evidence it appeared that the plaintiff was a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state of Ohio and doing business in Georgia; that it was engaged in the manufacture and sale of oils and oil products; and that in pursuance of this business it had an agent, a storage warehouse, and a place of doing business in Whitfield county. Oil received in tank cars was pumped into the plaintiff's storage tanks in Whitfield county, and taken from these tanks into a tank wagon. This wagon was driven through the county of Gordon, as well as Whitfield, and the oil delivered to merchants. In some instances orders are previously sent in; in others not. Upon the arrival of the wagon at a store, such quantities of oil were sold, delivered, and paid for as the merchant might desire. The defendant, as tax collector of Gordon county, issued against plaintiff an execution for taxes under paragraph 8 of section 2 of the general tax act of 1902 (Acts 1902, p. 21). Under protest, and in order to prevent the sale of certain of its property levied upon under this execution by the sheriff of the county of Whitfield, the plaintiff paid the amount of the execution. For the recovery of the amount so paid the present suit was brought. On the trial it was admitted that the plaintiff had paid its ad valorem tax on its plant and property in the county of Whitfield, and that no special tax or peddler's tax or other license had been demanded of it in that county. The case was submitted to the judge without the intervention of a jury, and he found for the defendant, holding that the plaintiff was subject to the tax imposed, and that the execution was legal. To this judgment plaintiff excepted.

Counsel expressly refrained in the present case from raising any question as to whether the collection of this tax would be an unlawful interference with interstate commerce, or as to whether the execution should have been issued against plaintiff or against its agent in charge of its wagon. The sole question is whether such a business as is shown by the record to have been carried on by plaintiff in the county of Gordon was taxable under the above-cited provisions of the act of 1902. The tax was imposed under the following provision of that act: "That in addition to the ad valorem tax on real estate and personal property as required by the Constitution and provided for in the preceding section, the following specific taxes shall be levied and collected for each of said fiscal years: * * * Upon every traveling vender of patent or proprietary medicines, special nostrums, jewelry, paper, soap or other merchandise, fifty dollars in each county where they may offer such articles for sale." Whether plaintiff's agent was, under Pol. Code 1895, § 1640 et seq., subject to tax as a peddler or itinerant trader, is not involved in this case. The tax collected from plaintiff was imposed under the act of 1902, and the question now presented is whether the tax was authorized by that act. "Statutes which impose restrictions upon trade or common occupations, and which levy an excise or tax upon them, must be construed strictly." "Statutes levying duties or taxes upon subjects or citizens are to be construed most strongly against the government, and in favor of their subjects or citizens, and their provisions are not to be extended, by implication, beyond the clear import of the language used." "Revenue laws are neither remedial statutes nor laws founded upon any permanent public policy, and are not, therefore, to be liberally construed; and hence, whenever there is a just doubt, that doubt should absolve the taxpayer from his burden." Mayor, etc., Savannah v. Hartridge, 8 Ga. 23. "We will hold that the Legislature intended nothing beyond what their language in its fair and usual meaning will indicate; and, if the terms of their enactment have not embraced the object contended for, the power is with them, by additional act or acts to extend them." Id. Whether the business carried on by plaintiff can properly be classed as that of a "traveling vender," as used in the act of 1902, we need not now decide; for, conceding that plaintiff is a traveling vender, we think that it is not within the classes of such vendors taxed by the act. We think that the words "other merchandise" in the act must be construed to mean other merchandise ejusdem generis with the articles expressly named. "Where a statute or other document enumerates several classes of persons or things, and immediately following, and classed with such enumeration, the clause embraces 'other' persons or things, the word

'other' will generally be read as 'other such like,' so that persons or things therein comprised may be read as ejusdem generis with, and not of a quality superior to or different from, those specifically enumerated." 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 1012, and cit. This rule is well established in this state. See Sanders v. State, 86 Ga. 717, 12 S. E. 1058, in which the rule is thus quoted, from Endlich, Int. Statutes: "The general word which follows particular and specific words of the same nature as itself takes its meaning from them, and is presumed to be restricted to the same genus as those words; or, in other words, as comprehending only things of the same kind as those designated by them; unless, of course, there be something to show that a wider sense was intended." This rule is not inflexible, but it is clearly applicable to the present case, where not only is there nothing "to show that a wider sense was intended," but the statute is one which must be strictly construed, and the terms of which cannot be extended by implication. The statute then provides for a tax upon traveling vendors of "patent or proprietary medicines, special nostrums, jewelry, paper, soap," and other like merchandise. The plaintiff handled oil in bulk, and sold it to merchants in quantity. Such oil was surely not ejusdem generis with any of the articles specially enumerated in the statute. The statute expressly mentions only such small articles as are usually or frequently carried by peddlers, hawkers, and "street fakirs." Possibly small packages of standard merchandise would be of the same general class with the articles expressly enumerated, but we are clear that oil, or other standard merchandise, handled and sold in bulk, would not be. The statute therefore does not impose any tax upon one carrying on a business such as the record shows was conducted by the plaintiff in error, and the execution based upon this statute was not authorized by law. The money collected from plaintiff in error under and by virtue of this execution was illegally exacted. The money having been paid under duress, the plaintiff had a right to recover the amount so paid, and the court erred in finding for the defendant.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 437)

OGBURN v. DUBLIN WAGON & MACHINE CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

NONSUIT—EVIDENCE—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ.

1. The plaintiff proved his case exactly as laid in the petition, and it was error to sustain a motion to nonsuit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Dublin; J. S. Adams, Judge.

Action by L. B. Ogburn against the Dublin Wagon & Machine Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

K. J. Hawkins, for plaintiff in error. Geo. W. Williams, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. The petitioner proved his case exactly as laid, and it was therefore error to sustain the motion to nonsuit. The question as to whether the injury was occasioned by a fellow servant or by the act of a vice principal, or whether the vice principal at the time was so acting as to constitute himself a fellow servant of the plaintiff, was not argued, nor can we know that the court below passed upon this question. All of the facts proved were stated in the petition. If they were such as to constitute a defense, advantage should have been taken thereof in the first instance by demurrer, or afterwards by motion to dismiss, and not by motion to nonsuit. The evidence disclosed no new fact. It did not make a case where the plaintiff first proved and then disproved his right to recover. Evans v. Josephine Mills, 119 Ga. 448 (1, 2), 46 S. E. 674.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 465)

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. McWHORTER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

RAILROADS—KILLING STOCK—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

1. According to the testimony of the company's engineer, the horse for the killing of which the plaintiff sought to recover damages suddenly ran upon the track, about 20 yards ahead of his engine, and then down the center of the track to the point where it was killed; and he used every effort to avoid injury to the horse, and could not sooner have discovered its presence on or near the track because of a curve in the roadbed, a high embankment, and some bushes. The testimony offered by the plaintiff tended to show that, notwithstanding the curve, the embankment, and the bushes, the horse might have been seen at least 144 yards from the point where the animal was killed; that the horse had walked some 200 yards along the track in the direction of the approaching train, and had then turned and fled from it a distance of 20 yards, never leaving the track at all, so that the animal could not, as testified by the engineer, have suddenly run in front of the engine from a point adjacent to the roadbed. In view of this conflict in the evidence, and of the fact that the defendant did not undertake to show that the injury to the animal could not have been prevented, even though it had been seen on the track 144 yards distant from the engine and all precautionary measures had been promptly taken, the verdict in favor of the plaintiff was warranted, the presumption of law being that the company was guilty of negligence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Walker County; W. M. Henry, Judge.

Action by W. C. McWhorter against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgement for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. Branham and F. W. Copeland, for plaintiff in error. Bale & Shaw, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 471)

LONGMORE v. STEGALL.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

1. The evidence for the claimant was to the effect that the land levied on had been purchased and paid for by her with her own funds. The evidence for the plaintiff in fi. fa. tended to show that the defendant had a bond for titles to the land; that plaintiff's money was advanced on the faith thereof, and used partly in paying the purchase money and partly in making improvements thereon; that other payments were made out of the defendant's salary; that he was insolvent; and that having the deed made to his wife was a voluntary conveyance by an insolvent. The evidence being conflicting, and sufficient to sustain a verdict finding the land subject, and the verdict having been approved by the trial judge, this court will not interfere with his refusal to grant a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by J. P. Stegall against E. U. Longmore. Judgment for plaintiff, and Ellen Longmore, on levy of an attachment, filed a claim. From judgment against plaintiff, she brings error. Affirmed.

Stegall, obtained judgment against A. Longmore on an attachment. It was levied on a lot of land in Emerson, Ga. Mrs. Ellen Longmore, the wife of the defendant, filed a claim. It appeared that the debt of Stegall arose in 1888, at a time when A. Longmore had a bond for titles to the land in controversy; and, according to the testimony for the plaintiff, the money had been advanced by him in order to enable the defendant to make improvements on the lot. It also appeared that when the defendant came to Emerson, shortly before the loan, he stated that he had recently failed in business, and there was also evidence sufficient to warrant the finding that he was insolvent. The testimony for the claimant tended to show that she was a nonresident; that when her husband came to Emerson it was understood that he was to contract for her for a lot; that he negotiated the purchase of the land in controversy; that the bond for titles, as originally drawn, was in the name of Mrs. Longmore, but, because she was absent and could not sign the purchase-money note, he himself signed the note, and took the bond in his name. The evidence was directly conflicting as to who paid for the land. The evidence for the claimant was to the effect that she had done so with her own money, and that therefore, and in execution of the original understanding, the deed was made to her when the purchase price was finally paid. On the contrary, the evidence for the plaintiff tended to establish that part of his advance and part of Longmore's salary went to pay the purchase price. There was some evidence as to statements by Longmore indicating an intent to hinder creditors.

T. C. Milner and Jno. H. Wikle, for plaintiff in error. Thos. W. Milner & Sons, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). From the statement of facts it will be seen that the case, in its last analysis, involved the question as to whether having the deed made to the wife was a gift by an insolvent, leaving the land subject to his debts. The evidence in her favor was very strong and circumstantial, and would have sustained a verdict in her favor. That for the plaintiff in fi. fa., however, was in direct conflict with that for the claimant, and sufficient to sustain a verdict finding the land subject. There is no error of law assigned. The verdict has been approved by the trial judge, and this court will not interfere with his judgment in refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 416)

BALDWIN v. WEBB.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

ACTION FOR BOARD—EVIDENCE.

1. In a suit by the keeper of a boarding house for board and lodging of defendant and others, where the defendant claims that the entertainment was, by agreement, to be furnished free of charge, a verdict for the plaintiff is not authorized unless the evidence shows that the defendant contracted to pay at an agreed price, or that the entertainment furnished was reasonably worth the amount found therefor, or that such amount was in accordance with the usual and customary rates charged by plaintiff.

2. Where there is no evidence from which the jury can determine the amount for which they should find, a verdict for any amount is unauthorized.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Catoosa County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by J. A. Webb against T. A. Baldwin. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Payne & Payne, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Mann, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Suit upon an account for $74.65 was brought by Webb against Baldwin. On appeal from a justice's court, the case was tried in the superior court. From the evidence it appeared that Webb rented and kept a boarding house or hotel at Catoosa Springs. Baldwin purchased the property, and went there with his wife and several servants and employes for the purpose of improving the condition of the property before he took charge of it. In the meantime Webb continued to run the place, and furnished board and lodging to Baldwin and the others of his party. Webb paid Baldwin no rent for the property. During this same period Webb received and entertained other boarders, collected from them the price of their entertainment, and retained all that he thus made out of his business. About six weeks after Baldwin purchased the property, Webb moved away, and Baldwin took possession. Some ten days thereafter Baldwin and Webb had a settlement by which the former paid the latter for certain articles left on the place, Webb giving his receipt for such payment. This receipt was dated June 19, 1903. On July 17, 1903, plaintiff wrote defendant a letter in which he inclosed an account for $16.85. In his letter, and at the foot of the account, he stated that he made no charge for the board and lodging of defendant and Mrs. Baldwin. The letter also contained an unequivocal statement that the account was correct. On the account plaintiff also wrote the statement that he "guessed" the board of one Capt. Rockyback was to be charged to defendant. On the trial, and in bringing the suit, plaintiff claimed that defendant owed him on account $74.65. No indebtedness was incurred between the time of the rendition of the first account and the time of bringing suit upon the larger account. The account sued on contained all of the items embraced in the account rendered in July, but the prices were in several instances raised. The account sued on also contained a number of items not embraced at all in the earlier account, including a claim for the price of the board and lodging of Col. and Mrs. Baldwin. So much of the evidence is undisputed. The plaintiff testified that the account sued upon was correct and unpaid, that Col. Baldwin had promised orally to pay board for himself, his wife, and the members of his party, and that the settlement had in June was not to cover all accounts, but only those enumerated. The receipt then given by him recited that it was "in full of all accounts," but he testified that this statement had been inserted in it after he had signed it, and without his knowledge or consent. As to why he had in July rendered an account for an amount so much smaller than that which he subsequently claimed to be due him, plaintiff attempted no explanation. The defendant testified that he and plaintiff had entered into an oral agreement whereby plaintiff was to be allowed to keep and run the boarding house free of rent until defendant took charge of the place, in consideration for which plaintiff undertook to furnish defendant and his party with board and lodging without charge. Defendant also testified that Capt. Rockyback and one or two others whose board was included in the plaintiff's account were not members of the party included in this agreement, and that defendant was in no way responsible for their debts, and did not promise to pay for their entertainment. Defendant also testified that the receipt of July 17th was signed by plaintiff just as it appeared on the trial, and was in full of all accounts and claims existing at the time of its execution. Defendant admitted two or three of the smaller items of the account, and one of them appeared, without dispute, to have arisen after the date of the June receipt. In payment of this item defendant sent plaintiff a check for $2, but plaintiff testified that he had never received the check. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $86.40, principal, besides interest and costs. The defendant moved for a new trial. The motion was overruled, and he excepted.

Assuming, as we must for the purposes of this case, that the evidence of the plaintiff was true, we still think that the verdict returned by the jury was without sufficient evidence to support it. There was evidence to show that the defendant had agreed to pay for the board and lodging furnished himself and his party, but none that any rate was agreed upon. There was no express agreement to pay at a specified rate, nor was there any agreed standard by which any definite rate could be ascertained. It cannot be said that the verdict was authorized on the idea that one who becomes a guest at an inn renders himself liable for his entertainment at the usual and customary rate of charges made by the innkeeper, for in the present case, even treating plaintiff as the keeper of an inn, there was no evidence as to what were the usual and customary rates charged by the plaintiff for the entertainment of guests. Nor was there any evidence as to what the entertainment furnished defendant and his party was reasonably worth. Thus there was nothing from which the jury could determine the amount for which they should find for the plaintiff. In the absence of all evidence as to the amount for which defendant was liable on the items for board and lodging, the jury was not authorized to find at all for the plaintiff on those items of the account. There were other items as to which there was evidence of the propriety of the amount charged, but the verdict was so large as necessarily to have been based in great part upon the items for board and lodging for which, as we have just shown, there could be no lawful finding for the plaintiff. We do not mean to intimate that the jury ought to have found for the plaintiff at all upon the disputed items of the account, for, in view of the evidence presented in the record, we cannot understand how any impartial jury could have determined the case against the defendant. The plaintiff is claiming, under an express contract which he testified was made in May, an item which in July he had "guessed" was chargeable to defendant. He has increased the amount of items which he had formerly stated to be correct. He is suing for numerous items which were not included in the statement of account for the correctness of which he had so unequivocally vouched. His claim has grown nearly fivefold, and yet he offers no explanation whatever. His testimony does not seek to excuse the increase in his claims, and the record leaves a strong impression that the truth in this regard is probably inconsistent with the justice of plaintiff's claim. However that may be, we are clear that the evidence did not authorize a verdict for the amount found by the jury, and that the court below erred in not granting a new trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 384)

WEST v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

HOMICIDE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Under no theory of the case would a charge upon the subject of manslaughter, either voluntary or involuntary, have been applicable. The verdict was amply warranted by the evidence, and it was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Houston County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Lige West was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

R. N. Holtzclaw, for plaintiff in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and Wm. Brunson, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was convicted of the murder of his wife, and, his motion for a new trial being overruled, he excepted. The motion complains only that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence, and that the court erred in failing to give in charge to the jury the law relating to voluntary and to involuntary manslaughter. The evidence for the state amply warranted the verdict of guilty of murder. The accused offered no evidence, but relied on his statement, which was to the effect that he killed his wife accidentally, in an effort to resist an attack upon him with a deadly weapon made by a man who was accompanying her at the time. It has been repeatedly ruled that, in the absence of a written request, the trial court is in no event required to charge upon a theory of defense presented only by the statement of the accused. See Andrews v. State, 118 Ga. 4, 43 S. E. 852; Darby v. State, 79 Ga. 64, 3 S. E. 663. Aside from this, however, even the statement in the present case did not authorize a charge on the subject of manslaughter, either voluntary or involuntary. The motion for a new trial was entirely without merit, and was properly overruled.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 362)

WATTS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. There being no merit in the contention of the plaintiff in error that the evidence did not warrant a finding that he actually did, as charged in the indictment, point and aim a pistol at another, and there being no complaint that any error of law was committed at the trial, no reason appears why the judgment overruling his motion for a new trial should be set aside.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Wilcox County; D. M. Roberts, Judge.

J. O. Watts was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

D. B. Nicholson and Martin Cannon, for plaintiff in error. J. F. De Lacy, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 329)

McFARLIN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1904.)

GRAND JUROR—DISQUALIFICATION—PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

1. The act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 83) expressly declares that a grand juror who has served at one term is ineligible to serve as juror at the succeeding term; and such disqualification may be taken advantage of by challenge made, or plea in abatement filed, in due time.

2. In this case the plea complied with the requirements suggested in Lascelles v. State, 16 S. E. 945, 90 Ga. 372, 35 Am. St. Rep. 216, and was not subject to demurrer.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Coweta County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Handy McFarlin was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

A. H. Freeman, for plaintiff in error. H. A. Hall, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. McFarlin was indicted at the September term, 1904, of Coweta superior court. He filed a plea in abatement on the ground that under the act approved August 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 83), three of the grand jurors by whom the indictment was returned were ineligible, because they had previously served as grand jurors at the March term, 1904, of Coweta superior court; that no warrant had been issued for his arrest; that no bond had been given by him to appear at court; that he had no notice or knowledge that the grand jury at the September term would attempt to indict or would indict him; that he had had no prior opportunity to challenge the ineligible grand jurors; and that his plea was filed at the first opportunity he had for making this objection. There is no written demurrer or traverse in the record. It is, however, recited that, this "plea having been filed and argued, the same is hereby overruled."

We cannot, of course, consider statements of what occurred at the hearing, made in the briefs of both counsel, but which are not included in the judge's certificate. No traverse having been filed, and the record failing to show that the case was submitted, as in Wells v. State, 118 Ga. 556, 45 S. E. 443 (7), to the judge or to the jury, and it not appearing that the case was heard by him or the jury on evidence, we are forced to the conclusion that the plea was stricken on motion, as being insufficient.

It is always necessary that challenges to jurors should be in due time, or else there will be a conclusive presumption that the want of qualification has been waived by all concerned. Jordan v. State, 119 Ga. 443, 46 S. E. 679. But here the plea avers that the defendant had no knowledge or reason to believe that any bill of indictment would be presented to the grand jury. It sets out facts excusing his nonaction, and meets the requirements suggested in Lascelles v. State, 90 Ga. 372, 16 S. E. 945, 35 Am. St. Rep. 216. The plea, therefore, was not filed too late. The three grand jurors were incompetent to serve at the September term, 1904, if in truth they had served at the March term, 1904. The plea was therefore good in substance, and, upon proof of the facts charged, the indictment should have been quashed or abated. The language of the statute and the public policy to be subserved apply as well to grand as to petit jurors. It is intended as a relief, and to equalize jury duty. But it is also intended to prevent the same persons from constantly serving, whether they wish to or not. One grand jury may return no bill. Grand juries are charged with many important public duties. The same facts in both classes of subjects may come before the succeeding body, and the public is entitled to a complete change of membership from term to term. Such is the language of the law, and, where the objection is seasonably made, advantage can be taken of the fact that the body has not been duly constituted.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 466)

BOMAR v. EQUITABLE MORTG. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

CONTINUANCE—ILLNESS OF PARTY.

1. Where, on the hearing of an application for a continuance on account of the illness of a party, the evidence introduced was of such a character as to authorize a finding that there had been "several" previous continuances granted the applicant for the same cause, the judge did not abuse his discretion in overruling the motion to continue; and this is true though there was no dispute as to the party's illness and consequent inability to attend court. Stanford v. New England Mortgage Co., 34 S. E. 600, 110 Ga. 274, and citations.

¶ 1. See Continuance, vol. 10, Cent. Dig. § 147.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Douglas County; Geo. F. Gober, Judge.

Action by the Equitable Mortgage Company against C. E. Bomar. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. James, for plaintiff in error. Payne & Tye, J. A. Noyes, and Roberts & Hutcheson, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 362)

MEADOWS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—GIVING AWAY—EVIDENCE.

1. Where a merchant gives away whisky to his customers, it is a question of fact for the jury whether he does so for the purpose of inducing trade in violation of Pol. Code 1895, § 1548. Such a violation is made penal by Pen. Code 1895, § 451.

2. Under the evidence in the county court the jury could fairly have found that the whisky was given away by the accused to his customers to induce trade at his place of business, and the judge of the superior court did not err in refusing, upon certiorari, to set the verdict aside.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Hancock County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Walker Meadows was convicted of a sale of intoxicating liquors, and brings error. Affirmed.

R. H. Lewis, for plaintiff in error. D. W. Meadow, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 390)

SUMMERFORD v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

1. There was no error in charging that the law is no respecter of persons, and that whether one of the parties is white and the other colored should have no weight with the jury.

2. The charge intimated no opinion as to the credit which should give to the witnesses, nor did it have a tendency to prejudice the minds of the jury against the defendant.

3. There was no error in the other rulings complained of, and the verdict was warranted by the evidence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Dooly County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Jim Summerford was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Busbee & Busbee, for plaintiff in error. F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. It was not error to charge that the law is no respecter of persons, and that whether one of the parties interested is white and the other colored should have no weight with the jury. The caution was not improper. It had no tendency to prejudice their minds against the defendant, and intimated no opinion as to the credit they should give the different witnesses.

The fifth and sixth grounds of the motion do not contain complete assignments of error. One does not indicate the evidence of the officer which was objected to, and the other is qualified by a note of the judge, which shows that he fully stated the principle on which the defendant relied. Indeed, the only complaint is that the instructions complained of were given at the conclusion of the charge, but there is no indication as to how or why this was erroneous, or operated to the prejudice of the defendant.

According to the statement of the defendant, the shooting was without malice, and in self-defense, the result of an altercation which began in words, and ended in each party shooting at the other. The evidence for the state made out a more serious offense against the defendant. There was no error in refusing to grant a new trial where the verdict was shooting at another with a recommendation for misdemeanor punishment.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 440)

NORMAN v. GOODE et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

1. A party is bound, at his peril, to submit on the trial all competent evidence in his favor he has at hand. If he had knowledge of the fact, and the same could have been proved at the trial by evidence other than that newly discovered, a new trial will not be granted, unless the movant can satisfactorily explain why he did not attempt to use the evidence then at hand. A stricter rule is applied to an extraordinary motion for a new trial based on the ground of newly discovered evidence than to an ordinary motion on that ground.

Simmons, C. J., and Lamar, J., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Gwinnett County; R. B. Russell, Judge.

Action by C. C. Goode, executor, and others, against C. B. Norman. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

E. Winn Born, for plaintiff in error. Green, Tilson & McKinney, for defendants in error.

FISH, P. J. Amanda A. Sanders, formerly Clark, married Charles B. Norman, in Gwinnett county, this state, in 1883, and died there, intestate, 1897, without a lineal descendant, and owning a certain house and lot in the town of Norcross. After her death her sisters, M. A. Goode and Ora O. Clark, and her niece, Harriet E. C. Norton, claiming to be her heirs at law, brought an action against Norman to recover the house and lot. Plaintiffs contended that Norman married Anna Hancock in Harris county, this state, in July, 1866, from whom he had never been divorced; that she was living at the time of his marriage to Mrs. Sanders, and therefore his marriage to Mrs. Sanders was void, and he was not her heir at law. Norman's contention was that he married Henrietta Prescott in Jacksonville, Fla., in February, 1865, was never divorced from her, that she was living when he married Anna Hancock, but died in 1869, before his marriage to Mrs. Sanders, and therefore his marriage with Anna Hancock was void, his marriage to Mrs. Sanders was valid, and he was her sole heir at law. On the trial the Hancock marriage was proved by a certified copy of the license and certificate from the ordinary's office of Harris county. Norman submitted evidence to the effect that he and Henrietta Prescott lived together as husband and wife in Jacksonville, Fla., in the early part of 1865, and that the repute in her family and in the community where they lived was that they were husband and wife. Norman testified, in general terms, that he was married to her in Jacksonville, Fla., in February, 1865, but did not give any of the circumstances of the marriage, whether there was a license or ceremony, and, if so, who officiated, or whether there were any witnesses present. There was a verdict for the plaintiffs. Norman moved for a new trial, which was refused, and he excepted. This court (113 Ga. 121, 38 S. E. 317) affirmed the judgment of the trial court refusing a new trial, and held that "the presumption of law, founded on cohabitation and repute, that a marriage had taken place, will not prevail over proof of a subsequent marriage in fact by one of the parties with a third person;" and that, as the bare statement of Norman in his testimony that he was married to Henrietta Prescott was merely a conclusion of his from the facts surrounding his relations with her, which were not detailed by him, but which were referred to in the testimony of other witnesses who testified in his behalf, and as the testimony of these witnesses merely raised a presumption, from cohabitation and repute, of a marriage between Norman and Henrietta Prescott, when such presumptive marriage came in competition with his marriage in fact to Anna Hancock, shown to have taken place in strict conformity to law, the marriage in fact prevailed; that Anna Hancock was the lawful wife of Norman; that he was incapacitated to marry Mrs. Sanders, and was therefore not her heir at law, and that plaintiffs were entitled to recover the property in dispute. Subsequently Norman made a second, or extraordinary, motion for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The alleged newly discovered evidence, which was set out in exhibits attached to the motion, consisted of a certified copy from the War Department at Washington, D. C., of a marriage license, dated at Jacksonville, Fla., February 23, 1865, and issued by Capt. J. W. Johnson, 3d U. S. C. T., and provost marshal of the district of Florida, reciting that martial law existed throughout such district, and authorizing any minister of the gospel to join N. B. Norman and Henrietta Prescott in marriage, and to make return to the office of such marshal; also a certified photographic copy from the War Department of a certificate, entered on the license, by John W. Swain, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Jacksonville, Fla., that he had solemnized the rite of matrimony between N. B. Norman and Henrietta Prescott on February 23, 1865. There were also exhibits of certified copies from the War Department of orders showing that martial law was in operation in Florida in February, 1865, and that Capt. Johnson was then provost marshal of the district of Florida; also a certified copy from the War Department of an order by the Assistant Adjutant General, dated April 7, 1865, that "all military records, such as files of public letters, letter books, other books and other record books, muster rolls, &c. * * * required for future reference in the settlement of claims against the government and for other official purposes," be forwarded by express to the Adjutant General's office by the officers of discontinued commands, if such records were not necessary for use at the department headquarters. There were also exhibits of ordination of J. S. Swain as a deacon and elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church, dated respectively 1836 and 1838, authorizing him to perform the ceremony of marriage, etc. Other exhibits were: The affidavit of J. W. Swain, who deposed that he was the son of J. S. Swain; that he found the certificates of ordination above referred to among his father's papers; that his father was pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Jacksonville, Fla., in February, 1865, but was not an army chaplain, and that he died in 1875; that deponent knew his father's handwriting, and that from the certified photographic copy of the marriage certificate he knew that his father wrote and signed the original. A certified copy of Ordinance No. 3 of the Constitutional Convention of Florida, adopted November 4, 1865, declaring all marriages valid which had been solemnized in that state since January 10, 1865, by an ordained minister of the gospel, etc. A certified copy of article 15, § 6, of the Constitution of Florida, adopted February, 1868, validating "all proceedings, decisions or actions accomplished by civil or military officers in Florida acting under authority of the United States subsequent to January 10, 1865, and prior to the final restoration of the state to the government of the United States," viz., July 31, 1868. Certified copies of acts of the Legislature of Florida, passed in 1828 and 1829, directing ministers solemnizing marriages to make certificate thereof on the license, and transmit the same to the clerk of the county court of the county wherein the marriage took place, to be recorded and filed as evidence of the marriage. The affidavits of Norman and all the counsel who represented him on the trial were attached to the motion, from which it appeared that none of them knew that the marriage license and certificate were on file in the War Department until after the trial, and after the overruling of the original motion for a new trial. There were affidavits to the effect that before the trial the records of the county court of Duval county, in which Jacksonville, Fla., is situated, as well as the records of all the courts in that county, had been diligently searched, and no evidence of the marriage of Norman to Henrietta Prescott could be found; that inquiries for information as to such marriage had, before the trial, been made of various named officials and old residents of Duval county, but without avail, except as to the evidence of the repute, which was submitted on the trial; that Norman's real name was Charles Napoleon Bonaparte Norman; that the clue which led to the discovery of the fact that the marriage license and certificate were on file in the War Department was the testimony of one of Norman's witnesses, who testified upon the trial, on direct examination, that Norman was married to Henrietta Prescott by a "chaplain of the soldiers," but who, on cross-examination, testified that he was not present at the marriage, but had heard that Norman was married by a chaplain. Attached to the motion was a brief of the evidence submitted on the trial. The court refused to grant a new trial on this extraordinary motion, and movant excepted.

A new trial may be granted when material evidence, not merely cumulative in its character, but relating to new and material facts, shall be discovered by the applicant after the rendition of a verdict against him; but it must appear that neither the applicant nor his counsel knew of the existence of such evidence before the trial, and that the same could not have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary diligence. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5480, 5481. As has been announced in many adjudicated cases, courts view with disfavor and caution, if not with suspicion, motions for new trials on the ground of newly discovered evidence. It is a most salutary requirement that each party is bound, at his peril, to submit on the trial all competent evidence he has at hand. Otherwise trials would be speculative and the end of litigation remote. The general rule is that if a party had knowledge of a fact at the trial, and it could have been proved then by evidence other than the newly discovered, a new trial will not be granted, unless the applicant can satisfactorily explain why he did not attempt to use the evidence at hand. 14 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 802. The principle of this rule has been recognized and followed in many cases. Davis v. Zumwalt, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 596; Herman v. Mason, 37 Wia. 273; Hinson v. Catoe, 10 S. C. 311; Bledsoe v. Little, 4 How. (Miss.) 13; Conrad v. Conrad, 9 Phila. 510; Quigley v. Birdseye, 11 Mont. 439, 28 Pac. 741; Chapman v. Moore, 107 Ind. 223, 8 N. E. 80; Davis Sewing Mach. Co. v. Dunbar, 32 W. Va. 335, 9 S. E. 237; Hanley v. Life Ass'n, etc., 69 Mo. 380; Gullett v. Housh, 7 Blatchf. (Ind.) 52; Nixon v. Christie, 84 Ga. 496, 10 S. E. 1087. In Jinks' Case, 117 Ga. 714, 44 S. E. 814, it was said: "The discovery of evidence which is simply cumulative of that of the existence of which a party knew when the case was tried, and which he then might have introduced, cannot be ground for a new trial." Applying the rule announced to the facts disclosed by the record in the present case, did the court err in overruling the extraordinary motion for a new trial? The alleged new and material fact, evidence of which is claimed to have been discovered by the movant after the rendition of the verdict against him, and after the overruling of his former motion for a new trial, is that a marriage in fact—one solemnized in accordance with a license, and by a ceremony performed by a minister of the gospel—was entered into between the movant, Norman, and Henrietta Prescott, in Jacksonville, Fla., on February 23, 1865; and the alleged newly discovered evidence relating to this alleged new and material fact is the license and certificate found on file in the War Department at Washington, D. C. All the other evidence attached as exhibits to the motion relates to this marriage license and the certificate thereon, and, disconnected therefrom, would not be considered as cause for a new trial. Was the marriage in fact a new fact which Norman did not discover until after the verdict against him? In the nature of things, it was not. He was a party to the marriage, and, of all persons, must have known that it had taken place. But, aside from that, it appears from the record, in the affidavit made by the attorneys who represented Norman on the trial, that he knew and remembered the marriage in fact at and before the trial, and that these attorneys then knew of it. The language of this affidavit, in reference to what these attorneys did before the trial, is: "That they asked C. B. Norman who married him, and he answered that he got a marriage license in Jacksonville, Fla.—not stating that a provost marshal issued same—and was married by a minister, whose name he had forgotten and could not recollect. That they further inquired of Norman as to who was present at his marriage with Henrietta Prescott, and he was unable to give the names of any witnesses who were present." If Norman had testified on the trial to what he then knew (that is, that he procured a license to marry Henrietta Prescott, and that he was married to her by a minister, but that he could not remember from whom he procured the license, nor the name of the minister), then there would have been evidence of a marriage in fact between him and Henrietta Prescott, and all presumptions would have been in favor of the validity of such a marriage—that both parties consented, that they were both competent, that the minister officiating was authorized to perform the ceremony, and that the marriage license was properly issued. In other words, his testimony would have been evidence of a valid marriage in fact. 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1202 et seq.; Dale v. State, 88 Ga. 552, 15 S. E. 287, and cit. And who can say but that the jury would have believed his testimony and rendered a verdict in his favor? If he or his counsel, having evidence of a marriage in fact, were content to submit on the trial circumstances sufficient to prove only a presumptive marriage, over which a subsequent marriage in fact prevailed, then he must take the consequences. Our opinion is that the alleged newly discovered evidence was not such as to require the grant of a new trial, even if tested by the rule applicable to ordinary motions for new trials. Extraordinary motions for new trials, based on the ground of newly discovered evidence, are viewed by the courts with even less favor than original motions on such ground, and a stricter rule has been applied to the former. In Cox v. Hillier, 65 Ga. 57, it was held: "The extraordinary motions or cases contemplated by the statute are such as do not ordinarily occur in the transaction of human affairs, as when a man has been convicted of murder and it afterwards appears that the supposed deceased is still alive, or where one is convicted on the testimony of a witness who is subsequently found guilty of perjury in giving that testimony, or where there has been some providential cause, and cases of like character. Whilst the newly discovered evidence now brought to the attention of this court discloses some facts not in evidence before, yet, in its general character and bearing, it is merely cumulative to the case heretofore presented, and would scarcely have produced a different result on the ordinary motion for new trial, much less can it give to this proceeding the peculiar characteristic of being 'an extraordinary motion.'" It was said in East Tenn., Va. & Ga. R. Co. v. Whitlock, 75 Ga. 77, that the motion for new trial in extraordinary cases provided for in our Code was intended in a great degree to take the place of a bill in equity for a new trial; and in Robinson v. Veal, 79 Ga. 633, 7 S. E. 159, it was held: "For equity to set aside a verdict at law on account of newly discovered evidence, the evidence discovered must be decisive of the controversy, and there must be no want of diligence to discover it before the trial at law." In Wimpy v. Gaskill, 79 Ga. 620, 7 S. E. 158, it was held: "That, at the time of trial, certain letters relevant to the issue were misplaced, and after diligent search could not be discovered, would lay the foundation for proving their contents. On discovery of the letters after verdict, etc., their contents not having been put in evidence, a bill for new trial is not maintainable because the letters were misplaced, more especially if their contents would merely serve to corroborate one side in a conflict of parol evidence, and not of themselves be decisive of the controversy." In the opinion in that case it was said that if the lost instrument had been a contract between the parties, such as a deed or note, or perhaps a receipt, and which would absolutely control the question at issue, and if there were no question of negligence, the bill would be one which equity ought to retain, and, if nothing else appeared, decree in favor of a new trial. In Hays v. Westbrook, 96 Ga. 219, 22 S. E. 893, it was held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial on extraordinary grounds. There the lost paper which was found after the trial was a deed to the property in question, and the movant had no notice or knowledge that the instrument existed until its accidental discovery after verdict. The ruling was therefore in accord with what was said in Wimpy v. Gaskill, supra. A certified copy of a marriage license, with the marriage certificate entered thereon, is not conclusive evidence of the marriage. It may be contradicted or shown to be a forgery. It is not in contemplation of law "the best evidence." It is of no higher grade than the testimony of witnesses. 1 Bish. Marriage, Div. & Sep. § 991. Granting, therefore, that the certified copies of the license and certificate attached to the motion in this case could be considered as record evidence, it would not be absolutely decisive of the question in controversy, and therefore would not require the grant of the extraordinary motion for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except SIMMONS, C. J., and LAMAR, J., who dissent.

(121 Ga. 331)

EQUITABLE MFG. CO. v. BIGGERS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

SALE—ACTION FOR PRICE—DEFENSE.

1. Where a written contract of bargain and sale stipulates that "this sale is made under inducements and representations herein expressed, and no others," it is not a valid defense to an action for the price of the goods that the purchaser was induced to enter into the agreement by reason of false representations made by an agent of the seller, but not contained in the contract, when there is nothing to show that the purchaser was misled or deceived as to its contents, or in any manner prevented from ascertaining the same.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Catoosa County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by the Equitable Manufacturing Company against W. E. Biggers. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. H. Odell and R. J. & J. McCamy, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Mann, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. The Equitable Manufacturing Company sued Biggers for $185, the price of a lot of jewelry which he purchased from the plaintiff, under the terms of a written contract between them, a copy of which was attached to the petition. The contract contained the following stipulations: "This sale is made under inducements and representations herein expressed and no others. The purchaser hereby waives all right to claim failure of consideration or goods are not like sample or not according to order unless he has exhausted the terms of warranty and exchange." "Warranty and Exchange Obligation: Any jewelry in this assortment failing to wear satisfactorily will be duplicated free of charge if returned to us within five years. Jewelry can be exchanged for new jewelry in plated, filled or solid gold any time within twelve months from date of invoice." "The Equitable Mfg. Co. hereby agrees to send a good bond of $185 to South Chattanooga Savings Bank to protect the purchaser in all the conditions of trade, including the guarantee of profits of $58 a year, each year for three years per slip furnished by the Equitable Mfg. Co."

One of the amended pleas filed by the defendant contained the following allegations: "Defendant says that the writing now attached to the petition was procured by fraudulent representation of the agent of the plaintiff in representing that said goods were merchantable and were all right, when in fact said representation made by said agent, and there set out in said writing, was false. Said agent guaranteed that defendant should have a profit of $58 per year for room in his store." "Plaintiff moved to strike all those portions of defendant's plea wherein he alleged that the contract sued on was procured by fraud, on the ground that the facts set up in these pleas did not state such fraud as the court could thereon give relief." This motion was overruled by the court, to which ruling the plaintiff excepted pendente lite. There was a verdict for defendant, and, plaintiff's motion for a new trial being denied, it excepted, assigning error upon the exceptions pendente lite, and also upon the refusal to grant a new trial.

As will have been observed, the motion to strike was confined to "those portions of defendant's plea wherein he alleged that the contract sued on was procured by fraud." The amended plea from which the allegations of the defendant quoted above are taken is the only plea wherein the defendant averred that the contract was procured by fraud, and, in passing upon the assignment of error on the overruling of the motion to strike, we are necessarily confined to the question of the merits of that particular plea, notwithstanding the arguments of counsel here were not so restricted. We think it clear, in view of the explicit stipulations of the contract of sale, and the entire absence of any averment in the plea that the defendant was misled or deceived as to the contents of the contract, or in any manner prevented from ascertaining the same, he was estopped from setting up as a defense that he was induced to execute the contract by reasons of the fraudulent representations of the plaintiff's agent as to the quality of the goods purchased and guaranty of profits for room in the store. "This sale is made under inducements and representations herein expressed, and no others," is the plain and unambiguous language of the contract. The right to claim failure of consideration was expressly waived unless the defendant should exhaust the terms of warranty and exchange as specified in the contract, and there was not even an intimation in the plea that defendant had complied, or made any effort to comply, with such terms. The plea merely sought to set up that certain representations (presumably oral) made by plaintiff's agent to defendant, contemporaneously with the execution of the contract, and which induced defendant to enter into the same, were false and fraudulent, and this, too, in the face of the explicit agreement on the part of the defendant that the contract was made under the inducements and representations expressed therein, and no others. The plea was, for the reasons given, if for no others, without merit, and the court erred in refusing to strike it.

The view we have taken renders it unnecessary to pass on the assignments of error made in the motion for a new trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(21 Ga. 376)

TURNER'S CHAPEL AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH v. P. A. LORD LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

JUDGMENT—MOTION TO SET ASIDE.

1. The motion to set aside the judgment was sufficient as against a general demurrer. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Cobb County; Geo. F. Gober, Judge.

Action by one Woods against the P. A. Lord Lumber Company. Garnishment issued against the Turner's Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church. From a judgment against the garnishee, it brings error. Affirmed.

H. B. Moss, for plaintiff in error. Smith, Hammond & Smith, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. In October, 1903, Woods sued out an attachment before a justice of the peace in Fulton county, Ga., against the P. A. Lord Lumber Company, on the ground that it was indebted to him and was a non-resident. A certified copy of the proceedings was sent to Cobb county, and a magistrate in that county on October 27, 1903, issued a garnishment against Turner's Chapel A. M. E. Church. Proper service was had of the summons of garnishment, which was returnable to the superior court of Cobb county. On November 16, 1903, the garnishee answered, admitting assets in its hands. In February, 1904, the defendant dissolved the garnishment as provided in Civ. Code 1895, § 4568. Notice of this dissolution was then given the proper officers of the garnishee by the magistrate before whom the attachment had been sued out. Subsequently counsel for the garnishee tendered to counsel for the defendant the amount which the garnishee had admitted owing the defendant. This tender was declined, the defendant claiming that the indebtedness was for a larger amount. Thereafter, at the March term, 1904, of Cobb superior court, counsel for the garnishee took an ex parte order that the garnishee pay into court the amount of its admitted indebtedness, and that the clerk of the court pay to counsel for the garnishee the sum of $25 as a fee for his services—this fee to be paid out of the fund paid into court—and that the garnishee be then discharged. At the same term of the court the defendant made a motion asking that this order be set aside. In the motion the above facts were recited. When this motion came on to be heard, counsel for the garnishee demurred to it upon the ground "that said motion falls to set out any reason why the judgment should be set aside." This demurrer was overruled, and, "respondent's counsel stating that no further cause would be shown, or answer filed," the court granted an order setting aside the former judgment or order. To this the garnishee excepted.

As we have seen, the demurrer filed to the motion was very general in its terms, whilst the motion itself stated all of the facts from the commencement of the attachment proceedings to the granting of the ex parte order sought to be set aside. The motion shows that the garnishment had been dissolved by giving bond under section 4568 of the Civil Code of 1895, and that after this was done the garnishee, with full knowledge that the garnishment had been dissolved, took the order sought to be set aside. When the garnishment was dissolved by giving bond, the garnishee was relieved, and the effects in its hands should have been paid to its creditor, the defendant. After the dissolution of the garnishment, the garnishee must respond to the defendant, and cannot relieve itself by paying the money into court. It was claimed, however, that the motion did not show that the defendant was an "incorporation not incorporated by the laws of this state," so as to have any right to dissolve the garnishment under section 4568. The motion does not contain any express averment to this effect. It does, however, set out that the garnishment was dissolved under this section of the Code. The presumption is that the officer who took and approved the bond was satisfied by proper showing that defendant was "an incorporation not incorporated by the laws of this state." Otherwise he would have refused to accept and approve the bond. Besides this, the motion shows that the attachment was issued against the defendant as a nonresident. This and its name are sufficient to show prima facie that it is a nonresident corporation, for its name, "P. A. Lord Lumber Company," is such as to import a corporation. "When the name of a party to a suit is such as to import that the party is a corporation, there is a presumption to this effect which prevails until the contrary is shown." Holcomb v. Cable Co., 119 Ga. 466, 46 S. E. 671. The "P. A. Lord Lumber Company" being a party to this case, and its name importing that it is a corporation, there is a presumption that it is a corporation. Added to this are the facts that the attachment was issued against it as a nonresident, and that a bond given by it under section 4568 of the Civil Code of 1895, was accepted by the proper officer; the presumption being that such officer would not have accepted the bond unless he had been satisfied by proper proof that the defendant was an "incorporation not incorporated by the laws of this state." We think there was enough in the motion to show, as against a general demurrer, that the defendant was an incorporation not incorporated under the laws of this state. If the garnishee wished to rely upon the point that the motion did not set out with sufficient certainty and distinctness that it was a nonresident corporation, this question should have been raised by special demurrer.

After the dissolution of the garnishment, the garnishee could not then be properly discharged by paying into court its admitted indebtedness, and the order to that effect was properly set aside.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 331)

THOMAS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

HOMICIDE—VERDICT—CONSTRUCTION.

1. According to the express decision in Wright v. State, 2 S. E. 693, 78 Ga. 192, and the off-followed principle announced in Bulloch v. State, 10 Ga. 47 (4), 54 Am. Dec. 369, a verdict that the defendant is guilty of involuntary manslaughter will be referred to the highest grade of that offense, and be treated as equivalent to a finding that he was guilty of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act.

2. The decision to the contrary in Thomas v. State, 38 Ga. 117, is, on review, overruled. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Spalding County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Joe Thomas was convicted of involuntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

Thomas was indicted for murder, for that with force and arms, and acting with malice aforethought, he did unlawfully kill Will Benton by striking him and beating him with a stick. At the August term, 1904, of Spalding superior court, a trial was had, resulting in the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of involuntary manslaughter." The verdict was received and recorded, and the jury trying the case were discharged and dispersed. At the same term of the court the defendant moved in arrest because the verdict was too uncertain and indefinite, was unlawful, not justified by the pleadings, did not find whether the killing was in the commission of a lawful or an unlawful act, and that no legal judgment could be rendered, since the court could not tell what grade of involuntary manslaughter was meant. The court overruled the motion, and the defendant excepted.

Marcus W. Beck and J. R. Williams, for plaintiff in error. O. H. B. Bloodworth, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. The careful and thorough review of the authorities, and the convincing opinion of Justice Cobb in Watson v. State, 116 Ga. 607, 43 S. E. 82, make it unnecessary to re-examine the question as to the possible verdicts which may be rendered in a trial on an indictment for murder. It was there shown that under such a charge the defendant might be found guilty of murder, voluntary manslaughter, involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act, involuntary manslaughter in the commission of a lawful act without due care, assault with intent to murder, shooting at another, stabbing, or assault. In other words, whatever may be the rule elsewhere, under the Penal Code of this state each of these minor offenses may by inclusion be as well charged as though the indictment contained separate counts for each of these distinct offenses. Treating the indictment, therefore, as in effect containing several counts, the rule is that a general verdict of guilty will be referred to that count charging the greatest offense. "Verdicts are to have a reasonable intendment, and are to receive a reasonable construction, and are not to be avoided unless from necessity." Pen. Code 1895, § 1033. As far as possible, they must be construed according to uniform rules. At the beginning it would no doubt have been quite as logical to say that a verdict of guilty in such cases should be referred to the lowest instead of to the highest offense charged. But whether because there was a conclusive presumption that the jury would have indicated that fact if they intended to find the defendant guilty of the lesser offense, or whether because, after the verdict of guilty, the presumption of innocence had been removed, and in vindication of the law the defendant would be considered as guilty of the highest offense named, the principle was established that verdicts of guilty were to be referred to that count charging the greatest offense. By analogy, under an indictment for murder, including therein a charge of manslaughter, a verdict for manslaughter is to be treated as a finding that the defendant was guilty of voluntary manslaughter, that being the highest grade included within that term. Welch v. State, 50 Ga. 128, 15 Am. Rep. 690. By exactly the same principle, if the defendant is found guilty of involuntary manslaughter the verdict must be treated as a finding that he has committed the highest grade of that offense, or involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. Such was the express ruling of two judges in Wright v. State, 78 Ga. 192, 2 S. E. 693. That decision was based upon the early and carefully considered case of Bulloch v. State, 10 Ga. 60, 54 Am. Dec. 369, the principle of which has repeatedly been followed, even where one count charges a felony and the other a misdemeanor. Dean v. State, 43 Ga. 218; Yarborough v. State, 86 Ga. 396, 12 S. E. 650; Long v. State, 12 Ga. 317; Adams v. State, 52 Ga. 565. The decision complained of was in accordance with these cases, and there would be no room for questioning the ruling but for a dictum in Welch v. State, supra, and the opinion in Thomas v. State, 38 Ga. 117. This want of harmony was recognized in Isom v. State, 83 Ga. 378, 9 S. E. 1051. But the decision in Thomas' Case was opposed to the principle of the prior ruling in Bulloch's Case, and the later decision in Smith v. State, 109 Ga. 479, 35 S. E. 59, nor has it at any time been followed by a full bench. English v. State, 105 Ga. 516, 31 S. E. 448. In view of these conflicts, the Solicitor General asked and obtained permission to review the Thomas Case if the court should be of opinion that it was controlling authority. As has been shown, it was in conflict with the principle laid down in the earlier and authoritative ruling in Bulloch's Case. But that there may be no room for future discussion, the court is unanimously of the opinion that the Thomas Case should be overruled, and that the principle as expressly announced in Wright v. State should be followed. There was no error in refusing to arrest the judgment.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 333)

DICKERSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

HOMICIDE—VERDICT—CONSTRUCTION.

1. On the trial of one indicted for murder, the legal effect of a verdict of "guilty of involuntary manslaughter" was to find the accused guilty of the highest grade of the last-named offense, viz., involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. Thomas v. State (this day decided) 49 S. E. 273.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

B. F. Dickerson was convicted of manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

Twiggs & Oliver, James T. Evans, and E. H. Abrahams, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

FISH, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 469)

ROWAN v. COMBS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

HOMESTEAD—RIGHTS OF BENEFICIARY—RENTS AND PROFITS.

1. This case is controlled in principle by the ruling in Moore v. Peacock, 21 S. E. 144, 94 Ga. 523.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Henry County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by J. M. Rowan, guardian, against W. J. Combs. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

John S. Gleaton, for plaintiff in error. J. F. Wall, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. The guardian of an imbecile brought an action to recover the possession of land and for mesne profits. The title pleaded was the interest of the ward as the sole beneficiary of a homestead estate which had been carved out of her husband's estate. Pending the action the ward died. Her death being suggested of record, it was ordered that the suit proceed in the name of the guardian, he being clothed by law with all the powers of an administrator of his ward's estate. See Jefferson v. Bowers, 33 Ga. 452. The defendant filed a plea in abatement, alleging that, on account of the termination of the homestead estate by the death of the sole beneficiary, her legal representative had no further interest either in the land or in mesne profits which had accrued during her lifetime. This plea was sustained, and the action was abated. To this judgment the plaintiff excepted.

It is conceded that, the homestead estate having terminated upon the death of the sole beneficiary, the legal representative of the beneficiary had no right to recover possession of the land; but it is contended that the mesne profits which had accrued during the existence of the homestead estate, and withheld from the beneficiary, were a part of her estate, and could be lawfully recovered by her legal representative. At common law the general rule was that where the lessor of the plaintiff was a life tenant, and died pending the action, the suit might be revived by the legal representative of the lessor for the sole purpose of recovering mesne profits, damages, and costs. See Tyler on Ejectment, p. 578. The contention is that the case is controlled by this principle of the common law. In Moore v. Peacock, 94 Ga. 523, 21 S. E. 144, it was held that those who were beneficiaries of a homestead during their minority, and had arrived at full age, could not thereafter recover from one who had wrongfully excluded them from the possession and enjoyment of the estate during their minority, and who had received the rents and profits to his own use. It was said that, their right as beneficiaries having become extinguished by lapse of time, they had no claim as beneficiaries, and consequently no title, legal or equitable, on which they could recover; the ruling going to the extent that all rents and profits arising out of the homestead land, except those consumed while the homestead estate was in existence, belonged to the owner of the realty out of which the homestead was carved. This case is directly controlling in principle, and seems to make the peculiar character of the homestead estate a sufficient reason for not applying the rule of the common law above referred to. If the arrival at majority of minor beneficiaries, and consequent termination of the homestead estate, precluded them from recovering from a wrongdoer rents and profits which were unlawfully withheld from them during their minority, it would seem, upon like principles, that the death of an adult beneficiary whose interest terminated with her life would have a similar effect; and the fact that the suit was brought during her life would not seem to be a distinction in principle between the two cases.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 345)

LAMB v. MAYOR, ETC., OF CITY OF BRUNSWICK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—TRIAL OF POLICEMAN—EVIDENCE.

1. Where articles of impeachment are preferred against a policeman, one of the specifications charging him with "cursing and using profane and vulgar language" in and about the guardhouse, it is error to allow a witness to testify, over proper objection of the defendant, that witness had heard defendant use language which witness "considered profane and vulgar and cursing," without stating literally or in substance what was the language used. Whether such language was in fact vulgar, profane, or cursing, was a matter to be determined by the court.

2. Where in such a trial the defendant is charged with violating a rule which prescribes that members of the police force shall not "use profane language * * * while on duty or in uniform," and the evidence fails to show that when such language was used the defendant was on duty or in uniform, a conviction on this charge is contrary to law.

3. Where the defendant is also charged with committing a breach of the peace by drawing a pistol, and the evidence clearly shows that the circumstances justified him in so doing, a conviction upon this charge is unauthorized and illegal.

4. None of the other charges preferred against the defendant were supported by any evidence whatever which tended to establish their truth. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

T. L. Lamb, on trial before the mayor and council of the city of Brunswick, was discharged as policeman of such city, and brings error. Reversed.

Frank H. Harris and Woodford Mabry, for plaintiff in error. C. P. Goodyear, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 386)

HARTNETT v. STILLWELL.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

PARTNERSHIP — PURCHASE OF REALTY TITLE — ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE — PURCHASE BY SURVIVING PARTNER.

1. The legal title to real estate acquired by purchase with partnership funds, whether the title be taken to the individuals composing the partnership or to the partnership, is in the partners as tenants in common, but the equitable title to the real estate thus acquired is in the partnership.

2. The purchaser at an administrator's sale of a deceased partner's interest in land, the title to which was in the partnership name, acquired only the interest of the deceased partner in the land on a settlement of the partnership affairs. The proceeds of the sale belonged to the estate of the deceased partner, and were not partnership assets.

3. Where the title to the land was taken in the individual names of the partners, an innocent purchaser at the sale of a deceased partner's interest by his administrator would take such interest unincumbered by the secret equity of the partnership, and the proceeds of the sale could be recovered from the administrator by the surviving partner, if necessary to pay partnership debts.

4. But, if the surviving partner becomes the purchaser at such sale, he will be estopped from claiming the proceeds of the sale as partnership property, and must look to the land itself as assets of the partnership subject to the payment of its debts.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Spalding County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by W. H. Hartnett against John F. Stillwell. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Robt. T. Daniel, for plaintiff in error. T. E. Patterson and Lloyd Cleveland, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. W. H. Hartnett sued John F. Stillwell, as administrator of J. D. George, to recover $500 alleged to be due by reason of the following facts: Petitioner and J. D. George composed the firm of George & Hartnett. Among the assets of the firm were two lots of land in the city of Griffin, one known as the "White Place" and the other being a vacant lot on Solomon street. George died, and Stillwell became his administrator, and as such sold a one-half interest in the White place and the vacant lot as belonging to his intestate, and collected the proceeds, amounting to $455.90. The firm was insolvent at the time of George's death, and the firm assets in the hands of petitioner as surviving partner are insufficient to pay the partnership debts. The proceeds of the property sold by Stillwell, as administrator of the deceased partner, should be paid over to petitioner, to be applied to the payment of debts of the firm.

The defendant, in his plea, denied the substantial averments of the petition, and the case was referred to an auditor. When the case came on to be heard before the auditor, the defendant filed a demurrer to the petition, and moved to dismiss the same because no cause of action was set out. The demurrer was sustained by the auditor and he so reported. Afterwards evidence was submitted before the auditor, and the uncontradicted evidence established the following facts: George and Hartnett were partners doing a general merchandise business, and in the course of their business purchased a house and lot from W. R. and M. J. White, paying therefor with partnership assets, and procuring the deed to be made to John D. George and W. H. Hartnett. They also purchased a vacant lot on Solomon street from A. M. Elledge, and paid therefor with partnership funds, the deed to the last-mentioned lot being made to George & Hartnett. John D. George died, and Stillwell became his administrator. At the time of the death of George the firm was insolvent. All of the firm assets were exhausted in the payment of partnership debts. Stillwell, as the administrator of George, sold a one-half interest in the vacant lot to Dr. Drewry for $178.70, and a one-half interest in the White place to W. H. Hartnett for $276. These amounts were insufficient to pay the debts of the firm of George & Hartnett.

Upon these facts the auditor found that the plaintiff had no lien, in law or equity, on the money or proceeds in the hands of the administrator arising from the sale of the real estate, and that he was not entitled to recover. The plaintiff filed various exceptions to the rulings of the auditor, which were overruled by the court, and the report of the auditor was made the judgment of the court. He excepts to the judgment of the court dismissing his exceptions to the auditor's report. It is not necessary to notice the various exceptions to the auditor's report, and for this reason they are omitted. The question raised by the demurrer and the conclusion of fact by the auditor are identical. The evidence sustained the petition, so that the controlling question in the case is the right of the plaintiff to recover on the case he made.

The plaintiff's theory is that a surviving partner has a lien on the fund in the hands of an administrator of a deceased partner arising from a sale by the administrator of the interest of the deceased partner in partnership property. Under the undisputed facts, as found by the auditor, the plaintiff neither had a lien on the proceeds of the sale of the deceased partner's interest in the lands sold by his administrator, nor was the plaintiff entitled to recover such proceeds on any legal or equitable ground. Real estate received in payment of a partnership debt, whether the title be taken to the individuals composing the partnership or to the partnership, is to be considered at law as the property of the partners as tenants in common, subject, however, to be sold, and the proceeds thereof brought into the partnership fund for the payment of partnership debts and the settlement of balances as between the partners. Burnside v. Merrick, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 537; Dyer v. Clark, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 562, 39 Am. Dec. 697; Moran v. Palmer, 13 Mich. 367; Buchan v. Sumner, 2 Barb. Ch. 163, 47 Am. Dec. 305; Collumb v. Read, 24 N. Y. 505; Putnam v. Dobbins, 38 Ill. 364. The legal title to the real estate acquired by purchase with partnership assets is in the partners as tenants in common, but the equitable title in the real estate thus acquired is in the partnership. Bank of S. W. Ga. v. McGarrah, 120 Ga. 944, 48 S. E. 893. This equitable title is treated as personality, and on the death of one of the partners the survivor may sell and dispose of the entire equitable interest in the land, and the purchaser may compel a conveyance from the heirs of the deceased partner. Civ. Code 1895, § 2649. The administrator of the deceased partner has an inferior right to the surviving partner to the possession and control of partnership real estate. A surviving partner has the right to the control and possession of the property of the firm, and the administrator or heirs of the deceased partner can claim only such of the partnership property as remains after the partnership debts are all paid. Valentine v. Wysor (Ind.) 23 N. E. 1076, 7 L. R. A. 788, and cases cited. When the administrator of the deceased partner administered on the interest of his intestate, and sold that interest, the purchaser acquired only the title which the administrator's intestate had. The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to administrator's sales, and purchasers at such sales acquire the intestate's title cum onere. This title was the interest of his intestate in the land on a settlement of the partnership affairs. Dickenson v. Moore, 117 Ga. 887, 45 S. E. 240. The proceeds of the sale represent the partner's individual interest in the land, and that interest, as we have seen, was the legal title, subject to the sale of the land, if necessary, to discharge partnership obligations. It follows, therefore, that as to the vacant tract of land conveyed to the partnership, as such, the surviving partner may, in a proper proceeding instituted against the purchaser at the administrator's sale, subject that tract to the payment of partnership debts. The deed to this vacant lot was taken in the name of the partnership, and when the administrator of the deceased partner undertook to sell his intestate's interest therein the purchaser was chargeable with notice of the partnership character of the land. His title would be for no greater interest in the land than was owned by the administrator's intestate. Upon proof that the land so purchased was necessary to pay partnership liabilities, the surviving partner could subject it to the payment of firm debts. All the purchaser acquired at this sale was the interest of the deceased partner, and that interest was what remained to John D. George after a settlement of the liabilities of George & Hartnett. The proceeds of the sale belong to the estate of the deceased partner, and are no part of the assets of the partnership.

The title to the White lot was taken to the members of the partnership in their individual names as tenants in common. The deed did not disclose that it was partnership property, or that it was purchased with partnership funds. An innocent purchaser at the administrator's sale would have acquired a good title as against the surviving partner, because the doctrine of caveat emptor does not extend to secret equities. Thus it was held in Johnson v. Equitable Co., 114 Ga. 604, 40 S. E. 787, 56 L. R. A. 933, that "a bona fide purchaser at a sheriff's sale, who has paid the purchase money without notice of an equity, will be protected against the same." If the purchaser of the White lot had been an innocent purchaser, without notice of the partnership claim on the land, the purchase money would be substituted for the land, and the administrator of the deceased partner would be liable to account to the surviving partner for the same. But the record discloses that the surviving partner was himself the purchaser. He was charged with knowledge of the nature of the title and the interest the partnership had in the land, and by suffering it to be sold as the property of his deceased partner's estate and becoming the purchaser at that sale he is estopped from now claiming the proceeds as partnership property.

There being no conflict in the evidence, the conclusion of the auditor that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover was right, and the court did not err in dismissing the exceptions to his report and making the report the judgment of the court.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 403)

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. HENSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT—PETITION—AMENDMENT—EVIDENCE.

1. A petition for damages, brought by a father, under Civ. Code 1895, § 3828, for the homicide of his minor daughter, which alleges that the petitioner "has been and is unable to earn a support for his family without the assistance of his said daughter," may be amended by striking therefrom the words "his family," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "himself."

2. The allegations of the petition as to the prospective earning capacity of the deceased were not subject to the special demurrer filed thereto.

3. In a suit for damages by a father for the homicide of his minor child, brought under Civ. Code 1895, § 3828, it is not necessary, in order for the plaintiff to recover, that he show by the evidence that he depended alone upon the deceased child for his entire support. It is sufficient if he establish partial dependence upon the child's labor, accompanied by substantial contribution therefrom to his maintenance.

4. The evidence was conflicting, but that for the plaintiff warranted a finding that the homicide on account of which the suit was brought was brought about by the negligence of the defendant's employes, and that the deceased was free from fault.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; W. M. Henry, Judge.

Action by J. W. Henson against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. Branham, McHenry & Maddox, and F. W. Copeland, for plaintiff in error. Dean & Dean, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. This was a suit for damages against a railroad company, brought by a father for the homicide of his minor daughter. The original petition alleged that the petitioner's wife died in the year 1901, and that since her death "petitioner and his family, consisting of [the deceased] and four small children, have lived together, each working for the support and maintenance of the family as they were able to do; they having no means of support except such as they derived from their labor. Petitioner, being in feeble health and disabled by an injury, has been and is unable to earn a support for his family without the assistance of his said daughter." By an amendment, which was allowed over the objection of the defendant, the words "his family," in the sentence last quoted, were stricken, and the word "himself" substituted therefor. The defendant demurred generally and specially, but its demurrer was overruled. It also filed an answer, and the case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $2,500. The defendant brings the case to this court on exceptions to the overruling of its motion for a new trial and of its demurrer, and to the allowance of the amendment to the petition heretofore mentioned.

1, 2. The cause of action stated by the plaintiff in his original petition was the wrongful homicide of his daughter. It is true that the fact that the deceased assisted the petitioner in his efforts to support his family would not authorize a recovery by reason of the section of the Code under which this suit was brought, and to that extent the petition as originally filed was defective and subject to special demurrer. The disposition made of the earnings of the deceased, however, was not the cause of action. It was matter which should have been properly pleaded in the first instance, but the failure to so plead it did not render the petition fatally defective and not subject to amendment. In the case of City of Columbus v. Anglin, 120 Ga. 785, 48 S. E. 318, is to be found an exhaustive review of the law relating to amendment of pleadings in this state. The previous decisions of this court on the subject were either harmonized, or, so far as they were in conflict with the principles announced, overruled, and the rulings there made may be taken as the settled law of this state in regard to amendments. Tested by that decision, we do not hesitate to say that the judgment allowing the amendment to the petition in the present case was correct. The demurrer filed by the defendant raises, in part, the same question as the objection made to the allowance of the amendment, and to that extent the demurrer need not be separately considered. The only remaining ground of demurrer was that certain allegations of the petition as to the earning capacity of the deceased were remote, speculative, and contingent; but a careful reading of the allegations in question shows that they are not fairly open to that objection.

3. It is urged that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence, for the special reason that the evidence showed that the plaintiff was not dependent upon his minor daughter for a support for himself. It is well settled by the decisions of this court that section 3828 of the Civil Code of 1895, under which the present action was brought, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed; that, in order to authorize a recovery thereunder, the deceased must at the time of the homicide have been contributing in a substantial degree to the support of the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff must have been dependent upon the deceased for such support and maintenance. Smith v. Hatcher, 102 Ga. 160, 29 S. E. 162; Georgia R. Co. v. Spinks, 111 Ga. 571, 38 S. E. 855. It is equally well settled, however, that it is not necessary, under this section, that the plaintiff show that he or she depended alone upon the deceased for his or her entire support; but that partial dependence upon the child's labor, accompanied by substantial contribution therefrom to the maintenance of the plaintiff, is sufficient; and further that where a family of working people includes parents and a minor child, and the child renders valuable services, of which the mother, or, if no mother, the father, gets the benefit, the parent is dependent upon the child if the child thus contributes substantially to his or her support. Daniels v. S., F. & W. Ry. Co., 86 Ga. 236, 12 S. E. 365; R. & D. R. Co. v. Johnston, 89 Ga. 560, 15 S. E. 908; Augusta R. Co. v. Glover, 92 Ga. 132, 18 S. E. 406; A. & C. R. Co. v. Gravitt, 93 Ga. 396, 20 S. E. 550, 26 L. R. A. 553, 44 Am. St. Rep. 145; Georgia R. Co. v. Spinks, supra. In the present case it was shown that the plaintiff was capable of earning, and at times did earn, some money, which went to his support and maintenance. It was also shown, however, that from various causes he was disabled, and had not the capacity to provide his entire support; and there was some evidence to show that at the time of the homicide of his minor daughter he was in part, at least, dependent on her earnings for his support, and that those earnings contributed to a material extent to his support.

4. The evidence as to the negligence of the employés of the railroad company and the contributory negligence of the deceased was very conflicting. That for the defendant made out a perfect defense, and, if believed by the jury, would necessarily have resulted in a verdict in its favor. On the contrary, the evidence for the plaintiff warranted a finding that the defendant's train was cut in two at the crossing where the homicide occurred for the express purpose of allowing the crowd of mill operatives, of which the deceased was one, to cross the track; that after the train was cut in two the deceased and others were invited to cross the track; that all this was done by employés of the railroad company; that the attempt of the deceased to go across the track was not an act of negligence; and that, while the crowd of people were pouring across the track between the separated portions of the train, those portions were negligently brought together again, catching the plaintiff's daughter between two cars and crushing out her life. It was for the jury to say which of these conflicting theories was correct, under the evidence. The conflict was resolved by them in favor of the plaintiff. The trial judge, by his refusal to grant a new trial, in effect expressed his approval of their finding, and the verdict will not be disturbed by us.

The amended motion for a new trial contained several grounds in which complaint was made of rulings of the trial judge as to the admission of evidence, but, as these grounds were not insisted upon before this court, they will be considered as having been abandoned.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 378)

EDWARDS v. KELLOGG.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

PLEADING—DEMURRER—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. The erroneous refusal to sustain a demurrer to so much of a petition as prays for attorney's fees on the ground that the defendant had been stubbornly litigious and had acted in bad faith will not work a reversal of the judgment where the jury does not find a verdict for attorney's fees, but when evidence is admitted in support of such a prayer, and this evidence is, in its tendency, prejudicial to the defendant on the main issues involved, a new trial must result.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fannin County; Geo. F. Gober, Judge.

Action by T. W. Kellogg against L. G. Edwards. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

Griffin & Attaway and A. S. J. Hall, for plaintiff in error. N. A. Morris, J. Z. Foster, and Dupree & Dobbs, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. The petition filed by the plaintiff makes, in effect, the following case: The plaintiff and W. C. Thomas were partners in a mercantile business in the town of Blue Ridge, and on a day named the defendant purchased from the plaintiff his interest in the partnership at an agreed price of $1,650. By the terms of the agreement the defendant undertook to assume and pay off the plaintiff's part of the indebtedness of the firm, and was entitled to all of the plaintiff's interest in the partnership assets. The defendant also contracted to pay $150 of the purchase price in cash upon the consummation of the trade, and to give three notes for $500 each for the balance, due 12 months after date, and bearing interest at 8 per cent. per annum from date. A few days after this agreement was made, the defendant paid the plaintiff $175, but has refused to pay the balance, or any part of it, although due, and has failed and refused to give his notes as promised. It was also alleged that the defendant had been stubbornly litigious and had acted in bad faith, in that, prior to the filing of suit by the plaintiff, he entered into a written agreement to submit to arbitration the matters in controversy, and after evidence was heard by the arbitrators he withdrew from his agreement and notified the arbitrators that he would not abide by their award, thus causing the plaintiff the expense of employing counsel and entering suit. The petition prayed for judgment for $1,475, besides interest, and for $250 attorney's fees. The defendant demurred to so much of the petition as claimed attorney's fees. The demurrer was overruled. He also filed an answer in which he admitted having entered into an agreement to purchase the interest of the plaintiff in the partnership mentioned, but averred that this agreement was induced by the express guaranty of the plaintiff that the debts of the firm did not exceed $8,000, and that this guaranty was not true, the partnership debts, as a matter of fact, amounting at that time to $17,797.96, one-half of which had been paid by the defendant as the successor of the plaintiff in the partnership. The answer prayed that the defendant have judgment against the plaintiff for $4,898.88, or one-half of the excess of the amount really owed by the firm at the time of the contract over the amount represented by the plaintiff to be the maximum indebtedness of the partnership. On the trial the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,475, without interest or attorney's fees. The defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled, to which order, as well as the order overruling his demurrer, he excepts.

There can be no doubt that the demurrer to so much of the petition as sought to recover attorney's fees should have been sustained. The allegations of the petition do not set up such bad faith as the law recognizes as a warrant for the recovery of attorney's fees. "Bad faith," as contemplated by the statute, refers to the original transaction, rather than to the motive with which the defense is made. Traders' Ins. Co. v. Mann, 118 Ga. 381 (7), 45 S. E. 426. It matters not how stubborn or litigious a defendant may be, he is not liable for attorney's fees so long as he has proceeded in good faith and has a substantial right in the premises. Lowry Banking Co. v. Atlanta Piano Co., 95 Ga. 149, 22 S. E. 42. The fact that the defendant entered into an agreement to submit to arbitration, and, after evidence had been heard, but before an award had been made, withdrew from his agreement, furnished no ground for a judgment against him for attorney's fees, for it was his right to withdraw at any time before an award. Parsons v. Ambos, 121 Ga. 98, 48 S. E. 697. We do not, however, reverse the judgment of the court below on the ground of error in overruling the demurrer, because it is apparent, from the fact that no verdict was returned for attorney's fees, that this error was harmless. But the admission of evidence in support of the allegations of the petition which were attacked by the demurrer was, in our opinion, error requiring the grant of a new trial. The natural tendency of this evidence was to prejudice the minds of the jury against the defendant by creating the impression that, in withdrawing from a submission to arbitration into which he had entered, he was acting in bad faith; and to this extent it was not only irrelevant, but harmful. The plaintiff's petition was, in effect, an action on account for the agreed purchase price of a one-half interest in the partnership, while the plea of the defendant was one of failure of consideration. The evidence demanded a finding that the defendant purchased the plaintiff's interest in the partnership, and agreed to pay therefor $1,650, only $175 of which was ever paid; that the plaintiff stated to the defendant that the debts then due by the firm would approximate $8,000; that, as a matter of fact, they exceeded this amount; that the debts due to the firm were also in excess of the amount represented by the plaintiff; and that the defendant, upon learning that the statements made to him by the plaintiff were not true, did not attempt to rescind the contract, but adhered to it, reaping whatever benefits accrued to him from a membership in the firm, as well as bearing his proportion of the partnership burdens. Under the evidence, the jury might have found for the plaintiff the full amount sued for, with the exception of attorney's fees. They might have found that the consideration flowing to the defendant had partly failed, and have returned a verdict for the plaintiff on a quantum valebat, or they might have found that the $175 already paid the plaintiff by the defendant had completely discharged the obligation, in view of the failure of the alleged warranty. Thus, in view of the conflict of the evidence on this vital and controlling point, it is clear that the admission of irrelevant evidence having a tendency harmful to the defendant must work the grant of a new trial.

The motion for a new trial also complains of alleged error in the charge of the court, but those charges, in our opinion, fairly set forth the law applicable to the case. We reverse the judgment solely on the ground of error in the admission of evidence as above set out.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 360)

CARTER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT—EVIDENCE.

1. In only one of the charges complained of was there any error, and that was cured by language used in immediate connection therewith. The evidence, the admission of which is assigned as error, does not appear to have been objected to on the trial in the court below, and therefore, even if erroneously admitted, will not work the grant of a new trial. The assignments of error on the failure of the judge to charge certain principles alleged to have been applicable are without merit, for the reason that no written requests were made that such charges be given. The evidence warranted the verdict, and it was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Lowndes County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

¶ 1. See Criminal Law, vol. 15, Cent. Dig. § 2639.

J. C. Carter was convicted of assault, and brings error. Affirmed.

G. A. Whitaker and W. M. Hammond, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Thomas, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was found guilty upon an indictment charging him with assault with intent to rape. He moved for a new trial, which was refused, and he excepted. The motion, aside from the general grounds that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence, complains of various extracts from the charge of the court, of the admission of stated evidence, and of the failure to give in charge certain principles alleged to have been applicable to the case.

Most of the charges complained of are assigned as error because the court failed to charge in immediate connection therewith that, before a conviction could be had, the jury must be satisfied of the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the evidence must preclude every other reasonable hypothesis than that of the guilt of the accused. An examination of the charge of the court shows that the law of reasonable doubt was sufficiently explained to the jury. To hold that this principle must be reiterated after the instructions given upon each and every principle of law given in charge would lead to a manifest absurdity. Aside from this, it is too well settled to need citation of authority that it will not be held error that the court, in giving in charge a correct and applicable principle of law, failed to charge in connection therewith some other equally applicable and correct principle. Only one of the charges complained of presents any difficulty, and that was in the following language: "You must be satisfied, gentlemen, under the law, that the defendant in the commission of this act—and you will look to all of the evidence, all of the circumstances surrounding the case, everything connected with it that has been admitted before you, and determine from that evidence whether or not the defendant took hold of this girl—made this assault upon her by laying his hands upon her with the intent to have carnal knowledge of her forcibly and against her will. It is necessary that you be satisfied of this fact before you would be authorized to convict the defendant of the offense of assault with intent to rape." It is claimed that the language used in the first part of this charge, "You must be satisfied, gentlemen, under the law, that the defendant in the commission of this act," assumed that the accused was guilty of the act charged in the indictment, and left to the jury only the question of his intent. It must be confessed that the language quoted is not well expressed; but a careful reading of the entire charge will show that the language immediately following, which is parenthetical in its form, made it clear that the jury could not consider the question of intent until they had first determined that the accused laid his hands upon the girl as charged; and this, we think, cured whatever was objectionable in the part of the charge to which exception is taken.

The ground of the motion which complains of the admission of evidence does not show that any objection was made to its admission when it was offered in the trial court, and hence it cannot now be considered. The failure to charge the principles alleged to have been applicable will not be held error in the absence of written requests, and it appears that no such requests were made. The jury believed the witnesses offered by the state. The trial judge approved the verdict, and we will not, in a case where the evidence, if believed, is sufficient to make out the case charged, set aside a judgment refusing a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 384)

HARVEY v. BUCHANNAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

VIOCEUS ANIMALS—LIABILITY OF OWNER.

1. The owner of a vicious or dangerous animal, who allows the same to go at liberty, is liable to one who sustains injury, as a result of the vicious or dangerous tendency of the animal, only in the event that the owner knows its vicious or dangerous character. If he does not know this fact, he will not be liable for an injury which is not the usual and natural consequence to be anticipated from allowing an ordinary animal of that kind to go at large.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; W. M. Henry, Judge.

Action by J. A. Buchanan against W. E. Harvey. Verdict for plaintiff. Defendant's certiorari was overruled, and he brings error. Reversed.

McHenry & Maddox, for plaintiff in error. Junius F. Hillyer, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. This suit originated in a justice's court. The plaintiff was the owner of a kid, of the alleged value of $1. The defendant was the owner of a mule, and the record discloses that "her name was Maud." The cause of controversy was the death of the kid at the hands, or, to speak more accurately, at the mouth and fore feet, of the mule. The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1 damages and $26.05 costs. The defendant complains because the court overruled his certiorari.

It appears from the evidence that the mule was at large, and entered the pasture of the owner of the kid, the pasture not being protected by a lawful fence. While the record discloses the district in which the suit was brought, and therefore the district in which the defendant resided, it does not disclose the district in which the pasture of the plaintiff was located. The stock law is in force only in some of the districts in Floyd county, in which the cause of action arose. We, therefore, cannot determine from the record whether the case should be controlled by rules which would be applicable in a stock-law district, or by those which would apply in a district in which fences are maintained. In those districts where the stock law has been adopted, it is the duty of the owners of stock to keep them in inclosures protected by lawful fences, and a mule at large in such a district would be a trespassing animal. In those districts where the stock law has not been adopted, it is the duty of owners of land to protect their premises and crops by lawful fences against animals which are allowed to go at large. In the one case the owner of the animal would have been at fault in negligently allowing it to go at large; in the other case he would not have been to blame for merely allowing his mule to roam. We have called attention to the matter of fences, for the reason that stress has been laid in the argument upon the fact that the pasture in which the kid was killed was not protected by a lawful fence. But, under the view we have taken of the case, we do not think it is material whether the cause of action arose in a stock-law district or not. The Code declares: "A person who owns or keeps a vicious or dangerous animal of any kind, and by the careless management of the same, or by allowing the same to go at liberty, another without fault on his part is injured thereby, such owner or keeper shall be liable in damages for such injury." Civ. Code 1895, § 3821. This is but a restatement of the common law, and at common law, in order to support such actions, it was necessary to show, not only that the animal was vicious or dangerous, but also that the owner knew this fact. The scienter was the gist of the action. Conway v. Grant, 88 Ga. 40, 13 S. E. 808, 14 L. R. A. 196, 30 Am. St. Rep. 145; Reed v. Southern Express Co., 95 Ga. 108, 22 S. E. 138, 51 Am. St. Rep. 62. A careful examination of the record fails to disclose any evidence that the owner of the mule knew that the animal was vicious and dangerous. Hence there was no liability upon him for damages, whether he was at fault in allowing the mule to go at large, or whether he had a right to release it from his premises. The killing of stock is not the natural or usual consequence of allowing the ordinary mule to go at large. The destruction of or injury to crops or herbage would be. Hence, in the one case, proof of the scienter as to the mule's habits and tendencies is necessary as a part of the plaintiff's case, and in the other it is not. The judge erred in not sustaining the certiorari.

¶ 1. See Animals, vol. 2, Cent. Dig. §§ 222, 223, 228, 233, 236.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 443)

MACON RY. & LIGHT CO. v. BARNES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS—STREET RAILROADS—INJURY TO TRAVELER—DILIGENCE—MISTRIAL—EVIDENCE.

1. Where the court properly instructed the jury as to the respective rights of the parties on a question in the case, the refusal to give in charge a request containing a general proposition of law, though pertinent to the question, was not cause for a new trial.

2. "What particular means or measures of diligence would be appropriate for use under the circumstances should be left to the jury." Accordingly it was not incumbent on the court to give, as requested, a charge that one who drives on and along a street railway track laid in a public highway "should be careful to look and listen with ordinary care to avoid a collision."

3. An exception to a correct charge because of failure to give, in the same connection, some other pertinent legal proposition, is not a good assignment of error.

4. It was not erroneous to instruct the jury that, in passing upon the credibility of the witnesses, "their bias or impartiality, as the same may legitimately appear from the evidence," might be considered.

5. A motion for a mistrial was not the appropriate remedy when, upon a poll of the jury, the party against whom the verdict was rendered contended that it appeared from the answers of one of the jurors that it was not his verdict.

6. There was evidence to authorize the verdict, and the court did not err in refusing a new trial. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Action by James Barnes against the Macon Railway & Light Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Dessau, Harris & Harris, for plaintiff in error. Jos. H. Hall and Steed & Ryals, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. 1. The defendant operated a street railroad in the city of Macon and some of the adjacent suburbs. Plaintiff was driving in his buggy longitudinally on defendant's track, in a public highway beyond the city limits, when one of defendant's cars came in collision with the buggy, resulting in the alleged injuries and damages for which he sued. On the trial defendant's counsel requested the court to charge the jury that "the street railway company, at the place where the alleged injury to the plaintiff is alleged to have occurred, had the superior right of way." The court refused to give this request, but did instruct the jury that "the public have a right to use a public highway upon which a street railway is operated, and the company has a right to use the highway upon which its track is laid, and to operate its cars thereon; but it is incumbent upon the public, in * * * driving longitudinally on the track, to exercise ordinary care and diligence * * * not to interfere with the use of the track by the railway company," and to exercise a like degree of care to avoid collisions. In view of these Instructions, we do not think the refusal to give the request was erroneous. A street railway company has no superior right to the use of the public highway in which its cars are operated, over the rights of other users of the highway, except that, from the necessity of the case, the latter, at places other than crossings, must give the company's cars the right to pass when occasion requires. In other respects the rights of street railway companies in using public highways with their cars are precisely like the rights of others who use the highways with other vehicles. As the highway is laid out for passage, each passer has a right of passage, subject only to the condition that he does not unnecessarily interfere with such use by others as they are entitled to. Buttelli v. Railway Company, 59 N. J. Law, 302, 36 Atl. 700; Nellis, Street Railroad Accident Law, § 15; Booth, Street Railway Law, § 303; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. 57 et seq. The instructions given to the jury clearly recognized, to the full extent, the superior right of way the defendant company had in the use of its tracks when the collision occurred; and the jury were much more likely to get from the court's instructions a correct understanding of the principle involved than they would have been from the general, abstract proposition embodied in the request. The broad assertion in the request that the railway company had the superior right of way might, if given without qualification, have impressed the jury with the idea that the railway company was in some measure exempt from the care required of it by law to avoid the collision with the plaintiff's buggy.

2. It was not erroneous to refuse to charge the jury that one who drives on and along a street railway track laid in a public highway "should be careful to look and listen with ordinary care to avoid a collision." Whatever may be the rulings on the subject in other jurisdictions, it is well settled in this state that it is not incumbent upon the court to instruct the jury that it is the duty of one who attempts or intends to cross a railroad track to use his senses of hearing and seeing before stepping on the track. "The precise thing which any man should do before stepping upon a railroad track is that which any prudent man would do under similar circumstances. If prudent men would look and listen, so must every one else, or take the consequences, so far as the consequences might have been avoided by that means. The court cannot instruct the jury what a prudent man would do, for, in legal contemplation, the jury know it better than the court." Richmond & Danville R. Co. v. Howard, 79 Ga. 44, 53, 3 S. E. 426; Richmond & Danville R. Co. v. Johnston, 89 Ga. 560, 15 S. E. 908; Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Johnson, 90 Ga. 500, 16 S. E. 49. "What particular means or measures of diligence would be appropriate under the circumstances should be left to the jury." Ins. Co. of North America v. Leader, 121 Ga. —, 48 S. E. 972. If the court should charge in a case of this character that it was the duty of a party to do a specific thing, would it not be equivalent to saying that the omission to do that thing would be negligence? It is true that in the opinion rendered in Savannah Railway Company v. Beasley, 94 Ga. 142, 146, 21 S. E. 285, 286, it was said that "people who intend to cross its [the street railroad's] track should be careful to look and listen in order to avoid a collision." The question in that case was whether an electric street railway company is under the duty to stop its cars before reaching the crossings of public highways for the purpose of looking and listening by the motorman, or to enable them to look and listen, when there is no apparent reason for so doing, and the question was decided in the negative. What people who are about to cross the railroad track should do was not a question in the case, and therefore what was said as to their duty in that respect appears to be obiter; but, even if it were not, it would not be controlling, in the light of the former express rulings on the subject.

3. The court instructed the jury: "If you believe from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff and defendant were both negligent, then the court charges you that, if the plaintiff was more negligent than the defendant, the plaintiff could not recover in this case, and you should so find. If, on the other hand, you believe from a consideration of the evidence in the case that both parties were negligent, then I charge you that if the evidence shows the defendant company, its officers, agents, servants, and employes, were more negligent than the plaintiff, I charge you that the plaintiff can recover, but the damages recovered by the plaintiff should be decreased by the jury in proportion to the amount of default attributed to the plaintiff from a consideration of the evidence in the case." The errors assigned upon this charge were: "(1) Because, under this charge, if the jury found that both the company and the plaintiff were negligent, they could still find for the plaintiff. As a matter of law, the plaintiff cannot recover for injuries inflicted by the negligence of the agent of a railroad company in the operation of its trains or cars if both the agent and the person injured are equally negligent at the time the injury is sustained. (2) This charge was error because it omitted any statement as to the effect of finding that the injury was occasioned by casualty where neither party was at fault. The court nowhere in his charge instructed the jury upon either of these defenses, which the defendant was entitled to have considered by the jury, and which the court in its charge excluded, and to which the court, in its charge, should have called the attention of the jury. The court nowhere in its charge called the attention of the jury to either of the matters herein complained of and set up as error." The instructions given were correct. Under them certainly the jury were no more authorized to find for the plaintiff than for the defendant, in the event it appeared that both parties were equally negligent. The assignments of error were merely exceptions to a correct charge because the court failed to give in the same connection some other pertinent legal propositions. Such assignments of error are not well taken. Holston v. Southern Ry. Co., 118 Ga. 656, 43 S. E. 29 (3). The statements that the court nowhere in its charge called the attention of the jury to the legal propositions which it failed to give in connection with the charge complained of were not assignments of error upon the charge, but were used merely as arguments why the instruction given should be held to be erroneous.

4. The court instructed the jury that in determining where the preponderance of the evidence in the case was, and in passing upon the credibility of the witnesses, "their bias or impartiality, as the same may legitimately appear from the evidence," might be considered. The exception to the charge was based upon the use of the word "bias" in this connection; the contention being that, without explanation, it was calculated to mislead the minds of the jury. We are unable to see any force in this exception. "Bias" is synonymous with "partiality," and any sensible juror would so understand; but, even if there should have been any doubt as to this, a proper request should have been made for an explanation.

5. When the verdict was read, the jury, at the request of defendant's counsel, was polled. Upon the call of the name of H. Moll, one of the jurors, the following colloquy occurred between the court and the juror: "Was that your verdict? A. Yes, sir. Was it freely and voluntarily made? A. Involuntarily. Is it now your verdict? A. Yes, sir. Was it freely and voluntarily made? A. I don't know. Do you mean that it was not made freely and voluntarily? A. I agreed to it. Was it made voluntarily or involuntarily? A. Voluntarily. By the Defendant's Counsel: Was it freely made? No, sir. By the Court: What do you understand by the distinction between a verdict freely made and a voluntary verdict? A. I did not want to give that much. Is it not your verdict? A. I agreed to it. Why did you agree to it? A. A compromise verdict. Did you freely and voluntarily agree to compromise? A. Yes, sir. Thereupon defendant, by its counsel, moved the court to direct a mistrial in said case, and not to receive the verdict of the jury, and upon the ground that it appeared that the juror H. Moll did not agree to said verdict, and the same was not his verdict, and was not freely and voluntarily made by the said H. Moll, but was involuntarily made and not freely made, and that the said juror Moll did not agree to the same as his verdict but as a compromise verdict." The court "overruled said motion and allowed said verdict to be received and * * * recorded." Exception was taken to this ruling of the court, both in exceptions pendente lite and in the motion for a new trial. "Counsel moved the court to direct a mistrial in said case and not to receive said verdict." This, as it seems clear to our minds, was merely a motion for a mistrial. The words "and not to receive said verdict," while unnecessary in the motion for a mistrial, were, we think, evidently a part of such motion. Under the circumstances, a motion for a mistrial was not the appropriate remedy, and the court did not err in not granting it. The proper motion would have been that the verdict be not received, and the jury directed to retire to their room for further deliberation on the case. While we cannot make an authoritative ruling on the question, we will say that, in the light of former rulings of this court (Black v. Thornton, 31 Ga. 641; Hill v. State, 64 Ga. 453), we are inclined to the opinion that, even if the proper motion had been made, it would not have been erroneous to receive the verdict.

6. There was evidence to authorize the verdict, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 383)

JENKINS v. FORBES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

ACTION ON LOST NOTE—PAYMENT—PLEADING.

1. In an action upon an established copy of a lost promissory note, payment made prior to the judgment establishing the copy may be pleaded. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; W. M. Henry, Judge.

Action by E. E. Forbes against V. D. Jenkins. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Moses Wright, for plaintiff in error. M. B. Eubanks, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. The only question presented by this record is whether, in an action upon a copy of a promissory note, regularly established in lieu of the lost original as provided by statute, the defendant can plead payment of the original note made prior to the judgment establishing the copy. In our opinion, such defense can be made. A copy established in lieu of the lost note has all the force and effect of the original. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4751, 4754. But the established copy is no more binding than the original. In Venable v. Born, 40 Ga. 74, which was a proceeding to establish a lost promissory note, it was held that the fact that the consideration of the lost note was a slave did not impair the right of the owner of the note to establish a copy of the same by a proper statutory proceeding. "The establishment of a lost note under the statute is no bar to any defense that might be set up to the original note." Prescott v. Johnson, 8 Fla. 391. In this connection, see Suwannee County Commissioners v. Columbia County, 18 Fla 78; Rockwell v. Servant, 54 Ill. 251. What was said in Vaughn v. Drewry, 79 Ga. 761, 4 S. E. 879, in so far as it conflicts with the ruling we now make, was obiter. That was a suit upon an established 'copy of a promissory note, to which a plea of non est factum was filed at the second term. This court, affirming the judgment of the court below, held that the plea was properly stricken because not filed at the first term. Such ruling finally disposed of the plea, and it was wholly unnecessary for the court to pass on the question as to whether the defense set up, if it had been made in time, could be made in a suit on an established copy of the note.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 386)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. HORINE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

RAILROADS—FIRES SET BY LOCOMOTIVES—PETITION—AMENDMENT—LIMITATIONS—EVIDENCE.

1. A petition alleging that fire, which the defendant railway company carelessly permitted to escape from its locomotive, ignited litter which the company had permitted to accumulate on its right of way, and, spreading therefrom, burned plaintiff's property, was amendable by alleging that the company "carelessly" permitted the litter to accumulate. Such amendment did not set up a new cause of action (City of Columbus v. Anglin, 48 S. E. 318, 120 Ga. 785), nor add a second count to the petition.

2. The words "carelessly" and "negligently" are synonymous.

3. The general rule is that an amendment to a petition relates back to the time of the filing of the original petition, which is the only date to be considered, relatively to the pleadings, on the question as to whether the action is barred by the statute of limitations.

4. "Possession of land under a claim of ownership being prima facie evidence of title in the occupant, the latter, upon proof of such possession, and without showing complete title, may maintain against a wrongdoer an action for a trespass upon the property, committed while such possession existed." McDonough v. Carter, 25 S. E. 938, 98 Ga. 708.

5. In the present case there was evidence from which the jury could have found that the plaintiff below was in the actual possession of the land upon which the property burned was situated, claiming it as his own; and the contention of the plaintiff as to the liability of the defendant for the damages caused by the fire was not without evidence to support it.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Haralson County; A. L. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by V. C. Horine against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

¶ 3. See Limitation of Actions, vol. 33, Cent. Dig. § 543.

Hugh M. Dorsey, for plaintiff in error. James Beall and Price Edwards, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 421)

HOBBS v. BOWIE & TERHUNE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCE—DIRECTING VERDICT.

1. This being a suit for damages by an employé against his employers, which was governed by the common-law doctrine of master and servant, and it affirmatively appearing that the servant had equal means with the master of ascertaining the defective condition of the appliance alleged to have been the cause of his injuries, no recovery can be had against the master.

2. As the defendants offered no evidence, the proper procedure was to grant a nonsuit, rather than direct a verdict for the defendants (Hines v. McLellan, 45 S. E. 279, 117 Ga. 845); but, inasmuch as the plaintiff, in his petition for certiorari, did not make this point, but contended merely that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence, and that the issues should have been submitted to the jury for determination, the judgment of the superior court overruling the certiorari will not be disturbed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; W. M. Henry, Judge.

Action by H. O. Hobbs against Bowie & Terhune. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

H. F. Sharp and Moses Wright, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Brookes, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 470)

WEST et al. v. WRIGHT.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. Where one makes a voluntary conveyance of land, and subsequently, for a valuable consideration, conveys the same land to another, who knows that the grantor has previously made the voluntary conveyance, and the grantee in the later deed sells and conveys the land to another person, who has no notice, such last grantee will be protected against the voluntary deed. Civ. Code 1895, § 3938.

2. Whether the deed in this case from a mother to her children was voluntary or for value cannot be determined by this court, as no copy or sufficient description of the deed is embraced in the record. Inasmuch as the trial judge treated the deed as voluntary, and the plaintiffs in error have failed to show that he erred in so doing, this court must also treat the deed as a voluntary one.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Greene County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Janie West and others against

J. W. Wright. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Geo. A. Merritt and Jos. P. Brown, for plaintiffs in error. James B. Park, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 467)

SMITH v. ZACHRY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

BANKRUPTCY—JUDGMENT LIEN.

1. This case is controlled by the decision in McKenney v. Cheney, 45 S. E. 433, 118 Ga. 387.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Troup County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Action by J. T. Zachry against J. H. Smith. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

E. T. Moon, for plaintiff in error. H. A. Hall, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 466)

CAMP et al. v. BRITT.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

CONTINUANCE—REFUSAL—ILLNESS OF DEFENDANT.

1. Both as to the refusal of the court to grant another continuance on account of the illness of one of the parties defendant, and as to the direction of a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, this case is controlled by the decision of this court in Stanford v. Security Co., 34 S. E. 600, 110 Ga. 274. Not only does it appear that the case had several times been continued because of the illness of this party, but that at the preceding term the court had announced that the case would not be again continued on that account, and that interrogatories for him should be sued out, if his testimony was desired.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Newnan; A. D. Freeman, Judge.

Action by W. E. Britt against B. T. and H. A. Camp. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

W. L. Stallings, for plaintiffs in error. J. C. Newnan and W. C. Wright, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 443)

WESTBROOK v. BALDWIN COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

HIGHWAYS—ESTABLISHMENT—ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

1. There being evidence from which the jury could have found that the change in the public road was made under the authority of the officers of the county who were empowered by law to do the work complained of, that the plaintiff's land abutting on the road was damaged by such change, and that plaintiff made proper demand on the county for the damages claimed, the granting of a nonsuit was erroneous. Roughton v. City of Atlanta, 39 S. E. 316, 118 Ga. 943, and cases cited.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action by R. N. Westbrook against Baldwin county. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Allen & Pottle, for plaintiff in error. Sanford & Sanford and Hines & Vinson, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 476)

MILLER v. THIGPEN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

NEW TRIAL—DISMISSAL OF MOTION.

1. Under the facts appearing in the record, the court erred in dismissing the motion for a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Dublin; J. S. Adams, Judge.

Action by H. N. Thigpen against J. D. Miller. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

This case was tried at the June term, 1904, of the city court of Dublin. The defendant filed a motion for a new trial during the term, and the rule nisi was made returnable on June 27th "at the courthouse in Dublin." An order provided that the brief of evidence should be presented for approval "on or before that date, or in default the motion will be dismissed." On June 27th an order was passed which recited that the brief of evidence had not been prepared owing to sickness in the family of the stenographer, and that the hearing was for that reason postponed until July 9th, the movant to have all the rights as to filing the brief of evidence which were allowed in the first order. On July 9th the judge was absent from the county, and no action was taken on the motion. On July 11th an order was passed fixing the time for the hearing on July 16th, and purported to give to the movant all the rights accorded him in the original order. On July 16th an order was passed postponing the hearing until August 22d, which order also purported to give to the movant all of the rights conferred by the original order with reference to filing a brief of the evidence. On August 22d the judge was again absent from the county, and no action was taken on the motion. On August 31st, in vacation, the judge passed an order reciting that as there was no agreement consenting to an order preserving the right of movant until that date to present for approval a brief of the evidence, and counsel for the respondent having made a motion to dismiss the motion for a new trial on that ground, the motion was accordingly dismissed. To this order the movant excepted.

Howard & Baker, for plaintiff in error. T. V. Sanders, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. The record discloses that the rule nisi and original order were granted in term, and that the order of August 31st was granted in vacation. It does not appear whether the other orders were in term or vacation. If these intervening orders were all in term, the effect of the failure to present for approval a brief of the evidence on August 22d would not result in a dismissal of the motion for a new trial, but would simply carry it over to the next term undisposed of, to be then dealt with in conformity to law. If, on the other hand, these orders were in vacation, the failure of the judge to take any action on the motion by written order on July 9th would carry the motion undisposed of into the next term, and would deprive the judge of jurisdiction to deal in any way with the motion prior to that time. In either event the court was without jurisdiction to pass any order in reference to the motion on August 31st in vacation. The order purporting to dismiss the motion was therefore an erroneous order, and the judgment must be reversed. The motion stands on the docket undisposed of, to be dealt with by the judge when called in its order during term. See Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Strickland, 114 Ga. 998, 41 S. E. 501; Napier v. Heilker, 115 Ga. 163, 41 S. E. 689.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 416)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. COOK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

RAILROADS—KILLING STOCK—EVIDENCE.

1. The evidence is undisputed that the point at or near which the plaintiff's mule was killed, though sometimes used as a crossing by pedestrians and persons riding on horseback, was in no sense a public crossing; and consequently, under the ordinances of the city of Dalton, the speed at which the train was run was not negligent per se.

2. The plaintiff relied entirely upon the presumption of negligence against the railroad company raised by the law. This presumption was completely rebutted by the testimony of the witnesses for the defendant, who were not contradicted, and the verdict for the plaintiff was therefore contrary to the evidence, and should have been set aside on motion for new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Whitfield County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by Anthony Cook against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

¶ 1. See Railroads, vol. 41, Cent. Dig. § 1484.

Shumate & Maddox, for plaintiff in error. Geo. G. Glenn and Wm. E. Mann, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 436)

VAUGHN v. MILNER, Sheriff.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

WRIT OF ERROR—JURISDICTION.

1. The only ruling complained of being the overruling of the plaintiff's demurrer to a sheriff's answer to a money rule, and there having been no final judgment on the rule, this court has no jurisdiction to entertain the writ of error. United Glass Co. v. McConnell, 36 S. E. 58, 110 Ga. 616.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Pike County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Application of J. W. Vaughn for a money rule on J. H. Milner, sheriff. From an order overruling a demurrer to the answer, plaintiff brings error. Dismissed.

Henry Walker, for plaintiff in error. J. F. Redding, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Writ of error dismissed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 438)

TOWN OF DOUGLASVILLE v. SKINNER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—ERROR WAIVED.

1. Questions not alluded to in the brief for the plaintiff in error will be treated as abandoned. McKinnon v. Hope, 45 S. E. 413, 118 Ga. 462; Williams v. State, 48 S. E. 906, 121 Ga. —.

2. The evidence was sufficient to authorize the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Douglas County; Geo. F. Gober, Judge.

Action between H. T. Skinner and the town of Douglasville. From the judgment the town brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. James, for plaintiff in error. J. S. James, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 365)

MCCARTY v. CITY OF ATLANTA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—SALOONS—FAILURE TO CLOSE.

1. The defendant admitted that he owned the bar, and there was nothing to suggest that it was conducted during the daytime in violation of law. This and the exception in the petition for certiorari as to the revocation of the license were sufficient to show prima facie that the place belonged to the class to which the ordinance applied.

2. The ordinance, in declaring that bars shall not be kept open after 10 o'clock p. m., uses substantially the same language as Pen. Code 1895

§ 390, prohibiting the keeping open of tippling houses on the Sabbath. The construction given the statute should also be given similar language in the ordinance.

3. There was no error in overruling the certiorari from a judgment of conviction in the recorder's court.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

J. H. McCarty was convicted of a violation of an ordinance of the city of Atlanta, and brings error. Affirmed.

McCarty was found guilty in the recorder's court of the city of Atlanta of violating section 1546 of the city code, which provides that "no place for which a license is granted shall be kept open later than ten o'clock p. m., nor opened earlier than five o'clock a. m." The evidence for the city showed that a policeman passed the Star Saloon, at 38 Decatur street, at 12:40 a. m., and that, looking through the doors, he saw the defendant and two bartenders sitting around a table, drinking beer. The evidence for the defendant tended to show that he owned this bar, and another on Hunter street, which was in charge of a bartender; that, in response to a telephone message from the bartender of Decatur street, the defendant went to the Decatur street bar, accompanied by the one who kept the one on Hunter street; that when they reached the Decatur bar the door was locked; that it was opened, admitting the defendant and his other employé; that, after discussing the business which called him there, the defendant ordered beer, which was given and not paid for by the others present; that the door was opened and the entry made after the bar had been closed at night after 10 o'clock; that no sales were made, and no other business other than that above indicated was transacted. The defendant was found guilty. His petition for certiorari was overruled, and he excepted.

Arnold & Arnold, for plaintiff in error. James L. Mayson and Wm. P. Hill, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. 1. The defendant admitted that he owned the bar. His defense was that it was not kept open after prohibited hours for the purpose of selling liquor, but that the door had been then opened in order that he and his employé might enter and discuss business with the bartender in charge. This was enough to show that the place was not a "blind tiger" conducted even in the daytime in violation of law. Prima facie the place belonged to the class to which the ordinance applied, without further proof that the defendant had a liquor license. Besides, the petition for certiorari showed that he did have a license. The defendant assigned as error that the recorder, in imposing a fine, declared that the defendant's license as a retail liquor dealer was forfeited, and to this judgment and decision petitioner excepted.

2. If once excuses were admitted for keeping open such places upon prohibited days or after prohibited hours, the law would be practically nullified. It would rarely be possible for the state or city to meet the excuse, or to show that the place had been opened for an unlawful purpose. The fact furnishing the excuse and the illegal act after the innocent entry would so often be blended that they could not be separated. The opening absolutely prohibited by law would be legalized by the motive with which the prohibited act was done. As here, it could be said that the beer or whisky was given, and not sold, or that the business intended to be conducted or actually conducted was not the sale of drinks. If such an excuse could be given in one case, it could be in others, and the issue on each trial would be diverted from the question as to whether the place had been opened at an unlawful hour into a consideration of the question as to whether it had been opened for an innocent purpose. It is manifest that any such construction would, in effect, repeal the law, and be utterly subversive of the very policy on which it was enacted. Hence all of the decisions of this state are based upon the idea that opening during the prohibited period is the gist of the offense, and that, if the place be opened but for a moment, the statute is violated. The court will not enter on an investigation as to the motive or purpose which actuated the owner in opening and entering. Monsey v. State, 78 Ga. 110. Indeed, it would be hard to find any statute which has been so rigidly and strictly construed as Pen. Code 1895, § 390, against keeping open a tippling house on the Sabbath. The ordinance here uses the same term—"keep open." The same policy underlies it that underlies the statute. The language is substantially the same, and so must be the construction. In fact, it is fair to presume that the same words were used in order to secure the same construction. The ordinance does not appear to be unreasonable, but, rather, is in pursuance of a public policy within the limits of the police power. This, of course is especially true where the license is accepted in the light of the ordinance. There is a manifest difference in the rules of construction to be applied to an ordinance like this, and to an ordinance relating to a class of business like that referred to in Wright v. Mayor of Forsyth, 116 Ga. 799, 43 S. E. 46.

We find no error in the refusal to sustain the certiorari. It appears that the recorder stated that, in his opinion, the effect of the judgment would be to revoke defendant's license, but that was not a part of the sentence. The effect on the license is not involved in this proceeding, nor is there in the record anything to show the existence of an ordinance in the city of Atlanta on that subject.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 456)

WOODLIFF v. BLOODWORTH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

APPEAL—BOND—QUALIFICATION OF SURETY—CLAIM CASE—DAMAGE BOND—CERTIORARI.

1. Where a party has given any statutory bond with security for the payment of the eventual condemnation money, or to produce the property sued for or levied on, and a judgment adverse to the principal in such a bond has been rendered, the security therein cannot be surety on a new bond required in a proceeding seeking a reversal.

2. In such a case the surety has not only obligated himself to the opposite party, but the judgment against his principal binds the surety. The appeal or certiorari is as much for his interest as for that of his principal, and he could no more be surety for himself than the principal could be surety on such second bond.

3. So, if a damage bond is given in a claim case, and a judgment is rendered finding the property subject, and awarding damages on the ground that the claim was interposed for delay only, the surety on the claim bond could not be security on a bond given in a certiorari or appeal from such judgment.

4. But where such damage bond is given, and the verdict finds the property subject, but there is no finding that the claim was interposed for delay, the effect thereof for the time is to relieve the surety from liability under the bond, and, not then being in any way bound to the plaintiff, he may be security on a certiorari bond given by the claimant.

5. If the certiorari is sustained, there is a discharge from liability under the certiorari bond. The obligation on the damage bond is thereby revived. But in such case the surety can never be liable, as in case of appeals, on both bonds.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Geo. F. Gober, Judge.

Action by W. A. Bloodworth against one Blackstone. Judgment for plaintiff, and T. J. Woodliff interposed a claim. Judgment finding property subject, and claimant brought certiorari. From an order dismissing the writ, he brings error. Reversed.

An attachment in favor of Bloodworth against Blackstone was levied upon certain personal property as the property of Blackstone. Woodliff interposed a claim, giving Puett as security on the damage bond. The jury on appeal found the property subject, but awarded no damages against the claimant or his surety on the damage bond. The claimant applied for a writ of certiorari, and gave Puett as the sole security on the bond in the certiorari proceeding. Bloodworth moved to dismiss the certiorari on the ground that the security upon the certiorari bond was the same security that Woodliff had previously given upon the damage bond in the claim case. The court sustained the motion, and Woodliff excepted.

Brooke & Henderson and James K. Hines, for plaintiff in error. H. L. Patterson, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). Where a party has given a statutory bond with security for the payment of the eventual condemnation money, or to produce property sued for or levied on, or to pay damages in case he fails to recover, and a judgment adverse to the principal has been rendered, the security on such bond cannot be surety on a new bond required in proceedings seeking to secure a reversal. In some cases the effect of this judgment is to entitle the opposite party to a concurrent judgment against the surety, and in others it to a certain extent binds the sureties when suit is thereafter brought on the bond. The appeal or certiorari, or other similar proceeding to reverse the judgment, is for his benefit as well as that of the original principal. The surety is bound by the existing judgment. In many cases it is against him and has created a lien against all of his property. The obligation to pay the eventual condemnation money or to produce the property is still of force, and will be made effective by a judgment against his principal in the appeal or certiorari. If, therefore, the security thus completely bound or liable to be completely bound puts his name to the new bond, the opposite party gets no new security for the ultimate payment of the debt or production of the property. To secure the appeal, or the right to except to the judgment rendered, the law requires that some additional security shall be given to the successful party. This provision must be complied with regardless of the solvency of those thus already bound. The millionaire must give a bond in order to secure an appeal from a case involving less than $100. A millionaire surety bound by such original judgment must in effect likewise give additional security when that judgment is sought to be reversed by proceedings instituted in the name of the principal. Eufaula Co. v. Plant, 86 Ga. 624; Stewart v. Hall, 106 Ga. 176, 32 S. E. 14. See, also, Napier v. Woodall, 118 Ga. 830, 45 S. E. 684, where the surety had signed not only the claim bond, but also the forthcoming bond. It was held that such surety could not be surety on an appeal bond. The defendant in error relies on these decisions. But the principle on which they were put does not sustain his contention. In each of them the surety was already bound to produce the property, or to satisfy any money judgment which might be obtained by the plaintiff. This liability continued throughout the entire litigation, and was not suspended by appeals or bills of exception or writ of certiorari. So, too, the damage bond given in attachments and garnishments is a continuing liability to the opposite party. As an appeal is an investigation de novo, in which the jury might award damages, the security on this damage bond could not have made himself liable on the appeal bond, and thus be bound in two capacities at the same time to the plaintiff. But the claim bond is peculiar. It creates a special and limited obligation, differing widely from that arising from forthcoming garnishment, attachment, appeal, or certiorari bonds. It is not an undertaking to pay the opposite party in case of failure to recover, nor is it an undertaking to produce property or to pay in whole or part the eventual condemnation money, but merely to be liable for damages, not to exceed a certain amount, in the event it is found that the claim is interposed for delay only. Here the verdict of the jury had discharged the surety from this liability. It was not legally possible that the judgment on the certiorari could award these damages. If the certiorari was sustained, of course there would be an end of responsibility on the certiorari bond. If it was overruled, the surety, having been already exonerated, would not be liable for damages for delay in the claim case, but only liable on the certiorari bond. In no event could he be liable both on the certiorari bond and the damage bond, though in case the certiorari was sustained, and the case remanded for a new trial, responsibility on the damage bond might be revived, and liability thereunder enforced, if on the second hearing a verdict should be found that the claim had been interposed for delay only. But when the certiorari bond here was signed, the surety was not then liable on the damage bond, and was therefore in a position to sign the bond given in the certiorari proceeding.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 358)

PHILLIPS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—DRUNKENNESS—WITNESSES UNDER RULE—NEW TRIAL—HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE.

1. Failure of the trial judge to charge the jury upon the subject of the impeachment of witnesses, in the absence of a proper request, is not cause for a new trial. Boynton v. State, 41 S. E. 993, 115 Ga. 587; Anderson v. State, 43 S. E. 835, 117 Ga. 255.

2. Under the evidence as disclosed by the record, the charge of the judge on the subject of drunkenness of the accused was as favorable as he had any right to expect.

3. When the witnesses have been put under the rule, and one of them disobeys the order of the court, and remains in the courtroom while the other witnesses testify, he is not thereby disqualified as a witness. Civ. Code 1895, § 5280; McWhorter v. State, 44 S. E. 873, 118 Ga. 55 (6). The fact that he has heard the evidence may go to his credit or subject him to proceedings for contempt, but does not disqualify him.

4. This court will not consider a ground of a motion for a new trial complaining of the admission of evidence when the ground of objection to such evidence is not stated.

5. There was no error in failing to charge upon the subject of involuntary manslaughter.

6. The evidence fully authorized the verdict, and there was no abuse of discretion in refusing a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

* 1. See Criminal Law, vol. 14, Cent. Dig. §§ 1996, 1999

Error from Superior Court, Coweta County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Greely Phillips was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

A. H. Freeman, for plaintiff in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., H. A. Hall, Sol. Gen., and W. L. Stallings, for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 419)

WESTERN & A. R. CO. v. CLARK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

RAILROADS—KILLING STOCK—EVIDENCE.

1. The presumption of negligence arising against the railroad company from proof of the killing of the animal by defendant's train was completely met and overcome by evidence for the defendant that there was a curve in the track where the animal was killed, obscuring the view up the track, that the engineer and fireman were looking ahead, and could not have seen the animal earlier than it was seen, and that, after discovering its presence on or near the track, the engineer did everything that could be done to prevent the killing. In view of the positive character of the testimony for the defendant as to these matters, testimony of a witness for the plaintiff that "I think the steer could have been seen several hundred yards before the train reached him, if the engineer had been looking in that direction," did not afford sufficient foundation for a verdict in the plaintiff's favor.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Catoosa County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by J. W. Clark, administrator, against the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Payne & Tye, W. H. Odell, and R. J. & J. McCamy, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Mann, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 436)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. ROLLINS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—ACTION AGAINST RAILROAD.

1. While the language used by counsel for the plaintiff in the justice's court was highly improper, it does not appear that any motion for mistrial was made at the time, and no ruling of the justice is complained of in the petition for certiorari which would authorize a reversal of the judgment on account of such argument.

2. While the railroad company introduced evidence tending to rebut the presumption of negligence against it, this evidence was contradicted by that of witnesses for the plaintiff. The evidence warranted the verdict for the plaintiff, and it was not error to overrule the certiorari.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Marietta County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Action by W. G. Rollins against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff before a justice was affirmed in the superior court, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Little & Battle and McLaughlin & Jones, for plaintiff in error. N. F. Oulpepper, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur

(121 Ga. 428)

REVIS v. ROPER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—NEW TRIAL.

1. There was no complaint that any error of law was committed by the court upon the trial, the evidence warranted the verdict, and the refusal of a new trial was not erroneous.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of La Grange; F. M. Longley, Judge.

Action by J. C. Roper against Cicero Revis. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

E. R. Bradfield, Jr., for plaintiff in error. Harwell & Lovejoy, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 466)

ATLANTA & B. AIR LINE RY. v. WEAVER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—NONSUIT—EVIDENCE—VERDICT—REVIEW.

1. The motion for a new trial complains that the court erred in refusing to grant a nonsuit, and that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence. There was clear and positive evidence warranting a finding that the defendant was negligent as charged in the petition; and there was some evidence authorizing a finding that the deceased was injured in the discharge of his duties, and that at the time of the injury which resulted in his death he was free from fault. The plaintiff therefore carried every burden placed upon her by law, and it was not error to refuse a nonsuit. The jury trying the case, whose province it was to settle disputed issues of fact as to diligence and negligence, found for the plaintiff in an amount much smaller than the evidence as to the age and earning capacity of the deceased warranted. The trial judge approved the verdict, and no reason is made to appear why it should be set aside.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Polk County; F. A. Irwin, Judge.

Action by A. O. Weaver against the Atlanta & Birmingham Air Line Railway. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Brown & Randolph and John K. Davis, for plaintiff in error. Janes & Hunt and Bunn & Trawick, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 459)

STEELE v. GEORGIA IRON & COAL CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—PLEADING—AMENDMENT—DEMURRER.

1. The original petition was subject to the demurrer. But the amendment, alleging that the deceased was ignorant of the condition of the electric light, and of the other acts of negligence complained of, cured the defect. As amended, the petition set out a cause of action.

2. Even if a demurrer does not admit an impossibility when alleged in a petition, there is nothing to show that the deceased necessarily knew of the defect in the light. Nor does it appear how long he had been employed at the place and in the particular service referred to in the petition.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Dade County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by Wyatt Steele against the Georgia Iron & Coal Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

This was a suit by a dependent father for the homicide of his son, who contributed to his support. It alleged that the son Noah Steele was an employé of the Georgia Iron & Coal Company, engaged in running at night the blowing engine and near-by pumps; that he was obliged to go from the engine to the pumps; that between the two was a large and deep cistern, across which loose planks were laid, over which the deceased was obliged to go at night in the performance of his required duties; that the plank had become slippery from being saturated with oil; that an electric light was used to illuminate the location, and that it was so defective that it would at times almost completely die out, leaving the grounds in almost utter darkness; that on the 25th of April, 1903, owing to the defects and slippery condition of the plank and the defective light, Noah Steele, in going to the pump, without fault on his part, fell into the cistern of hot water and was drowned; and that the company was negligent in failing to cover the cistern and in maintaining the defective light. There was a demurrer on the ground that the petition set out no cause of action, and that the dangers and defects complained of were obvious to the employé, and the risks created thereby assumed by him. The plaintiff thereupon amended by alleging that the defect causing the light to grow dim was unknown to the deceased at the time of the accident, nor did he have knowledge of the fact that the water in the cistern was hot. By amendment he also alleged that all of the defective conditions set out in the original petition were unknown to the deceased; that he had no means of knowing the same, but that the defendant well knew thereof, and was negligent in not notifying the deceased, whose employment did not embrace a line of employment connected with the light. The court sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff excepted.

Ben T. Brock and R. J. & J. McCamy, for plaintiff in error. W. N. Jacoway and Du Bignon & Alston, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. (after stating the facts). The original petition was, no doubt, subject to demurrer. As drawn, it referred to defects which were apparently of a kind open to the sight of the employé. Construing the petition against the pleader, it also indicated that the periodical dimness of the light was that usual in arc lights, occasioned by the imperfect connection, but naturally caused by the gradual consumption of the carbon. But these matters were cured by the positive allegations of the amendment that the defendant did not know thereof, could not learn thereof, and that they were known to the company. Even if it be true that a demurrer does not admit an impossibility, there is nothing here to show that these allegations admitted by the demurrer could not possibly be true. It does not appear how long the deceased had been employed at this place or in this particular service. As amended, the petition set out a cause of action.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except CANDLER, J., disqualified.

(121 Ga. 346)

JEMLEY v. STATE.

PRICE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

RIOT—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

1. "To constitute the offense of riot, there must be not only a common intent on the part of two or more persons to do an unlawful act of violence, or some other act in a violent and tumultuous manner, but also concert of action in furtherance of such intent." Coney v. State, 89 S. E. 425, 113 Ga. 1060. This does not mean, however, that there must necessarily have been a previous plot or conspiracy on the part of the rioters, in order to constitute the offense. The evidence for the state in the present cases fully established both concert of action and a common intent on the part of the accused persons, the verdicts of guilty were fully authorized, and it was not error to overrule the motions for new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

John Jemley and Dick Price were convicted of riot, and bring error. Affirmed.

¶ 1. See Riot, vol. 42, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 3-5.

H. F. Strohecker and W. A. McClellan, for plaintiffs in error. William Brunson, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 437)

HEARD v. TAPPAN & MERRITT.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

ACTION ON NOTE—ALTERATION—RELEASE OF SURETY—INSTRUCTIONS—NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.

1. Upon the trial of an action on a promissory note, it appeared that after the instrument, which included the note, and also a conveyance of property to secure the payment of the same, had been signed by the defendant as surety and by another as principal, the latter, who owned the property so conveyed, procured, without the consent of the surety or the payee, the signatures of two persons, one of whom was a justice of the peace, to the instrument as attesting witnesses; the attestation not being limited to the signature of the principal. Held, that it was not erroneous, as against the surety, at least, to instruct the jury that affixing the names of the witnesses to the instrument was not such a material alteration thereof as would affect the surety's liability thereon, unless it should appear that the same was procured by the payee, or done with his assent or knowledge, for the purpose of defrauding the surety.

2. A charge touching a matter wholly irrelevant under the pleadings, even if erroneous, is not cause for a new trial, when it appears that the jury could not have been misled by such instruction to the injury of the complaining party.

3. A ground of a motion for a new trial complaining of the admission of documentary evidence will not be considered unless the evidence objected to is set forth, either literally or in substance, in the motion itself, or attached thereto as an exhibit.

4. The verdict was not without evidence to support it.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Greene County; J. E. Pottle, Judge pro hac vice.

Action by Tappan & Merritt against Columbus Heard. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. B. Park, for plaintiff in error. J. P. Brown and G. A. Merritt, for defendants in error.

FISH, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 439)

MOORE v. PRITCHETT.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—NEW TRIAL.

1. The court having incorrectly instructed the jury as to the meaning of the written contract involved in the case, the refusal of a new trial was erroneous.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Dublin; J. S. Adams, Judge.

¶ 2. See New Trial, vol. 37, Cent. Dig. § 71.

Action by William Pritchett against G. W. Moore. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

See 42 S. E. 1013.

Pritchett sued out an attachment against Moore, returnable to the city court of Dublin. The attachment was levied, and declaration thereon filed. The declaration was upon an account. Moore pleaded set-off, the main item of his counterclaim being an amount charged for boring an artesian well for the plaintiff at Lothair, Ga., under a written contract, a copy of which was attached to the plea. This contract was as follows:

"Georgia, Laurens County. This contract made and entered into this the 4th day of Jan., 1898, between G. W. Moore, proprietor of the Dublin Iron Works, party of the first part, and William Pritchett, party of the second part, witnesseth, that the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sums of money to be paid to him by the said second party as are hereinafter set out, does hereby agree and contract to bore and construct for the said second party at the turpentine still of H. E. Pritchett & Co., in the county of Worth, said State, an artesian well of the following dimensions and capacity, to-wit: Said artesian well to be (4) four inches in diameter at the top, and if necessary for better construction of said well, it may be reduced in diameter to (2) two inches, and said well is to furnish a continuous supply of at least (25) twenty-five gallons of artesian water per minute. The said party of the first part hereby agrees and contracts to furnish all of the piping necessary and the well is to be cased to a solid foundation with first class iron piping. It is hereby agreed by and between the parties to this contract that if the necessary supply of (25) twenty-five gallons is not obtained by a flow of that amount of water as aforesaid, then the said supply of said water is to be obtained by the means of a deep well pump, if the use of such pump is necessary, after a satisfactory test of the well is made by both of said parties hereto. And also that said deep well pump, if the use of the same is necessary, shall be furnished by said second party as soon as practical after being instructed by said first party that the use of said deep well pump is necessary, and, if in this way it is necessary that such a test be made, in addition to the other amounts to be paid, the second party is to pay to the said first party the necessary traveling expenses of one man from Dublin to the said well and return.

"The said party of the second part hereby agrees and contracts to pay to the said party of the first part for said well the sum of ($225.00) two hundred and twenty-five dollars on condition that said supply of twenty-five gallons of water per minute as aforesaid is obtained, at or before the depth of 300 feet is reached. If not so obtained, then said second party is to pay to said first party 75 cents per foot for the first 350 feet or as many feet as it may be necessary to bore said well, if said supply of water can be had as aforesaid at or before the depth of 350 feet is reached. But if said supply of water can not be so obtained and it shall be necessary to bore to a greater depth, then the said second party is to pay to the said first party for the said well in excess of said 350 feet at the rate of $1.00 per foot, until a depth of 1,000 feet or so much thereof as may be necessary to complete said well as aforesaid is reached, or until said party of the second part shall tell said party of the first part to stop. If said first party shall stop boring before instructed to stop by said second party, then he, the said first party, shall forfeit all amounts due under this contract.

"It is further agreed that said second party is to deliver the machinery to the said first party necessary for boring said well free of charge from Albany, Ga., to the place at which the well is to be bored, and when the well is completed to deliver the said machinery from said well at Albany.

"It is hereby agreed by said parties that another artesian well is to be bored at Lothair, Ga., of like size and capacity, the first 400 feet being charged for at the rate of 75 cents per foot, under the terms of the above contract.

"G. W. Moore,

"Per W. J. Carter, Atty.

"Wm. Pritchett,

"Signed in the presence of:

"J. P. Sanders, N. P. Laurens Co., Ga."

The well was bored to the depth of 236 feet, but no natural flow of water to the surface was obtained. Moore submitted evidence tending to show that the well, at the depth to which it was bored, would, by the use of a deep-well pump, furnish a continuous supply of artesian water of more than 25 gallons per minute. He also showed that he, through his agent, had notified Pritchett that the deep-well pump was necessary, that a flow of water could not be obtained, but that a continuous supply of more than 25 gallons of artesian water per minute could be got by the use of such a pump, and had requested Pritchett to furnish a deep-well pump as provided in the contract, which Pritchett refused to do. Moore's contention was that, this being true, he had complied with his obligation under the contract. In the opinion of the trial judge, this was not a proper construction of the contract, and, in effect, he so charged the jury. There was a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount for which he sued, and, the defendant's motion for a new trial being overruled, he excepted.

Peyton L. Wade, for plaintiff in error.
James B. Sanders, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. (after stating the facts). The case turned upon the construction of the contract set forth in the statement of facts, and one of the grounds of the motion for a new trial presents the question whether the court, in instructing the jury as to the legal effect of the contract, properly construed it. In our opinion, the meaning of the instrument is that whenever the well, without regard to its depth, would furnish a continuous supply of 25 gallons of artesian water per minute, either by natural flow to the surface or by the use of a deep-well pump, Moore's obligation would be complied with, and he would have the right to discontinue boring, whether Pritchett desired him to do so or not, provided he notified Pritchett that the use of a deep-well pump was necessary. This may not be the contract that Pritchett desired to enter into, but it seems to us that it is the contract which he actually made, and there was no question that he understood its terms, nor did he contend that he was induced to execute it by fraud, accident, or mistake. When this case was formerly here (116 Ga. 757, 42 S. E. 1013), the contract was evidently construed as we now construe it. The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Candler, then said: "The evidence offered by the defendant did not demand a finding that he had complied with his part of the contract on which he sought to recover. By the terms of that contract he was to bore for the plaintiff an artesian well which should furnish, either by natural flow or by the aid of a deep-well pump, 25 gallons of water per minute. The evidence showed that this supply of water was not obtained by natural flow, and that no deep-well pump was ever used to ascertain if it could be obtained by that means. Expert testimony was introduced to show that, if a deep-well pump had been used, the supply of water required by the contract could have been obtained; but such testimony is at best but a matter of opinion, and the jury should have been left to determine its probative value." It follows, from what we have said, that the court below erred in not granting a new trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 423)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. HOBBS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

EVIDENCE—WEIGHT—CARRIERS—FAILURE TO STOP AT STATION.

1. The testimony of a party who offers himself as a witness in his own behalf is to be construed most strongly against him when it is self-contradictory, vague, or equivocal. W. & A. R. Co. v. Evans, 23 S. E. 494, 96 Ga. 481; Freyermuth v. R. R. Co., 32 S. E. 668, 107 Ga. 82; Ray v. Green, 39 S. E. 470, 113 Ga. 920; Farmer v. Davenport, 45 S. E. 244, 118 Ga. 289. And he "is not entitled to a finding in his favor if that version of his testimony the most unfavorable to him shows that the verdict should be against him." Southern Bank v. Goette, 33 S. E. 974, 108 Ga. 796.

2. Applying the rule above stated to the testimony of the plaintiff in the present case, what she swore on the last trial was not materially different from the version she gave of the occurrence under investigation at the trial under review when the case was here at the March term, 1903 (45 S. E. 23, 118 Ga. 227, 63 L. R. A. 68), and, as was then pointed out, she was not, in view of her own sworn admissions, entitled to a recovery.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Haralson County; A. L. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by Susie Hobbs against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

Hugh M. Dorsey, for plaintiff in error. James Beall and Price Edwards, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 359)

McCOY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—FORMER CONVICTION—PLEA.

1. The accused was arraigned in a city court on June 20, 1904, upon an accusation filed at the June term, which charged merely that he did, on the 24th day of March, 1904, in a named county, "play and bet money and other things of value at a game of seven-up, five-up, skin, craps, and other games played with cards." He entered a plea of guilty to this accusation. On June 24th the accused was arraigned in the same court upon an accusation filed at the March term, which charged that he did, on the 12th day of March, 1904, in the same county, "play and bet for money or other thing of value at a game of five-up, seven-up, skin, and other games played with cards." To this accusation he entered a special plea of former conviction, setting up the plea of guilty under the accusation first referred to. Upon the trial of this plea it was admitted "that the state could show that [the accused] had played at two separate places, and at different times, and with different parties; that the two cases covered two separate transactions." The special plea was overruled. Held, that the accusation upon which the conviction was had being general in its allegations, and the accusation upon which the accused was last arraigned having been filed prior to the time of filing of the accusation upon which the plea of guilty was entered, it was error to overrule the special plea of former conviction. Aliter, if the two accusations had been specific in their allegations as to place, time, person, and other particulars, clearly showing upon their face that they related to separate and distinct transactions. Craig v. State, 33 S. E. 653, 108 Ga. 776 (2); McWilliams v. State, 34 S. E. 1016, 110 Ga. 290 (1); Reynolds v. State, 40 S. E. 234, 114 Ga. 265.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Cartersville; A. M. Foute, Judge.

Jack McCoy was convicted of gaming, and brings error. Reversed.

W. M. Graham and R. J. & J. McCamy, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 471)

WOOD, Ordinary, v. BROWN et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW — CONCLUSIVENESS — DECEASED PARTNER — ACTION ON ADMINISTRATOR'S BOND.

1. The judgment of the ordinary allowing a widow and her minor children a year's support is conclusive only that she is entitled to the amount of the judgment if there be assets to pay it, and such judgment is no evidence that the administrator has sufficient assets of his intestate with which to pay it.

2. The widow and minor children of a deceased partner are entitled to a year's support only in what remains of the deceased partner's interest after payment of partnership liabilities.

3. The evidence for the plaintiff was sufficient to authorize the submission of the case to the jury, and the grant of a nonsuit was error.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Dublin; Wm. Faircloth, Judge.

Action by W. A. Wood, ordinary, for the use of N. E. Brown and her minor children, against R. E. Brown and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Sanders & Davis, for plaintiff in error. T. L. Griner and Jackson & Orme, for defendants in error.

EVANS, J. W. A. Wood, ordinary, for the use of Mrs. N. E. Brown and her minor children, in his petition against R. E. Brown and the security on his administrator's bond alleged: In 1901 A. H. Brown died, leaving the plaintiff's uses, who were his widow and minor children. R. E. Brown qualified as his administrator, and executed to the ordinary an administrator's bond, with the American Surety Company as security, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as such administrator. As a breach of the bond plaintiff alleged that an estate of $1,800 belonging to A. H. Brown went into the hands of the administrator; that on February 23, 1903, after notice to the administrator, a year's support of $1,400 in money and household furniture was duly assigned to plaintiff's uses, and upon this judgment a fi. fa. issued against the administrator; that the administrator refused to pay the fi. fa., and that the sheriff of the city court of Dublin made his return thereon of diligent search and no property to be found on which to levy the execution. The administrator and his security filed their several pleas. The administrator pleaded that no assets of A. H. Brown ever came into his hands as administrator, but that A. H. Brown only had a very small amount of partnership property with defendant, which was not sufficient in value to pay the just demands and debts outstanding against the firm of A. H. & R. E. Brown. The plaintiff orally moved to dismiss this plea on the ground that the judgment of the court of ordinary allowing the year's support concluded the administrator as to there being assets in his hands sufficient to pay the same. The court overruled the motion, and the plaintiff filed his exceptions pendente lite to this ruling of the court.

On the trial of the case plaintiff tendered in evidence the year's support proceedings; the fi. fa. issued thereon against R. E. Brown, as administrator, with an entry of nulla bona by the sheriff of the city court of Dublin; and a certified copy of the inventory and appraisement of the estate of A. H. Brown, returned by R. E. Brown, as administrator, wherein a one-half interest in certain designated personal property was appraised at $1,495. The plaintiff also introduced oral testimony tending to show that the administrator had received $65 from the sale of a horse belonging to his intestate, and had paid $86 for funeral expenses. A witness testified that the administrator told him on the day the appraisement was had that the firm of A. H. & R. E. Brown had $2,200 in notes and accounts, and also certain timber, sufficient to pay all the debts of the firm. The ordinary testified that the administrator filed a return, and asked for letters of dismission, but upon the instituting of a citation for settlement withdrew his return and vouchers, which had not been recorded. On the conclusion of the evidence of the plaintiff the court sustained the defendants' motion for a nonsuit. The plaintiff excepts to the granting of the nonsuit and to the refusal to strike the plea filed by R. E. Brown.

1. The court properly overruled the motion to strike this plea. The judgment of the ordinary allowing a widow and her minor children a 12-months allowance is conclusive only that she is entitled to the amount of the judgment if there be assets to pay it. The widow may have her year's support assigned independently of administration on her husband's estate. Her right to the statutory allowance becomes vested on the death of her husband, and she may proceed at once to have it set apart. If there is an administrator, he must be notified of the proceeding, but the statute neither requires him to object to the setting apart of a year's support nor permits him to show lack of assets with which to pay it. King v. Johnson, 94 Ga. 665, 21 S. E. 895. The only issues the administrator could raise are the reasonableness of the allowance and the sufficiency of previous appropriations to her from her husband's estate. In Tabb v. Collier, 68 Ga. 641, the judgment was attacked because the family had already consumed enough of the decedent's estate to amount to a year's support, and the same objection was urged in Goss v. Greenaway, 70 Ga. 130. But in each of these cases this court held that the objection should have been made before the judgment setting aside the year's support was rendered, and it was too late to make this objection after judgment. In Fulghum v. Fulghum, 111 Ga. 635, 38 S. E. 602, the same principle was recognized, and the administrator was not permitted, after the judgment, to have credit for certain payments made to the widow antecedent the judgment. These cases decide that a judgment assigning a year's support is conclusive as to the amount the beneficiaries are entitled to have set apart to them. But such a judgment is neither conclusive nor prima facie evidence that the administrator has sufficient assets of his intestate with which to pay it. Inasmuch as the administrator could not file any of the pleas peculiar to administration of estates, nor had an opportunity to examine into the estate, he will not be bound as to an issue which he could not make. "The return by the sheriff of nulla bona upon the execution in favor of the widow against the administrator is of itself no evidence of a devastavit." King v. Johnson, 94 Ga. 685, 21 S. E. 895. When the widow undertakes to assert her judgment for a year's support by suit against the administrator and the sureties on his bond, the burden is upon her to show that assets of her deceased husband came into the hands of his administrator, and that these assets were chargeable with the payment of her judgment.

2, 3. On the trial of the case the plaintiff tendered in evidence the inventory and appraisal of the estate of A. H. Brown. This inventory described several items of property, one-half of which was alleged to be the property of the intestate, and was appraised at $1,495. A witness testified that the administrator said that certain timber which was being prepared for market would be sufficient to pay all the debts of the business conducted by the deceased and the administrator as copartners. The judgment of year's support was introduced, and the ordinary testified that the administrator filed a return, but withdrew it and the vouchers when a citation for settlement was filed. The administrator sold a horse belonging to his intestate for $65, but paid funeral expenses amounting to $86. The court granted a nonsuit. The grant of the nonsuit was error, because there was sufficient evidence to take the case to the jury. The inventory required by law to be made and returned by an administrator is an admission, though not a conclusive one, of possession of such assets of his intestate as are therein described. Smith v. Griffin, 32 Ga. 101; Thompson v. Thompson, 77 Ga. 699, 3 S. E. 261. The administrator may explain any mistake or error in the inventory, or may show that his intestate had no title to the property inventoried. His inventory of assets as belonging to his intestate puts the burden on him to show its incorrectness. The description of the property embraced in the inventory as an undivided interest in personality raises no presumption that it was partnership property charged with the payment of partnership debts. Rather the contrary inference should be drawn where the return is made by the surviving partner. Let it be conceded that the evidence sufficiently showed that the property was partnership property, and the partnership was indebted, there was no evidence to indicate that the partnership debts were sufficiently extensive to absorb all the partnership assets. The surviving partner has the right to partnership assets to the exclusion of the administrator. And the widow and minor children are only entitled to a year's support in what remains of the deceased partner's interest after payment of partnership liabilities. Sellers v. Shore, 89 Ga. 416, 15 S. E. 494; Ferris v. Van Ingen, 110 Ga. 102, 35 S. E. 347. In view of the testimony that the administrator had estimated that the proceeds of certain timber belonging to the firm would be sufficient to pay partnership debts, that there was no explanation of the disposition of the property inventoried and appraised at $1,495, and of the conduct of the administrator in filing and then withdrawing his return, the court should have allowed the case to go to the jury.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 468)

SPEARMAN v. SANDERS et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—WITNESS—IMPEACHMENT—QUESTIONS TO JURY—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

1. A ground of a motion for a new trial which complains that the verdict is contrary to a given charge of the court is in effect a complaint that the verdict is contrary to law.

2. It was not error to allow a witness, whose testimony was sought to be impeached by proof of contradictory evidence given on a former trial of the same case, to explain the alleged contradiction in the light of what was testified to in the trial then being had. Savannah R. Co. v. Holland, 10 S. E. 200, 82 Ga. 258, 14 Am. St. Rep. 158.

3. The range of the questions submitted to the jury for answer was wide enough to comprehend all the essential elements of the case. If counsel desired other questions submitted, a suggestion to that effect should have been made to the trial judge at the proper time. McCook v. Harp, 7 S. E. 174, 81 Ga. 229.

4. The jury, passing on the issues, saw and heard all the witnesses, and knew their relation to each other and to the case itself. There were many conflicts and contradictions to be solved. While the judge who passed on the motion for a new trial did not preside on the trial of the case, and hence his approval of the verdict does not carry the same force as that of the trial judge would have done, still it is entitled to weight in determining whether the verdict should be allowed to stand. After a careful consideration of the entire brief of evidence, we are not disposed to control his discretion in refusing to grant a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Heard County.

Action between Elizabeth Spearman and J. B. Sanders and others. From a judgment, Spearman brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. Post and W. C. Wright, for plaintiff in error. F. S. Loftin and H. A. Hall, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except EVANS, J., disqualified.

(121 Ga. 421)

BALLEW v. BROACH & McCURRY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

AFFIDAVIT—AUTHENTICATION—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—PLEADING.

1. The affidavit of the plaintiff in error, in forma pauperis, under Civ. Code 1895, § 5613, made in a foreign state, before an officer of such state, is insufficient unless the official character of the attesting officer is properly authenticated.

2. The allegations of the petition did not set forth a cause of action, and the court properly sustained the demurrer and dismissed the petition.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; W. M. Henry, Judge.

Action by J. L. Ballew against Broach & McCurry. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Henry Walker, for plaintiff in error. Denry & Harris, for defendants in error.

EVANS, J. 1. Upon the call of this case, the clerk, pursuant to his duty under the rules, directed our attention to the affidavit in forma pauperis of the plaintiff in error. This affidavit purports to have been made before a justice of the peace in the state of Tennessee, but there is no authentication of his official character. An affidavit made in a foreign state, before an officer of such state, is insufficient unless it is made to appear in some legal way that the person attesting the affidavit was in fact authorized to administer the oath. Thus, in Behn v. Young, 21 Ga. 213, it was held that an affidavit verifying a bill could not be recognized in courts of this state when the official character of the person administering the oath is not authenticated. The official character of a county clerk of a foreign state must be authenticated before an affidavit made before him will be received in courts of this state. Shockley v. Turnell, 114 Ga. 378, 40 S. E. 279; Castellaw v. Blanchard, 106 Ga. 101, 31 S. E. 801. The rule was also applied to notaries public. Charles v. Foster, 56 Ga. 612; Brunswick Hardware Co. v. Bingham, 107 Ga.

270, 33 S. E. 56. But since the act approved December 20, 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 79), an affidavit before a foreign notary, with his seal attached, is receivable in courts of this state. Simpson v. Wicker, 120 Ga. 418, 47 S. E. 965. The seal of the notary public being evidence of the genuineness of his signature and of his official character, no further authentication is required. The act of 1899, just referred to, provides that "any affidavit made out of the state of Georgia before any notary public, justice of the peace, judge of a court of law, or chancellor, commissioner or master of any court of equity of the state or county where the oath is made, or before any other officer of such state or county who is authorized by the laws thereof to administer oaths, shall have the same force and effect, and be recognized in like manner, as if it had been made before an officer of this state authorized to administer the same; provided, that this act shall not apply to such affidavits as are by law required to be made within the state of Georgia, nor have the effect to impair or render invalid any of the existing provisions of law for making affidavits out of this state." Mr. Justice Little, in Shockley v. Turnell, supra, construing the proviso of this act, said (page 383, 114 Ga., page 281, 40 S. E.): "If the act is not to affect any of the existing provisions of law as to the validity of affidavits made out of this state, it cannot, of course, affect the question under consideration; for, as we have shown, such affidavits, under the laws of this state existing at the time of the passage of this act, must, in order to be rendered valid, be accompanied with proof that the officer has authority to administer oaths, as well as of the fact that he is such an officer." It is clear, we think, that the necessity of presenting proper authentication of the official character of the officer administering the oath promulgated in a foreign state is not dispensed with by the act of 1899. The affidavit, being defective in this particular, was not a compliance with Civ. Code 1895, § 5613, as to payment of costs or filing an affidavit in forma pauperis. Permission was granted the plaintiff in error to pay the costs, and, upon the certificate of the clerk that the costs have been paid, the bill of exceptions will be retained.

2. The question raised in the bill of exceptions is the correctness of the judgment sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition. The petition, as amended, set forth the following facts: Plaintiff "is a skillful and competent mechanic, 23 years of age." In March, 1903, he entered the employment of the defendants, and, being "a skillful wood workman, possessed of special fitness in operating a matching machine, he was employed to run the matcher" in their planing mills. "Whilst dressing weatherboarding on the matcher, he was called by McCurry, who was then dressing flooring on the molder, to take up his work, saying,

"I want you to take this thing and go ahead with it," meaning Ballew continue his unfinished work dressing flooring on the molder." It was an old-style, secondhand machine. In operating it, McCurry became familiar with it, and knew it was hazardous to himself, but, "without a word of warning, he intentionally shifted all danger from himself to Ballew." He was ignorant of any danger in operating this machine, and "it was the duty of defendants to warn him of the risk he unconsciously assumed, which was known to them." Within five minutes after beginning work on the molder, the two-inch belt, seven feet between the pulleys, much worn by use as a feed belt, fastened at ends by iron hooks instead of leather lace, ran off the pulley. No means being furnished by defendants to put the belt on the pulley, he used a file. It caught in the hooks, which from constant use had worn thin and turned up at the ends. The belt was put on the pulley, but the file was caught by the hooks, and suddenly snatched by the belt and broken, a fragment of the file striking plaintiff's hand and seriously injuring it. Immediately after the injury, McCurry said to the plaintiff: "I came very near being hurt in the same way you are hurt, a few days ago." The belt was at the right-hand side of the molder, two feet beneath its top, not in plain view of the plaintiff while running the flooring through the machine, being hid by a large belt and the machine. When plaintiff took up his work at this machine, the belt was swiftly running, and he could not distinguish between leather lace and iron hooks, and did not know iron hooks were used to fasten the belt. Plaintiff was not employed to work at the molder, but to operate the matcher, which was a safe machine, and with the operation of which he was familiar. When called on to operate the molder, to which he was unused, he did not know the belt was fastened with worn-out hooks, unsafe and unsuited for such use, and known to be so by defendants, who willfully and negligently continued the hooks in use instead of leather lace, "which was better and safer for tying the belt." "Defendants knew, or ought to have known, of defects of this character in the machinery, and warned petitioner in respect to the same, who had not equal means with them for discovering such defects," and did not know of the same. Defendants were guilty of a breach of duty to him in putting him to work in an unsafe place, instead of employing him in his usual and customary work on the matcher. "Defendants neglected to provide any safe means to put on said belt after it ran off, and nothing at all except said file, nor was there any other means at hand for use in such emergency, and said file was unfit and unsafe for the use thus intended by defendants in putting on said belt, and they knew it, and plaintiff did not know it." The wound received by the plaintiff was described, and he alleged that he suffered therefrom much pain. He sued for special damages, and also for counsel fees, because, he averred, the defendants had been stubbornly litigious, and had acted in bad faith, and caused him unnecessary trouble and expense. The defendants filed their demurrers, both general and special, and the court sustained the demurrers and dismissed the plaintiff's action, wherefore he excepts to the judgment thus disposing of the case.

As will have been observed, the most striking feature of the plaintiff's petition is the numerous charges of negligence preferred against the defendants. Many of these complaints are so obviously without merit that they may be summarily disposed of, in view of the fact that the plaintiff was not an employé of tender years, but "a skillful and competent mechanic, 23 years of age." He asserts that he was employed to run the matcher; that the defendants had no right to call on him to operate the molder, and he would not have been injured if he had been permitted to perform his usual and customary work. The time to have made the point that he was under no contractual duty to operate any machine other than the matcher was when McCurry told him to go to work on the molder. It was "an old-style, secondhand machine." But to put a skillful and up to date mechanic at work on such a machine is not per se actionable. In operating that machine, "McCurry became familiar with it," and "knew it was hazardous to himself," but nevertheless, "without a word of warning, he intentionally shifted all danger from himself to Ballew." Wherein this danger lay is not alleged; whether it was latent, and not such as a skilled mechanic should without warning have taken cognizance of, does not appear. Though, for a period of about five minutes, while operating this machine, the plaintiff may have been exposed to a hidden danger of which he was not warned, certain it is that he was not injured because of the defendants' failure to give him any warning in regard to such danger. One cannot recover for negligence which in no way brings about or contributes to an injury sustained by him. The plaintiff does not pretend that, because of any latent defect in the molder, the belt ran off the pulley; that it habitually did so, or had ever before done so; or that the defendants had any reason to anticipate it would do so on this particular occasion. Nor, on the other hand, is it averred that it is usual for a belt to run off a pulley, and that means for readjusting the belt should be furnished by a master. The plaintiff characterizes the stopping of the machine by the running off of the belt as an emergency he had to meet. No complaint is made of the pulley. The belt was fastened at the ends with iron hooks, instead of leather lace, "which was better and safer for tying the belt." But a master is not bound to provide the most approved and safest appliances. The iron hooks were worn thin and turned up at the ends, and were unsafe and unsuited for such use. Yet it does not appear that they broke, or that the fact that they were worn thin and turned up at the ends caused or contributed to the injury. For aught that the plaintiff avers, the injury would not have been averted had the hooks been in the best of condition, and such as were suitable for the use to which they were put. So, in its last analysis, the grievance of the plaintiff is that he was hurt while attempting to put the belt on the pulley with a file belonging to the defendants, owing to the fact that the file was not suitable for this purpose, which fact he did not know, though they did. The question to be decided, therefore, is, can the plaintiff recover from the defendants on the theory that they were negligent with respect to any duty they owed him after he was confronted with the emergency of replacing the belt upon the pulley?

The plaintiff alleges that, "no means being furnished by defendants to put it on the pulley, he used a file." He does not aver that they furnished him this file for that purpose. Being himself a skilled mechanic, he assumed the risk of undertaking to supply their omission to furnish him with the proper means of accomplishing this task. He did not call on them to furnish him with the proper means, but used a file, not knowing it was hazardous to do so. Why he did not know, he does not undertake to explain; nor does he attempt to show liability on the part of the defendants on the ground that they, knowing the file to be unsafe and unfit for such a use, were bound to anticipate that he might attempt to so employ the instrument, and to warn him not to do so. We do not understand that a file is made for any such use, or holds out any invitation beyond that which its name implies. It would take very exact and elaborate pleading, indeed, to state a case such as that just suggested, where the person injured was an expert workman. The gravamen of the plaintiff's charge of negligence is that "defendants neglected to provide any safe means to put on said belt after it run off, and nothing at all except said file." He does not say the file was provided for the purpose for which he used it, but merely that there was not "any other means at hand for use in such emergency." Read in the light of the facts positively stated, and the plaintiff's assertion that "no means being furnished by defendants to put [the belt] on the pulley, he used a file," his further allegation that "said file was unfit and unsafe for the use thus intended by defendants in putting on said belt" is not the equivalent of an unqualified averment that the defendants in fact furnished him with the file to be used for that purpose. Considered as an allegation that they contemplated that he should use the file as he did, notwithstanding they knew it was unfit and unsafe for the purpose, this allegation amounted to no more than a statement of a bare conclusion, unsupported by the facts recited, and resting alone upon the unwarranted assumption that, as no other means were at hand, the defendants must have intended that the plaintiff should make an improper use of the file. The defendants, by their demurrer, admitted such facts only as were well pleaded. It is not to be arbitrarily presumed that the plaintiff, in framing his pleadings, resorted to duplicity and meant to allege (1) that the fact was that the defendants furnished him with no means at all for replacing the belt on the pulley, and (2) that the fact was that the defendants deliberately furnished him with the file to be used for that purpose, intending that he should so use it, though they knew it could not with safety to him be so used. Rather should the plaintiff's petition be so construed as to render its allegations consistent. The alleged comment of McCurry, made immediately after the injury, that, a few days before, he "came very near being hurt in the same way," justifies the inference that he had himself put the file to a similar improper use, and well knew the danger of so using it. However, the plaintiff fails to allege that the danger was not one open and obvious to a mechanic of ordinary prudence, skill, and experience, or that for any reason the defendants owed him an affirmative duty to warn him against an improper use of the file. If such was the real truth of the matter, he should not have hesitated to so declare. Apparently the plaintiff was too dazed by his injury to have any clear conception as to the precise mental process whereby he arrived at the conclusion that the defendants were liable to respond to him in damages. Certain it is that he did not in his petition present any reasonable theory upon which they could be held legally responsible for his injury, and, this being so, the trial court properly sustained their demurrer to his petition.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 461)

HOWELL v. SIMPSON GROCERY CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1904.)

AFFIDAVIT—VERIFICATION—CLAIM CASE—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

1. An affidavit in forma pauperis, made in another state, for the purpose of bringing a case to this court without the payment of costs, is insufficient unless there is something to show the official character of the person before whom the oath is taken. Ballew v. Broach, 49 S. E. 297, 121 Ga. —, and citations. The fact that the seal of a probate court is affixed to the affidavit is not sufficient to show that the person attesting the affidavit was an officer of that court, or that he was a person authorized to administer an oath.

2. In the trial of a claim case in which the plaintiff in fi. fa. undertook to show that the defendant in fi. fa. had been in possession of the property at the time of levy, it was error to allow a witness to testify, over the objection of the claimant, that it was his understanding that the defendant was in possession, and that defendant "seemed" to be in possession. These were conclusions of the witness, and he should have been made to give the facts within his knowledge, in order that the court might determine whether such facts showed that defendant was in possession.

3. Where the levying officer does not state in his return who was in possession of the property levied on, the burden rests upon the plaintiff in fi. fa., in case a claim is filed by a third person, to make out at least a prima facie case of possession in the defendant at the time of the judgment or of the levy. Excluding from consideration the evidence which was illegally admitted, the only evidence of such possession in the present case was that the levying officer found the property in a livery stable belonging to one not a party to the litigation, and that the defendant in fi. fa. was in or about the stable. This was not sufficient to make out a prima facie case of possession or to cast the onus upon the claimant.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Floyd County; Harper Hamilton, Judge.

Action by the Simpson Grocery Company against E. J. Howell. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

Geo. A. H. Harris & Son, for plaintiff in error. Lipscomb & Willingham and O. E. Carpenter, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 420)

CITY OF ROME v. SUDDUTH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

APPEAL—REMAND—AMENDMENT OF DECLARATION—TRIAL—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where a declaration has been demurred to in the trial court, and the demurrer overruled, and that judgment reversed by this court, upon the return of the remittitur to the lower court the plaintiff has the right to amend his declaration. Charleston & W. O. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 41 S. E. 252, 115 Ga. 92. It is otherwise where the lower court has sustained a demurrer, and that judgment affirmed by this court. In the latter case there is nothing in the lower court to amend. Central R. & B. Co. v. Patterson, 13 S. E. 525, 87 Ga. 648.

2. The ruling of this court when the case was here before was that there were not sufficient facts alleged to authorize the plaintiff to recover (City of Rome v. Sudduth, 42 S. E. 1032, 116 Ga. 649), but there was enough in the declaration to amend by.

3. The petition as amended was good against the general demurrers filed thereto.

4. Negligence is a question for the jury. The trial judge cannot instruct the jury what facts do or do not constitute negligence, except where declared by statute. Consequently it is error for the judge, in a suit for damages based on the negligence of the defendant, to charge that, if the defendant's failure to do its duty "was in accordance with the allegations of the plaintiff's petition, then that would be negligence, as he charges in this case." Augusta Ry. & Electric Co. v. Smith, 48 S. E. 681, 121 Ga. —.

5. Taken in connection with the entire charge, no error appears in the portions of the charge, other than as just above pointed out, to which exception was taken.

6. It is not error to refuse a request to charge which is in part inapplicable to the case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; W. M. Henry, Judge.

Action by A. F. Sudduth against the city of Rome. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

Halsted Smith, for plaintiff in error. Seaborn & Barry Wright, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 429)

LA GRANGE MILLS v. KENER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

DOWER—APPLICATION—VESTED RIGHT—ELECTION TO TAKE CHILD'S SHARE—LUNATIC—ACTION BY NEXT FRIEND.

1. A widow who is insane at the date of her husband's death is not barred of her right to apply for dower until seven years after the removal of her disability.

2. A widow's right to dower in the lands of which her husband died seised and possessed is a vested right, which accrues to her upon the death of her husband, and requires no act on her part to make the same complete. The right of a widow to take a child's share in her husband's estate depends upon her election so to do within one year after administration is granted, and the law makes no exception in favor of a widow who is insane or laboring under other disability.

3. A suit by a next friend for a lunatic, who has been adjudged insane, which fails to allege that the lunatic has no guardian, or any sufficient reason why she does not appear by her guardian if she has one, is maintainable, unless the failure to make allegations of this character is made ground of objection in a special demurrer, or raised by plea in abatement.

4. The petition set forth a cause of action, and was not subject to any of the objections raised in the demurrers.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Troup County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Action by Thomas M. Kener, as next friend of Mary J. Kener, against the La Grange Mills. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

On October 28, 1901, Thomas M. Kener, as next friend for Mary J. Kener, filed an equitable petition in her name against the La Grange Mills, a corporation, in which it was alleged that she is now insane, and was insane at the date of the death of her husband, Godfred Kener, which took place in June, 1879; that her husband died seised and possessed in his own right of a described parcel of land; that the defendant has been in possession of this land for a term of 15 years, receiving the rents and profits thereof; that Peavy, who was administrator of her husband's estate, has been discharged, and there is now no legal representative on the estate; that the lands described in the petition were never administered by the legal representative; that dower has never been assigned to her; that she has been for years an inmate of the Georgia State Sanitarium; that she is entitled to rents of the property in possession of the defendant from her husband's death until her dower is assigned; that she claims dower in the land; that the statutory remedy for the assignment of dower is inadequate, and it is necessary to invoke the aid of a court of equity, and she prays that her right to dower be established; that commissioners be appointed to set the same apart; that, if it cannot be set apart in the land, the land be sold, and dower be assigned to her out of the proceeds of the sale; and that an accounting be had for the value of the rents, issues, and profits of the land. By amendment the allegation that the administrator had been discharged was stricken, and it was alleged that Peavy was still in office as administrator, and by proper order he was made a party to the suit. It was also alleged by amendment that after the death of plaintiff's husband an execution against him was levied upon the land, and the same was sold at sheriff's sale in 1879, and that the defendant claims under the purchaser at such sale.

The La Grange Mills filed a demurrer on the grounds that the petition set forth no grounds for the relief prayed for; that it was multifarious, containing a misjoinder of parties, and also a nonjoinder of necessary parties, to wit, the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, the children of Godfred Kener, and the trustees of the Georgia State Sanitarium; that, no application for dower having been filed within seven years from the death of the intestate, the widow is now barred from claiming dower; that a next friend, or prochein ami, has no right to apply for dower for one under disability, without authority from some court, or to elect for her between dower and a child's share; that, under the facts alleged, equity should interpose an equitable bar to the proceeding, even if there is no bar under the ordinary statute of limitations; that the widow having been, before the death of her husband, and ever since, in the State Sanitarium, at the expense of the state, as its ward, suits in her behalf should be brought by the trustees of the sanitarium; and that the petition is defective, in that it does not make the persons through whom the La Grange Mills derives title parties. The court struck all allegations of the petition which sought to charge the La Grange Mills with rents prior to the time when it went into possession, and then overruled the demurrer. The La Grange Mills excepted.

Longley & Longley, for plaintiff in error.
F. E. Callaway, W. H. Terrell, and Harwell & Lovejoy, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. 1. The right of a widow to dower is derived from the common law, but the rule of the common law in reference to the property in which this right may be asserted has undergone material modifications by statute in this state. The widow is no longer entitled to dower in all the lands which the husband held during coverture, but only in lands of which he died seised and possessed, and such as came to him by virtue of his marital rights, and which may have been aliened by him. During the lifetime of the husband the widow has an inchoate right of dower in lands of the latter character, but she has no right, in his lifetime, inchoate or otherwise, to other lands owned by him. Upon the death of the husband, the inchoate right of dower in lands which came to him through her becomes consummate, and the right to dower in other lands of which he died seised and possessed becomes completely vested. The widow has a right to compel an assignment of dower in the manner authorized by law in lands of either character, unless her right to dower has become barred for some reason which the law recognizes as sufficient to accomplish that result. It seems that at common law lapse of time alone would not be sufficient to bar the widow's right of dower, but there are cases in which it has been held that the failure for a long period of time to apply for dower, and the existence of facts which would make it inequitable on the part of the widow to assert this right, would be a sufficient reason for a court of equity to refuse to take jurisdiction for the purpose of assigning dower. In Tooke v. Hardeman, 7 Ga. 29, it was held that, while an application for dower might be a suit, it was not a suit to recover possession of land, within the meaning of the act of 1767, which required all such suits to be brought within seven years. See, also, Wakeman v. Roache, Dud. 123. In 1839 an act was passed which declared that an application for dower must be made within seven years after the death of the husband, or that otherwise the right to dower shall be absolutely barred. Acts 1839, p. 145 (Cobb's Dig. p. 230). See, also, Doyal v. Doyal, 31 Ga. 193; Smith v. King, 50 Ga. 192. There was nothing in this act making an exception in case of a widow who was insane or laboring under any other disability. In 1856 the General Assembly passed a general law on the subject of the time in which suits should be brought and indictments preferred. Acts 1855-56, p. 233. It was the evident intention of Judge Cone, who was the framer of this act, to bring together in one act all of the existing rules on the subject of limitation of actions, and to provide rules where there were none on the subject, and make them all a part of one complete and comprehensive scheme. Section 13 (page 234) of this act provides "that when any widow shall be entitled to dower, application for the assignment of such dower shall be made by said widow within seven years from the time such right to dower accrued, and not after." Section 19 (page 235) provides "that when any of the persons entitled to sue as aforesaid, shall be married women, idiots, or lunatics, or imprisoned, or under the age of twenty-one years, at the time the cause of action accrues, such persons shall be entitled to sue within the time aforesaid, after their respective disabilities are removed." There can be no question that under this act the right to apply for dower, which became vested in a widow who was insane at the date of the death of her husband, would not become barred until the lapse of seven years from the time she was restored to sanity. If no change has been made in the law, either by subsequent acts or by the adoption of the different Codes, this is still the law. Our attention has not been called to any statute dealing with this subject since the act of 1856 was passed. That act does not appear in the Code in its entirety in any one place. Some of the different provisions appear in the chapter on title by prescription. See sections 3593, 3595, Civ. Code 1895. Other provisions, and the larger number, appear in the article on limitation of actions on contracts. See section 3760 et seq. Section 19 of the act of 1856 appears in this article. Other provisions appear in sections 3898-3900. That section of the act which relates to the time in which dower shall be applied for is found in paragraph 4 of section 4689, which, by a marginal note of the codifiers, is shown to have been derived from the acts of 1839 and 1856. The mere fact that the provision of the act of 1856 in reference to the time in which an application for dower shall be made has become severed from the remaining portions of the act, and placed in a different article in the Code, and one which is more appropriate for its appearance—that is, the article relating to dower—would not be sufficient reason, in our opinion, to authorize the inference that the General Assembly intended, by the adoption of the Code, to repeal the exception in favor of persons under disability which was given to such persons under the act of 1856.

2. It is contended that upon the death of the husband the widow is entitled to elect whether she shall take a child's part of the estate as heir, or take her dower, and that, as this is a right personal to the widow, no person can make this election for her, and that, therefore, until she is in a position to make this election for herself, there can be no application for dower. See, in this connection, 1 Scribner on Dower (2d Ed.) p. 461; Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Mer. Ch. 296; Worthy v. Worthy, 36 Ga. 45, 91 Am. Dec. 758. But the right to dower does not depend upon an election. The right to a child's share in lieu of dower does depend upon an election, and an election which must be exercised by the widow within one year from the date of administration on her husband's estate. Civ. Code 1895, § 4689 (3); Beavours v. Winn, 9 Ga. 189, and Van Epps' Annotations; Farmers' Banking Co. v. Key, 112 Ga. 301, 37 S. E. 447. The right to dower is a vested right, accruing upon the death of the husband, and it takes no act on the part of the widow to complete this right. See Truett v. Funderburk, 93 Ga. 686, 20 S. E. 260; Snipes v. Parker, 98 Ga. 524, 25 S. E. 580; Johnson v. Gordon, 102 Ga. 354, 30 S. E. 507; Starr v. Newman, 107 Ga. 395, 33 S. E. 427. The right to dower continues vested in the widow until she has done some act which the law would construe as sufficient to divest her of the same. Her right to claim a child's part in the estate is dependent upon her action, and her right to dower is not destroyed until she has made her election to take a child's part, unless barred for some other reason. The law fixing one year from the date of the granting of administration upon the husband's estate as the time within which an election must be made, in order to entitle the widow to take a child's part, makes no exception in favor of widows who are under disability; and there are many reasons why no such exception should be made. The disability may be of a character which may not for a long time be relieved, and hence heirs and others interested in the estate would be confused as to their rights as long as the widow survived. After the lapse of one year from the date of the granting of administration, the right to elect to take a child's part is gone, and the right to apply for dower remains complete. Hence, in a case like the present, where the widow has been insane since the death of her husband, and more than a year has elapsed since the date of administration on the husband's estate, the right to elect to take a child's part is gone, and the right to apply for dower is not barred.

3. There is no distinct averment in the petition that the widow had been adjudged insane, but this may be inferred from the allegation that she has been confined for years in the State Sanitarium. There is no allegation that she has no guardian, or, if so, that there is a valid reason why the suit was not brought by him; but the demurrer does not raise this objection. The only question raised as to parties plaintiff by the demurrer is that the suit should have been brought by the trustees of the State Sanitarium. We know of no law requiring or authorizing the trustees of this institution to bring suits in behalf of persons confined therein. The law authorizes them to bring suits for claims the institution has. Pol. Code 1895, §§ 1411 (7), 1441. When a person has been adjudged insane, and a guardian appointed, it would seem that suits in behalf of the lunatic should be instituted by the guardian, or that it should appear that some good reason exists why this could not be done. See Reese v. Reese, 89 Ga. 645, 15 S. E. 846; Dent v. Merriam, 113 Ga. 83, 38 S. E. 334. Persons under disability may always apply with confidence to a court of equity for relief in any case where the law affords no remedy, or the remedy afforded is inadequate, or the disability under which the person labors is such that relief can not be had at law. The statute in this state provides the method for assigning dower. It makes no provision for an application by a widow who is laboring under disability, and this alone might be a sufficient reason for resorting to equity; but when the relief sought is not only the assignment of dower, but also an accounting for rents, a court of equity is the only court that can give complete relief in one suit. The allegations of the petition were sufficient to make a case authorizing the interposition of a court of equity, and the petition, as brought, was not defective as to parties for any reason set forth in the demurrer. See Bishop v. Woodward, 103 Ga. 287, 29 S. E. 968; Starr v. Newman, 107 Ga. 395, 33 S. E. 427.

4. The sheriff's sale after the death of the husband, under an execution issued upon a judgment rendered against him in his lifetime, did not divest the widow's right to dower. The purchaser and those claiming under him took subject to this right. The Code provides how dower may be barred, and such a sale is not there declared to be a bar to dower. Civ. Code 1895, § 4689. The general rule is that the widow is entitled to rents upon the dower land as finally assigned from the date of her husband's death to the date of the assignment of dower. See Austell v. Swan, 74 Ga. 278. In this case the judge has ruled that the widow is not entitled to rents, as against the La Grange Mills, except from the date that it went into possession. This ruling is unexpected to, and is therefore the law of this case. The amount of rents claimed in the petition indicates that the plaintiff contends that the La Grange Mills is liable for rents on the property in its improved condition. The question whether this claim is sustainable is not raised in any way in the demurrer, and no authoritative ruling can be made thereon, but nothing said or involved in this case will prevent the defendant attacking this claim in subsequent proceedings which may be taken. There are respectable authorities both in England and in this country to the effect that the widow is not dowerable of improvements made by an alienee, and therefore the rents to which she is entitled would be based on the value of the land or the property at the time the husband was last seised, and that the widow is not entitled to the benefit of improvements made either by the heir or the alienee. See Scribner on Dower, pp. 604 et seq., 612 et seq. When the property of the husband has, after his death, passed into the hands of an alienee, who has placed valuable improvements thereon, increasing the value of the property, it would seem that in equity a widow would not be entitled to claim as dower anything more than one-third of the value of the land as it existed at the date of the husband's death, and rents which would accrue from land of such value. Especially would this seem to be true where the application for dower was delayed. This rule appears to arise naturally from the principle that the widow is dowerable only in the property of the husband. She is not entitled to dower in the property of any other person. See, in this connection, Iverson v. Saulsbury, 65 Ga. 724; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 187 et seq.; Park on Dower, 256 et seq.

There is nothing in the petition which would authorize the court to interpose an equitable bar to the application for dower. The petition set forth a cause of action, and there was no error in overruling the demurrer.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 348)

TAYLOR v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

JURY — DISQUALIFICATION—OATH—HOMICIDE—THREATS—EVIDENCE—WITNESS—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

1. The inclusion of a juror within the panel of 48, who is ineligible to serve at a particular term of court, does not vitiate the entire panel. The juror's disqualification is good cause of challenge to the poll, but not to the entire array.

2. It is not necessary to administer the oath prescribed for jurors in civil cases (Pen. Code 1895, § 856) to the jury impaneled to try criminal cases. The oath prescribed in Pen. Code 1895, § 979, is the only oath designed for jurors in criminal cases.

3. Declarations by the deceased of peaceful intent, communicated to the defendant, are admissible in rebuttal of evidence of previous threats made by the deceased against the defendant.

4. The evidence excluded by the court was inadmissible, and was properly rejected.

5. The interest of a witness and his bias or freedom from prejudice may always be inquired into, and the testimony objected to was admissible in rebuttal of the testimony of the defendant's witnesses.

6. In his discretion, the trial judge may allow a leading question, and a new trial will not be granted solely because a leading question was permitted, unless it appears that the court's discretion has been abused.

7. It is not objectionable for counsel to embellish the argument with figurative speech, provided prejudicial facts extrinsic of the record are not introduced. Neither the remarks of the solicitor nor of the court offended the proprieties of a legal trial.

8. As stated by the court, the contentions comprehended the defense as presented both by the evidence and the defendant's statement. If a more elaborate presentation was desired, a timely written request should have been made.

9. The charge of the court on the subject of threats was appropriate and correct.

10. The judge is not bound to read Pen. Code 1895, § 76, to the jury, where the general charge sufficiently presents justifiable homicide as a substantive defense.

11. The charge of the court on justifiable homicide was not too narrow or restricted, and is not open to the criticism made against it.

12. The verdict is amply supported by the evidence, and has the approval of the trial judge, and no reason is shown for disturbing it.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Washington County; A. F. Daley, Judge.

O. T. Taylor was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. K. Hines, G. H. Howard, J. E. Hyman, and T. W. Hardwick, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Armistead, Evans & Evans, B. T. Rawlings, Sol. Gen., and John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. O. T. Taylor was indicted and tried for the crime of murder. The testimony disclosed that the deceased, W. R. Veal, and the defendant were bitter enemies, and that for a period of about three months prior to the homicide each was anticipating and was prepared for a deadly encounter. On the day of the homicide, Veal, while riding along a public road in a buggy with a negro driver, was stopped by another negro who had been working for him, and who asked that he might see him on a matter of business. Veal got out of his buggy, and went a short distance out on the side of the road, stopping by an embankment at or near a fence corner. The negro driver remained in the buggy to hold the horse. While conversing with the negro who had called him to this place on the roadside, and while engaged in tying one of his shoes, Veal was approached by another negro in his employment, who was coming down the road, followed by the defendant. The defendant, when first seen by Veal and the negro with whom he was talking, had his pistol in his hand; and, when he arrived within a few feet of Veal, he, without any warning, fired upon him, inflicting a wound in his side, under one arm. At the time Veal was sitting on the ground, tying his shoe, and was not aware until that moment of the presence of the defendant. After receiving this wound, Veal threw up his hands, quickly rose to his feet, and, apparently realizing his helplessness, started to run. As he was running away, the defendant fired three shots at him, each of which took effect in his back, and he fell to the ground. There was testimony that shortly after the shooting a pistol was found on the ground near the body of deceased, but the eyewitnesses to the homicide swore that neither before nor after the first shot did he make any effort to draw the weapon as a measure of offense or defense.

The defendant introduced testimony disclosing that the deceased had previously made repeated threats to kill him on sight, which threats had been communicated to him; that the deceased habitually carried with him a Mauser rifle, and had it in his buggy on this occasion; and that he had stated to a number of people that he had procured this rifle for the express purpose of killing the defendant with it when they next met. The defendant also sought to prove his contention that the purpose of the deceased in leaving his buggy and going to one side of the road, where he was partially concealed from view by the embankment, because of a curve in the road, was to waylay the defendant and carry out these threats; that defendant, while walking along the road, suddenly and unexpectedly came upon the deceased, who immediately threw his hand to his pocket and attempted to draw his pistol; and that, realizing his imminent peril, the defendant thereupon fired four shots at him in quick succession. The defendant also made an attempt to impeach the witnesses for the state upon whose testimony it mainly relied for a conviction. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the defendant made a motion for a new trial, to the overruling of which he excepts, and brings the case here for review.

1. When the panel of 48 jurors was put upon the defendant, he urged as cause of challenge to the array that one of the jurors included in the panel had served as a traverse juror at the preceding term of the court, and was therefore disqualified to serve at the then present term, and that for this reason the panel was illegal. The court overruled this challenge to the array, and the defendant excepted pendente lite. The inclusion of a juror within the panel of 48, who is ineligible to serve at a particular term of the court, does not vitiate the entire panel. The juror's disqualification is good cause of challenge to the poll, but not to the entire array. See Thompson v. State, 100 Ga. 272, 34 S. E. 579, and cases cited.

2. The first and second grounds of the amendment to the motion for a new trial set forth the complaint that the oath prescribed in section 856 of the Penal Code of 1895 was not administered to the entire panel of 48 jurors put upon the defendant. It appears that 36 of the jurors included in that panel were jurors who had been regularly drawn, and who had taken the oath just referred to. Upon the opening of the court, this oath was administered to all of the jurors who had been summoned to serve during that term of the court. As the defendant was entitled to a panel of 48 jurors, other jurors were summoned and added to the number originally summoned, in accordance with the statute providing for completing a panel to try felony cases. The oath prescribed in the above-cited section of the Penal Code should be administered only to jurors called on to serve in civil cases. Originally this was the oath prescribed for special juries selected from the grand jury. Code 1888, §§ 3854, 3855. The act of 1899 provided for the taking of this same oath by petit juries summoned for service in civil cases during a term of court. Acts 1899, p. 145. The provisions of this act appear in their appropriate place in Code 1882, §§ 3932, 3933. In criminal cases the oath to be taken by the jury was that prescribed in section 4650 of that Code, and this oath had to be administered in each case. It was never contemplated that both oaths should be administered to jurors trying criminal cases. On the contrary, provision was made that in civil cases the taking of a prescribed oath applicable to that class of cases at the beginning of the term should suffice to render the jury competent to try all cases of that class coming on for trial before the jury at that term of court; but in criminal cases the accused was given the safeguard of having a specially prescribed oath, applicable to that class of cases, administered in each and every case the jury was called on to try. This oath now appears in Pen. Code 1895, § 979. The codifiers included therein all the law on the subject of impaneling juries and administering to them the different oaths prescribed by statute. This was done simply for convenience, as appears from section 4452 of the Civil Code of 1895, and was not intended to change the law as it had previously stood.

3. Objection was made to the admissibility of certain statements made to third persons by the deceased, which were communicated to the defendant. The purport of these statements was that the deceased intended no harm to the defendant. The record shows that for some months prior to the homicide there was a feud existing between the defendant and deceased, that the deceased had made threats against the life of the defendant, and that these threats were communicated to the defendant. The defense was that the homicide was justifiable, and an important element of that defense was that at the time of the homicide the defendant was acting under the fears of a reasonable man that the deceased intended to carry into effect his previous threats. Threats illustrated the state of mind of the defendant when he slew the deceased. These pacific messages from deceased to defendant were admissible as qualifying his other declarations. The defendant sought to justify his conduct in a measure by proving the threats of the deceased, and any declaration of peaceful intent subsequent to the threats of which the defendant was informed should have gone to the jury, to enable them to pass upon the conduct of the defendant at the time of the homicide, and determine the good faith of his defense that he was influenced by the fears of a reasonable man that the deceased was about to carry into effect his previous threats. The testimony was not objectionable as being hearsay, nor because what the deceased had said to the witnesses amounted to nothing more than self-serving declarations on his part. It was competent for the state, in rebuttal of the defendant's evidence as to threats, to introduce this testimony with a view to illustrating the quo animo of the defendant in killing the deceased under the circumstances developed on the trial of the case. In this connection, see Naugher v. State, 105 Ala. 26, 17 South. 24; Trumble v. State, 25 Tex. App. 631, 8 S. W. 814; Miller v. State, 27 Tex. App. 63, 10 S. W. 445; Bowlus v. State, 130 Ind. 227, 28 N. E. 1115.

4. The court excluded evidence of an antecedent declaration of the defendant to the effect that he had declined to do certain work on a house located on the edge of a public road because he was afraid the deceased might kill him while he was there working. This testimony was properly excluded. A self-serving declaration of a defendant is inadmissible. Whart. Cr. Ev. § 268; Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 132.

Complaint is further made that the court refused to allow counsel for the defendant to ask a witness for the state the terms of his employment by the deceased at the time of the homicide. The witness had testified he was a servant of the deceased, and in his employ, at that time. The terms of the employment were wholly irrelevant, and could have shed no light on any issue in the case.

Exception is also taken to the refusal of the court to allow a witness to answer the question whether he would believe a certain witness for the state on oath. The general character of the witness sought to be impeached was not known to the witness offered to impeach him, and the court properly declined to permit the question to be answered; the necessary foundation for it not having been laid. Civ. Code 1895, § 5293.

5. The defendant offered the testimony of one Giles and his four sons. They testified that they were not interested in the case. In rebuttal of their avowal of want of interest and freedom from bias or prejudice, the state offered evidence to show that one of the Gileses shot a near relative of the deceased some time previous to the homicide, and that the feeling of the Giles family against the Veals had been bad. Exception is taken to the admission of this evidence on the ground that it was irrelevant. The interest of a witness, and his bias or freedom from prejudice, may always be inquired into, and the testimony objected to was admissible in rebuttal of the testimony of the Messrs. Giles that there were no ill feelings on their part towards any member of the Veal family.

6. The court, over the defendant's objection, permitted the solicitor to ask a witness if the deceased was running or walking at the time he was shot. The objection was that the question was leading. In that it assumed that deceased was either walking or running at the time he was fired upon, the question was leading; but the court may, in its discretion, allow a leading question to be propounded. A new trial will not be granted solely because the court permitted the solicitor general to ask a witness a leading question.

7. The solicitor, in his concluding argument to the jury, used the following language: "On the happening of this occurrence, the whole community ran together like the gathering of a great storm to investigate the truth of it." When this remark was made by the solicitor, counsel for the defendant objected to the same on the ground that it was based on nothing contained in the record, and as being prejudicial to the accused, and asked the court to rebuke the solicitor general, and instruct the jury to disregard this remark. The court replied: "I don't understand that he contends that it is in the record. He is only drawing an illustration as to how murder cases will excite public sentiment and create excitement. I overrule the objection." Error is assigned on this ruling, as well as upon the use by the court of the language quoted. The record discloses that, immediately after the homicide, several people in the neighborhood were attracted to the scene of the tragedy, and the solicitor doubtless had this circumstance in mind when he made the remark complained of. Nothing in the remark could have been hurtful to the defendant. It is quite natural, and by no means unusual, for an advocate, in discussing the facts of a case before a jury, to indulge to some extent in imagery and illustration. Sometimes a simile may be inapt or the metaphor mixed, or the expression may be hyperbolic. What the law forbids is the introduction into a case, by way of argument, of facts not in the record, and calculated to prejudice the accused. The language of the solicitor was somewhat extravagant, but figurative speech has always been regarded as a legitimate weapon in forensic warfare, if there be evidence before the jury on which it may be founded.

The language employed by the court in ruling upon the defendant's objection to the solicitor's remark is not open to the criticism made upon it. The court interpreted the solicitor's remark as illustrating how, in murder cases, public sentiment is aroused, and some interest and excitement created. The characterization of instances of homicide as "murder cases" cannot be construed as an expression by the court of any opinion as to the guilt of the accused. When a person is charged with the crime of murder, the case against him is, even prior to his conviction, commonly alluded to in ordinary conversation as a "murder case." The jury doubtless understood the reference to be to cases where murder was charged, and public interest was excited to a greater or less extent, and there is no reason to apprehend that the jury drew the unwarranted inference that it was the purpose of the court to express an opinion that the accused, in killing the deceased, had committed the crime of murder.

8. There is no merit in the complaint that the defendant's contentions were not accurately summed up by the court. As stated by the court, the contentions comprehended the defense as presented both by the evidence and the defendant's statement. If the defendant desired a more elaborate presentation of his contentions, he should have submitted a timely written request embodying a summary of his contentions as presented by the evidence and his statement.

9. The next assignment of error is upon the following charge of the court: "I charge you that threats alone will not justify a killing, but such threats may be considered by the jury, in connection with any overt act of the deceased at the time of the killing, in passing upon the question of reasonable fears. Did the deceased at that time do anything which justified the defendant in believing he then intended to carry out his previous threats? And were such acts sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man—one reasonably courageous, reasonably self-possessed, and not those of a coward or one seeking an opportunity or an excuse for the killing?" This charge is assailed on the ground that it incorrectly stated the law, and was a limitation on the right of self-defense. It cannot be the law that mere verbal threats will alone justify a homicide. To maintain such a doctrine would be absurd. The charge of the court was in line with the principle announced in the Cumming Case, 99 Ga. 662, 664, 27 S. E. 177, 178, that there must be something more than mere threats; there "must be an appearance of imminent danger"; the "means of inflicting the threatened injury must apparently be at hand, and there must be some manifestation of an intention to inflict the injury presently." The charge of the court laid down no different standard from that prescribed in the Cumming Case; neither was it a limitation in any way on the defendant's plea of self-defense. The court, in charging upon the law with reference to threats, was not undertaking to charge the jury as to the law on the subject of justifiable homicide. The judge did that in another portion of his charge. The charge excepted to dealt only with the effect of a mere verbal threat, and the court correctly stated the law with respect thereto.

10. Another assignment of error was the failure of the court to give in charge the following provision of Pen. Code 1895, § 76: "The homicide appearing to be justifiable, the person indicted shall, upon the trial, be fully acquitted and discharged." The homicide was admitted. The evidence and the statement of the accused presented the clear-cut issue of murder or justifiable homicide.

The court charged the jury on the subject of murder and justifiable homicide, and instructed them to "apply the evidence to the law [given] in charge in defining murder and justifiable homicide, and say by [their] verdict, after giving the benefit of any reasonable doubt" resting in their "mind to the defendant, whether or not he [was] guilty of the crime with which he [was] charged." This instruction, as well as the trend of the whole charge, recognized justifiable homicide as a substantive defense. "The judge was not bound to read Pen. Code 1895, § 76; having in his general charge instructed the jury as to the form of their verdict, and as to the effect of finding that the killing was justifiable." Robinson v. State, 118 Ga. 193, 44 S. E. 985. In the case of Waller v. State, 102 Ga. 684, 28 S. E. 234, the court nowhere in its charge instructed the jury what should be their finding in the event they found defendant was justified in the act, and it was in that case held to have been error to omit to give section 76 in charge. But in the case at bar the tenor of the entire charge was to contrast murder and justifiable homicide—that the jury must find the homicide to be murder before they could convict. The only inference to be drawn from the charge was that if the homicide was justifiable the defendant should be acquitted. And the final instruction was as to the form of their verdict if they found the homicide to be murder, and, if they found that the homicide was not murder, they should return a verdict of not guilty.

In this connection it may also be said that there is no merit in the complaint that the court did not instruct the jury that if they found his statement to be true, and if they found, under his statement, that the homicide was in fact justifiable, it would be their duty to acquit the defendant. There was no request by the defendant to so charge. The court charged the law on the subject of murder and justifiable homicide, and the faith and credit to be given the defendant's statement. The court is not expected or required to sum up various facts and circumstances favorable to the accused, whether those facts appear from many witnesses or from one witness, or from the statement of the defendant, and instruct the jury that, if such facts are found to be true, then the homicide would be justifiable. "It is not necessary for the court to apply the law given in charge to the jury to the facts of the case, when the application is plainly apparent." Goode v. Rawlins, 44 Ga. 593. The charge satisfies the law when the law applicable to the case is properly expounded to the jury, and they are instructed to apply it to the facts, and in that way reach a verdict.

11. The court charged the jury: "If you find that the circumstances attending the homicide were such as to cause in the mind of a reasonable man the fear that the deceased was attempting, by violence or surprise, to commit a felony upon the person of the defendant, and that the defendant shot under the influence of such fears, then the homicide would, under those circumstances, be justifiable." This excerpt from the charge is assailed by the defendant as being an incorrect statement of the law, and restricting in narrower compass the right of defending one's person against a felonious attack than is given by the statute. Section 70 of the Penal Code of 1895 justifies the killing, in defense of one's person, of one who is manifestly intending or endeavoring by violence or surprise to commit a felony on the person of the slayer; and the contention is that the word "attempting," in the charge, is narrower in scope than the statutory words, "manifestly intending or endeavoring." To manifestly intend an act implies more than mental resolution to do the act. The mental resolution must find some form of expression before it becomes manifest. In cases involving force, the slightest manifestation of intent to do the act would be an attempt in the accomplishment of the act. See Johnson v. State, 14 Ga. 59. (2) However, it is not necessary to decide that the word "attempt" is the exact equivalent of "manifestly intends." The charge complained of was not erroneous when construed with the entire charge. Just preceding this charge, the court had read the section (section 70) defining justifiable homicide, and the excerpt is taken from that portion of the charge wherein the court was instructing the jury that the danger need not be actual; if the circumstances attending the homicide were such as to excite the fears of a reasonable man that the deceased was attempting a felony on his person, and the defendant shot under the influence of such fears, the shooting and killing would be justifiable. The defendant, in his statement, made the issue that he shot the deceased to prevent the deceased from committing a felony on his person; that at the time he fired the fatal shot the deceased was attempting to shoot him; that this attempt consisted, in part, of deceased placing his hand on his hip pocket, as if to draw a weapon. On this issue the court delivered the part of the charge above quoted. It was an appropriate and correct statement of law, as applied to the facts of the case.

12. The trial judge very properly declined to grant a new trial on the general grounds of the defendant's motion. The testimony upon which the state relied for a conviction discloses that the killing of the deceased was deliberate and without any shadow of justification. The defendant's plea of self-defense seems to have been based upon theory rather than upon fact. That the jury arrived at this conclusion, and that their finding met with the approval of the presiding judge, affords the defendant no just cause of complaint, taking into consideration the circumstances brought to light at the trial, and the improbability that he acted under the fears of a reasonably courageous man. This being so, no reason appears for setting aside the verdict.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 391)

SAVANNAH, F. & W. RY. CO. v. EVANS.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

RAILROADS—INJURY TO PERSON ON TRACK—
EVIDENCE—COURTS—JURISDICTION—PLEAD-ING—PROPORTIONATE DAMAGES—INSTRU-CTIONS.

1. The defendant company failed to establish by proof its special defense that the railway track on which the plaintiff's husband was killed was operated and controlled by another company having the same corporate name.

2. The court properly overruled the defendant's motion to dismiss the case on the ground that it was without jurisdiction to try the same, inasmuch as a Georgia corporation which transacts business in another state may be sued in this state by a nonresident for injuries inflicted in that state.

3. Where a plaintiff relies, as an act of negligence authorizing a recovery, upon the breach of a duty imposed upon a railway company by a statute of a foreign state, or by an ordinance adopted by a municipality thereof, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to specially plead the statute or ordinance; and, in the absence of proper pleading, proof in regard thereto is inadmissible.

4. It was not permissible for a witness in behalf of the plaintiff to state his "conclusion," drawn from facts testified to by him, that, at the place where her husband attempted to cross the company's track, there was less danger to a pedestrian than there was at a near-by crossing. Nor was it the right of the defendant to introduce evidence tending to show general knowledge on the part of the public as to the danger incident to crossing its track at the point where the plaintiff's husband was killed.

5. Where a plaintiff alleges a number of acts of negligence on the part of the defendant, it is not necessary to a recovery that proof should be made of each and all of such negligent acts, if the defendant's liability to respond in damages be shown by establishing the commission of one or more of the acts of negligence complained of.

6. The court rightly construed and upheld as constitutional the statute on which the plaintiff relied as conferring upon her the right to recover proportionate damages in the event the jury should find that both the servants of the company and her husband were at fault.

7. The charge of the court as to the measure of damages recoverable in this kind of a case was warranted by the evidence, and was not open to the criticism that the court instructed the jury to consider certain elements of damages which the law did not contemplate should be looked to in estimating the loss sustained by the plaintiff.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Evans against the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

W. L. Clay and Walter G. Charlton, for plaintiff in error. Twigg & Oliver, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. The plaintiff below, Mrs. Elizabeth Evans, brought a suit for damages in the city court of Savannah against the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Company, a Georgia corporation, which she alleged was in the month of October, 1899, operating a railroad running into and through the town of Lakeland, in Polk county, Fla. Her complaint was that the defendant company on October 5, 1899, while operating an engine along its track through that town, ran over and killed her husband as he was, at night, attempting to cross its track at a point where, by long-established license, the public in general, and the citizens of that town, including her husband, had been permitted to cross. The acts of negligence with which the company was charged were (1) that the engine was being handled by a locomotive engineer whom the company knew was incompetent to run it, and who, without any warning to plaintiff's husband, suddenly and rapidly propelled the engine backward at a greater rate of speed than allowed by law; (2) that the company had failed to provide safe or suitable crossing facilities at the point where he was attempting to cross its track, and had further failed to provide any means of warning persons crossing at that point of the danger of approaching trains; (3) that the company's servants did not give the usual and proper signals of the approach of its engine, nor display the proper light or lights on the rear of the engine; and (4) after they saw, or were in a position to see, plaintiff's husband on the track, where he had a right to be, they failed to give him any warning of his perilous situation, and failed to apply the brakes on the engine, or to use any other preventive measures by which his life could have been saved. The plaintiff averred that her husband was at the time using due care and circumspection, but was unable to hear the approaching engine because of the roar and noise of another engine pulling a heavy train of cars of defendant, which was then and there passing in close proximity to him along another track. She set forth in her petition what purported to be a literal transcript of certain statutes of Florida upon which she relied as conferring upon her, as the widow of the deceased, a right of action for his homicide; also a copy of other statutes imposing upon railroad companies the burden of overcoming a legal presumption of negligence in such cases, and providing for the recovery of proportionate damages where a person injured by the negligence of the servants of a railway company was not himself entirely free from fault. The defendant company filed an answer in which it made a general denial of the allegations of fact upon which the plaintiff relied as showing liability on its part, and in which it specially pleaded that the tort complained of was committed by another railroad company. A verdict in favor of the plaintiff was returned by the jury, which the court declined to disturb after passing upon a motion for a new trial made by the company. It thereupon sued out a bill of exceptions, in which complaint was made of divers rulings of the court to which it had excepted pendente lite, and in which it also assigned error upon the judgment overruling its motion for a new trial.

1. In its answer the defendant company set up the defense that it did not own and had never operated the railroad in Florida mentioned in the plaintiff's petition, but that this line of road was owned and operated by another and distinct corporation, having the same corporate name. The evidence adduced at the trial showed, however, that the defendant railroad company was controlling and operating the engine which killed the plaintiff's husband.

2. After both sides had announced "closed," counsel for the defendant moved to dismiss the plaintiff's action on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to entertain the same; it appearing from the evidence that at the time of the homicide she and her husband were both living at Lakeland, Fla., where she had since continuously resided; that the cause of action arose in that state; and that her husband was killed by a Florida corporation. As already intimated, the proof was that the plaintiff's husband was killed by the defendant company during the course of its operation of a railway running through the town of Lakeland, Fla. And it is well settled that a Georgia corporation which transacts business in another state may be sued in Georgia by a citizen of a sister state for injuries inflicted in that state. South Carolina R. Co. v. Nix, 68 Ga. 580; South Carolina R. Co. v. Dietzen, 101 Ga. 730, 29 S. E. 292, and cases cited.

3. Over the objection of the defendant, the court permitted the plaintiff to introduce proof of a statute of Florida imposing on railroad companies the duty of placing crossing signs at all points where their respective roads crossed over highways, providing for the ringing of the bell on every engine before crossing any street in a city, and limiting the speed of trains while running through any traveled street of a city to a rate of four miles per hour. The objection to this evidence was that the statute had not been pleaded, and that it was irrelevant to the cause of action stated in the plaintiff's petition. That, in order to gain the advantage of a foreign statute upon which a plaintiff bases his right to recover, the statute must be specially pleaded and proved, admits of no doubt. See 9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 542; 20 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 598, and authorities cited. This is true for the obvious reason that the courts of one state cannot take judicial notice of the laws of a sister state. Champion v. Wilson, 64 Ga. 184; Bolton v. Ga. Pacific Ry. Co., 83 Ga. 659, 10 S. E. 352; Craven v. Bates, 96 Ga. 78, 23 S. E. 202; Wells v. Gress, 118 Ga. 566, 45 S. E. 418. The provision of our Civil Code of 1895 (section 5231) that the public laws of our sister states, "as published by authority, shall be judicially recognized without proof," does not dispense with the necessity of pleading a foreign law, upon the violation of which a party relies as an act of negligence. On the contrary, this provision, which first appeared in the Code of 1863 (section 3747), and was brought forward into the Code of 1868 (section 3771), and incorporated in later codifications of our laws, merely means, as was held in the case of Simms v. Southern Express Co., 88 Ga. 182-183, that, where the public laws of a foreign state are published by its authority, the authenticity of its publications need not be shown by the introduction of proof of their genuineness, but will be judicially recognized by our courts without proof, and given the same effect as though its public laws were proved by the introduction in evidence of a duly certified copy thereof, properly authenticated under the great seal of that state.

There is no hint in the plaintiff's petition that her husband was killed at a point where the company's railroad crossed a public highway, or at a point where its road ran "through" a street in a city; nor does she allege any duty resting on the company with respect to ringing the bell of its engine at street crossings, or erecting signboards bearing the prescribed statutory warning, "Look Out for the Cars." Indeed, the allegations of her petition disclose that her husband was run over at a point on the company's road where he and other citizens had long been permitted to cross as mere licensees. Her alleged right to recover was based solely upon the common-law duty the company owed him under the circumstances, coupled with the Florida statutes conferring upon her, as his widow, the right to hold the company responsible for its violation of that duty, and fixing the measure of the damages recoverable by her. She did, it is true, aver that the engine was, without any "warning whatever, suddenly and rapidly propelled backward, and at a greater rate of speed than allowed by law." But she did not even remotely suggest the existence of any Florida statute regulating the speed of trains while running through cities or elsewhere in that state. Her bare assertion that the speed of the engine was greater than that "allowed by law" amounted to no more than a mere conclusion of fact, in the absence of any attempt to specially plead the Florida statute offered in evidence. Roots v. Merriwether, 8 Bush (Ky.) 897; Hempstead v. Reed, 6 Conn. 480; Lomb v. Pioneer Co., 96 Ala. 430, 11 South. 154; Walker v. Maxwell, 1 Mass. 104; Bean v. Briggs, 4 Iowa, 464;

Collett v. Keith, 2 East, 260; Fagan v. Strong, 17 N. Y. Civ. Proc. R. 438, 7 N. Y. Supp. 919; Phinney v. Phinney, 17 How. Prac. 197; Rothschild v. Railway Co., 28 Abb. N. C. 312, 13 N. Y. Supp. 361, and cases cited in note. That the plaintiff may have made certain allegations which, read in the light of the Florida statute, would disclose that the defendant company had failed to comply with its statutory duty in regard to the manner of running its engine, cannot be regarded as the equivalent of pleading that statute, or as affecting the nature of the cause of action she set forth, which was a common-law action, pure and simple, so far as the negligence charged against the defendant was concerned. Bolton v. Ry. Co., 83 Ga. 659, 10 S. E. 352. It follows, therefore, that the statute should have been excluded, as having no bearing on the case made by her petition. This ruling also disposes of certain exceptions to the charge of the court touching the duty of the company with respect to the operation of its engine at and near street crossings in the city.

The court committed further error in allowing the plaintiff to introduce in evidence a copy of section 125 of the "Revised Ordinances of Lakeland, Florida," providing that "No locomotive, car or train of cars, shall be run at a greater speed within the corporate limits than eight miles per hour." Judicial notice could not be taken of even a valid ordinance of a municipality of this state. Mayson v. City of Atlanta, 77 Ga. 663 (5). The ordinance was not pleaded by the plaintiff, nor was the company charged with a violation thereof, or of any other ordinance of the town. The admission of this evidence was, moreover, harmful, as the court followed up the error of admitting it with a charge to the jury which gave to the plaintiff the full benefit of the same.

4. A witness for the plaintiff was erroneously allowed, over the defendant's objection, to state to the jury his "conclusion," from certain facts to which he had testified, that "there was less danger to a pedestrian in crossing the railroad" at the point where the plaintiff's husband was killed "than there was in crossing New York avenue," a point near by. The relative danger of crossing at the place selected by the deceased was a question for the jury to determine from the facts brought out, and was not a proper subject-matter for the expression of an opinion entertained by the witness.

The court properly declined to admit testimony offered by the defendant which its counsel announced was intended to show general knowledge on the part of the citizens of Lakeland and the public at large as to the dangers incident to being on the company's track at the point where the homicide occurred, owing to the customary movements of its trains in that vicinity. The issue before the court was whether the deceased knew, or ought to have known, of the danger of attempting to cross at that point, and whether or not he acted as an ordinarily prudent man in going on the track at the time and under the circumstances shown by the evidence.

5. Counsel for the company presented to the court several written requests to charge, all of which were framed upon the theory that, as the plaintiff had charged the company with a number of separate and distinct acts of negligence, she was not entitled to recover unless she sustained by proof each of the negligent acts complained of in her petition. The court refused to give these requests to charge. The ruling was sound. The theory of the defendant was unsound. One request to charge on this subject ought to have been given, as counsel for the defense embraced therein only such contentions on the part of the plaintiff as she was bound to establish as a condition precedent to a recovery under the allegations of her petition. Reference is had to the request copied in the eleventh ground of the company's motion for a new trial, which request was to the effect that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show that where her husband was killed was a place where the company had, by long and established license, permitted the public in general and the deceased and other citizens of the town to cross, and that he had a right to be at that point at the time and under the circumstances alleged. It may be added, in this connection, that the court ought to have confined the plaintiff to proof relevant to her case as laid, and have sustained the defendant's objections to all evidence offered with a view to showing that the deceased met his death at a regular street crossing, where the public had a right to cross independently of any permission or implied license on the part of the company. The pleadings did not warrant the reception of evidence of this character, or any charge thereon giving the plaintiff the benefit of any theory of recovery based on the same.

6. The defendant, during the progress of the trial, invoked a ruling by the court upon the construction to be given a statute of the state of Florida recognizing the doctrine of comparative negligence, which the plaintiff had properly pleaded. This statute declared that no person should be entitled to recover damages from a railway company where the injury complained of was done by his consent or was caused by his own negligence; but "if the complainant and the agents of the company are both at fault, the former may recover, but the damages shall be diminished or increased by the jury in proportion to the amount of default attributable to him." The court held that the meaning of the language quoted was that the jury should make their estimate correspond with the amount of damages the complainant was justly entitled to receive, taking into consideration the fact that he was not entirely free from fault, and reducing the amount he would otherwise be entitled to recover in proportion to the neglect or want of care attributable to him. The company's contention is that, under the wording of this statute, the jury are left free, after determining what amount of money would be just compensation for the injury inflicted, to arbitrarily increase that amount in proportion to the degree of default attributable to the plaintiff, and that the statute, thus construed, is unconstitutional because it is in violation of the federal Constitution, "insuring due process of law." We think this a somewhat strained construction of the statute. Giving to it the meaning the court below gave it saves it from any such attack, and, we think, gives effect to the real purpose and intent of its framers. It may well be understood as expressing the idea that, if both the company and the plaintiff were at fault, the damages recoverable shall be "diminished or increased by the jury," not in proportion to the amount of money he would be entitled to receive if blameless, but in proportion to the degree of care exercised by him, charging him with "the amount of default attributable to him." Or in other words, if he be not wholly blameless, his recovery shall be greater or less in amount, so as to correspond with the default, of slight or of more serious degree, attributable to him.

7. Exception is taken to a charge of the court on the subject of the measure of damages recoverable by the plaintiff; the complaint being that the court erred in stating to the jury what were the elements of damage to be considered by them; there being no evidence to justify a charge as to certain items of loss mentioned, and other elements of damages covered by this charge not being recoverable in this kind of a case. When this case was here at the March term, 1902, a charge similar to that now excepted to was approved; it being in substantially the same language used by the Supreme Court of Florida in the case of F. C. & P. Ry. Co. v. Foxworth, 25 South. 338. See F. C. & P. R. Co. v. James, 115 Ga. 319, 41 S. E. 585. The evidence adduced at the last trial warranted, we think, the giving of the instruction of which complaint is now made. We definitely rule on this point for the guidance of the court in framing its charge on the next hearing of the case, which must, for the reasons above announced, undergo still further investigation.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 346)

DIXON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)
CERTIORARI—CONVICTION IN CITY COURT—BOND—EFFECT.

1. Where the only provision for certiorari proceedings, in an act creating a city court, indicates a legislative intent that the general provisions of the Civil Code of 1895, § 4637, relating to such proceedings from "inferior jurisdictions," should apply, no bond is required in criminal cases as a condition precedent to the issuance of the writ.

2. The writ of certiorari may stay the execution of the sentence, but of itself does not discharge the prisoner from confinement. That privilege must be secured as in all other bailable cases.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Berrien County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

Walter Dixon was convicted of misdemeanor. His application for certiorari was dismissed, and he brings error. Reversed.

In the city court of Tifton, Dixon was convicted of a misdemeanor. He applied for a writ of certiorari, making the affidavit that it was not filed for the purposes of delay only, and that he is advised and believes that he has good cause for "certiorarying" the proceedings to the superior court; that he has not had a fair trial; that he has been wrongfully and illegally convicted; that owing to his poverty he is unable to pay the cost, but gives security and bond as required by law.

Murrow & Pate and J. J. Murray, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Thomas, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. The certiorari was dismissed by the judge of the superior court, upon the sole ground that no proper bond had been given by the plaintiff in certiorari. This was error. In Daughtry v. State, 115 Ga. 819, 42 S. E. 248 (a certiorari from the city court of Waynesboro), and in Colvard v. State, 118 Ga. 13, 43 S. E. 855 (a certiorari from the city court of Forsyth), it appeared that the acts creating those courts did not provide a method by which a defendant could obtain the benefit of the writ of certiorari. But it was held that the right to the remedy existed, and the clear deduction from these cases is that, if no other method is declared, the right should be made effective by the general method prescribed in the Civil Code of 1895, § 4637. The act creating the city court of Tifton (Acts 1902, p. 174) provides that certiorari from that court is "to be issued, heard and determined like certioraris from justice and other inferior courts as now, or as may be hereafter prescribed by law," thereby incorporating the provisions of this section of the Code. It added no new power to the superior court of Berrien county, but the special act was merely declaratory of an existing power to issue the writ. This being true, the language used in the Colvard Case (page 16, 118 Ga., page 856, 43 S. E.) is applicable. It was there held that, as the law now stands, "one found guilty of the commission of a criminal offense cannot, if convicted in a court, such as the city court of Forsyth, be legally called on to pay the costs or furnish a bond of any kind, if he elects to carry his case by certiorari to the superior court."

But it was contended by the Solicitor General that these provisions as to certiorari in the act creating the city court of Tifton made applicable section 765 of the Penal Code of 1895, relating to such proceedings in county courts in criminal cases. But this section is special, and relates only to county courts. If the contention be correct, that section would have been equally applicable in the Daughtry and Colvard Cases, in the latter of which it was ruled that no bond was required, though Pen. Code 1895, § 765, does require a bond in such applications from the county court. The city court of Tifton stands on the same footing in this respect as the city court of Forsyth. Besides, if the general method in the Civil Code of 1895, § 4637, is not to be followed, which of the special methods is to be adopted? Shall it be that in the Penal Code of 1895, § 765, relating to county courts, or that in the act of 1902 (page 105), relating to certiorari from a municipal court? All three cannot apply. The language of the statute here clearly indicates a legislative intent that the general provisions of the Civil Code of 1895, § 4637, relating to such proceedings from inferior judicatories, should apply. No bond is required thereunder in criminal cases as a condition precedent to the issuance of the writ. This makes it unnecessary to determine whether the bond actually given was such as demanded by section 765 of the Penal Code of 1895. The writ of certiorari may stay the sentence. Civ. Code 1895, § 4645; Taylor v. Gay, 20 Ga. 77 (1). But of itself it does not discharge the prisoner from confinement. That privilege must be secured as in all other bailable cases.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 307)

NATIONAL BLDG. ASS'N v. QUINN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 12, 1904.)

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION—EXISTENCE—EVIDENCE—USURY BOND—ACTION FOR BREACH—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. The contract declared on was clearly usurious, unless made by a building and loan association as part of a scheme authorized by its charter.

2. The averments of the petition and plea put in issue the validity of the contract, and the bona fide character of the plaintiff as a building and loan association. This burden was not carried by introducing a certificate of incorporation in a foreign state, unaccompanied by the general statute designating its powers.

3. This being so, the plaintiff failed to show that it was in fact a building and loan association, and that the scheme was one authorized by its charter.

4. The absence of the charter makes it impossible to determine whether the scheme was authorized by the statute of incorporation, or whether the exaction of payment until stock was worth $4,500 was a device to secure usury on a loan of $1,800; the corporation at the time of the loan appearing to have been in a failing condition, and there being no proof that this fact was brought to the attention of the borrower.

5. If the requirement to mature $4,500 stock in order to secure a loan of $1,800 was usurious in its inception, the usury could not be purged therefrom by the passage of a subsequent by-law reducing the payment from $100 to $60 on a share.

6. The suit was not upon an unconditional contract in writing, and the burden was upon the plaintiff of establishing the amount of its damage for the breach of its bond. Dart v. Asso., 27 S. E. 171, 99 Ga. 794.

7. Treating the evidence excluded as admitted, and that admitted over the plaintiff's objection as excluded, the judgment is not shown to have been erroneous.

8. The terms of the law under which the plaintiff was chartered not being in the record, and it having failed to show the amount of damages arising from the breach of the bond, a judgment based on the admissions of the defendant's plea was not error of which the plaintiff can complain.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Washington; W. H. Toombs, Judge.

Action by the National Building Association against B. L. Quinn. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. Slaton, for plaintiff in error. F. H. Colley and S. H. Hardeman, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 309)

MARIETTA CHAIR CO. v. HENDERSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 10, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—VACATION OF STREETS—RIGHTS OF ADJUTING LANDOWNERS—DAMAGES—DECREE—VACATING.

1. In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the lawmaking power of a state may vacate a street in a municipality.

2. The power to vacate may be delegated to the municipal corporation.

3. When a street is vacated, the interest of the public therein ceases, and the owners of the fee, who are presumptively the abutting landowners, become entitled to use the property without regard to the former servitude imposed upon it.

4. If the closing of a street results in damaging private property within the meaning of the Constitution of this state, the owner of the property thus damaged, by allowing the street to be closed without instituting proceedings to prevent it, waives his right to demand compensation as a condition precedent to the closing of the street, and is remitted to his action at law for damages.

5. An act of the General Assembly authorizing the closing of a street need not provide for the payment of compensation to those whose property is thereby taken or damaged, there being a general law of the state providing a method for ascertaining the compensation to be paid in all such cases.

6. Where a decree based on a consent verdict is entered, requiring the removal of an obstruction in a public street, and subsequently a state of facts arises which renders the maintenance of the obstruction lawful and proper, a petition praying for the granting of an order declaring that the decree is no longer binding should be granted.

¶ 2. See Municipal Corporations, vol. 36, Cent. Dig. § 721.

7. While a judgment refusing in general terms to grant specified relief will be affirmed if the record shows that any valid objection was raised to the petition, none of the objections set up in the demurrers or answer in the present case were well taken.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Cobb County; Geo. F. Gober, Judge.

Action by C. E. Henderson against the Marietta Chair Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Henderson brought an action against the Marietta Chair Company to enjoin it from obstructing a portion of Hansell street, sometimes called McClellan street, in the city of Marietta. The defendant claimed authority to obstruct the street under a resolution of the mayor and council, adopted on September 1, 1902, which relinquished all right in the street to the plaintiff and defendant, respectively, as the abutting landowners. At that time there was no express legislative authority for the closing of this street. A consent verdict was rendered, in which the defendant was perpetually enjoined in accordance with the prayers of the petition, and upon this verdict a decree was entered, and no exception was ever taken to the decree. Subsequently Henderson presented a petition, alleging that the defendant had failed to comply with the decree, and had violated it by continuing to obstruct the street. The defendant answered, and upon the hearing the court passed an order requiring the defendant to remove the obstruction, as required by the decree, within 20 days, or, in default, show cause why he should not be attached for contempt. To this order the defendant excepted, and the judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court. 119 Ga. 65, 45 S. E. 725. After this judgment was affirmed, and before the expiration of 20 days from the time the judgment of the Supreme Court was made the judgment of the trial court, the Marietta Chair Company presented a petition, in which it was alleged that since the decree had been rendered a new state of facts had arisen; that the General Assembly, on August 10, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 705), had passed an act ratifying the action of the mayor and council in authorizing that portion of Hansell street which was in controversy to be closed, and specifically authorizing them to convey that portion of the street to the adjacent landowners. The act conferred power to exercise the authority granted by a majority vote of the mayor and council either at a called or regular meeting, and with or without advertising their intention to close the street. It was alleged that pursuant to this authority the mayor and council had passed a resolution closing the street, and that the mayor, under authority of the resolution, had conveyed the interest of the city in the street to the adjacent landowners, the north half being conveyed to the defendant as one of the adjoining owners. The petition prayed for the passage of an order relieving the petitioner from complying with the decree, and also for general relief. The defendant appeared, and filed demurrers, both general and special, and also answered. The special demurrer alleged that the petition was defective, because there was nowhere set out therein the petition, orders, and decree in the original case, which were referred to in the petition in the present proceeding. The general demurrer alleged that the petition set forth no cause of action, and no right to the relief prayed for, and constituted no defense to the order requiring the removal of the obstructions; and also attacked the act authorizing the closing of the street as unconstitutional and void. The grounds of this attack, as set forth in the demurrer, were that the act sought to take private property of the respondent and give it to the movant, a private corporation, for its own private use, without compensation, and violated those provisions of the Constitution of this state which declare that "protection to person and property is the paramount duty of government and shall be impartial and complete"; that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property except by due process of law"; that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public purposes without just and adequate compensation being first paid"; that "no law impairing the obligation of contracts, or making irrevocable grants of special privileges or immunities, shall be passed"; that "the General Assembly shall not, by vote, resolution or order grant any donation or gratuity in favor of any person, corporation or association"; that "all rights, privileges and immunities which may have vested in or accrued to any person * * * under any judgment, decree or order, or other proceedings of any court of competent jurisdiction in this state heretofore rendered shall be held inviolate by all courts before which they may be brought in question, unless attacked for fraud." The demurrer also set up that the act was in violation of those provisions of the Constitution of the United States which declare that "no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts," "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law," nor "shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation"; that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States," nor "shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The demurrer closes with a general averment that the act violates both the Constitutions of the United States and of the state by providing that the private property of the respondent may be taken for a private use of the movant. The answer alleged that the respondent had never had any opportunity to "attack" the legislative act, no notice of such act having been published as required by law; that one of the counsel for movant was also a member of the General Assembly which passed the act, and that the case was pending in the Supreme Court at the time the act was passed; that the defendant had vested rights under the decree, which had never been attacked for fraud or set aside, and it was beyond the power of the General Assembly to interfere with such rights—one of them being the right of access from the street to his property; that the decree, being rendered by consent, was, in effect, a contract between the parties. The answer attacked the act as unconstitutional upon the same grounds as were set forth in the demurrer. Attached to the answer as exhibits were those portions of the record in the original case which the special demurrer alleged were not set forth in the petition. The motion came on for a hearing, and the court, after holding that the petition in the original case was a part of the record in this case, heard evidence consisting of a certified copy of the resolution of the mayor and council, passed subsequently to the act of the General Assembly, authorizing the closing of Hansell street, and providing for a conveyance of the city's interest therein to the adjoining landowners; it appearing from the resolution that the authority conferred by the act had been exercised, in the terms of the act, by resolution adopted by unanimous vote of the mayor and council. There was testimony of the president of the Marietta Chair Company, and also of the mayor of the city, from which it appeared that there was no collusion between the Marietta Chair Company and the city authorities in reference to the matter. It also appeared that the mayor was the guardian of a minor ward, who owns stock in the Marietta Chair Company, but that he held no stock in his own right. Henderson objected to the closing of the street, and nothing was paid by the Marietta Chair Company for the relinquishment executed by the city. The pleadings in the original suit and in the application to enforce the decree were all introduced in evidence. The judge reserved his decision, and at a subsequent date passed an order which merely declared that "the application and motion is hereby refused." To this judgment the Marietta Chair Company excepted.

N. A. Morris and King, Spalding & Little, for plaintiff in error. J. Z. Foster, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. 1-4. In the absence of constitutional limitations, the lawmaking power of the state is vested with plenary authority in reference to the public streets and highways.

It may declare an existing street vacated without providing for the submission of the question to judicial inquiry. All questions necessary to be determined in order to decide whether a street shall be vacated or abandoned and the interest of the public therein released are referred to the wisdom and discretion of the lawmaking power. McGee's Appeal, 114 Pa. 470, 8 Atl. 237; State v. Huggins, 47 Ind. 588. In the absence of a constitutional restriction, the power to vacate a street may be delegated by the lawmaking body to municipal and other subordinate public corporations. Polack v. Trustees, 48 Cal. 490; Brook v. Horton, 68 Cal. 554, 10 Pac. 204. A municipal corporation has no power, in the absence of express legislative authority, to authorize the erection of permanent structures in a public street, which interfere with the free use of such street by the public. Savannah R. Co. v. Woodruff, 86 Ga. 96, 13 S. E. 156, and cit.; Almand v. St. Ry. Co., 108 Ga. 424, 34 S. E. 6, and cit.; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 113. It necessarily follows that the power to entirely vacate a street does not rest in the municipal authorities in the absence of an express delegation of authority by the General Assembly. When a street has been vacated, either directly by an act of the General Assembly or by action of a municipal corporation under the authority of an express delegation of power, the interest of the public in the street ceases, the burden upon the land which has been used as a street is removed, and the owner of the fee again becomes entitled to use his property in such manner as he may see proper, without regard to the former servitude to which it was subject. If the fee in the street was in the state or in the city, the vacating of the street leaves the state or the municipality, as the case may be, in the possession of the property, to use it for any purpose that it may see proper, without reference to its former use. If the fee to the street is in the adjacent landowners, then the street, relieved of any right in favor of the public, becomes again subject to use by the abutting owners, without reference to the former rights of the public. Whenever a street is vacated, the presumption is, until the contrary appears, that the fee is in the adjacent landowners, and that the right of each extends to the middle of the way. Harrison v. Augusta Factory, 73 Ga. 447, and cit.

It is contended that, though the General Assembly may have authority to vacate a street by direct enactment, or to authorize its vacation by the municipal authorities, when in the exercise of this power the adjacent landowner is damaged by the loss of the right to use the land as a street, such owner must be compensated in damages for this loss. The Constitution declares that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public purposes without just and adequate compensation being first paid. Civ. Code 1895, § 5729. It has been held that the vacating of a street is neither a taking nor a damaging of private property in such a sense as to authorize the adjacent land-owner or others who have been accustomed to use the street to claim compensation for the deprivation of this right; that any loss resulting from the exercise of the power to vacate a street is damnum absque injuria. Paul v. Carver, 24 Pa. 207, 64 Am. Dec. 649; Levee Dist. No. 9 v. Farmer (Cal.) 35 Pac. 569, 23 L. R. A. 388; Coster v. Albany, 43 N. Y. 399; Gray v. Land Co., 26 Iowa, 387. But there is also authority for the proposition that, when the vacating of the street occasions to the adjacent owner or others who had been accustomed to use the street such peculiar loss as is not of the same character as that inflicted upon the general public, equity would interfere in behalf of such owner to restrain the attempted abandonment of the street, and that such person would have a right of action against a municipal corporation who had exercised a power to vacate delegated to it by the state. Heller v. R. Co., 28 Kan. 625; Horton v. Williams, 99 Mich. 423, 58 N. W. 369; Brady v. Skinkle, 40 Iowa, 576. It has also been said that, if the vacating of the street has the effect to entirely destroy or seriously impair the right of ingress and egress of a person owning property approached from the street, the loss thus sustained is not one suffered in common with the general public, and that such a person would be entitled to compensation. Chicago v. Bldg. Ass'n, 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Mills, Em. Dom. (2d Ed.) § 318; Chicago v. Burcky, 158 Ill. 103, 42 N. E. 179, 29 L. R. A. 568, 49 Am. St. Rep. 142. On the other hand, it has been held that the destruction of one means of access when another is left unimpaired will not give a right of action against a city which had proceeded to vacate a street in the manner authorized by law. Smith v. Boston, 7 Oush. 254; Fearing v. Irwin, 55 N. Y. 486; Kings Co. Fire Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 101 N. Y. 411, 5 N. E. 353. There are judges of distinguished reputation and courts of high respectability holding that the owners of property abutting upon a street have such a property in the use of the street as that the same cannot be destroyed by vacating the street without compensation being made for the loss thus sustained. Van Witsen v. Gutman, 79 Md. 405, 29 Atl. 608, 24 L. R. A. 403; Webster v. Lowell, 142 Mass. 326, 8 N. E. 54; Haynes v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 38; Heinrich v. St. Louis, 125 Mo. 424, 28 S. W. 626, 46 Am. St. Rep. 490; Bannon v. Rohmeiser, 90 Ky. 48, 13 S. W. 444, 29 Am. St. Rep. 355; Lindsay v. Omaha, 30 Neb. 512, 46 N. W. 627, 27 Am. St. Rep. 415; Bigelow v. Balierino (Cal.) 44 Pac. 307; Cook v. Quick, 127 Ind. 477, 26 N. E. 1007; Pearsall v. Supervisors (Mich.) 42 N. W. 77. See, also, 27

Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 115. In this state it has been held that the erection of a permanent structure in a street, which may have the effect to entirely destroy or seriously impair an existing means of access to the property of an abutting owner, is not a "taking" of private property within the meaning of the constitution. Hurt v. Atlanta, 100 Ga. 274, 28 S. E. 65. But in the same case it was also held that this was a damaging of the adjacent property in such a way as would entitle the owner to compensation, but that, as the effect of the structure, which was a bridge constructed under authority of law, was such as to increase the market value of the adjacent property to such an extent that the enhancement in value equalled or exceeded the damages sustained, no recovery was permitted. See, in this connection, Austin v. Terminal Co., 108 Ga. 680, 34 S. E. 852, 47 L. R. A. 755.

The act of 1903, which confirmed the action of the mayor and council in vacating Hansell street, in the city of Marietta, and authorized the municipal authorities to complete the act of vacation by relinquishing to the adjacent owners the interest of the public in the street, was valid in every respect; and the Marietta Chair Company is, and has been, at least since the date of the execution and delivery of the deed from the city, possessed of every right of property which it or its predecessors in title had in that portion of the street which was originally taken from their property, and the right of the public therein for all purposes has become completely extinguished. If Henderson, the abutting owner on the opposite side of the street, and now the complete owner of the half of the street abutting upon his property, ever had any right to demand that compensation should be first paid him before the rights of the public in the street were surrendered, for loss of any character sustained by him, he has waived that right by allowing the vacation and abandonment of the street to become complete without resorting to the courts for appropriate relief. If he ever had the right to demand of the municipality compensation for any loss sustained by him as a condition precedent to the closing of the street, he should have applied for an injunction before the passage of the resolution carrying into effect the legislative act, or at least before the deeds were executed which that act provided for. If he has any right to damages at all, he is remitted now to an action at law against the municipality; but on this question we now make no authoritative ruling, for the question is not before us in such a manner as either to authorize or require a ruling upon the subject. If he has such a right of action, nothing in the judgment now rendered will preclude him from asserting this right hereafter.

It is contended, however, that the original resolution of the mayor and council, the legislative act, the resolution passed subsequently thereto by the mayor and council, and the deeds executed thereunder, are all merely component parts of a fraudulent and collusive scheme entered into by the Marietta Chair Company and the municipal authorities to destroy the rights of the public in the street, in order that a private use of the Marietta Chair Company might be subserved. That private property cannot be taken for a private use is a rule of practically universal application; the taking of private property for a private way being apparently the single exception. The use of public property for private use is generally, if not always, an abuse of power by those who are the custodians of the rights of the public. See Mayor of Macon v. Harris, 73 Ga. 428; Van Witsen v. Gutman, 79 Md. 405, 29 Atl. 608, 24 L. R. A. 403. There is nothing in the record in this case that would justify a holding that there was any such scheme, even if the courts have authority to inquire into the motives of the General Assembly in passing an act of the character here involved, or into the question whether the General Assembly was imposed upon by those interested in the passage of the act. There is nothing on the face of the act or the resolutions which suggests such a scheme, all indicating merely action by the public authorities adopted for the public benefit. The presumption is that this was the case, and, even if this presumption could, under any circumstances, be rebutted by proof, there is no proof to overcome it in the present case. Neither the General Assembly nor a subordinate public corporation acting under its authority can lawfully vacate a public street or highway for the benefit of a private individual. The street or highway cannot be vacated unless it is for the benefit of the public that such action should be taken. The benefit may be either in relieving the public from the charge of maintaining a street or highway that is no longer useful or convenient to the public, or by laying out a new street or road in its place which will be more useful and convenient to the public in general. If the public interest is not the motive which prompts the vacation of the street, whether partial or entire, the act of vacation is an abuse of power; and especially would it be a gross abuse of power if it is authorized without reference to the rights of the public, and merely that the convenience of a private individual might be subserved. As the reason for vacating a highway must therefore always be that the public interest is to be subserved, it may be that the consequences of this act, which is for the benefit of the public, will give a right under the Constitution to claim damages. Upon no other theory can such a right be maintained. But upon this question we now express no decided or authoritative opinion.

5. It was also contended that the act of 1903 was unconstitutional, for the reason that it did not make any provision for compensation to those whose property might be damaged as a result of the act being carried into effect. In Parham v. Justices, 9 Ga. 341, it was held that private property could not be taken for public purposes without just compensation, and could not be so taken without an act of the Legislature authorizing it, and that the act itself must make provision for compensation. At the date of this decision there was no general law providing a method of ascertaining the damages resulting from the taking of private property for a public use. In 1894 the General Assembly passed an act (Acts 1894, p. 95) providing a method in which damages should be assessed in all cases where private property was taken or damaged for public purposes, and therein declared that all corporations or persons authorized to take or damage private property for public purposes should proceed as provided in the act. Civ. Code 1895, § 4657 et seq. The two things required in the decision referred to are still required—that is, authority to take or damage private property, and provision for ascertaining the compensation to be paid; but since 1894 it is no longer necessary that each act conferring the authority shall itself provide the manner of ascertaining the compensation. When the authority is conferred, the general law of the state above referred to makes provision for compensation. Hence it follows that the act of 1903 is not unconstitutional because it does not provide for the payment of compensation.

6. But it is claimed that, even if the legislative act and the proceedings of the mayor and council thereunder are all valid, the Marietta Chair Company is bound by the judgment rendered prior to the passage of that act, and cannot now question the same, and that, the decree having been rendered upon a consent verdict, it was, in effect, a contract between the parties that the status of the property as fixed by the decree should never thereafter be changed, and that it was beyond the power of the General Assembly to interfere with the vested rights of Henderson under the decree. The fact that the decree was rendered upon a consent verdict does not give it any greater validity than if it had been rendered after a sharp and protracted litigation. Parties are, of course, bound by judgments rendered by courts of competent jurisdiction to which they have submitted their controversies, and the judgments bind them whether they expressly agree to them or not, and an express agreement that a particular judgment should be rendered gives to that judgment no peculiar character, and renders it no more sacred than the ordinary judgment. While a judgment is a contract of record, the agreement which the law implies from such a contract is simply that the parties will stand to and abide what has been decreed in the case upon the law and the facts then involved, or which could have been properly involved. But a judgment does not bind the parties as to any matter which was not directly or indirectly involved in the suit, and which, from the nature of the case, could not have been passed upon or adjudicated by the court at the time the judgment was rendered. At the time this judgment was rendered the municipal authorities of Marietta had no power to vacate Hansell street, or any part thereof. The judgment that the obstruction be removed therefrom was therefore the only legal and proper judgment that could have been rendered in the case. The power to vacate has been conferred since the judgment, and the act of vacation has been completed. While the placing of obstructions in the street was originally wrongful, the new state of facts which has arisen since the judgment has rendered their maintenance in the street lawful and proper; and we see no reason why the party placing these obstructions may not now stand upon the rights acquired under the legislative act and the resolution of the mayor and council, notwithstanding the prior judgment. A new right has been acquired, which was not and could not have been involved in the controversy resulting in the judgment. See Pylon v. State, 8 Ga. 230; Wray v. Harrison, 116 Ga. 100, 42 S. E. 351; Ingraham v. Water Company (Me.) 19 Atl. 861.

7. It was suggested in the argument that, even if the Marietta Chair Company was entitled to the relief sought, it should have filed an original proceeding in the nature of a bill to reform the decree, or at least should have waited until there was some proceeding instituted to enforce the decree, and then set up the matters now relied on in answer to an attachment for contempt. None of the demurrers raise any question as to the procedure followed. The special demurrer simply alleged that certain paragraphs of the petition were defective because they did not set forth documents referred to therein, and the general demurrer set up merely that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought for the various reasons set forth in the demurrer. It is said that, as the order of the judge refusing to grant the relief prayed for was general in its nature, it not appearing therefrom upon what ground the court based its judgment, if any ground taken in either demurrer was a sufficient reason for refusing the relief, the judgment should be affirmed. This is unquestionably the correct rule; but we find no sufficient reason set forth in either of the demurrers for refusing that prayer of the petition which asked that an order be entered declaring that on account of the new condition of affairs the decree, though proper at the time it was rendered, should no longer be enforced; and we will not now pass upon the question whether the proper procedure was followed. Speaking for myself, I think the procedure followed was not only proper, but that the practice is to be commended. The company was apparently in contempt. The decree required the removal of the obstructions. The company continued to maintain them. Instead of waiting for an attachment for contempt to be issued, it comes forward in a respectful application, and shows to the court a state of facts which would relieve it from the apparent contempt. The decree was no longer operative upon it, and it was entitled to have entered upon the records of the court an order to this effect. Why should it "stand in jeopardy every hour"? A court of equity is always open for the purpose of proceeding upon mere motion to the enforcement of its orders by attachments for contempt, and I see no reason why it should not be open for one who is apparently in contempt, and who comes before it to show his willingness to abide its orders, but that at the same time, under the existing condition of affairs, his conduct, which at one time might have been a contempt of the court, was no longer such.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 362)

TAYLOR v. STATE.

MARSHALL v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

INDICTMENT—QUASHING—INDORSEMENT—VARIANCE.

1. An indictment was indorsed "True bill," and signed by B. as foreman of the grand jury. In the body of the indictment the names of the grand jurors were stated, B.'s name being among the number, but the word "foreman" was written opposite the name of another juror. Held, that the difference in the designation of foreman in the indorsement and the body of the indictment constituted no reason for quashing the indictment.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Houston County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Isaac Taylor and Samuel Marshall were convicted of crime, and bring error. Affirmed.

The indorsement "True bill" on each of the indictments in these cases is signed by O. C. Bateman, foreman. In the body of the indictments appear the names of 23 members of the grand jury, including that of O. C. Bateman, but the word "foreman" is written to the right of the name of R. G. Blewster. The accused demurred to the indictments on the ground that R. G. Blewster appears in the indictments as foreman, instead of the duly elected foreman, O. C. Bateman, who appears as such on the back of the indictments, and who is shown to be such by the minutes of the court. The court overruled the demurrers, and each of the accused excepted.

John R. Cooper, J. T. Jeter, and W. C. Lane, for plaintiffs in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and Wm. Brunson, Sol. Gen., for the State.

OOBB, J. It has been held that the names of the grand jurors need not be stated in the indictment; that it is sufficient if the indorsement "True bill" is signed by the foreman; that it is immaterial on which part of the indictment the foreman's signature appears; that it is sufficient if the foreman merely signs his name, with no mention of his official character, because the latter appears of record. See Hughes on Crim. L. & Proc. § 2686; 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 429; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. (2d Ed.) § 698; People v. Bennett, 37 N. Y. 117, 93 Am. Dec. 551; State v. Bowman, 103 Ind. 69, 2 N. E. 289; State v. Murphy, 9 Port. (Ala.) 487; State v. Cook, Riley (S. C.) 234. And it has also been held that where the indorsement "True bill" is signed by a person as foreman, and the record shows that another person was appointed as foreman of the grand jury, the presumption would be that the person so appointed had been discharged, and the one signing the indorsement appointed in his stead. Mohler v. People, 24 Ill. 27. In McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 497 (8), 510, it was held that the failure of the foreman to sign the indorsement of "True bill" on the indictment would not be a sufficient reason for arresting the judgment, and it was said that such failure would not even make the indictment defective. In White v. State, 93 Ga. 47, 51, 19 S. E. 49, the indorsement was signed by Quarles, "foreman," and in the list of grand jurors appearing in the indictment Quarles was designated as "foreman pro tem." There was held to be no merit in an objection based upon these facts.

Under the statutory form for indictments in this state it would seem to be mandatory that the names of the grand jurors should be inserted in the indictment. Pen. Code 1895, § 929. See Williams v. State, 107 Ga. 724, 33 S. E. 648. But there is no statutory requirement that one of the grand jurors should be designated as foreman in the indictment. In the present case there is no transcript from the minutes of the court in the record showing who was the duly appointed foreman. The indorsement on the back would seem to be the proper place to look to to determine this question. If this is true, then Bateman was the foreman, and the word "foreman" appearing after the name of Blewster in the body of the indictment may be treated as surplusage. Or it may be, as was held in the Illinois case, that the court will presume that Blewster was foreman when the indictment was drawn, that he was discharged, and that Bateman had been appointed foreman when the indorsement "True bill" was signed. At any rate, the presumption will be indulged, until the contrary is made properly to appear, that Bateman had authority to sign the indorsement. So that, whichever view be taken, there is no merit in the objection.

This view of the matter renders it unnecessary to determine whether the objection to the indictment was properly raised by demurrer, or whether it should have been raised by a plea in abatement.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(121 Ga. 344)

HILBURN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—CONTINUANCE—EVIDENCE—WARRANT—STATEMENTS OF ACCUSED—HOMICIDE.

1. The trial court did not err in refusing to grant a continuance on account of the absence of a witness for the accused, it appearing that, upon the announcement of his counsel that he would be ready if the presence of another witness was secured, the court had previously passed the case, and the attendance of this witness had been procured, and that the motion for a continuance was made when the case was thereafter again called for trial. Especially is this true in view of the counter showing made by the state, disclosing that the absent witness had said he knew nothing concerning the homicide with which the accused was charged; that the witness was a fugitive from justice, had eluded arrest for six months, and there was no probability of securing his attendance at the next term of the court.

2. A criminal warrant, signed by a judicial officer having legal authority to issue warrants of like character, is not inadmissible in evidence merely because it is not accompanied by an affidavit such as would authorize the issuance of the same. Nothing to the contrary appearing, the presumption is that the warrant was regularly and legally issued.

3. It was competent for the state to prove that the accused, after his arrest, told his custodian that "when firing at the deceased he fired under his arm, and not straight out"; it appearing that this statement, which was at variance with the testimony of one of his witnesses, was freely and voluntarily made. That the accused was a negro, and at the time was "a prisoner in the calaboose, surrounded by a crowd of white men," did not render proof of what he said on that occasion inadmissible; nor should it have been excluded for the reason that the custodian of the accused "after the alleged statement, had told the negro he had better tell the truth; that he would protect him and make him comfortable."

4. The conviction of the accused should be allowed to stand, there being ample evidence to warrant the jury's finding that he was guilty of the crime of murder.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Emanuel County; A. F. Daley, Judge.

Bud Hilburn was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Herrington & Lee, for plaintiff in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and B. T. Rawlings, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(121 Ga. 358)

WELLS et al. v. TERRELL, Governor.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 9, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW — ARRAIGNMENT — PRESENCE OF ACCUSED — BAIL — FORFEITURE — BOND.

1. The waiver of arraignment must be the equivalent of the thing waived, and be made under such circumstances as will serve the purpose of the law in requiring the formality.

2. As one of the purposes of arraignment is to identify the person on trial and raise an issue by plea, it is legally impossible to arraign the defendant, accept his waiver, or receive a plea in his absence.

3. It is universally held that a defendant in a felony case cannot be arraigned or pleaded in his absence. There is nothing in the Penal Code to suggest that there is any difference in this respect as to trials for misdemeanors, where the punishment may be by fine or imprisonment.

4. Where, therefore, one indicted for simple larceny was absent when the case was called, and his counsel offered to enter for him a plea of guilty, this afforded no defense in a proceeding to forfeit bail.

5. If the greater offense named in the bond includes the smaller offense named in the indictment, or if the smaller offense named in the bond forms an element of the greater offense named in the indictment, or if the two offenses contain a common element, the security will in either case be required to produce the body of his principal to answer to the indictment.

6. The prisoner gave bond to answer for the offense of larceny from the person. This required the bail to produce the body of the defendant to answer the indictment for simple larceny.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Proceedings by J. M. Terrell, Governor, against W. D. Wells and another, to forfeit a bail bond. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Wells, as principal, and Morgan, as security, executed before the sheriff a bail bond payable to the Governor of the state. It was in the sum of $500, conditioned that Wells should make his appearance before the superior court of Bibb county "on the first Monday in November, 1903, and from day to day, and from term to term, to answer to the offense of larceny from the person, or such other offense as may be returned by the grand jury as true, and shall not depart thence without leave of said court." At the November term Wells was indicted for simple larceny. The case being called in its order, the state announced ready. The defendant failing to appear, the bond was forfeited. Rule nisi issued, requiring him and his sureties to show cause at the April term, 1904, why the rule should not be made absolute. Scire facias issued, and was duly served on the security. At the April term, 1904, the case of the State v. Wells was called, the state announced ready, and, the defendant not appearing, and no answer being filed to the rule, the Solicitor General moved that it be made absolute. Thereupon John R. Cooper, attorney for the defendant Wells, offered to waive the presence of his client, and, having authority to do so, offered a plea of guilty, and to allow the court to impose a sentence on the defendant. The defendant, through his counsel, then and there objected to taking judgment absolute upon the bond, on the ground that the defendant and his security were bound to produce Wells for the offense of larceny from the person, and not for simple larceny, and that the bond did not cover the indictment as returned. These objections were overruled, and the court permitted judgment absolute; refusing to allow the defendant, through his counsel, to plead guilty, or to pronounce sentence upon such plea, for the reason that he had no jurisdiction to allow a plea in the absence of a defendant. The bill of exceptions recites that the said Wells and Morgan, his security, except to these rulings of the court, and to the judgment making the rule absolute and forfeiting the bond, and to the execution issued thereon.

John R. Cooper, for plaintiffs in error, cites State v. Lockhart, 24 Ga. 420; State v. Woodley, 25 Ga. 235; McDaniel v. Campbell, 78 Ga. 188; Candler v. Kirksey, 113 Ga. 309, 38 S. E. 825, 84 Am. St. Rep. 247; Williams v. Candler, 119 Ga. 179, 45 S. E. 989; Crutchfield v. State, 24 Ga. 335; Adams v. Governor, 22 Ga. 417; Hill v. State, 118 Ga. 21, 44 S. E. 820; Robson v. State, 83 Ga. 160, 9 S. E. 610; Nolan v. State, 53 Ga. 137; Franks v. State (Ga.) 48 S. E. 148; People v. Gaunt, 23 Cal. 158; McIntosh v. Lee, 57 Iowa, 357, 10 N. W. 895; State v. Conneham (Iowa) 10 N. W. 877; Edmonds v. Torrence, 48 Ala. 41; People v. Hunter, 10 Cal. 502; Clark's Cr. Proc. pp. 98, 99.

Wm. Bennson, Sol. Gen., and A. L. Miller, for defendant in error, cite 1 Bishop's Cr. Proc. §§ 265, 268, 2645, 275; U. S. v. Mayo, 1 Curt. 433, 434, Fed. Cas. No. 15,754; Foote v. Gordon, 87 Ga. 277, 13 S. E. 512; Gardner v. State, 105 Ga. 662, 31 S. E. 577; Strickland v. State, 115 Ga. 222, 41 S. E. 713; Blandford v. State, 115 Ga. 824, 42 S. E. 407; Lavender v. State, 107 Ga. 707, 33 S. E. 420.

LAMAR, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). The defendant was charged with a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment. On the call of the case he was absent, but his authorized counsel offered to enter a plea of guilty for him. This the court refused to allow, holding that it had no jurisdiction to enter upon the trial or to receive the plea in the prisoner's absence. The rule in the several states on the subject is not uniform. In some it is in express terms provided by statute that a trial for a misdemeanor may be had in the defendant's absence. Without statute, some courts hold that, while the defendant is never entitled to this privilege as matter of right, yet, for sickness, or other good cause shown, the court may, in its discretion, permit one charged with a misdemeanor to be tried therefor in his absence. Others limit the right to be thus tried to those cases in which the punishment can only be by fine, and in a few cases it seems to have been held that the prisoner must be present at the time the trial on any indictment begins. Slocovitch v. State, 46 Ala. 227; Ex parte Tracy, 25 Vt. 93; U. S. v. Mayo, 1 Curt. 433, Fed. Cas. No. 15,754, 68 Am. Dec. 220; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. (3d Ed.) § 268; Clark's Cr. Proc. 427. The English decisions are not clear on the point here involved, inasmuch as it does not appear what punishment could have been inflicted in the particular cases reported. Besides, the rulings may have been affected by the fact that at common law an arraignment does not seem to have been required in prosecutions for misdemeanor. Lynch v. State (Tenn.) 41 S. W. 848; Griffin v. Com. (Ky.) 66 S. W. 740; Salfner v. State (Md.) 35 Atl. 885; Johnson v. People, 22 Ill. 317. The question has not been passed on by this court. In Barton v. State, 67 Ga. 653, 44 Am. Rep. 743; Robson v. State, 83 Ga. 167, 9 S. E. 610, and Hill v. State, 118 Ga. 24, 44 S. E. 820, it was held that the defendant could not, by an escape or voluntary absence on bond, nullify a trial otherwise legal, and by his own act of nonattendance prevent the rendition of a verdict. But in each of those cases the defendant was present at the time the trial began. There being, therefore, no direct ruling on the subject in this state, the question must be decided on general principles, as affected by the Penal Code. It is silent on the direct point here involved, but its provisions as to the formalities attending a trial, and particularly those on the subject of arraignment (Pen. Code 1895, § 946), are full of implications that the defendant must be present before the court may enter upon the trial, or accept a plea of guilty, which makes a trial unnecessary. Except in proceedings against corporations (Pen. Code 1895, § 938), and possibly in the trial of petty offenses in some municipal courts, a defendant charged with crime is not served with process. He may be arrested on a bench warrant, which in some respects is equivalent to process (Brady v. Davis, 9 Ga. 73); but jurisdiction of his person is not acquired by the arrest or confinement in prison, but by his presence at the time issue is joined on the indictment. To arraign a prisoner in his absence is legally impossible. Smith v. State, 60 Ga. 432. It is conceded that a trial of a felony case could not proceed without the defendant having been arraigned, or made a valid waiver thereof. But there is nothing in the Code which suggests that there is in this respect any difference between trials for felony and trials for misdemeanor. On the contrary, it seems to contemplate an arraignment in all cases. Pen. Code 1895, § 947. This formality is intended, among other things, to cut off all question as to misnomer, and to identify the person on trial as being the one named in the indictment. Regularly, this procedure requires the defendant to stand up, face the court and jury, and listen to the reading of the indictment. In answer to the clerk's inquiry whether he is guilty or not guilty of the offense charged, he orally makes his plea. This is not a mere idle ceremony, but furnishes a safe and conclusive means of identification. It permits the court, on the rendition of a verdict of guilty, to impose sentence and put the identified defendant into execution. To secure this important end, it is therefore the state's right to have him present when the trial begins. Besides, this requirement prevents the prosecution from degenerating into the appearance of a mock trial before a moot court, with no one in apparent jeopardy. And while the arraignment may be expressly or tacitly waived (Hudson v. State, 117 Ga. 704, 45 S. E. 66), yet the waiver must be an equivalent of the thing waived, and be made while present, and under such circumstances as will serve the purpose of the law in requiring that formality. The administration of criminal laws should be not only impartial, but equal, with privileges to none not accorded to all. If one defendant or class of defendants may be tried without being present, so could every other person charged with a misdemeanor. To allow this privilege to one or to all would be to rob the proceedings of that serious reality which serves a wise and useful purpose. This element of impressiveness was recognized as being so important as to furnish the basis for deciding the analogous question as to whether at common law one convicted of a misdemeanor could be sentenced in his absence. If the punishment had to be by fine only, it was in the discretion of the court whether it should be imposed without the personal attendance of the defendant. But even where the punishment would be pecuniary, it by no means followed that the fine would be imposed in the defendant's absence. For it was said that, if the offense was of a public nature, the person convicted should appear to receive sentence, "for the sake of example and prevention of the like offenses being committed by other persons, as the notoriety of their being called up to answer criminally to such offenses would very much conduce to deter others from venturing to commit the like." Rex v. Hann, 3 Burr. 1787. Nor is the suggestion in Smith v. State, 60 Ga. 432, a decision to the contrary. The whole gist of the argument there was to show that the defendant was actually present when sentenced, and the case did not involve a ruling as to whether, in his absence, it could or could not be imposed in a case of misdemeanor. Compare Pen. Code 1895, §§ 947, 948; Henry v. McDaniel, 80 Ga. 174, 4 S. E. 906; Dennard v. State, 2 Ga. 138; Bryans v. State, 34 Ga. 323. In the present case his bail contracted for the defendant's presence. This meant actual, and not constructive, presence. The obligation was not met by absence, nor by a plea of guilty entered for him by another. As said by the Supreme Court of South Carolina in State v. Minton, 19 S. C. 283—a case much like the present—there is “no good reason why the court should relax his obligation and make a new contract for him.” See Pen. Code 1895, §§ 935, 936.

2. The security insists that the bond required the accused to answer to an indictment for larceny from the person, and that the indictment returned was for simple larceny. The state replies that under the decision in Lavender v. State, 107 Ga. 707, 33 S. E. 420, larceny from the person included the simple larceny, with which the defendant was charged, and therefore, by the very terms of his bond, he was bound to appear and answer such an indictment. Bail bonds are often given before the indictment is found, and when it is impossible to know to which of several closely related crimes the particular offense applies. If the greater offense named in the bond includes the smaller offense charged in the indictment, or, vice versa, if the smaller offense named in the bond forms an element of the greater offense named in the indictment, or if the two offenses contain a common element, the security will in either case be required to produce the body of his principal to answer the indictment. Larceny was an element both of the offense named in the bond and that charged in the indictment. The bail was bound to produce the body of the defendant. Compare Adams v. Governor, 22 Ga. 417; Foot v. Gordon, 87 Ga. 279, 13 S. E. 512.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(70 S. C. 167)

CAUTHEN et al. v. CAUTHEN et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 17, 1904.)

APPEAL—WHEN LIES—DISMISSAL—ADMINISTRATOR—ACCOUNTING—LIMITATIONS—RELIEF GRANTED.

1. After final decree, an appeal lies from an intermediate decree on the merits.

2. An appeal as to nonresidents will not be dismissed on the motion of resident respondents because no notice of intent to appeal was served on them, where they were not represented by counsel.

3. Where plaintiff had held the office of committee of a lunatic, and also as his administrator, and had never been discharged from either office, limitations did not run against an action brought by him against the heirs for his accounting, especially when defendants required plaintiff to hold the two said offices, when he was about to file his suit for an accounting before the statute was a bar.

4. Where an administrator, who was also an heir, agreed with the other heirs that he should rent the lands and credit the proceeds on his account, he should credit his share of the rent as well as that of the other heirs.

5. Where defendant admits the allegations of the complaint and joins in the prayer, he can only get such relief as the prayer suggests.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lancaster County; Gary and Klugh, Judges.

Action by W. B. Cauthen, as administrator of John M. Cauthen, and others against Emma Cauthen and others, heirs at law of John M. Cauthen. From circuit decree, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Green & Hines, for appellants. Ernest Moore, for respondents.

POPE, C. J. In the year 1881, William B. Cauthen, of Lancaster county, in the state of South Carolina, by reason of his insanity, was by legal proceedings held to be a lunatic, and his son, John M. Cauthen, was appointed the committee of his person and estate. William B. Cauthen was seised of two tracts of land—one known as “Cedar Creek Tract,” containing 470 acres, and the other known as the “Duncan Tract,” containing 384 acres—and a small personal estate. The committee took possession of all of this property, and made his annual returns to the court of probate for Lancaster county. William B. Cauthen, the lunatic, departed this life intestate on the 17th November, 1884, survived by ten children, as his heirs at law and next of kin. The said John M. Cauthen was duly appointed the administrator of all his estate. The administrator paid taxes on all his lands and made his annual returns. In 1889, when John M. Cauthen was about to institute proceedings to come to an accounting for his actings and doings, both as the committee and as the administrator of the said William B. Cauthen, deceased, so as to collect a considerable sum due him by the estate of the lunatic and by the estate of his intestate, a conference was held by all of the heirs at law within this state with the said committee and said administrator. The result was that the latter agreed to rent the Cedar Creek tract for three bales of 1,200 pounds of lint cotton, and apply the proceeds of rent to his account, until the year 1898, at which time he brought this action against all the heirs at law and next of kin of William B. Cauthen, deceased, both those living in this state and also those living beyond our state limits, in order to settle his accounts, to have land of intestate sold to pay the indebtedness he held against said estate, and partition the balance among the said heirs at law and next of kin, according to their legal right therein. The three plaintiffs owned three-tenths of said estate, having purchased one-tenth each, owned by his brother, Samuel Cauthen, and his sister, Missouri Bechham, née Cauthen. The defendants answered. One was Emma Cauthen, another was Elizabeth Cauthen, and another was Elizabeth Fleming; and the children of another who was deceased, to wit, John Cauthen, Sadie Cauthen, Janie Cauthen, Paschal Cauthen, and Phillip Hammond, being infants, made formal answer by their guardian ad litem. Upon the court hearing a motion to that effect, Charles D. Jones, Esq., was appointed special referee to hear and determine all the issues of law and fact. The special referee took all the testimony which was offered, and made his report, by which he established the amount due John M. Cauthen, and, as his conclusions, that the two tracts of land be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the claim of John M. Cauthen, and the balance be partitioned amongst the heirs at law and next of kin of William B. Cauthen, deceased.

The two adult defendants, who answered, filed exceptions to the report of the special referee, alleging therein that plaintiff's claim of $3,540.81 should not be paid, of date September 26, 1901. It is admitted that John M. Cauthen has never been discharged as committee and administrator. These exceptions came on to be heard by his honor, Judge Ernest Gary, who filed the following decree on 7th December, 1901:

"This cause came on to be heard before me upon the report of the referee and exceptions thereto by the defendants Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming, by their attorney, Ernest Moore. Upon hearing the exceptions and argument thereon by the said attorney of the defendants, and by the attorneys for the plaintiff, it is considered that the exceptions alleging error by the referee in overruling the plea of the statute of limitations should be sustained. It is therefore adjudged that the claim or demand of the plaintiff, John M. Cauthen, as against the shares of the defendants Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming, in the lands described in the complaint herein, is barred by the statute of limitations, and that the said defendants Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming are entitled to their several shares in the said lands, free and discharged from any claim on account of the said demand in favor of the said plaintiff.

"The exceptions by the said Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming as to the plea of the statute of limitations being sustained, and such statute operating as a bar to the claim of the plaintiff as against them and their several and respective shares in the said lands, it becomes unnecessary to consider the other exceptions by the last-named defendants to said report, and no opinion is expressed as to same. The referee having reported the several shares or interests of the said Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming in the said lands described in the complaint and sought to be partitioned herein, but having failed to inquire and report whether the said land could be partitioned and divided so as to allot the said Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming their several and respective shares in kind, it is imperative that an inquiry shall be made upon this point. It is therefore ordered that it be referred back to Charles D. Jones, Esq., referee, to inquire and report as to the practicability of so dividing the said lands as to allot the said shares in kind, all parties having leave upon the coming in of the said report, and after due notice and the hearing of any exceptions to the same, to apply to the court for such orders or decrees as may be necessary and proper.

"It is further ordered that the question as to the apportionment of the costs of this action, and as to what part of the same, if any, may be equitably chargeable against the defendants Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming, be reserved for the consideration of the court upon the coming in of the further report hereby ordered."

Charles D. Jones, Esq., made a report recommending the sale of the land. On March 28, 1902, upon petition and by order, the complaint was duly amended by making the present parties defendants to the action. These defendants all answered, and among other things pleading the statute of limitations.

The plaintiff, John M. Cauthen, having died on — day of August, upon petition Judge Aldrich granted the following order of amendment:

"This is a second motion upon notice and further affidavits to substitute the administrator of plaintiff (now deceased) as plaintiff in his stead, and also to make William B. Cauthen and Arista Cauthen parties plaintiff, as alleged, grantees and successors in interest of the said John M. Cauthen. It is conceded by defendants that the motion should be granted, but it is contended that time should be allowed defendants in which to answer and traverse the allegations as to the death and administration, and as to the transfer of interest to the said grantees. It is clear that defendants are entitled to such time for answer as is here demanded. See Cleveland v. Cohrs, 13 S. C. 397; Coleman v. Hiller, Id. 491; Lyles v. Haskell, 35 S. C. 391, 14 S. E. 829. It is therefore ordered that the complaint herein be amended by substituting William B. Cauthen as administrator of the said John M. Cauthen, deceased, in the room and stead of the said plaintiff, and also by substituting the said William B. Cauthen and Arista Cauthen, as grantees and successors in interest of the said John M. Cauthen, as plaintiffs; that the complaint be amended accordingly, with proper allegations; and that the same, with a copy of this order, be served upon the defendants or their attorneys. It is further ordered that said defendants have twenty days after such service in which to answer as aforesaid."

Under this order, the action was amended by the new plaintiffs, and answers were served raising the question as to the bar of the statute of limitations. The special referee, following the conclusions of Judge Gary, upheld the plea of the statute of limitations, interposed by the defendants. Upon exceptions, Judge Klugh passed the following decree:

"This action was originally brought by John M. Cauthen, the father of the present plaintiffs, for partition of the lands of the father, William B. Cauthen, deceased, and also for a separate cause of action upon an account for board, nursing, and other services rendered by him as committee of his father, who in the latter years of his life was adjudged to be of unsound mind. John M. Cauthen having died, the action is now maintained by his two sons, who allege that their father, before his death, transferred to them both his interest in the lands and also his claim constituting the second cause of action. The cause was heard by me upon exceptions on behalf of the plaintiffs to report of Charles D. Jones, Esq., as referee. In a decree heretofore pronounced by his honor, Judge Ernest Gary, it was considered that the second cause of action is barred by statute. The referee, following this decision, so holds, and I concur in his conclusion. The exceptions raising this question are overruled.

"The only question raised by the exceptions is as to the accountability of the plaintiffs for the rents and profits received by them or their father, the said John M. Cauthen. The referee is correct in his conclusion that the plaintiffs are accountable to their co-tenants for the rents so received. But the statute has been invoked by the defendants for their protection, and it is but just that its benefits should inure to both sides. The plaintiffs will therefore be held to account only for the rents received by them or their father within six years prior to the commencement of this action.

"It is therefore ordered that the cause be recommitted to C. D. Jones, Esq., as referee, to ascertain and report to the court with all convenient speed the amount of rents received by the plaintiffs or their father, the late John M. Cauthen, within six years before the commencement of this action down to the date of such report, including the rent for the year 1903, if any. Let the exceptions be overruled, and the report except as herein modified be confirmed."

From this decree, as well as that of Judge Ernest Gary, the plaintiffs alone appealed on the following grounds:

"(1) Because, it is respectfully submitted, Judge Gary erred in holding and adjudging by his decree of date December 7, 1901, that the claim or demand of the plaintiff, John M. Cauthen (constituting the second cause of action in the complaint), 'as against the shares of the defendants Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming in the lands described in the complaint herein, is barred by the statute of limitations, and that the said defendants Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming are entitled to their several shares in the said lands, free and discharged from any claim on account of the said demand in favor of the said plaintiff'; whereas he should have held and adjudged that the said claim of plaintiff was not barred by the statute of limitations (as against the shares of these two defendants in said lands), and that the several shares of these two defendants should be subjected to the payment of the said claim along with the shares of the other defendants.

"(2) Because, it is respectfully submitted, his honor, Judge Klugh, erred in finding and adjudging in his decree of 8th September, 1903, as follows: 'In a decree heretofore pronounced by his honor, Judge Ernest Gary, it is considered that the second cause of action is barred by the statute. The referee, following this decision, so holds, and I concur in his conclusion;' whereas he should have held, found, and adjudged that in said decree Judge Gary considered and adjudged said cause of action barred by the statute only as against the shares of the two defendants Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming.

"(3) Because his honor, Judge Klugh, erred in said decree, in concurring with Judge Gary in his holding and adjudging that the said claim of plaintiff, Jno. M. Cauthen (constituting the second cause of action in the complaint), as against the shares of defendants Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming, is barred by the statute, and that these two defendants are entitled to their several shares in the lands in question, free and discharged from the claim on account of the said demand in favor of the said plaintiff; whereas he should have adjudged that said claim was not barred by statute (as against the shares of the two defendants in said lands), and that the several shares of these two defendants should be subjected to the payment of the said claim along with the shares of the other defendants.

"(4) Because his honor, Judge Klugh, in his said decree, erred in holding and adjudging that the claim or demand of the plaintiffs (the successors in interest of the original plaintiff, Jno. M. Cauthen), constituting the second cause of action in the complaint, as against the shares of the defendants, W. W. Cauthen, Robt. Cauthen, Gordon Cauthen, Mack Cauthen, Luther Cauthen, Mary Stough, Minor Mackey, Margaret Rhodes, J. Q. Mustin, John Mackey, Millie King, Hiram King, Frank King, Samuel King, Foster King, Justice King, William King, John King, Missouri King, Missouri Gill, Rebecca Owens, and Zilpha Buck, in the lands in question, is barred by the statute of limitations, and that these last-named defendants are entitled to their several shares in said lands, free and discharged from any claim on account of the said demand in favor of plaintiffs; whereas it is submitted that he should have held and adjudged that the said claims of plaintiffs was not barred by the statute (as against the shares of these last-mentioned defendants in said lands), and that the several shares of these defendants should be subjected to the payment of said claims along with the shares of the other defendants.

"(5) Because it is respectfully submitted, his honor, Judge Klugh, in his said decree, erred in holding and adjudging the claim or demand of the plaintiffs constituting the second cause of action in the complaint (as against the shares of all the defendants in the lands in question) is barred by the statute of limitations; whereas it is submitted that he should have held and adjudged that said claim of plaintiffs was not barred by statute (as against the shares of those defendants who had not set up the plea of said statute), and that the several shares of those defendants should be subjected to the payment of the said claims of plaintiffs along with the shares of the other defendants.

"(6) Because his honor, Judge Klugh, in his said decree, erred in holding and adjudging 'that the plaintiffs are accountable to their co-tenants for the rents' received by 'them or their father, the said John Cauthen, within six years prior to the commencement of the action'; whereas he should have held and adjudged that said rents should be credited on the said claim of plaintiffs against the said estate.

"(7) Because his honor, Judge Klugh, in his said decree, erred in holding and adjudging that plaintiffs should account to all of their co-tenants for their respective shares of said rents and profits; whereas he should have adjudged that plaintiffs should not be required to so account to those defendants who had answered, admitting the allegations of the complaint, and joined in its prayer for relief.

"(8) Because his honor, Judge Klugh, erred in recommitting the cause to Referee Jones to ascertain and report to the court, with all convenient speed, the amount of rents so received by the plaintiffs or their father, the late John M. Cauthen, within six years before the commencement of this action down to the date of such report, 'including the rent for the year 1903, if any'; whereas he should have reversed the findings of the said referee as to the statute of limitations and plaintiff's accountability for rents."

Before we proceed to the consideration of the eighth ground of plaintiffs, we will pass upon the motion of the defendants (respondents) to dismiss the appeal from the decree of Judge Ernest Gary. We are satisfied that the decree of Judge Gary was an intermediate decree upon the merits, and, being of that character, is appealable. See section 11, note, div. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Hyatt v. McBurney, 17 S. C. 150; McCrary v. Jones, 36 S. C. 136, 15 S. E. 430; Capell v. Moses, 36 S. C. 559, 15 S. E. 711.

To so much of the motion to dismiss the appeal for such of defendants who are absent from the state, and who have no attorney here upon whom appellants could serve a notice of appeal, we do not feel called upon to take action. All we can say is that the shares of such respondents must be paid or retained in court for such future action as may be necessary. The motion to dismiss the appeal is refused.

We will next consider the appellants' grounds of appeal.

1. We think Judge Ernest Gary made his mistake in holding that the statute of limitations barred the plaintiff as against Elizabeth Fleming and Emma Cauthen, by overlooking the fact that John M. Cauthen had never been discharged from the duties of his two offices as committee and administrator of W. B. Cauthen, deceased. Besides all this, we think these two defendants were estopped by their conduct in requiring the plaintiff, John M. Cauthen, to hold onto the two said offices when he was about to file his suit in the year 1889, which was before the statute was a bar. This exception is sustained.

2. We think his honor, Judge Klugh, made the same mistake that was made by Judge Ernest Gary, as just pointed out. Besides, Judge Klugh erred when he failed to construe Judge Gary's order, dated 7th December, 1901, as only applying to the defendants Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming. It was so expressly ruled by Judge Gary in his decree. This ground of appeal is sustained.

3. This ground of appeal, of necessity, must be sustained by reason of our previous holdings.

4. Of course, if the statute of limitations could not be sustained as a defense for Emma Cauthen and Elizabeth Fleming, it cannot, when made upon precisely the same grounds, be sustained for the defendants enumerated in this ground of appeal. It is sustained.

5. This ground of appeal is sustained for the reasons already given. Section 121 of the Code of Procedure of this state shows this also.

6. Inasmuch as we have held that the claims of plaintiff for over $3,500 was a valid claim, and inasmuch as said John M. Cauthen should pay seven-tenths of the rents and profits of the land known as "Cedar Creek Lands" to the defendants, we hold that seven-tenths, with his own three-tenths, should be credited upon said claim. This ground of appeal is sustained.

7. When a defendant admits the allegations of a complaint and its prayer, he is only entitled to have such relief as the complaint suggests. This ground of appeal is sustained.

8. Of course, this ground of appeal must be sustained. This follows from what has already been held.

It is the judgment of this court, that the decretal order of Judge Ernest Gary, dated the 7th December, 1901, and also the decretal order of Judge Klugh, dated the 8th day of September, 1903, be, and the same are, reversed; and it is further adjudged that the action be remanded to the circuit court to formulate its decree, carrying out the report of special referee, Charles D. Jones, Esq., dated the 26th September, 1901, with such modifications as to names of parties as may be necessary.

(70 S. C. 148)

PROVIDENCE MACH. CO. v. BROWNING.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 12, 1904.)

GUARANTY—RELEASE—EXTENSION OF TIME OF PAYMENT—PARTNERSHIP—EVIDENCE—DEPOSITIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The guarantor of a debt, who agreed to indorse notes therefor on performance by the creditor of certain acts, is not released by failure of the debtor to execute the notes within a reasonable time after performance by the creditor.

2. A guarantor of the payment of a debt for which notes were to be given and indorsed by the guarantor was not relieved of liability by the fact that the time of payment was extended because the notes were not given by the debtor within a reasonable time, unless the parties intended to postpone the maturity of the original debt to the time named in the notes.

3. A statement of an account by a bookkeeper who has authority to make and alter contracts is binding on his principal.

4. Declarations of a partner are inadmissible for the purpose of establishing the fact that another is a member of the partnership.

5. Where testimony is taken under Code, § 2878, either party to the action may call for its production.

6. Testimony of a party taken de bene esse and used at a former trial may be introduced by the adverse party at a second trial.

7. Failure to instruct on a particular view of the law is not error, when it is not requested.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County.

Action by Providence Machine Company against M. E. Browning. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

N. B. Dial and F. P. McGowan, for appellant. Ferguson & Featherstone and H. J. Haynsworth, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action against James S. Blalock, L. W. C. Blalock, and Mrs. E. M. Browning, individually and as partners, and against the corporation known as the Goldville Manufacturing Company, of Goldville, S. C., to recover the price of certain machinery alleged to have been sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendants. After the commencement of the action all the defendants except Mrs. M. E. Browning went into bankruptcy, and no judgment was claimed against them. Mrs. Browning answered the complaint, denying that she was a partner, and setting up the defenses that she was released from her liability as guarantor by reason of the fact that the time for payment was extended by the plaintiff without her consent, and that the indebtedness was satisfied by notes given on the 1st day of May, 1901. On the 30th day of July, 1900, the plaintiff proposed to the Goldville Cotton Mill to furnish it certain machinery, to be delivered about the 15th of December, 1900, for $9,104.52, upon the following terms: "One-half cash, one-fourth in six months, one-fourth in twelve months. Payments to be made in current exchange. Deferred payments secured by bankable notes bearing interest at six per cent. per annum. The builders will furnish men to erect machinery, you paying $4.00 per day for erection while at mill, and furnish common labor for unboxing, cleaning and assisting in erecting the same." This proposition was accepted.

On the 7th September, the following instrument of writing was executed:

"Whereas, the Goldville Manufacturing Company, Goldville, S. C., have purchased machinery from the Providence Machine Company, Providence, R. I., amounting to nine thousand one hundred and four dollars and fifty-two cents ($9,104.52), payable one-half cash, one-fourth in six months; one-fourth in twelve months; deferred payments to be secured by bankable notes, bearing interest at six per cent. per annum: We hereby agree to indorse the said notes, and should the Goldville Manufacturing Company fail to pay for the said machinery in terms of contract made between themselves and the Providence Machine Company, dated July 30th, 1900, or shall fail to pay any notes when due which are given in payment, we, the undersigned, do hereby bind and obligate ourselves jointly and severally each with the other and with the Providence Machine Company to make good and pay to the Providence Machine Company the amounts which may be due them in accordance with contract above mentioned. Goldville Manufacturing Co., per J. S. Blalock. J. S. Blalock. L. W. C. Blalock. M. Browning. Goldville, S. C., September 7th, 1900."

On the 1st day of May, the notes were made.

The case described in the complaint is as follows:

"\$2,317.10. Goldville, S. C., May 1st, 1901. Six months after date, we promise to pay to the order of Providence Machine Company, two thousand three hundred and seventeen and $\frac{10}{100}$ dollars, at Providence, Rhode Island, with interest thereon, and at six per cent. per annum, value received. Goldville Manufacturing Co., J. S. Blalock. President. L. W. C. Blalock, Secy. and Treas." Signed on back "J. S. Blalock" and "L. W. C. Blalock."

The letter acknowledging the receipt of the notes is as follows:

"Providence, R. I., May 6th, 1901. Goldville Manufacturing Co., Goldville, S. C.

Gentlemen: Two notes duly to hand. Enclosed find statement in settlement. The item of $81.94 is for interest on $4,552.26, on one-half of account from date due, January 12th to May 1st, date of notes (would refer you to your letter of April 22). Yours truly, W. C. Pierce, Treas."

The following is a copy of the statement enclosed in the letter:

"Providence, R. I., May 1st, 1901.
Goldville Manufacturing Co. to Providence Machine Co., Dr.
1900. For account rendered.
Dec. 12. For merchandise per bill rendered.. $9,104 53
1901. Cr.
Jan. 31. By cash..... $4,552 26
108 days interest, from January 12th to May 1st..... 81 94
$4,634 20
Cr.
May 6. By note, May 1, 6 mos..... $2,317 10
By note, May 1, 12 mos..... 2,317 10
$4,634 20

"Settled as above, May 6th, 1901.

"Providence Machine Company,

"By F. Pierce."

The machinery was shipped on the 10th and 12th of December, 1900, to the Goldville Manufacturing Company, which was incorporated on the 23d of October, 1900. Mrs. Browning became a stockholder, if not also a director, of this corporation. The cash payment was made, but notes for the deferred payments were not signed by Mrs. Browning, nor indorsed by her. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed upon numerous exceptions.

We will first consider the assignments of error on the part of his honor the presiding judge in charging the jury that, if the notes were not given within a reasonable time after the delivery of the machinery, the defendant was released from her liability as a guarantor. After the circuit judge had submitted the case to the jury, they came into the courtroom for further instructions, and, upon being asked by the presiding judge whether their difficulty arose from a difference of opinion as to the law or as to the facts, the foreman replied, "It seems to be a diversity of opinion as to when this note should have been given." The presiding judge thus concluded his second charge to the jury, which states succinctly his construction of the contract: "The notes should have been given when the machinery was delivered, or within a reasonable time thereafter. When it was delivered is a matter of fact for you. What is a reasonable time is a matter of fact for you to find out; and if you were to find that the notes were not given within a reasonable time afterwards, then under the law that would be a change of the contract, as I construe the paper; and a change of the contract, if ever she guarantied the contract, would release her, so far as the guaranty is concerned. I am asked to charge you, if there was a change, and she consented or acquiesced in it, what would be the effect. Well, if this lady, if there was a change, and she consented or acquiesced in it with full knowledge that it would not release her; but if there was a change without her knowledge, without her consent and acquiescence, then she would not be." The assignments of error to this charge are as follows: "The errors being: (1) Laying down too narrow a limit for the giving of the notes. (2) In not declaring the law of reasonable time, but leaving it to the jury. (3) In not charging that three or four months, under the circumstances, was not an unreasonable time. (4) In violation of section 28, art. 5, of the state Constitution, by charging the jury in respect to matters of fact, in saying that, if the notes were not given at the delivery of the machinery, or not within a reasonable time thereafter, the contract was changed and the guarantors released. (5) The change, if any, was immaterial, a mere delay, nonaction on the part of the guarantors as well as principal debtor; and the actual delay of four and one-half months was not, as a matter of law, an unreasonable time under the circumstances. (6) Because the defendant, as guarantor, is estopped to plead delay in the execution of the notes, as she was at fault in not signing notes, and in not making request upon the creditor to hasten up the transaction, and was a director and stockholder at the time of the execution of the notes, and was represented by her agent, L. W. C. Blalock, in her connection with the mill. (7) Because the machinery had to be erected before the full performance of the contract. (8) The guaranty enlarges upon the times of sale, and stipulates for two classes of notes: First, indorsed bankable notes, as security for the credit portion of the purchase money; second, any kind or form of notes given in payment not security when due, not necessarily at six or twelve months from delivery of the machinery."

On the former appeal in this case (68 S. C. 1, 46 S. E. 550) this court said: "The contract in question is not a guaranty of collectibility but a guaranty of payment, provided the Goldville Manufacturing Company failed to do so. It was not a conditional guaranty, but an absolute guaranty." The circuit judge, under the pleadings, properly charged that, if the notes were executed within a reasonable time after the machinery was delivered, the defendant was not discharged from her liability under the guaranty. But it was error when he charged that, if the notes were not executed within a reasonable time after the delivery of the machinery, that the defendant was thereby released from liability. The only duty incumbent on the plaintiff under the terms of the agreement was to deliver the machinery and furnish men to erect it, which duty was fulfilled. It was the duty of the Goldville Manufacturing Company to deliver the notes in conformity with the requirements of the contract, and its failure to perform this duty cannot be attributed to the plaintiff as an act of wrong, but is chargeable to the guarantors, who had obligated themselves to make payment in case the principal failed to perform its part of the agreement.

Furthermore, the charge was erroneous in that the circuit judge expressly charged, or necessarily assumed as a fact, which was set up as a defense, that the notes materially changed the terms of the contract by extending the time of payment, or that the notes were accepted in satisfaction of the indebtedness, which fact was also relied upon as a defense in the answer. Mere indulgence extended the principal by the creditor will not discharge the guarantor. Shubrick v. Russell, 1 De S. Eq. 315; Witte v. Wolfe, 16 S. C. 274. In order that a new or collateral agreement shall have the effect of discharging the guarantor from liability by reason of the fact that it fixes the day of payment beyond that mentioned in the original contract, it is necessary that it should be based upon valuable consideration and be legally binding upon the parties entering into it. Parnell v. Price, 8 Rich. Law, 121; Witte v. Wolfe, 16 S. C. 274; Gardner v. Gardner, 23 S. C. 588; 27 Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 500. A collateral agreement between the principal and the creditor by which the creditor receives additional security for the debt will not suspend or postpone his right of action on the original agreement, so as to discharge the guarantor, unless it was the intention of the parties to the collateral agreement that the right of action on the original contract should be suspended or postponed until the time of maturity named in the collateral agreement. United States v. Hodge, 6 How. 279, 12 L. Ed. 437, cited in Gardner v. Gardner, 23 S. C. 588. The effect of taking a note or obligation is thus stated in 27 Enc. of Law, 491: "Much controversy has arisen as to the effect to be attached to the mere acceptance by the creditor of a negotiable note or other obligation. Several difficulties arise. There may be doubt as to whether the note is accepted in satisfaction of the old obligation, or as collateral security merely, or in conditional payment. Again, there may be a question whether the acceptance of the security operates as an agreement on the part of the creditor to extend time. The liability of the surety on the principal debt can, of course, be enforced only where the obligation is taken solely as collateral or additional security. If it be taken in satisfaction, or in conditional satisfaction, the surety is discharged. The understanding of the parties at the time of the transaction will, of course, control, but in many cases it is necessary to resort to the legal presumptions that arise. Where the creditor takes new negotiable paper from the debtor, the surety is prima facie discharged. This is true whether the question arises in those states where negotiable paper operates as prima facie satisfaction or in those states where it operates as conditional payment only. In the one case the debt is prima facie paid; in the other there is a prima facie extension of time. If, instead of being negotiable, the security taken consists in bonds, mortgages, or other choses in action, the presumption that it was taken in satisfaction or in conditional payment does not arise, and it is prima facie treated as collateral only. The fact that such collateral matures in the future is not of itself sufficient to raise the presumption of an extension of time such as to release the surety." In the application of these principles the jury must determine whether there was such a change in the contract as to release the defendant. Merely construing the language of the warranty, it is manifest that the parties did not contemplate that the giving of the notes in "payment" of the indebtedness should be "in settlement" of the liability resting upon the obligors under the terms of the warranty. Therefore if the words "in settlement," in the letter and statement, were used in the sense of the word "payment," as intended by the parties in the guaranty, then they do not show that the plaintiff intended to release the defendant from her obligation as a guarantor. Whether the words were so used presents a question of fact for the jury. Glover v. Gasque, 67 S. C. 18, 45 S. E. 113; Thompson v. Protective Union, 66 S. C. 459, 45 S. E. 19. It will thus be seen that the liability of the defendant was dependent upon the intention with which the notes were executed, and not upon the question whether they were made within a reasonable time after the delivery of the machinery. The charge of his honor the presiding judge was therefore erroneous.

The next question for consideration is whether his honor erred "in allowing the defendant's attorney, against the plaintiff's objection, to introduce in evidence a statement of F. Pierce, the bookkeeper of the plaintiff, purporting to show an alleged settlement of the account by notes of Goldville Manufacturing Company; the error being that it does not come within the scope of the authority of a bookkeeper to make contracts for the company." The statement, as we have said, was inclosed in the letter hereinbefore mentioned, which was written in reply to one of the Goldville Manufacturing Company. The statement was adopted by W. C. Pierce, who had the authority to make or alter contracts entered into with the company, and the ruling was correct.

The first exception is as follows: "(1) His honor the presiding judge erred, it is respectfully submitted, in excluding the testimony offered by the plaintiff at the trial in the following particulars: (1) In the deposition de bene esse of William C. Pierce the statement of L. W. C. Blalock that the Goldville Manufacturing Company was a partnership composed of Jas. S. and L. W. C. Blalock and Mrs. M. E. Browning. (2) The testimony of the defendant Mrs. M. E. Browning as a deposition de bene esse, taken upon her own motion before O. K. Mauldin, Esq., notary public, and used in evidence in the former trial of the case. (3) The questions propounded by plaintiff's attorney to the witness L. W. C. Blalock as to what was the object of the promoters of the Goldville Manufacturing Company in having it incorporated, what was the cost of building and equipping the mill, and the amount of the debts owing by the Goldville Manufacturing Company and its promoters when it was chartered on October 23, 1900. (4) The record or judgment roll of the court of common pleas for Laurens county, in said state, in the case of the C. N. & L. Railroad Co. v. the Goldville Manufacturing Co., of Goldville, S. C., the object of the testimony being to show the insolvency of the Goldville Manufacturing Company on January 6, 1901, and the extent of its indebtedness. (5) Duplicate schedules of assets and liabilities of the Goldville Manufacturing Company, of Goldville, S. C., of Jas. S. and L. W. C. Blalock, being records in bankruptcy of the District Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina. (6) The question propounded by the plaintiff's attorney to the witness L. W. C. Blalock, to refresh his memory, if he had not stated in a letter to Sexton Robbins Company, agent of plaintiff, as to who composed the firm of the Goldville Manufacturing Company."

The first assignment of error cannot be sustained, for the reason that the mere declarations of a person are not admissible in evidence for the purpose of establishing the fact that another is a member of a partnership. Bank v. Anderson, 28 S. C. 144, 5 S. E. 343.

Neither can the second assignment of error be sustained. The testimony seems to have been taken under section 2878 of the Code of Laws, and, if so, either of the parties to the action had the right to call for its production. Pulaski v. Ward, 2 Rich. Law, 119; Petrie v. R. R., 27 S. C. 63, 2 S. E. 837. The fact that the witness examined was present at the trial did not deprive them of such right. McLaurin v. Wilson, 16 S. C. 402. After the presiding judge ruled that the testimony was inadmissible, the plaintiff's attorneys offered it as an admission against the interests of Mrs. Browning, a party to the suit. The defendant's attorneys consented to its admission for that purpose, and it was introduced. The plaintiff thus had the benefit of the testimony, and, conceding that there was error, it was not prejudicial.

The third assignment of error does not state in what particulars the ruling was erroneous.

It may be that the testimony mentioned in the fourth and fifth assignments of error was admissible under the ruling in Fales v.

Browning, 68 S. C. 13, 46 S. E. 545. But, as it is not set out in the record, the court cannot judge of its materiality.

The sixth assignment of error is not well taken. The testimony which the plaintiff's attorney sought to educe from the witness was irrelevant, unless the object was to show by the declarations of the witness that Mrs. Browning was a member of the partnership. We have hereinbefore shown that such testimony was inadmissible.

The tenth exception is as follows: "Because his honor erred in charging defendant's second request, as follows: 'Persons may associate themselves together for the purpose of forming a corporation without being partners and without rendering themselves liable as partners;' and, second, 'When a corporation is formed, and one takes stock therein, he does not incur any liability as partner'—the error being that said propositions were inapplicable to the case, and misleading, as the testimony shows that the promoters contracted debts as partners in building the mill and purchasing the machinery before the corporation was formed." It is not contended that the propositions of law embodied in the requests to charge were not sound, but that they were inapplicable and misleading in this case. The reason assigned by the appellant to show why they were inapplicable and misleading is that the testimony shows that the promoters contracted debts as partners. This ground rests upon the assumption of a fact that was in dispute, and hotly contested. This exception must therefore be overruled.

The eleventh exception is as follows: "Because his honor erred in charging defendant's third request, as follows: 'A person cannot be made a partner against his will; so that if one does not consent to become a partner, and does not permit his or her name to be used as a partner, there can be no ground of liability as such'—the error being to ignore the law of a silent or dormant partner, because he may be held liable as a partner upon acts merely, such as the contribution of two or more persons of property, labor or skill in some lawful purpose for their common benefit, although they may deny or be ignorant of the relation of partnership or its results." Again, it is not contended that the proposition in the request was unsound, but that his honor should have charged the law as to silent or dormant partners. If the appellant desired the circuit judge to charge the law as to dormant partners, requests should have been presented to that effect. The exception cannot be sustained.

The views hereinbefore expressed practically dispose of all the questions in the case.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded to that court for a new trial.

(137 N. C. 374)

TROTTER v. ANGEL et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina, Dec. 17, 1904.)

BONDS — LIABILITY — DISCHARGE — EVIDENCE — HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Where, in an action to recover on a bond given for the price of a livery business, one of the defendants testified that he had never had any talk with the obligee about his release from the bond until after he had sold his interest in the business to his partner, it was not error to refuse to permit defendant to testify further that he sold out his interest to his partner because he was to be released from liability on the bond, and that such release was part of the consideration.

2. Where, in an action on a bond given for the price of a livery business, the court, at the request of one of the defendants, eliminated from the case the question of consideration inducing such defendant to sell his interest in the business to his partner, error, if any, in refusing to permit such defendant to testify that he sold his interest to his partner because he was to be released from liability on the bond, which was a part of the consideration, was harmless.

Appeal from Superior Court, Macon County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by H. G. Trotter against T. W. Angel and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Robertson & Benbow, Jones & Johnston, and J. Frank Ray, for appellants. Horn & Mann, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. The defendants Angel and Shepherd bought out the livery business of the plaintiff's assignor, and executed, together with the other defendant, Sheffield, as surety, the sealed obligation, mentioned in the complaint, for the payment of the purchase price, $825. It is admitted that the contract was executed by the parties, that $572.38 had been paid on the contract; and that the plaintiff was the owner thereof. The defendants Shepherd and Sheffield seek to avoid their liability for the balance which remains due on the contract by reason of an alleged release and discharge on the part of the obligee. The position of the defendant Shepherd is that the obligee agreed with him and the defendant Angel that if he, Shepherd, would sell out his interest in the livery business to Angel, the obligee would release him from his contract and agreement, and look to Angel only for its fulfillment; that he did transfer and assign his interest in the business to Angel under that agreement; and that, therefore, he is discharged from his original obligation. The position of the defendant Sheffield is that he was only a surety on the original obligation; that Shepherd was discharged and released by the obligee from liability on the original contract; and that therefore in law he was discharged. The issues tendered by the defendants were: (1) Is defendant Angel indebted to plaintiff, and, if so, in what sum?

(2) Is defendant Shepherd indebted to plaintiff, and, if so, in what sum? (3) Is defendant Sheffield indebted to plaintiff, and, if so, in what sum?

The evidence was conflicting and contradictory. It was offered to be shown by the defendant Shepherd, a witness for the defendants, that he sold out his interest in the livery business to Angel because he was to be released from the payment of liability on the bond, and that that was part of the consideration. We see no error in the refusal of his honor to receive that evidence. The witness had just said that he had never had any talk with the obligee about his release from the bond until after he had made the trade with Angel. The question, therefore, did not relate to a release from the bond by the obligee, but to what was said and done between Shepherd and Angel. If that had been the understanding between Shepherd and Angel, it could not have affected the obligee for the reason that we have given; that is, that Shepherd had sold out and traded with Angel before he had had any conversation on the subject with the obligee. However, this witness was allowed to state that he would not have sold to Angel had he not thought he would be released, and that he received nothing from Angel, but simply turned over his interest in the contract to him.

If there had been error in the exclusion of the evidence it would have been harmless, because his honor, at the request of the defendant Shepherd, eliminated the question of consideration from the case and from the jury's consideration by giving the jury the following instruction: "(1) That if they shall find from the evidence that J. S. Trotter, one of the parties in the firm of H. G. Trotter & Son, said to T. W. Angel that if he, Angel, would buy out the interest of T. B. Shepherd in the livery business of Angel & Shepherd, that in that event he, J. S. Trotter, or the firm of H. G. Trotter & Son, would release Shepherd from liability on the contract sued on, and if the jury shall further find that Angel communicated this offer to Shepherd, and in consequence thereof Shepherd did sell out his interest in the livery business to Angel, then the court charges you to answer the second issue 'No' and the third 'No.' (2) That if the jury shall find from the evidence that J. S. Trotter, of the firm of H. G. Trotter & Son, told the defendant Shepherd that he or the firm would release Shepherd from further liability on the contract sued on if he, Shepherd, would sell his interest in the livery business to Angel, and in consequence thereof Shepherd did sell his interest to Angel, then the court charges you to answer the second and third issues 'No.'"

There was no error in the charge of the court raised by section 3, for it is perfectly apparent that the word "chaffering," in the connection in which the judge used it, made the instruction consonant and of like import with the instructions asked by the defendant Shepherd and quoted above.

There being no error in the exclusion of the evidence referred to, and no error in the charge on the subject of the alleged release and discharge of the defendant Shepherd, it follows that there was no error in the case of which the surety Sheffield could complain; for his honor, at the latter's request, told the jury (1) that if they "shall find from the evidence that the defendant Sheffield was simply surety for the defendants Angel and Shepherd on the contract sued on, and this fact was known to the plaintiff or his partner, J. S. Trotter, and shall further find from the evidence that the defendant Shepherd was released from further liability on the contract, as heretofore explained, then you shall answer the third issue 'No.' (2) If the jury shall find from the evidence that Shepherd was released by J. S. Trotter from further liability on the contract sued on, as heretofore explained, then you will answer the third issue 'No.'"

His honor submitted the case fully and fairly to the jury, with full and proper instructions on every point. The defendants were denied no proper evidence, and in fact probably got in some they were not strictly entitled to, and the jury simply accepted the evidence introduced by the plaintiff as true. No error.

(137 N. C. 251)

TURNER v. McKEE

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

COUNTIES — COMMISSIONERS — ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS—OFFICIAL NEGLIGENCE—ACTIONS—PLEADING.

1. Code, § 840, rule 5, provides that pleadings in justices' courts need not be in any particular form, but must be such as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is meant. Section 754 provides that no account shall be audited by a board of county commissioners unless it is itemized and verified. Section 711 provides that any commissioner who shall neglect to perform any duty required of him by law shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall also be liable to a penalty of $200 for each offense, to be paid to any person who shall sue for the same. Held, that a complaint before a justice alleging the nonpayment of $200 due by reason of the penalty accrued under section 711 of the Code for his [defendant's] neglect of duty as a member of the board of commissioners of O. county, for his failure to require an itemized account, fully verified by the oath of L., before he audited and approved such account, as required by section 754 of the Code, stated a cause of action, although it did not particularize the account in question, and, if defendant desired fuller information, he should have asked for a bill of particulars in accordance with section 259, and should not have demurred.

2. Code, § 754, providing that no account shall be audited by a board of county commissioners unless it is itemized and verified, is mandatory, and does not confer any discretion upon the commissioners.

Walker and Connor, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Bryan, Judge.

Qui tam action by C. D. Turner against B. H. McKee. From a judgment of the superior court on appeal from a justice's judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

C. D. Turner, in pro. per. Graham & Graham and S. M. Gattis, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. Code, § 754, provides that "no account shall be audited by the board [of county commissioners] for any services or disbursements, unless it is first made out in items and has attached to, and filed with, it the affidavit of the claimant that the services therein charged have been in fact made and rendered and that no part thereof has been paid or satisfied." This is a very explicit and very wise provision of the law-making power. It is of the highest importance to the public that this requirement should always and everywhere be strictly observed. The lawmakers were so fully persuaded of the necessity of county commissioners observing this and similar provisions that it is further provided by Code, § 711, that "any commissioner who shall neglect to perform any duty required of him by law as a member of the board shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall also be liable to a penalty of $200 for each offense, to be paid to any person who shall sue for the same." Not satisfied with placing the county commissioners under the supervision of the grand jury and solicitor, the Legislature added a qui tam action; thus making it to the special as well as general interest of any citizen to see that the duties imposed upon the commissioners are faithfully executed. The plaintiff accordingly brought this action against one of the county commissioners before a justice of the peace "for the penalty of $200 accrued under section 711 of the Code of North Carolina for neglect of duty required of him as a member of the board of commissioners, for failing to require an itemized and verified account to be filed by John Laws before auditing the said account, as required by section 754 of the Code." This was stated in the summons. In his return to the appeal, the justice stated: "The plaintiff complained of the nonpayment of $200 due by reason of the penalty accrued under section 711 of the Code for his neglect of duty as a member of the board of commissioners of Orange county, for his failure to require an itemized account, fully verified by the oath of John Laws, before he audited and approved said account, as required by section 754 of the Code. The defendant demurs to the complaint in this action, for that the plaintiff in said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that it fails to show what accounts, if any, the defendant is liable to the plaintiff for the penalty sued for." And the justice of the peace added that he dismissed the action at the plaintiff's cost.

¶ 2. See Counties, vol. 13, Cent. Dig. §§ 313, 314.

On appeal the judge "sustained the demurrer, and (there being no amendment asked) affirmed the judgment of the justice of the peace dismissing the action." This was error. Code, § 840, rule 5, provides, as to proceedings in the justice's court: "Pleadings are not required to be in any particular form but must be such as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is meant." The allegation of "neglect of duty in failing to require" an itemized and verified account is a charge of negligently failing to do so. The statutes (sections 754 and 711) are also referred to in stating the cause of action. The defendant certainly must have known what was meant here, and that he was sued for "a penalty of $200, under section 711 of the Code, for neglect of duty as a member of the board of commissioners of Orange county, for his failure to require an itemized account, fully verified by the oath of John Laws, before he audited and approved said account, as required by section 754 of the Code." The magistrate understood exactly what the action was for, and thus clearly states it in his return. It is impossible that the defendant and his counsel did not understand it. The defendant, a public officer, thus clearly charged with a failure to discharge a public duty, should have answered, either admitting or denying the charge, or setting up his defense. In Staton v. Wimberly, 122 N. C. 107, 29 S. E. 63, the court said that the statute imposing the duty, whose violation was there alleged, "allows some discretion in the board of commissioners by the express terms of the statute," and that the evidence failed to show any abuse of that discretion. Code, § 754, does not confer any discretion, but is mandatory, in requiring the account to be itemized and sworn. Whatever defense the defendant has must appear by the answer and on the trial. There has been no such failure to state a cause of action as to justify a dismissal of the action.

It does not appear that there was more than one account audited in favor of John Laws, and, if there had been, the plaintiff could have made out his allegation upon the trial by showing any one account or all of the accounts of John Laws which had been audited without being itemized and verified as required by the statute, other than those whose illegal auditing was protected by the statute of limitations, if pleaded. If the defendant desired fuller information before pleading, he should not have demurred, but should have asked for a bill of particulars. "The court may in all cases order a bill of particulars" (Code, § 259), and even in criminal cases (State v. Brady, 107 N. C. 822, 12 S. E. 325). See cases cited in Clark's Code (8d Ed.) p. 274. But here the defendant was even better informed than the plaintiff. It was plain to the defendant "what was meant" by the proceeding, and he needed no further information to set up his defense.

An indictment of a public officer for neglect of duty, not more explicit than here, was sustained in State v. Dickson, 124 N. C. 871, 32 S. E. 961. In State v. Hatch, 116 N. C. 1003, 21 S. E. 430, it was held that "carelessness amounting to a willful want of care in the discharge of official duties" justified a verdict of guilty, even under section 1090 of the Code, and that honesty and good intent are not a full defense, because there may be neglect of duty without any corruption in office. This has been cited with approval in Stanley v. Baird, 118 N. C. 83, 24 S. E. 12; Sanders v. Earp, 118 N. C. 279, 24 S. E. 8; State v. Ostwalt, 118 N. C. 1213, 24 S. E. 660, 32 L. R. A. 396; State v. Dayton, 119 N. C. 882, 26 S. E. 159; Staton v. Wimberly, 122 N. C. 110, 29 S. E. 63; State v. Dickson, 124 N. C. 874, 32 S. E. 961. We are not anticipating any defense the defendant may set up, but merely hold that a sufficient cause of action has been stated, under Code, §§ 754, 711, when the facts herein alleged are admitted by a demurrer, especially when the pleading was in a court of a justice of the peace, and no repleading was ordered on the hearing of the appeal in the superior court.

The judgment dismissing the action must be reversed. The demurrer should be overruled, with leave to the defendant to answer over. Code, § 272.

Reversed.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring). I am much impressed with the able and elaborate dissenting opinion of Justice CONNOR, and heartily agree to nearly all he says, and yet I cannot come to his conclusion. It may be that I am unduly influenced by my disinclination to permit a public officer to meet a charge of official misconduct with a mere demurrer. I think he should answer, and, if he needs any further information for his defense, let him ask for a bill of particulars, or move the court to "require the pleading to be made definite and certain by amendment," as provided in section 261 of the Code. I cannot think that the defendant is so entirely ignorant in fact as he may be in contemplation of law. I am still of the opinion that "an informer has no natural right to the penalty, but only such right as is given by the strict letter of the law," as was said in Dyer v. Ellington, 126 N. C. 941, 36 S. E. 177. I also think that the statute, being penal in its nature, although the action thereon is said to be civil, should be strictly construed in furtherance of substantial right, and that faithful public officers, honestly striving to do their duty within the letter and spirit of the law, should not be held liable for omissions purely technical in their nature and immaterial in their results. On the other hand, no matter how high their character or how honest their general intentions, they cannot be permitted to treat with indifference laws passed for the protection of the public whose servants they are. Let them render an account when called on, and if they are faithful they will receive the fullest measure of justice. I do not mean to intimate any opinion as to the facts of this case, because I know nothing of the facts. They are to be passed on by the jury, with whose functions I have neither the wish nor the right to interfere. While this is not a criminal prosecution, it seems to me that it comes within the general rule of official conduct discussed in State v. Dickson, 124 N. C. 871, 32 S. E. 961. I concur in the opinion of the court.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). My first impression of this case was that the plaintiff had alleged facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and, while he had not pleaded with technical accuracy, and perhaps had stated his grievance somewhat inartificially, yet there was just enough said to require an answer from the defendant. A more careful and critical examination of the case, and a better understanding of the facts, convince me that my first impression was not correct, and that there are defects in the complaint, which, in the present state of the case, namely, a defective complaint, and a demurrer thereto sustained, must be fatal to the plaintiff's recovery, at least in this action. The pleadings in the justice's court were oral, but the cause of action is set out in the summons, and the substance of it, which is stated in the return of the justice as required by Code, § 840, rule 2, is as follows: "The plaintiff complained of the defendant for the nonpayment of the sum of $200 due by reason of penalty accrued under section 711 of the Code of North Carolina, for his neglect of duty as a member of the board of commissioners of Orange county, for his failure to require an itemized account, fully verified by the oath of John Laws, before he audited and approved said account, as required by section 754 of the Code." The duty, for a breach of which the plaintiff claims a penalty, is thus prescribed by law: "No account shall be audited by the board for any services or disbursements, unless it is made out in items and has attached to and filed with it the affidavit of the claimant that the services therein charged have been in fact made and rendered, and that no part thereof has been paid or satisfied. Each account shall state the nature of the services, and where no specific compensation is provided by law, it shall also state the time necessarily devoted to the performance thereof. The board may disallow or require further evidence of the account, notwithstanding the verification." Code, § 754. The penalty for a violation of the duty required by that section is imposed by section 711 as follows: "Any commissioner who shall neglect to perform any duty required of him by law as a member of the board, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall also be liable to a penalty of $200 for each offence to be paid to any person who shall sue for the same." It will be observed that by section 754 it is provided that the duty of the commissioners to require an itemized account shall extend only to accounts for services rendered and disbursements made by the claimant for the benefit of the county, and the requirement that the statement shall be verified is confined only to accounts for services thus rendered. In the latter case the claimant must not only itemize his account, but must make oath "that the services therein charged have been in fact made and rendered and that no part thereof has been paid or satisfied." The use of the word "made" in that part of the section last quoted would indicate that it was intended that accounts for disbursements should also be verified, as the verb "made" would aptly apply to disbursements, whereas it does not to services. We would not, in correct speech, use the term "services made" by the claimant. This apparent inaccuracy in the form of expression cannot, as we will presently see, have the effect to enlarge the scope of the statute, or to extend its operation beyond the meaning of the words actually used. But if it could have such effect in the interpretation of a penal statute, and the section be construed to require an itemized and verified statement, both in the case of accounts for services performed and in that of disbursements made for and in behalf of the county, we still think that plaintiff's case as stated in his complaint is without the statute, as, from the statement of the legislation upon this subject which we have made, it seems clear, upon the settled principles of construction applicable to penal enactments, that no one of the duties required to be performed by the commissioners comes within this case, so as to subject the defendant to the penalty imposed by section 711 of the Code.

It is perfectly familiar learning—being one of the first principles of statutory interpretation—that penal laws must be construed strictly, and it is not permissible to enlarge their operation by implication nor by any equitable construction, but we must ascertain their meaning only by the express letter. They must be restricted to the plain import of the language used to convey the intent of the Legislature. Smithwick v. Williams, 30 N. C. 268; Coble v. Shoffner, 75 N. C. 42; State v. Midgett, 85 N. C. 538. In declaring upon a penal statute, certain rules of pleading, besides the general rules, are specially applicable to such cases. The plaintiff, in his complaint, under the general rule, must show a good title to that which he seeks to recover; and, if he fails in this respect, the defendant may demur, move in arrest of judgment, or bring a writ of error. But the special rules require him, in an action for a penalty, to set forth every fact essential to show that his case is within the letter and spirit of the law by which it is given. He must plead with particularity, so that the court may clearly see, without the necessity of making any inference, implication, or conjecture, that the unlawful act has been done, or that the duty enjoined has been omitted, by the defendant. No intendment will be made in his favor. He must succeed, if at all, upon the facts as he states them, and not upon any deduction from them, or any mere statement of a conclusion of law. Archbold Civ. Pl. 106, 109; 1 Chitty, Pl. 372; 16 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 274, 275, 276; Wright v. Wheeler, 30 N. C. 184. While the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity and all feigned issues have been abolished, and there is now but one form of action for the enforcement or protection of private rights or the redress of private wrongs, which is denominated a civil action (Const. art. 4, § 1), and while new rules have been prescribed for determining the sufficiency of a pleading (Code, § 231), one of which rules is that, in the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its legal effect, its allegations shall be liberally construed, with a view of substantial justice between the parties (Code, § 260), all this does not mean that the court shall supply necessary allegations, nor was it intended to repeal those rules of pleading so essential to producing certainty of statement, and consequently a determinate issue between the parties, for the Code provides that the complaint shall, in actions in the superior court, contain "a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting a cause of action," and in actions in justices' courts it shall state in a "plain and direct manner" the said facts; the latter being language no different in effect from that used in the case of pleadings in the higher court, but of equivalent import. However we may consider it, the law requires in every court that the pleadings shall state the facts, and all the facts, which are necessary to constitute a good cause of action, plainly and concisely. I do not see that this substantially varies the rule of the common law, or, what was sometimes called, the rule of special pleading. The two systems are in this respect essentially the same.

The plaintiff sues in what is termed a "popular action," not so called because such actions meet with popular favor or approval, but deriving its name solely from the peculiar fact that it can be brought by anybody who is willing to inform against the defendant, and who is therefore denominated a common informer or prosecutor. Blackstone defines it as an action for a statutory penalty or forfeiture, given to any such person or persons as will sue for it—an action given in England to any of the King's subjects (3 Bl. Comm. 161), and in this country to the people in general. The recovery may go to the informer, or, if the action be qui tam—that is, one in which the plaintiff sues for the state as well as for himself—it is divided as the law may direct.

Having acquainted ourselves with the nature of the action, and applying the foregoing principles to this case, let us see if the plaintiff has brought it within the statute, so as to become entitled, as a common informer, to the penalty he seeks to recover. I think he has not. Section 754 applies only to cases where the account is for services rendered, and, even if a verified statement is required as to disbursements, it refers to such as have been made by the claimant. There are many other kinds of accounts filed with the commissioners upon which claims for payment are based, and the glaring defect in the complaint is that it is not stated therein that the account alleged to have been audited without being itemized or verified was either for services or for disbursements. Mr. Laws may have had some other kind of claim against the county which is not included in the terms of the statute, but, whether he had or not, the law will not require the penalty of the defendant unless we can see clearly that he has violated its mandate. There is not even room enough in this complaint for a reasonable conjecture as to the truth of the matter. The defendant is not liable to the plaintiff unless the board has failed to require an account for services to be itemized and verified, or an account for disbursements to be itemized. This is according to the letter, and, as far as we can see, also according to the spirit and intent, of the statute. The plaintiff has failed to allege that the account was for services or disbursements, if he can claim anything in respect to the latter for the failure to verify. It follows that his complaint is defective, in that "it does not set forth specially the facts upon which the plaintiff relies to constitute the offense, and it has not that certainty on its face as will enable the court to see what has been omitted." Nash, J., in Wright v. Wheeler, supra. For anything that appears in the complaint, the defendant may have done a perfectly lawful act. In this case the facts are surely not stated with any more certainty and precision than were the facts in the case last cited, and they were held to be insufficient to warrant a recovery for the penalty claimed. It has been said in a case where a statute similar to ours was construed, and in which the plaintiff sought to recover a penalty, that, "the main office of a complaint being to apprise the defendant of the facts upon which the plaintiff relies to establish a cause of action, the Code [of New York] requires that such facts shall be stated plainly and precisely; and, inasmuch as this action is highly penal in its nature, there was special reason why in this particular instance the rules of pleading should not have been relaxed." Steuben Co. v. Wood, 24 App. Div. (N. Y.) 442, 48 N. Y. Supp. 471. This language fits our case, even applying the liberal rules of pleading under the Code.

I have not adverted to the fact that the complaint charges that the defendant, McKee, individually failed to require an itemized and verified account, whereas the statute requires that duty of the board as a corporate body or distinct entity, and not of the individual members. The latter must act together as a unit. This is certainly not good pleading. Whether, the duty being single, its omission is therefore a single offense, for which only a single penalty can be exacted, is a question I need not consider at present, though it will be one well worthy of serious consideration when we are required to decide it. There are also other important questions involved, which I need not now discuss.

The plaintiff was given an opportunity to amend his complaint, but preferred to stand upon his rights as fixed by the present state of the pleadings. The complaint being defective, I can see no error in the ruling of the court by which the demurrer was sustained.

CONNOR, J. (dissenting). Recognizing fully the liberality with which, under our Code system, pleadings are construed "in furtherance of justice" and advancement of the remedy, I cannot concur in the conclusion reached by the court in this case. I cannot think that it was ever contemplated by the authors of the code system that a party may maintain an action, not knowing, or, if knowing, refusing to inform the court of, the facts upon which his alleged grievance is based. Either the plaintiff is "fishing" for a cause of action, or he is trifling with the court in bringing the action as he does, and refusing to comply with the most reasonable, and, I think, strictly legal, demand that he state "in a plain and direct manner the facts constituting the cause of action." Rule 3, Justices' Courts (Code, § 840). The records of the commissioners, including "the books and papers of the board," are "free to the examination of all persons," Code, § 712. The plaintiff, before beginning his action, could have found, by a few moments' examination, "filed in alphabetical, or other due order, all accounts presented or acted on by the board * * * the amount allowed and the charges for which it was allowed." Id. In the light of these plain provisions of the law, certainly there can be no good reason for further relaxing the rules and elementary principles of pleading requiring the plaintiff to state "in a plain and direct manner the facts constituting his cause of action." This court has repeatedly held that it was necessary to do so, and has, ex mero motu, upon an inspection of the entire record, arrested judgment for failure to comply with the rule. In Scroter v. Harrington, 8 N. C. 192, Henderson, J., said: "That the defendant may be informed of the nature of the charge against him, the law requires that the facts constituting it should be stated with precision." I cannot perceive any substantial difference between stating facts "with precision" and in a "plain and direct manner." In conclusion it is said: "These proceedings, it is true, originated before a justice of the peace, and as to matters of form are not to be critically scrutinized, yet matters of substance ought not to, and cannot, be overlooked." In Wright v. Wheeler, 30 N. C. 184, Nash, J., said: "It is a principle of pleading that the declaration must set forth a good title to that which is sought to be recovered. If it does not, the defendant may demur, or move in arrest of judgment, or bring a writ of error. In an action upon a statute to recover a penalty, the plaintiff must set forth in his declaration every fact which is necessary to inform the court that his case is within the statute; and it is laid down by Mr. Chitty in his treatise on Pleading (volume 1, p. 405), that it is necessary in all cases that the offense or act charged to have been committed or omitted by the defendant appear to have been within the provisions of the statute, and that all the circumstances necessary to sustain the action must be alleged." (The italics in the original opinion.) Again it is said: "The declaration must have sufficient certainty on its face to enable the court to know what has been done. Facts are to be stated, not inferences or matters of law; nor will the conclusion contra formam statuti aid the omission." The court arrested the judgment ex mero motu. In Drake v. McMinn, 27 N. C. 639, Nash, J., concluding the opinion, says: "We have nothing to do with the motives of the plaintiff in instituting these proceedings. He appears before us as a public informer, seeking to enforce against the defendant a forfeiture incurred by the violation of the law. He must be prepared to show by his evidence that by law he has a right to demand and receive the money forfeited. We think that he has not done this, that there is in his declaration a defect fatal to his claim, and that his judgment must be arrested." In Hardwick v. Telegraph Co., 70 Vt. 180, 40 Atl. 169, the court said: "As the statute does not prescribe the form of action, the declaration should set forth with particularity the facts upon which the plaintiff relies to constitute the offense;" saying in regard to the complaint, "It is not within the rule of certainty to a certain intent in general," and is bad on special demurrer. In Bigelow v. Johnson, 13 Johns. 428, it is said: "It is a well-settled rule that in declaring for offenses against penal statutes (where no form is expressly given) the plaintiff is bound to set forth specially the facts on which he relies to constitute the offense." It was formally held that the declaration must refer to the statute, but, "under the more liberal rules of modern times, the tendency is to consider counting upon the statute when the action is strictly penal as a mere formal matter and unnecessary." 16 Enc. Pl. & Prac. 274. "It is necessary in all cases that the offense or act charged to have been committed or omitted by the defendant appear to have been within the provisions of the statute, and that all the circumstances necessary to sustain the action be alleged." Id. 275. To the suggestion that a different rule prevails under the Code, it may be noted that the Supreme Court of New York, construing the section of the Code of which ours is an exact copy, said: "The main office of a complaint being to apprise the defendant of the facts upon which the plaintiff relies to establish a cause of action, the Code requires that such facts shall be stated plainly and concisely; and, inasmuch as this action is highly penal in its nature, there was especial reason why in this particular instance the rules of pleading should not have been relaxed." Steuben Co. v. Wood, 24 App. Div. 442, 48 N. Y. Supp. 471. "General allegations are always insufficient, and no material fact may be left to conjecture or inference." Enc. Pl. & Pr. 276. "When jurisdiction over action to recover penalties is granted to justices of the peace or other inferior courts, the usual manner of proceeding is not thereby changed." Id.

Applying these well-established rules, so essential both to orderly procedure and to the protection of the citizen against harassing and expensive litigation, I think the complaint fatally defective. No account, either by number, date, or amount, is named. The complaint is: "For his failure to require an itemized account, fully verified by the oath of Mr. John Laws, before he audited and approved said account." The words "said account" must refer to some account theretofore named or in some manner designated, but none is named or designated. It is said, "The defendant must have known what was meant here, and that he was sued for a penalty," etc. It is further said that "the magistrate understood exactly what the action was for, and thus clearly states it in his return." As the learned Chief Justice, writing for the court, makes this statement of fact, I must assume that it is correct; but I must, with all possible deference, say that I can account for it only upon the theory that their mental vision measures up to the standard fixed by Saml. Weller respecting the kind of eyes by which he was expected to see "thro' a flight o' stairs and a deal door." I must confess that I am unable to exactly understand what the plaintiff means. Without calling "in aid" the power to read the mind of the plaintiff, I am unable to see what his grievance is. Whether it was that the defendant audited an account presented by some one else not fully verified by Mr. John Laws, or whether Mr. Laws had presented an account not itemized and fully verified, does not very clearly appear to my mind; and I am not surprised that a layman should have respectfully asked that the plaintiff, "in a plain and direct manner, inform him just how he became indebted to him," etc. This was, in my opinion, his legal right, without regard to the wisdom of the statute, or the fact that, as a county commissioner, he was under the supervision of the grand jury and the solicitor, with the additional safeguard of being subject to a qui tam action by the plaintiff. While, by taking upon himself the burdens and duties of a county commissioner, the defendant becomes liable to an action or indictment for acts of misfeasance and nonfeasance, I do not understand that he forfeits any of his legal rights as a citizen, or becomes liable to be prosecuted otherwise than according to the due course of the law and procedure. In demurring he simply exercises a legal right, and I cannot see why he may not do so without subjecting himself to criticism.

The suggestion that the defendant should have answered, either admitting or denying the charge, assumes the very question in controversy—that there is no charge which he was called upon to answer. He has a right to demand, before he is required to "admit or deny" anything that the complaint contain, not formal or technical language, but a "plain and direct statement of the facts." Our laws, both substantive and remedial, are the expressions of the minds and experience of a plain people, using plain and direct language to express plain thoughts. They are not intended to encourage a game of hide and seek in the courts. If one will call his neighbor into the courts, let him do so in a manner and with speech that may be understood by plain men. It is suggested that the defendants should not have demurred, but joined issue and "gone to the country." This, again, assumes the very question in issue. The issues arise upon the pleadings, and, if these raise no issue, the finding of which will enable the court to proceed to judgment, the parties and the court will at the end of the trial have performed the proverbially useless feat of coming out where they went in, or of moving around in a circle. Let us suppose the jury had found every word of the complaint true; how much nearer would the court be to "a plain and direct statement of the facts constituting the cause of action"? It is the purpose of the demurrer to prevent this result. The exact point has been decided by the Supreme Court of New York. In Cortland v. Howard, 1 App. Div. 131, 37 N. Y. Supp. 843, Parker, C. J., said: "There seems to be no provision in a justice's court for moving to make a complaint more definite and certain. If it is not sufficiently explicit to be understood—and by that is meant sufficiently explicit to fairly inform defendant upon what the cause of action is based—his remedy is by demurrer. This remedy the defendant took in this case, and we think he was entitled to it." The defendant was under no obligation to ask for a bill of particulars. This right is given the defendant for his benefit, and not to aid a defective complaint. It is very doubtful whether section 259 applies to justices' courts. Rule 11, § 840, expressly provides, "Either party may demur to the pleading of his adversary or any part thereof when it is not sufficiently explicit as to enable him to understand it, or contains no cause of action or defense, although it be taken as true." Rule 12 prescribes the duty of the justice upon hearing the demurrer. Reasonable certainty in the statement of the cause of action is required not only to enable the defendant to answer intelligently, but to protect him from being a second time vexed with litigation for the same matter. It is said that the defendant should plead and submit his cause to the jury. I am unable to see what question would be submitted to the jury. The record will show whether the account set out or specified in the complaint was audited. The court will find, as a conclusion of law, whether it is itemized and verified as required by the statute. Why should not the plaintiff be required to give the court such information as will enable it upon demurrer to render judgment? Before the adoption of the Code the action for the recovery of a penalty was in debt. "The pleader should, in this connection, by apt, connected, and substantial averments, disclose the right of action. The pleading must be definite and certain, and should studiously avoid all tendency towards looseness in presenting the facts upon which the right of recovery is based." 5 Enc. P. & P. 918. This pertains to a substantial legal right. Let us suppose that plaintiff has judgment upon his complaint, and immediately sues the defendant, complaining in exactly the same language. How could the defendant maintain a plea of res judicata? He has been in office, we may assume, for two years. Hundreds of accounts have been audited by the board. Why may not the plaintiff continue to sue indefinitely, or so long as the estate of the defendant is able to respond to the execution sued out? Any system of pleading and procedure, either civil or criminal, which permits the process of the court to be used oppressively, either to the citizen or the officer, should be amended, or, if beyond the power of amendment, abolished. This court has wisely said, "An informer has no natural right to the penalty, but only such right as is given by the strict letter of the law." Douglas, J., in Dyer v. Ellington, 128 N. C. 941, 38 S. E. 177. General warrants have not been favorites with our people. They savor of inquisition and oppression. I find no authority for relaxing the rules which, in their wisdom, the sages of the law have laid down for the protection of the citizen against vexatious litigation and oppressive prosecutions. The record shows that the plaintiff has prosecuted to this court three suits against the commissioners. I can see no reason, if permitted to proceed as in this case, he may not prosecute as many hundred, and take chances of finding among the records enough accounts not duly itemized and verified to make his venture profitable, and ruin the commissioners. Simplicity in the law is sometimes obtained at too high a price, even to the destruction of the safeguards of the citizen. I may be unduly sensitive in such cases, but I am sure that no injustice or harm, or even delay, can come to the state or its citizens by requiring informers to "state in a plain and direct manner the facts constituting their cause of action," or, in the language of Chief Justice Henderson, "with precision."

I respectfully, but firmly, dissent from the conclusion reached by the court. I think that the judgment of his honor should be affirmed.

(126 N. C. 684)

STATE v. SMITH.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 20, 1904.)

RAPE—INTENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, evidence that accused went into the field where prosecutrix was, and, after inquiring as to the whereabouts of her father and brothers, grabbed her by the left hand and started to put his right hand to her neck, that she drew her hoe and threatened to kill him, when he turned her loose, is insufficient to sustain a conviction for any crime greater than an aggravated assault.

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Bladen County; Ward, Judge.

Samuel Smith was convicted of an assault with intent to commit rape, and he appeals. Reversed.

The defendant was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state's prison for five years. The testimony of the prosecutrix was: "I know the defendant. He came into the cotton patch when I was at work last summer. I was hoeing cotton in the field alone. Can't say what time of day it was; it was in the morning. Defendant asked me where my pa was and where Asa White was. He then asked me where my two brothers were. I told him they were gone to the field where pa and Asa White were. The field was one-half mile away, in 'new ground' field. He asked me when they would come back. I said, 'In a few minutes.' He then said, 'Give me the hoe, and let me hoe out that row of cotton.' I did so, and went and got another hoe. He hoed out to the end of the row, and threw the hoe in the corner of the fence. He then grabbed me by my left hand, and started to put his right to my neck, under the chin. He did not quite touch my neck with his right hand. I drew back my hoe with my right hand, and told him if he did not go away and let me alone I would kill him with the box. He then turned me loose, and walked off 10 or 15 steps, and said, 'You are going to kill me,' and I said, 'Yes, I am if you don't go off and let me alone.' He went off then to his work in Mr. White's field. I then started to the field where pa was, and met my two brothers, and told them what had happened. When I told him to turn me loose, he did it; did not threaten me, but scared me." Asa White testified that the defendant was working for his mother, and he heard defendant say afterwards, in speaking of the difficulty, that he had been over there. Witness asked him what he went for, and he said to "get some." This is all he said. It was in evidence that defendant was not seen in the neighborhood again until he was at the preliminary trial. The sheriff found him in Robeson jail. This was the entire evidence.

The defendant asked his honor to instruct the jury that he could only be convicted for a simple assault. This was declined, and defendant excepted. From a judgment on the verdict, the defendant appealed.

The Attorney General, for the State.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). The only question presented by the exception is whether there was any evidence on the question of intent proper to be submitted to the jury. Mr. Justice Ashe, in State v. Massey, 86 N. C. 638, 41 Am. Rep. 478, says: "In order to convict defendant on the charge of an assault with intent to commit a rape, the evidence should show not only an assault; but that defendant intended to gratify his passions on the person of the woman, and that he intended to do so at all events, notwithstanding any resistance on her part." This language has been since the decision of that case the guide followed by the courts in this state. In that case the question bearing on the evidence of intent was much stronger than here. The woman saw the man following, threatening if she did not stop to kill her. The court held the evidence insufficient. In State v. Jeffreys, 117 N. C. 743, 23 S. E. 175, Massey's Case is approved, and may now be regarded as the settled law of the state. The case is easily distinguished from State v. Mitchell, 89 N. C. 521, and State v. Page, 127 N. C. 512, 37 S. E. 68. In both these cases there was evidence of actual violence. We can have no hesitation in adopting the language of a judge of such elevated character, learning, and jealous regard for the sanctity of virtue as Judge Ashe, when he says: "When the act of a person may reasonably be attributed to two or more motives, the one criminal and the other not, the humanity of our law will ascribe it to that which is not criminal."

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the facts in this case, nor have we the right to assume the existence of any facts pertinent to the decision of the case other than those certified to us by the court below.

The record states the transaction in the language of the witness. It has ever been the province and duty of the court to decide and declare the law and of the jury to decide and declare the facts. Whether there is any evidence tending to prove a fact in issue has always been regarded as a question of law for the decision of the court. But whether an inference is to be drawn from the evidence is exclusively in the province of the jury. We would be recreant to our duty as judges were we to fail to declare the law with respect to the question whether there is any evidence, for fear of offending the jury. This question the jury do not decide. We have no right to infer, either for the state or the defendant, the existence of any facts which were heard by his honor or considered by the jury other than those certified to us. To do so would be to depart from our sphere of action, and decide a question of law upon an assumption that a state of facts existed of which we have neither knowledge nor information. It is a mistake to say that this court passes upon the weight of the testimony or the conclusions to be drawn therefrom, or in any respect reviews the action of the jury. The question which lies at the threshold of every case is whether there is any evidence to be submitted to the jury. We can see no reason why in differing with the judge upon this question we are reflecting upon his intelligence or learning more than in differing with him in respect to any other question of law. To introduce considerations of this character into the decisions of this court is, to say the least, a novelty, and we think well calculated to embarrass the court and raise issues not proper for our consideration. Our own Reports contain numerous cases in which almost every judge who has sat upon this bench has concurred in reversing the opinion of the court below upon the question as to whether there is any evidence, and in doing so in this case we are not conscious of any innovation or announcing any new doctrine. If this man is guilty, he is guilty according to law, and should be so punished. To say that his honor found beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty is to assume that it is the duty of a judge to set aside every verdict in which he is not so satisfied. This we do not decide to be the duty of the court. When, in the discharge of his duty, he shall set aside a verdict is a matter addressed to his sound judgment and is not reviewable. There is nothing in the record to show the character of the defendant except the fact that he committed an assault upon the prosecutrix. To say that every man who commits an assault upon a woman must be presumed of such character as would justify a verdict that he committed an assault with a felonious intent would be to do violence to the language of this court as found in State v. Massey, supra. It is said that the jury are the proper triors of the facts, and the facts were within their province, and that we have no right to reverse their judgment on the facts. The fallacy in this position consists in a failure to distinguish between the functions of the court and the jury. We decide the question of law, not the conclusion of fact. We must discharge our duty with the light that is given us to see it. To fail to do so because of any fear that we would offend 12 sensible and intelligent men would render us unfit to discharge the duties of the high office to which we have been appointed. Upon the testimony before us the defendant is guilty of an aggravated assault.

There must be a new trial.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring). I concur in the opinion of the court that there is no evidence inconsistent with the innocence of the defendant. I do not mean to intimate that the court either here or below can pass upon the weight of the evidence, or can in any event direct an affirmative verdict. Sprull v. Ins. Co., 120 N. C. 141, 27 S. E. 89.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). The defendant, first ascertaining from the girl that her two brothers and her father were absent, in a field a half mile away, made a sudden and violent assault upon her—"grabbed her by her left hand, and started to put his right to her neck." The assault is unquestioned. What was his intent was an inference of fact, which only a jury is authorized to draw. The defendant afterwards confessed that his purpose in going there was to procure sexual intercourse with the girl. The jury, from the violence and manner of the assault, the seclusion of the place, the avowed purpose of the defendant in going there, from his flight, and possibly from their knowledge of the parties, might well have come to the conclusion that the intention of the defendant was to have carnal intercourse with the girl against her will. If so, he was guilty as charged.

It is true Judge Ashe has stated "that the defendant must have intended to gratify his passions on the person of the woman at all events and notwithstanding any resistance on her part." Every lawyer since, who has represented a defendant charged with this dastardly offense, has relied upon this expression. There can be no doubt that the judge so charged the jury in this case, for there is no exception to the charge. What Judge Ashe said is a correct statement of the law, but it does not mean that when the man desists from his purpose there is no evidence that he did not intend to have intercourse "at all events and notwithstanding resistance on the woman's part." That would simply repeal the statute against assault with intent to commit rape, for if the defendant succeeds the crime is rape.

What was the defendant doing when he suddenly and violently assaulted an unprotected girl, out of reach of help from her male relatives, of whose absence he had learned upon inquiry? Was he trying to persuade her to yield, and to overcome her maiden reluctance by solicitation, or was he attempting to have carnal knowledge of her "forcibly and against her will"? Was it an attempted seduction or was it "felonious gallantry"? It was necessarily one or the other, for his purpose to procure sexual intercourse is admitted. It could be procured only with the girl's consent or against her will. There is no other alternative—no middle ground. The jury of 12 men, to not one of whom he objected, and who were doubtless sensible and intelligent gentlemen, have found, beyond a reasonable doubt in the mind of a single member of the jury, that the assault was made with an intent on the part of the defendant to have sexual connection "forcibly and against the will of the woman." The intelligent judge who presided not only thought the evidence should be submitted to the jury, but, notwithstanding the gravity of the punishment, did not think the interests of justice required him to set the verdict aside. The grand jury by a vote of at least 12 of its members found that there was prima facie evidence of defendant's guilt. Thus two full juries at least, and the judge, after seeing and hearing the witnesses, found that there was evidence. Are a majority of the lawyers who compose this court, sitting out of sight and hearing of the witnesses, without knowledge of their character or bearing on the stand, able to say that all these officers have so erred, not as to the law, but as to the facts, and that there was no evidence at all before them?

In vain shall we look for any decision in England, the home of the jury system, for a case in which an appellate court, sitting out of sight and hearing of the witnesses, has held in a criminal case that there was no evidence when the jury has unanimously held that there was enough to satisfy each of them beyond a reasonable doubt, and the presiding judge has refused to disturb the verdict. It is an innovation of recent introduction here, even in civil cases, by judicial construction, for there is no statute to authorize it. The tendency of courts to "amplify jurisdiction" is gradually extending the doctrine until this jurisdiction is invoked in nearly every criminal case that comes up to any appellate court, and in almost certainly every appeal in which a railroad company is defendant. If the expansion of such jurisdiction is continued, instead of the "ancient mode of trial by jury" the jury will become a mere advisory committee, whose findings the appellate court may disregard at will. This is already nearly attained in some states. The evils of this assumption of jurisdiction are well stated by Judge Bynum in Wittkowsky v. Wasson, 71 N. C. 451.

In my humble judgment, the unanimous verdict of 12 men, when not disapproved by the trial judge, is a far more accurate mode of ascertaining the truth of disputed allegations of guilt than the majority vote of the members of an appellate court, who differ among themselves as to the effect of evidence which is necessarily imperfectly sent up in cold type. Is there a clearer insight into the inferences to be deduced from evidence given to those who did not hear or see the witnesses than to those who did? Those who wrought our constitutions thought otherwise. They believed juries were more competent than judges to find the facts, and equally impartial. The triors of fact should be subject to challenge. A judge of the law should not be. Such has always been the thought of Anglo-Saxon peoples. Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court of the United States, well said in a recent opinion that the great difficulty now was to secure the conviction of the guilty, and expressed his conviction that the interests of justice would be best served by returning to the English system, under which, to this day, appeals are not allowed in criminal cases. In his opinion, appeals in criminal cases had been detrimental, and had not served the interests of justice in this country.

It cannot be said there was no evidence. There is more evidence here to sustain the charge than in State v. Garner, 129 N. C. 536, 40 S. E. 6, and fully as much as in State v. Page, 127 N. C. 512, 37 S. E. 66. In this case there was the forcible assault, there was the avowed intent to procure sexual intercourse, there was the lonely place remote from help, there was the inquiry as to nearness of relatives, there was the "stand off" by a determined woman with her clubbed hoe, and the defendant's flight from justice. There may have been other things which the jury were entitled to consider and which give much of its peculiar value to trial by jury. Suppose the girl was white and the defendant a negro? Would that not be a matter to be considered on the question whether this was an attempted seduction or an assault with intent to succeed against the woman's will? State v. Garner, supra. The jury could see for themselves the color of the parties. We cannot. It is not in the record, as many other matters cannot be sent up to us in the record. Both may have been white. We do not know. The jury knew, and they also knew the character of the witnesses and of the defendant, which was a valuable help in arriving at a true inference as to this man's intent, and whether or not the defendant was attempting to succeed "against her will" in having sexual intercourse with the girl. We know nothing of the character of the defendant beyond the fact in the record that he immediately fled and was found in jail in another county, apparently for some other offense. Would a man of that character be likely to attempt a girl of the virtue and determination shown here, unless he had expected to succeed "forcibly and against her will"? If the intent was solicitation, why so forcible and sudden an assault made? It is possible it might be explained, perhaps, but the jury found that it was not. And because when she clubbed her hoe, and told him if he did not "let her alone she would kill him with the hoe," he believed her and turned her loose, are we to find as a matter of law that therefore when he "grabbed her" the defendant did not then intend and was not then attempting to gratify his passions on her "forcibly and against her will"? The jury, the proper triors of the fact, have passed upon defendant's intentions in making the assault. They were within their province and within their sworn duty. I do not think I have the legal right to reverse their judgment on the facts, nor that I can come to a more just conclusion thereon than the jury and the trial judge.

(136 N. C. 679)

STATE v. HUFF.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 17, 1904.)

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO RAPE—EVIDENCE—ACTS AND DECLARATIONS OF THIRD PERSONS.

1. Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, defendant contended that prosecutrix consented to all that was done, evidence of a witness, who was not more than 65 feet from prosecutrix at the time of the alleged assault, that he called to her in a loud voice for the purpose of attracting her attention, together with the conversation had between witness and his wife at the time with reference to what they saw and did in consequence thereof, was admissible for the purpose of contradicting prosecutrix and corroborating defendant's testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Ferguson, Judge.

George T. Huff was convicted of assault, and he appeals. Reversed.

The defendant was indicted for an assault with intent to commit rape, and convicted by the jury of a simple assault. So much of the testimony as is necessary to present the exceptions is as follows: Mrs. Jones, the prosecutrix, testified: That she lived at Fuquay Springs. That defendant came to her house about dark on the day of the alleged assault. That she was sitting in the door. She first thought it was her husband, and then thought it was Alex Hobbs. He came up and said "Good evening," and she said "Good evening." He asked for her husband, and she told him he was in the store. Defendant said he was not; came and put his foot on the doorstep, and said that Mr. Jones had gone to Chalybeate to arrest a man, and would not return until 12 o'clock, and he had come to stay until he came back. "He told my little girl to hand him a match; he wanted to light a cigar." While she was gone, the defendant took her by the hand, and said: "Let us go to bed." Witness said: "You must be crazy. You leave here." Witness prepared supper, and, while she and the children were eating, the defendant came back. She saw him when he jumped up in the door. Mr. Arnold's dog was under the house, and barked. He told the dog to "hush"; said he would kill it; put his hand in his pocket when he said that. Witness was sitting feeding the baby—the table in front of her, and the baby in her lap on her left arm. Defendant took hold of her by the hand. He pulled up a chair and sat down by her, and put his hand in her bosom. She pushed it away, and he put it back again, and tried to put his hands under her clothes, and she pushed them away. Could not push him away because he was stronger than the witness. He was there 10 or 15 minutes. Witness saw her husband coming, and told the defendant. She made no outcry, because the defendant tried to shoot the dog, and she was afraid that he would shoot her. When she saw her husband coming, she told defendant she would tell him, and he would kill defendant. He begged her not to tell him. He got up and sat down on the step. Defendant asked her husband to go to the store; that he wanted to buy something. They went to the store in a few minutes. Witness told her husband what defendant had done when he first came back from the store. Witness was asked in regard to her relations with a man in Florida and other men, all of which she denied.

Defendant testified that he went to Jones' house to get him to go to the store to get a bundle, and he asked Mrs. Jones if her husband was at home, and she said, "No." He asked her if he had gone to the store, and she said, "No." She asked defendant to have a seat; that Mr. Jones would be back in a few minutes. She was sitting in the door on the doorstep. Defendant put his foot on the doorstep, and stood there. She took hold of his hand, and said "she never expected to see him sunburned as badly as that." While holding his hand she leaned over, and his hand might have touched her bosom. She made him a proposition—told him to go out 15 or 20 minutes until she could lay the baby down, and she would come and meet him. Witness went down to the branch and waited a few minutes. He returned to the house, and asked her why she did not come. She said, "Wait a while;" that she could not get the baby asleep. She said, "Come back another time," and not to go anywhere else. Witness never offered to force her or to take any liberties with her, except what she invited. She said that she had been wanting to meet witness for some time, and asked him if he got the word she sent him. Witness never went into the house, and he was not under the influence of liquor.

The defendant introduced Benjamin Arnold, who testified that he lived at Fuquay Springs, 60 or 65 feet from the house of the prosecutrix. There was no obstruction between the two houses. He could see all that passed between defendant and Mrs. Jones. He was at home, sitting on the doorstep with his wife. Defendant was standing on the ground with one foot on the doorstep, and Mrs. Jones sat in the door. Could not hear what they said. They were talking in low tones. He told her "Good evening," and left; went to the branch. Some time after he came back and sat in the door, and the witness got his banjo and sat in his door; then went to bed. Before defendant went off the first time, and while he was standing with his foot on the steps, witness called Mrs. Jones and asked her where her husband was; called pretty loud, but she did not answer. Defendant asked witness to give his reason for calling Mrs. Jones, and the state objected. Objection sustained, and defendant excepted. Witness said that he saw nothing that looked like an assault; could have seen it, as it was bright moonlight, and there was no obstruction; that he and his wife were talking; and that Mrs. Jones could have heard the conversation if she had listened. Defendant offered to prove by the witness the conversation between him and his wife with reference to what they saw, and what they did in consequence thereof. Witness stated that he was going to call Mrs. Jones to keep her from doing wrong; that he called twice, and his wife told him to hush, that it was none of his business; and that in consequence of what he saw he got his banjo and sat in his door, but retired soon after at his wife's request. This testimony was ruled out upon objection by the state, and defendant excepted.

Mrs. Arnold was introduced, and testified the same as her husband. Defendant asked the witness: "In consequence of what you and your husband saw between defendant and Mrs. Jones, what did you and your husband do?" Objected to and ruled out. Defendant excepted. This was for the purpose of showing that the witness and her husband knew that an assignation was being made, and that they tried to stop it; that witness prevented her husband from interfering.

From a judgment upon a verdict of guilty, the defendant appealed.

B. O. Beckwith, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). We think that the testimony was competent, and should have been admitted. The theory of the defense was that the prosecutrix consented to all that was done by the defendant; and from this point of view, and for the purpose of contradicting the prosecutrix and corroborating the defendant's testimony, the evidence of Arnold and his wife was relevant and very material. If believed by the jury, it fully sustained the defendant's view of the transaction. For the purpose of corroborating each other, it was clearly competent for them to testify as to what they said to each other at the time, and what they did. They were 65 feet from the prosecutrix and the defendant. The relations between the families were friendly. The fact that the witness called twice to Mrs. Jones in a loud voice, 65 feet away, was clearly competent as tending to show that she was aware that Arnold was sufficiently near to render her assistance if the defendant was committing an assault upon her.

It is well settled that a witness who is either impeached, or whose testimony is called in question by the mode of cross-examination or by contradictory testimony, may, for the purpose of sustaining his credibility, testify to statements made by him in respect to the matter about which he testifies, at or immediately after the alleged transaction. It was material in this case on the part of the defense to show that Mrs. Jones knew of the presence of Arnold and his wife at their home sufficiently near by to enable her to call for help if assaulted. When they testified that they were sitting in the door where they could see the entire transaction, and that, for the purpose of calling Mrs. Jones' attention to their presence, Arnold called her twice, it is competent to show the state of his mind as explaining his conduct. We think that what he said to his wife at the moment, and what she said to him in respect to the very matter in issue, was competent for the purpose for which it was offered. It would certainly have put the witness in a very unenviable position to have shown that he was within 65 feet of his neighbor's wife, who was being assaulted, and saw the transaction, and made no effort to rescue her. The only explanation of such conduct, consistent with that of an honorable man, whose testimony was entitled to credit before the jury, was that he thought the defendant's conduct was not objectionable to her. It was competent to show, as explaining his conduct, what his wife said to him at the moment.

There was much other testimony tending to impeach the prosecutrix. We do not deem it necessary to pass upon the many other exceptions, as they may not arise upon another trial. The rejection of the evidence offered by the defendant entitles him to a new trial.

(137 N. C. 355)

ROLLINS v. EBBS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 20, 1904.)

STATUTORY BOND — EXECUTION — SIGNATURE — FAILURE TO INSERT AMOUNT OF PENALTY.

1. A guardian's bond, executed under Code, § 1374, requiring the giving of a bond in a sum double the value of all the personal property, etc., is not binding on the obligors where it does not contain the amount of the penalty at the time it is signed, and no one is afterward authorized to insert the amount.

Clark, C. J., and Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Haywood County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by T. S. Rollins, as guardian, against F. C. Ebbs and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

This action was brought by the plaintiff on a guardian's bond. The defendants alleged that the amount of the penalty was not in the paper writing at the time they signed it, and this was the principal matter in controversy. Much testimony was introduced upon that question. Issues were submitted to the jury, which, with their answers, were as follows: "(1) Did the defendants I. N. Ebbs, M. L. Duckett, D. P. Plemmons, Joe M. Rector, and Jasper Ebbs make and deliver their bond, in writing, to the state of North Carolina, for the benefit of James Blaine House, as alleged in paragraph 3 of the complaint? Ans. Yes. (2) Did the defendant F. C. Ebbs, as guardian of James Blaine House, receive the sum of $7,000, property of his ward, James Blaine House, as alleged in paragraph 4 of the complaint? Ans. Yes. (3) Did the defendant F. C. Ebbs, as guardian of James Blaine House, in violation of and in breach of said bond, use and appropriate to his own use the sum of $4,666.66% of his ward's money, as alleged in paragraph 6 of the complaint? Ans. Yes. (4) In what sum, if any, is the plaintiff or the relators damaged because of the said breach of the said bond? Ans. In the sum of $4,666.66%, with compound interest from the 8th day of March, 1900, until paid. (5) Was the paper writing or bond described in and mentioned in paragraph 3 of the complaint incomplete when delivered to the clerk of the superior court of Madison county, in that it contained no penalty, and in that the space where the penalty should have been written was left blank, as alleged in the first paragraph of the further defense contained in the answer? Ans. No. (6) Was the penalty of $13,000 left out of the said bond or paper writing described and mentioned in paragraph 3 of the said complaint, and the space wherein the penalty should have been written left blank, because of the mutual mistake and inadvertence of the parties thereto, as alleged in the reply of the plaintiff? Ans. * * * (7) Was the penalty, $13,000, left out of said bond or paper writing described and mentioned in paragraph 3 of the said complaint because of the mistake or inadvertence of the clerk of the superior court of Madison county, as alleged in the reply of the plaintiff? Ans. No. (8) Was the penalty of $13,000 left out of said bond or paper writing mentioned and described in paragraph 3 of the said complaint, and the space wherein the penalty should have been written left blank, by reason of the fraud of the makers of said bond, perpetrated and practiced upon the clerk of the Superior court of Madison county, as alleged in the reply of the plaintiff? Ans. * * * (9) Was it the purpose and intention of the defendants, at the time of signing the paper writing introduced in evidence, that the same should be used and filed as a guardian bond by F. C. Ebbs, as guardian of James Blaine House? Ans. Yes. (10) Was the penalty inserted in the paper writing purporting to be a bond at the time Jasper Ebbs signed the same? Ans. No. (11) Was the penalty, $13,000, inserted in the paper writing purporting to be a bond at the time the defendant Plemmons signed the same? Ans. No. (12) Was the penalty, $13,000, inserted in the paper writing at the time M. L. Duckett signed the same? Ans. No. (13) Have the defendants Jasper Ebbs, M. L. Duckett, D. P. Plemmons, or either of them, since the signing of the paper writing or bond, authorized any one to insert the penalty, $13,000, in said bond? Ans. No." The defendants in apt time objected to issues numbered 1, 6, 8, and 9. Objection overruled. Defendants moved for a new trial upon exceptions. Motion overruled. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants excepted and appealed.

Crawford & Hannah and J. M. Gudger, Jr., for appellants. Moore & Rollins, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts). It is clear what the court meant when it submitted the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth issues to the jury, and it is equally apparent what the jury intended to find by the answers to those issues. The inquiry manifestly was whether the amount of the penalty had been written in the bond before the time that the sureties, Ebbs, Duckett, and Plemmons, signed it, and not merely whether it was inserted at that particular time. Such an inquiry as the one last mentioned would, to say the least of it, have been immaterial. The jury found that the amount was not in the bond at the time it was signed, and that the sureties named in the issues had not authorized any one to insert the penalty.

Our opinion was at first that enough appeared in the record to bring the case within the principle stated in Humphreys v. Finch, 97 N. C. 303, 1 S. E. 870, 2 Am. St. Rep. 293, but we are now satisfied that a correct interpretation of the verdict renders that case inapplicable. The jury, by the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth issues, have found that the amount of the penalty was inserted after the paper writing was signed by the sureties, and by the thirteenth issue they have found as a fact that Ebbs, Duckett, and Plemmons "had not authorized any one to insert the penalty, $13,000, in said bond." This, it seems to us, presents just such a case as was considered in Graham v. Holt, 25 N. C. 300, 40 Am. Dec. 408, in which Justice Daniel uses this language: "A bond is the acknowledgment of a debt under seal, the debt being therein particularly specified. In every good bond there must be an obligor and an obligee, and a sum in which the former is bound. Shep. Touch. 56; Com. Dig. 'Obligation,' A; Hurleston, 2. In New York, Ex parte Therwin, 8 Cowen, 118, and some other of the American cases, the nisi prius decision before Lord Mansfield of Texira v. Evans, 1 Anst. 229, in nota, has been followed. That case was where a party executed a bond with blank spaces for the name and sum, and sent an agent, without a power of attorney under seal, to raise money on it. The agent accordingly filled up the blanks with the sum and the obligee's name, and delivered the bond to him. On the plea of non est factum, the bond was considered well executed. But the case of Texira v. Evans has been by this court twice overruled, as attempting to establish a distinction in the mode of executing deeds by attorney, where the object was to raise or secure money, and when it was to operate as a conveyance—the first, by a power of attorney not sealed; the other, with a power of attorney under seal. The notion with us has always been what we learned from Co. Lit. 52 (a), and the Touchstone, 57, that he who executes a deed as agent for another, be it for money or other property, must be armed with authority under seal. The insertion of the sum in the blank space was intended to consummate the deed; it was done without legal authority, and the instrument is void as a bond"—citing McKee v. Hicks, 2 Dev. (13 N. C.) 379; Davenport v. Sleight, 2 Dev. & Bat. (19 N. C.) 381, 31 Am. Dec. 420. The same idea is also strongly expressed by Chief Justice Ruffin in Davenport v. Sleight, supra, as follows: "The ancient rule is certain, that authority to make a deed cannot be verbally conferred, but must be created by an instrument of equal dignity. It is owned that there are modern cases in which it seems to have been relaxed with respect to bonds. This began with the case of Texira v. Evans, cited 1 Anst. 229, note, on which all the subsequent cases profess to be founded. The court is not satisfied with the reasons assigned for those opinions, but entertains a strong impression that they lead to dangerous consequences." In Cadell v. Allen, 99 N. C. 542, 6 S. E. 399, Justice Merrimon, referring to the principle as laid down in Graham v. Holt and Davenport v. Sleight, says, "The rule as thus stated is recognized in many cases, and must be treated as settled and of governing authority," citing Blacknall v. Parish, 59 N. C. 70, 78 Am. Dec. 239, and other cases.

There has been no ratification. This court cannot give its opinion or render judgment upon evidence merely. There must either be an admission of the facts in the pleadings or in some other form in the record, or the facts must be found by a jury. There is nothing admitted, or found by the jury, which shows that the defendants have in any way, known to the law of this state, assented to or ratified the insertion of the penalty in the bond.

If any respect is to be paid to our decisions in preference to those of other states, the findings of the jury upon the last four issues, if those issues stood alone, would entitle the appellants to a judgment. But the answers to the issues in this case, taken as a whole, are themselves conflicting. The jury have found, in response to the first issue, that the defendants made and delivered their bond, in writing, to the state for the benefit of the principal's ward, and yet, in answer to subsequent issues, they have found that the amount of the penalty was not in the paper at the time of the signing by defendants, and that it was not put there afterwards by any authorized person. The insertion of the amount, at or before the time of signing, was necessary to constitute the paper a perfect instrument—a good bond—unless the amount was afterwards inserted by some one having authority to do so, or unless the signers themselves afterwards ratified what had been done to make the instrument complete, and in the manner indicated by this court in the cases already cited. "If an instrument with a seal to it," says Hall, J., "is not completely executed by signing, sealing, and delivering, it cannot become so by any act of an unauthorized agent. It would be dangerous if the law were otherwise." McKee v. Hicks, 13 N. C. 380. This was said with reference to the very kind of question we are now discussing, as an extract from the syllabus of the case will show: "A deed must be perfect in all respects before its delivery. Where a blank was left in a bond for money, to be filled up when the sum was ascertained, and after the delivery the blank was fairly filled up by a stranger, held, that the instrument was void." Page 379. This was ruled to be the law even when the alleged obligor had actually received the money on the faith of its being his valid bond. In that case this court went still further, and affirmed the judgment notwithstanding a charge by which the jury were instructed that the defendant was not bound by the bond as his deed, "unless the person filling up the blank, on delivering the paper, had, at the time of the delivery, authority under the hand and seal of the defendant to do so." Page 380.

The case of Humphreys v. Finch, 97 N. C. 303, 1 S. E. 870, 2 Am. St. Rep. 293, as we have said, does not apply. The decision is based upon the idea of an equitable estoppel, which cannot arise in this case, as the jury have found that no authority to insert the amount in the bond was given, which was not the fact in Humphreys v. Finch. That case might well have been decided upon the doctrine of agency.

This is not a question of the alteration of an instrument, but a question of authority to complete the instrument so as to make it binding, as is clearly stated in 2 Cyc. 159, and it is too plainly so to require any further discussion.

Nor do we think the fact that this is a statutory bond alters the case in favor of the plaintiff. If there is any difference, in respect to the question under consideration, between such a bond and an ordinary bond or deed, that difference, in this particular case, is rather favorable to the defendants. The Code, § 1574, requires that "a guardian, before letters of appointment are issued to him, must give a bond payable to the state, with two or more sufficient sureties, to be acknowledged before and approved by the clerk of the superior court, and to be jointly and severally bound. The penalty in such a case must be double, at least, the value of all personal property, and the rents and profits issuing from the real estate of the infant; which value is to be ascertained by the clerk of the superior court by the examination, on oath, of the applicant for guardianship, or of any other person." It will be observed that the bond must be acknowledged before the clerk and approved by him, and the penalty must be double, at least, the value of the personal property and the rents and profits, which value the clerk ascertains. The penalty, therefore, is not fixed at any certain sum applicable to all cases. It may not be the same in any two bonds. It is at least variable, just as in the case of the amount to be paid in ordinary bonds or notes under seal, and the insertion of it is therefore just as material and essential to the completeness of a statutory bond as the amount to be paid is to that of an ordinary bond. The amount must be expressed in both. We are unable to see how any authority to fill up the blank can be implied in the case of a statutory bond that would not be equally implied in the case of other bonds. Both kinds of bonds are delivered to carry out the intention of the obligors, and in the case of a guardian bond there is the additional reason, against the implication, that the amount of the penalty is expressly required to be ascertained by the clerk. An individual in his private capacity cannot execute a statutory power.

Our purpose has not been so much to prove that the paper writing signed by the defendants is void as a bond, as to make clear the construction we put upon the verdict, and to show, consequently, the findings of the jury to be so conflicting that the court below could not proceed to judgment, and that this court cannot now intelligently pass upon the merits of the case. The view we take of the question involved leads us to the conclusion that there should be a new trial, so that the facts may be fully and consistently found by the jury. The plaintiff may be able to show that the bond is a valid obligation of the defendants.

New trial.

OLARK, C. J. (dissenting). It is not controverted that the defendant F. C. Ebbs, guardian, converted the funds of his ward to his own use, nor is there any dispute over the finding as to the amount of such defalcation. The only contested fact is whether when the bond, which is in the regular form, was signed by three of the sureties, "13,000" was not written after "$———" Upon this omission (if true), and the subsequent filling in of the blank with "13,000" by one of the sureties, who carried the bond to the clerk to be filed, the sureties now seek to avoid their obligation, which is set out in the bond distinctly, to be responsible for any failure of F. C. Ebbs, as guardian, to safely keep and account for the property of his ward. The evidence of the clerk is uncontradicted that the bond was handed to him by I. N. Ebbs, one of the sureties, and that it was then complete, the "$13,000" being filled in; and his deputy, who copied it, testifies to the same effect. I. N. Ebbs, one of the sureties, certified as notary public that the other sureties appeared before him and justified to the amount set opposite their respective names. These amounts, together with the sum he himself justified to before the clerk, aggregate $13,000, the sum which was written in the bond when handed in by him to the clerk and recorded.

The jury found, in response to the first issue, that "the defendants, I. N. Ebbs, M. L. Duckett, D. P. Plemmons, J. M. Rector, and Jasper Ebbs, made and delivered their bond in writing to the state of North Carolina for the benefit of James Blaine House, as alleged in paragraph 3 of the complaint;" and, in response to the ninth issue, that it "was the purpose and intention of the defendants, at the time of signing the paper writing introduced in evidence, that the same should be used and filed as a guardian bond by F. C. Ebbs, as guardian of James Blaine House." If, upon the facts above set forth, and which were uncontroverted, the filling in of "13,000" in the blank to total up the several justifications by the surety who was intrusted by them to bring the bond to the clerk (an addition in no wise changing the nature of the obligation) can vitiate the bond, which was perfect when handed to the clerk by one of their number, then no guardian or administrator's bond is safe unless the sureties shall all sign and justify before the clerk. The Code, § 1891, was intended to prevent just such defects in obligations of this nature, and to avoid trivial and technical objections. It provides that "whenever any instrument shall be taken or received, * * * by any person or persons, acting under or in virtue of any public authority, purporting to be a bond executed to the state for the performance of any duty belonging to any office or appointment such instrument, notwithstanding * * * any variance in the penalty or condition of the instrument from the provision prescribed by law, shall be valid and may be put in suit in the name of the state for the benefit of the person injured by a breach of the condition thereof, in the same manner * * * as if the penalty and con-

